Rawlinson Does Not Want to Direct

Star of "The Scarlet Crystal," the Next Red Feather Release, Almost Alone in This Respect

Herbert Rawlinson and Betty Schade in "The Scarlet Crystal," the next Red Feather Photoplay on the program.

HERBERT RAWLINSON, star of the next Red Feather picture, "The Scarlet Crystal," is an anomaly in one respect. He is probably the only leading man on the screen who has no ambition to direct. Most of them can hardly wait for the time to come when they may assume the authority of the producer, and arrange all stories so that the hero may hold the centre of the screen throughout five complete reels. But Rawlinson has no such desire.

"I may be deficient in the power of concentration," he says, "but I find that the acting of my role absorbs all my energy and capability. I am sure that if I were to assume the supervising of all the other actors, together with the thousand and one details which come in the province of the director, I should have to slight my own screen work; and that is something which I could never bring myself to do. 'Your best is none too good,' should be the motto of every picture player, in my opinion; and it might even be amended to advantage. 'Your best is hardly good enough,' would be a better way of putting it."

In "The Scarlet Crystal," Rawlinson has a role rather out of his usual type of part. His forte has always been considered comedy of the drawing-room variety. But as the dissipated man-about-town who decides in time to turn over a new leaf, he has a part which taxes his dramatic ability to the full. He gets away with it as if he had played nothing else all his life. This is the first long picture in which he has appeared since the injury to his leg which kept him out of business for nearly two months; and his many admirers will welcome him back to the screen.

Bluebird Star Still Plays with Dolls

"POLLY REDHEAD," the next Bluebird photoplay, in which Ella Hall is starred in a dual role, was the second Bluebird to receive the honor of an advance showing for one week at the Rialto Theatre, on the corner of Forty-second Street and Broadway, New York. In it little Miss Hall plays two children, whose remarkable resemblance is the basis of the plot. The slight but perfectly calculated touches by which she differentiates the two characters, so that there is never for a moment confusion between them, are a proof of the strides which the best impersonator of children playing for the screen to-day has made in her art.

Ella Hall plays the role of a child so often for the films that thousands of children all over the country think that she is really a little girl. They write to her as if she, too, were twelve years old, and many of them absolutely refuse to believe their parents when they are told that she wears long dresses and her hair up when she is not working for the camera. This Christmas they sent her no less than fourteen dolls, which came from different parts of this country and Canada. Miss Hall is as much of a favorite on the other side of the Northern border as she is on this.

"What on earth will you do with all these new dolls?" asked her mother, the day after Christmas. "Shall I do them up and send them to the Children's Hospital?"

"Oh, no," said Ella; "that would not be fair to the children who sent them to me in such good faith. I'll keep them all to play with. I have twelve already, you know, and that will give me a family of twenty-six. It's not one bit too big, either."

Ella declares that she is never going to be too old to play with dolls, and that she enjoys them as much as she ever did. She seems to have found the secret of eternal youth, and like Peter Pan she refuses to grow up.

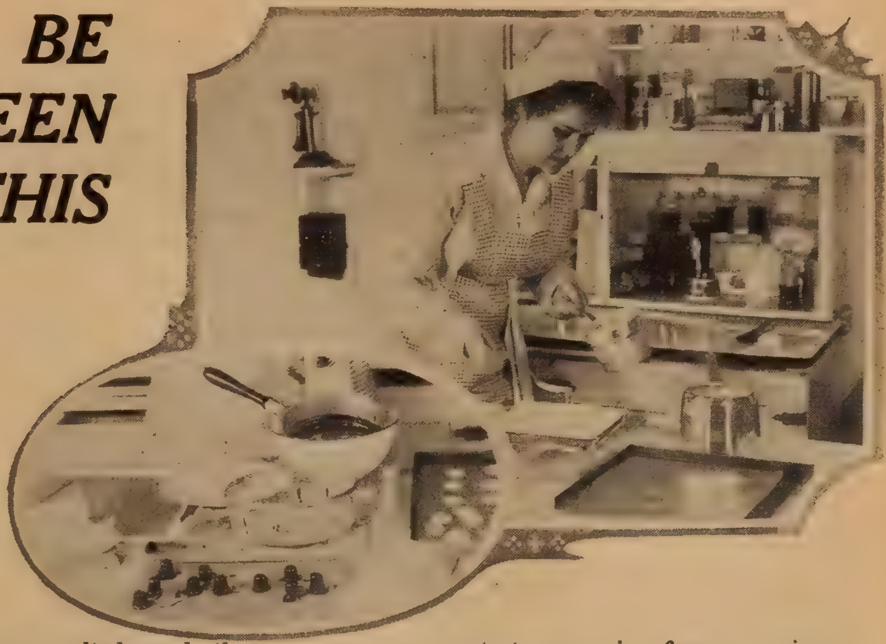
FANNY REEVES McDOWELL DEAD.

FANNY REEVES McDOWELL, who was known professionally as Fanny Reeves and who was a popular star twenty-five years ago, died at the German Sanitarium, Los Angeles, on January 29 after an illness of only three weeks.

Mrs. McDowell was the widow of the late Eugene A. McDowell, well-known actor and theatrical manager, and a niece of Sims Reeves, the noted English tenor. Her father was William Reeves, also a well-known actor, and her mother was Jane Webster, another stage favorite. Claire McDowell, daughter of the woman who passed to the great beyond, is one of the leading actresses at the Universal Film Company, and is starred in the coming Red Feather "The Bronze Bride."

Ella Hall in "Polly Red Head," the next Bluebird.

WHAT MAY BE FOUND in SCREEN MAGAZINE THIS WEEK



THOUGH Issue No. 10 of the Universal Screen Magazine contains views of the Government Weather Bureau, with all the delicate and complicated instruments which record every atmospheric change, and enable the modern weather prophets to base their speculations upon something more definite than signs of the clouds; although there is a study of the armadillo, one of the most fascinating of little animals; and even some close-ups of the deadly torpedo, shot from the tube of one of Uncle Sam's submarines, yet the most interesting part of all these interesting things will probably be the demonstration of the making of chocolate creams, which is most graphically pictured by Mrs. A. Louise Andrea.

Mrs. Andrea is the winnor of the gold medal at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and she is now conducting the experimental kitchen for the magazine called "The Gentlewoman." "Make your own candy!" is her slogan, and she gives a complete lesson, which will send every woman in the audience home with the conviction that she can produce chocolate creams which will rival those of Mr. Huyler, and beat them. So she can, if she has the luck to have a pencil and a bit of paper with her when the lesson is run off on the screen, for it would be but a feeble intelligence which was not able to follow the directions so clearly given.

In case any unfortunate woman should have been caught unprepared with the wherewithal to record this recipe, it is repeated here, just as Mrs. Andrea gives it:

To two cups of sugar one cup of water is added, with one-half teaspoonful of lemon juice. This is boiled until it strings from the spoon, and then beaten on a plate till it is white. It is then remelted, and molded in the following clever and simple manner. A shallow pan is filled with corn starch to the depth of about an inch. Holes are then made in the starch with the end of a wooden spoon, or a knife handle, and the remelted syrup is poured into them and left to harden. Then the whole thing is turned into a sieve, and the corn starch shaken from the cone-shaped centres of the creams. Chocolate is then melted, and the creams are dipped on the end of a small skewer, and arranged on waxed paper to harden and dry. Any one can make the purest kind of chocolate creams with very little trouble after watching Mrs. Andrea on the screen.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS" VERY TIMELY NOW.

IT is impossible to retain the smallest vestige of respect for that group of moral perverts who rendered the Senate of the United States impotent in the great crisis now upon the country. In denouncing these men to the great American people President Wilson said:

"A little group of wilful men, representing no opinion but their own, have rendered the great Government of the United States helpless and contemptible."

Now is the acceptable time to educate the people of this country as to plots and intrigues of foreign schemers in our midst and also to the sinister influences at work in the Senate and the House of Representatives. This is the time to stand by the President, to know the menace that threatens from within and without and to know how well the industrial resources of this country have been mobilized to defend Old Glory and keep the invader at bay. The Daughters of the American Revolution with their 95,000 members and the National Security League with 100,000 Americans enrolled, are among the great patriotic organizations striving to quicken the American sense of danger and to urge national preparedness. In line with the plans of these societies "The Eagle's Wings," Bluebird special preparedness five-part feature, has been shown to the greatest men in finance, science, statesmanship and industry in this country and indorsed by them. "The Purple Mask"

EPISODE Twelve of the serial, written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, is called "The Vault of Mystery." Pat continues the work of despoiling the rich to help the poor.

CAST.

Patricia Montez	Grace Cunard
Detective Phil Kelly	Francis Ford
His Assistants	Pete Gerald, Jerry Ash
Pat's Aunt	Jean Hathaway

IN Episode Twelve, of the Ford-Cunard serial, which is called "The Vault of Mystery," Pat lays her plans to despoil a rich man who keeps his material wealth stored in a vault in the cellar of his own house. She learns of the methods by which the ill-earned money has been amassed, and resolves to remove it, and give it to the class upon which he has preyed. Kelly is called in by the rich man to protect his interests, and so the duel between the two goes on.

Phil Kelly, determined to apprehend "The Purple Mask," goes to "The House of Mystery" and gains entrance, with one of his assistants, by climbing a tree which gives access to an open window on the second floor. Pat, having been advised of the presence of the detectives, is prepared to receive them.

Passing through two rooms, Kelly and his men finally discover Pat seated in a chair, the only piece of furniture in the room. When they approach her, she pushes a button in the arm of the chair and she is immediately surrounded by two partitions.

Kelly and his man stand dumfounded by the suddenness of the move, when, suddenly they are dropped through a trap in the floor directly into a huge packing case that quickly shuts and makes them prisoners. Then the box starts on a journey down a shute and is shot onto a motor truck waiting to receive it. The truck drives away, finally dumping Kelly and his man onto the ground by the roadside, far out in the country. The detectives are left to make their way back to town.

Some time passes before Pat decides to enter upon another adventure. She has read in the papers of an immensely wealthy man by the name of Johnson, who, suspicious of banks, has constructed a submerged vault, a strong room that can be completely surrounded by water, thus making it burglar proof. Pat has her men investigate the source of Johnson's income. When she learns that he is the head of a vice syndicate she decides to attack his submerged vault and distribute its contents among the poor.

Johnson has seen strange men prowling around his grounds and calls in Phil Kelly to investigate. This brings Pat and Kelly once more into a battle of wits, a fact that pleases the girl immensely. On the night that Kelly is to visit Johnson for a final consultation Pat's Apaches decide to act. By strategy they capture Johnson's private secretary and "make up" an Apache to resemble him. This man traps Kelly and his assistant in a room, when the detectives call to consult Johnson.

Pat's men dig their way underground until they are directly beneath the submerged vault. With drills and other appliances they gain access to the strong room, breaking through the floor just at the instant Pat is striking a direct blow at Johnson himself. With two of her men she sneaks up behind Johnson, while he is absorbed in his selfish task of counting the day's haul of the vice syndicate, and as the episode ends the girl throws over Johnson's head a purple cloak, while her two men pinion his arms, rendering him helpless.

KING MOMUS AT NEW ORLEANS.

THE famous Mardi Gras ceremonies at New Orleans were photographed for Animated Weekly No. 61, and prove of unusual interest. Hundreds of thousands of visitor attend the annual celebration in the Southern city, but if you could not get away this year, the Animated Weekly pictures of it are the next best thing. The arrival of the Rex in his royal yacht is seen, and he ascends his moving throne before our eyes. Many of the gaily decorated floats which form the procession were caught by the camera, as well as the throng of masqueraders in domino and mask, or in handsome costumes, which filled the streets to overflowing. The keys of the city were presented to His Majesty according to custom, and this ceremony also forms part of the scenes. The Carnival celebration at New Orleans rivals that of Nice itself.

"DOROTHY DARES"

VICTOR Comedy in Two Reels, story by Ruth Stonehouse. Adapted for the screen by Fred Myton, and produced by Ruth Stonehouse, with herself in the lead.

CAST.

Dorothy Worth, Ruth Stonehouse
Mr. Worth......Mr. Witting
Mrs. Worth..Mrs. Witting
Abigail Winthrop Martha Maddox
Janitor ....Jack Dill

THE ranks of women directors of motion pictures are being augmented slowly but surely. Universal already has several, among whom Ruth Stonehouse is the youngest. She has been producing a series of one-reel pictures, featuring herself in the character of Mary Ann, a girl of the slums with a heart too big for her body, which have met with great success, and she now appears as author-director and actress of a two-reel photoplay, called "Dorothy Dares," a boarding-school tale, which was arranged for the screen for her by Fred Myton. Here is the story:

The end of the summer brought the sad parting of Dorothy Worth, a daughter of a very wealthy man, and Harold Mason, a clerk in a haberdashery store. As they stood sighing, Mr. Worth saw them, and when Harold told him of his and Dorothy's great love for each other, the father asked how much money Harold earned. He found that his salary amounted to ten dollars a week. Soon afterward Dorothy and her parents left the town for a girl's seminary.

Too love-sick to study, Dorothy mooned away her time and once, when especially lonely, wrote a letter to her parents, telling them that she felt she could not live any longer. She had no intention of mailing this letter and tossed it into the waste-paper basket, but Miss Abigail Winthrop, the principal of the seminary, found and mailed it.

Harold, having read a novel description of a knight of old rescuing his sweetheart from a convent, decided to try his luck at this same game and, getting a leave of absence from his employer, hastened to the seminary. There he managed to get the janitor of the seminary intoxicated and took his place, leaving a note for Dorothy that he would be in her room at ten that night.

Dorothy and her room-mates were greatly enthused with this thrilling romance, but when they received word that they were to be initiated into the Sigma Phi Sorority that night at ten, they were all at sea as to what they could do with Harold.

Harold arrived in the room first and when they heard the Sorority girls at the door, Dorothy pushed him into the bedroom. He hid under the bed, where one of the girls, swinging her bare foot, hit him right in the face. Terror-stricken, she motioned the other girls to follow her into the hall and there she told them. Harold concealed himself in the clothes-closet and Dorothy put a piece of fur under the bed so that the girls thought that was what the girl's foot had struck.

Harold escaped into the living-room and Dorothy and her room-mates lowered him out the window. Just then Miss Abigail and Dorothy's parents rushed into the room and found her with flour all over her face, for she had been through a part of her initiation. Seeing such a sight, Mrs. Worth proceeded to faint and her husband dashed to open the window. Harold was dropped from quite a height and was stunned by the fall. Mr. Worth then asked Dorothy what she had on her face and learning that it was flour, threw the sack containing the rest of it from the window. It landed on Harold's head.

The fatal letter was produced. Dorothy was inspired to say that she must have had a nightmare and have written the letter in her sleep. All was again peace.

WITH the buyers held up indefinitely in Europe, and a grave possibility that the fruits of the annual Paris openings may not reach this country in time to satisfy its demands for Easter clothes, the designers in America are putting their heads together to devise substitutes for new French styles. Animated Weekly No. 61 shows some of them from the salons of Harry Collins, of New York. A net robe embroidered in blue and black bugles, and worn over black meteor is the first one shown. Then follows a sport suit of carnival faille, and blue ratine. An afternoon frock of navy and black charmeuse, a fabric which has been restored to first favor, is embellished with panels of Chinese embroidery. A new material, called tricotine, in a charming shade of tan, is combined with taffeta, and embroidered with lavish use of blue soutache. If we can have such frocks designed at home, we shall not miss the annual importations, beguiling as they always are.

productions. She has a strong role in the Big U drama, called "The Hidden Danger," a picture which illustrates the tricky modes of warfare of the Indians, while they were still lords of a large part of the soil of our country.

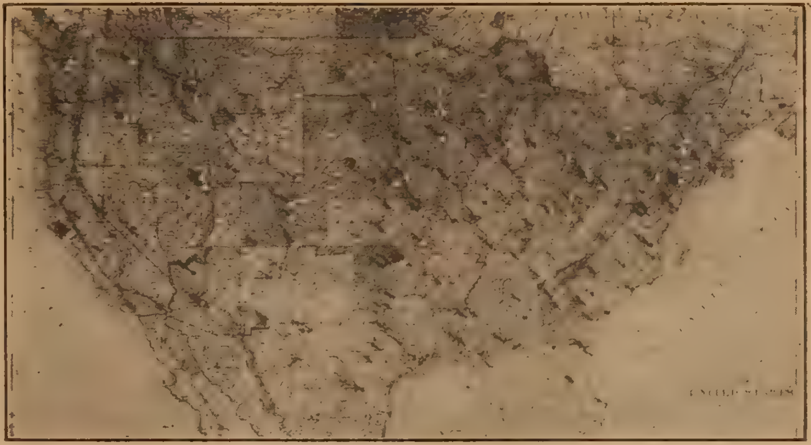
As Minato, the Apache girl who is befriended by the American soldiers and their wives, and whose gratitude so amply repays them, Mona Darkfeather gives an impressive performance. There is some fine riding and a most realistic battle between the Apaches and the settlers in the picture. Here is a sketch of the story:

The Apache Indians are on the rampage, and the Americans go out against them. They capture all the Indian squaws. Then the braves attack the Americans, to rescue the women, and especially Minato. They dig holes in the ground at night and hide in them, hoping to get the Americans by this ambuscade. By chance the soldiers see that the ground has been tampered with. But the Indians jump out and attack them. There is great loss of life, but they are finally repulsed.

THE NOBLE TWO HUNDRED OF THE U. A. W.

THIS is not a war map of the United States. It is not a chart of possible points of attack, captured from the enemy. It is not part of the Industrial Preparedness Propaganda. In fact, it is nothing connected with warfare at all. It is a copy in miniature of the map which hangs in the offices of the Editor of the Universal Animated Weekly, in New York City.

The map is used by the editor to keep in close touch with nearly two hundred cameramen whose unceasing efforts in chasing the news have made the Universal topical bulletin what it is. The pins mark the location of the men, and indicate that at each of these stations is a fearless, wide-awake operator, ready to "shoot" the first event which is capable of being recorded in pictures, as soon as it happens in his district. The pins are moved to keep pace with the moves of the cameramen, and thus the Editor is able to communicate instantly with his staff by wire.



White spots show the stations of cameramen working day and night for the Universal Animated Weekly.

Gale is a patroness of art, and the only one who receives Bill, a vendor of pictures. She declares that he must paint her as "December Afternoon." She gets ready to pose, with her feet in a basin of water for realism, and Bill has to make good his bluff of being an artist. He enlists the aid of Lillian, the maid. She snaps the model, and goes out to have the plate developed and enlarged. As revenge upon her mistress who has found fault with her, Lillian changes the enlarged portrait for that of a donkey.

A reception is held for the ceremony of unveiling the picture, and consternation reigns when the substitution is discovered. Bill is kicked out, and Gale gives up the patronage of art.

LEE MORAN TAKES CHARGE OF PICTURE BABY'S WELFARE.

LEE MORAN, who is featured with Eddie Lyons in Nestor comedies and has just finished "A Bundle of Trouble," is unmarried and has no one to look after but himself. He lives comfortably at an athletic club in Los Angeles, drives an automobile of special design and his clothes are always well tailored. Lee decided that with his surplus money he wanted to do a little good for somebody that would count for something. He was advised that at a picture city lived a woman without any particular means, endeavoring to bring up a little baby, the child being occasionally used in the pictures. The comedian loves children and he decided to become the "fairy godfather" to the child.

Consequently, the baby has been well supplied with clothes, toys, and, in fact, everything that a child's heart might desire. The day may come when the beneficiary will learn who the "fairy godfather" is, but the information will never come from Moran.

W. H. McGaffin's Theatre, David City, Neb., and the stunt with which he started "The Purple Mask" Serial.

GOOD PURPLE MASK STUNT.

ONE of the "Purple Mask" stunts which is very easy to do, very inexpensive to conduct, and very effective, is shown in the picture of McGaffin's Theatre of David City, Nebr. He dressed up all of the small boys he could find around the theatre one morning, and sent them out on a parade of the city, with a little banner stating that "The Purple Mask" was being shown at his theatre the following day. The stunt proved very effective, and Mr. McGaffin intends to pull it every week in connection with the regular showing of "The Purple Mask."

BLUEBIRDS START MARCH 4.

MARCH 4th has always been considered a very fine time to inaugurate anything — presidents, or otherwise. The manager of the Paris Theatre of Denver,, one of the largest, most ornate and popular theatres in the entire Intermountain territory, has decided that that is the date for him to inaugurate Bluebird service. He has tried all of the first-class feature services, but recently has been watching the success of the Bluebirds in other houses, and after seeing a few of the recent ones decided that his theatre was missing a big bet. Therefore he signed up with Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., of Denver, and he will inaugurate the Bluebird service on March 4th.

BLUEBIRDS IN CANADA.

BLUEBIRDS have been booked in the Strand Theatre of Toronto, one of the hardest theatres in the entire Dominion of Canada to suit. And in this connection it is interesting to note that many letters are being received from Canada, voicing unmeasured appreciation of Bluebird photoplay, among them a fine one from Mr. Bernard of London, Ont.

A FINE STARTER.

CHRISTOPHER, ILL., is a small place comparatively speaking, but it has a very live exhibitor in R. C. Cluster, manager of the Opera House and Gem Theatre. For "Peg O' the Ring" he devised a circus parade of home talent which would have made many a touring circus attraction jealous. It certainly woke them up in Christopher, and a like spectacle would wake up any town. He is to be congratulated, not only on this parade, but on the one which inaugurated the run of "Liberty." A band and a tremendous number of American flags, together with banners of one letter each, which spelled out "Liberty To-night," were impressed into service, and attracted tremendous crowds not only on the street, but to the theatre as well.

THEN HE WOKE UP.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—I have used every possible program in my theatre and even went to the expense of making every day a feature day with pictures from so-called feature companies. I then work up and booked Universal, and can honestly say that the result is larger box office receipts and satisfied patrons. I cannot praise the program too highly. I sincerely hope that I will have no reason to change my opinion in the future. Yours truly,

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, Ont.—Moving pictures as a means of education in public schools was a project set on foot by Trustee Dr. Noble at the meeting of the Management Committee of the Board of Education. Dr. Noble asked that $1,000 be provided for the installation of the necessary equipment for showing moving pictures in the schools.

It was suggested that the renewing of films would be very expensive. Trustee McClelland thought they might get films free from manufacturing concerns showing the operation of their works. It was also contended that the teaching of geography and many other subjects would be made more interesting and effective by the use of the moving picture. The Committee decided to make the recommendation to the board.

It has been stated that Mr. Brady, owner and manager of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, has decided to retire from this house. To facilitate his so doing, he has leased the Madison for a term of months. Mr. Brady is one of the pioneer exhibitors in Toronto and very well known and popular among the moving picture men in this province.

Mr. Harry Pomeroy of the Belmont Theatre, Toronto, has announced that they have disposed of this well-known northern house to other parties and that the new management will assume control immediately.

The Strand Theatre of Toronto opened this week the first half with "Kick-In," the famous American stage play and is meeting with splendid success. The latter part of the week the Bluebird release with Cleo Madison, "The Chalice of Sorrow," occupies the screen.

The very significant fact brought to the public attention by several theatre managers laterly in Toronto, is that films which have made a hit in a house can be very satisfactorily and profitably booked again for a repeat showing.

Mr. Cohan of the Globe and Rialto theatres, is the man who first demonstrated this, and in his case has brought back films such as "Shoes," Bluebird production, not less than three times, always playing to packed houses and satisfied audiences. Later Mr. Sturgess of the Imperial Theatre, Toronto, states that he brought back the Universal picture, "Campbells Are Coming," about eight months after previous showing and played to crowded capacity.

The executive of the Ontario Motion Picture Protective Association of Exhibitors, held a meeting on Feb. 27th in the Association Rooms, corner of Queen and Spadina Ave., Toronto. The representation was very large including Mr. Burnsides of Collingwood, Mr. Roenick of Lindsay, Mr. P. J. Nolan of Ottawa, Mr. Guest of Hamilton and many others.

Several matters very important to the exhibitors at the present time were taken up and discussed thoroughly and decisions arrived at to the satisfaction of all present. One particularly was that it was decided that a delegation of the Association meet with the Exchange Association and take up the matters of advance deposits which the exhibitors claim are working a hardship and must be removed. At the present time the Monarch Film Co. are the only people in Canada using the advance system.

Another matter taken up was the membership fees. It was decided that members of the Association residing in Toronto should pay $10 a year, as they would receive the most direct benefit and those residing outside pay $6.

The Association also intimated that other matters were taken up very close to the hearts of the exhibitors, which, however, are not open to discussion at the present time, but which are bound to come to the front very shortly.

THE HARVEST

There's a harvest awaiting the shrewd Exhibitor who studies the wants of his patrons. Running a show means more than going to the express office and getting the daily shipment of film. Watch the effect of the showing of the Universal Animated Weekly and you'll learn that it is a prime and popular favorite with men, women and children. It will do more to pack your house on a dull day than anything you can book. Always first on the screen with the world's greatest news events—that's why. Cartoon Impressions of "Polly Redhead" at the Rialto

THE current bill at the Rialto Theatre is one of the most interesting and best balanced entertainments that has yet been offered at the "popular corner." Topped by Ella Hall in a new feature play "Polly Redhead," it offers an abundant supply of both photo-play and musical features. This week Manager Rothapfel has been extremely fortunate in securing the services of several popular soloists who entertain between the photoplay features. Mirth, novelty and song reign supreme on the current big bill.

NEW YORK AMERICA

FEATURE BILL AT RIALTO BIG HIT

Topical and Patriotic Films Among Many Good Things, and Charlie Chaplin on the Bill.

Timely satisfying entertainment in abundant quantity is supplied by the programme at the Rialto this week. The bill is full of features from Hugo Riesenfeld's masterly conducting of the overture to Weber's "Oberon" to Charlie Chaplin's antics in an exceptionally amusing new film.

The topical digest includes views of the big guns on the battleship Pennsylvania, glimpses of Uncle Sam's revenue cutters, and pictures of the interned German ships, all set to music by Mr. Rothapfel in a medley of patriotic airs, bringing the audience cheering to its feet at each performance. Probably the Rialto has never before heard applause of the sort which greets Hy Mayer's cartoon of Uncle Sam and what he is made of.

E. Alexander Powell, the war correspondent, inspired by the crisis confronting the nation, talks on what the possible developments in the near future mean to the United States. His discourses are pro-American above all else, and each is preceded by new motion pictures of the French aviation corps.

In "Polly Red Head," which was selected as the dramatic feature of the bill, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has turned out a wholesome sympathetic story, most capably played and artistically directed. Ella Hall, who is introduced to Broadway as a star in this production, enacts a dual role. She is seen first as a little housemaid of twelve doing the work in the apartment of two bachelor attorneys and later she appears as a little noble woman who chances to be a double of the housemaid.

In addition to her work, Polly the maid has the responsibility of providing for "The Lamp," her three-year-old brother, William Worthington, Jr. In this part is the most lovable screen baby The Rialto has ever seen.

The scenario was adapted by E. J. Clawson from Edgar Jepson's popular "Pollyooly" stories, and was produced by Jack Conway. George Webb, as the younger bachelor, and Gertrude Astor as the girl he loves are prominent in the supporting cast.

This is the way the Rialto advertised "Polly Redhead." See the publicity the American gave it.

SINCE "MUTINY" deals almost entirely with the sea and sea-faring people, inject this atmosphere into all the advertising you do in connection with this Bluebird Photoplay. Dress your ushers either in sailor or pirate garb and decorate your lobby with appartus pertaining to ships and the sea. Rope coiled sailor-fashion, life preserver, etc., will help you obtain the desired atmosphere. A ship's bell hung somewhere in your lobby, or directly over the box office, so that the ticket-seller can ring it at intervals in the regulation ship fashion, would also be of considerable attention attracting value.

Dress a man up in pirate clothes, with his hands heavily manacled and a ball and chain fastened to one of his ankles. This man should either carry a pole sign, or have fastened to his clothes a sign containing the following copy:

Another novel attention getter can be worked up as follows: Build a ship around a Ford, using a lattice framework over which canvass painted to represent a ship's sides is stretched. Flag poles can be made to serve as masts and at least two masts should be used. The cheapest quality muslin or canvass may be used for the sails, which may be of the square rigged or fore-and-aft variety. On the bow and stern of the "ship" paint the name "Alden Besse," while the following copy should be painted on the sail:

SEE the daring rescue of the heroine from the doomed ship

If you have a list, send the letter below to the patrons whose names are contained on it. The Bluebird manager will be glad to show you how to go about having the letter multigraphed and mailed.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

Dear Friend—If you want to know what it is to feel the heave of a good wooden deck beneath your feet, the sting of flying spray against your face and the tang of salt sea air in your nostrils——

See "MUTINY" at the (name here) THEATRE on (Date)

"MUTINY" is a BLUEBIRD Photoplay—a photoplay dealing with the men and women who go down to the sea in ships. In scenes so vividly depicted as to make the observer believe himself a character in the drama unfolded before his eyes, it tells the story of the maelstrom of events which engulfed Captain Aaron Whitaker, of the good ship "Alden Besse," his daughter Esther, and the man she wed against her brutal father's wishes and the man who was defeated by his rival for Esther's hand.

If pale-blooded society dramas have wearied you, this BLUEBIRD production will please you more than any screen drama you've seen in the last six months. So highly does the management of this theatre think of "MUTINY" that your money will be refunded should this story of the sea fail to stir your enthusiasm.

Arrange NOW to see "MUTINY" next (day here). Don't let anything prevent you from seeing the best story ever thrown upon the (name of THEATRE) screen.

A bully good program in addition to the BLUEBIRD. COME! ! !

Cordially yours,
(NAME OF THEATRE)
Manager.

P. S. There's a shipwreck in "MUTINY" that is positively the most thrilling scene ever shown in moving pictures. It alone is well worth the price of admission.

in the gun-running. In the meantime, while walking near the station, Tina has caught her foot between the tracks and is groaning with pain. The "Bum" immediately rushes to her aid and carries her from the tracks just in time to escape a passenger train. He does not stop to receive her thanks.

That evening Joe approaches Tina, and after looking around to see if any one is in sight, catches her in his arms. The girl struggles with him, and her father rushes out to her. He tears Joe from Tina and then knocks him down, telling him that, after tonight they will part company for good. Joe talks with the other men and warns them that McGowan is going to double cross them, and that they'll have to beat him to it. He advises them to make a regular clean-up and beat it for Hell-Hole. The boys are easily persuaded. Late that night, they make a dash into McGowan's saloon, and, forcing every one to hold up their hands, begin to rob them. Joe fires at McGowan, killing him instantly. The runners jump on their horses and Joe abducts Tina.

Some of the other men, while examining McGowan, find a message urging them to summon the Rangers encamped at Little Creek and saying that the gun runners would be at Hell-Hole. They decide to notify the Rangers. Joe tells his men to stay at Hell-Hole for half an hour. The "Bum" sees Joe approach Tina and determines to help her to escape. He hastily slips off in the opposite direction and fires a shot, causing the men to think that the Rangers are after them. During the confusion he unties Tina and the two of them dash down the road on their horses.

Joe discovers that they have disappeared, and he and his followers start after them. The "Bum" tells Tina to ride on, that he will hold the pursuers. The girl meets the Rangers and gives them directions. After a fierce struggle the Rangers succeed in capturing all the bandits. They discover that the "Bum" is the best Ranger in the service.

ON his way out to the Universal City studios to absorb the sunshine, get away from New York's terrible winter, and for other pleasurable and profitable reasons, M. H. Hoffman, general manager of exchanges, passed through Strong, Colo., as the photograph on this page indicates. He would not have paid any attention to the Sunnyside Theatre if they were not running the Universal program, which is shown there twice a week.

The theatre has an adjustable booth, running on tracks which can be moved with the location of the theatre itself. It is sometimes necessary to move it in a hurry.

ters of the D. A. R. are co-operating with exhibitors in showing "The Eagle's Wings" as part of the preparedness campaign. There has been a tremendous public demand for the picture. Social barriers have been broken down. The society leader and her maid, the banker, the laborer, the clerk, even the boy and the girl are of one mind on the preparedness issue and are giving their best efforts to see that every American citizen gets the thunderbolt message in Rufus Steele's heart-gripping story produced magnificently in motion pictures.

"'The Eagle's Wings' proved an eloquent plea for preparedness," declared the Washington Post critic, reviewing the showing of "The Eagle's Wings" in Memorial Continental Hall, Washington, D. C., under the auspices of the National Society, D. A. R.

"So interested were public officials and members of patriotic societies that cards of admission were at a premium," said the Washington Star. "Members of Congress were so unanimous in their acceptance of invitations that the great bulk of cards of admission was soon exhausted," the Star continued.

All over the country exhibitors are co-operating with patriotic socities in an effort to do their share in patriotic education by means of "The Eagle's Wings."

Gentlemen—"Liberty" is a fine serial. It draws full well, and some say that it is the best picture I ever had. For the amount of business we do on other nights, we can always bank on a good night for "Liberty." It is an A-I picture, well acted, and full of good stuff.

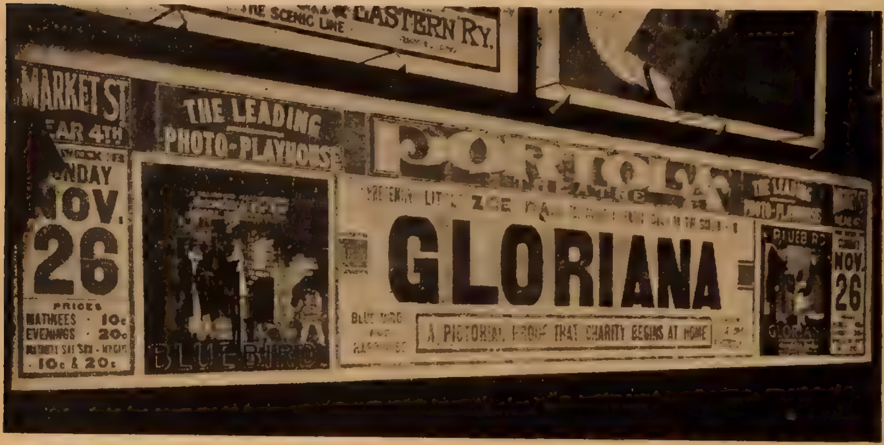
Bluebirds, Flying High, Perch on



The way the Portola Theatre of San Francisco bills Bluebirds.

WHO said paper? Look at the way the Portola Theatre of San Francisco bills Bluebirds. And, mind you, they have billed all of the other Bluebirds in the same way. Any weak-kneed exhibitor who does not believe in the efficacy of paper to let the people know what he is showing might take a useful lesson from this theatre's experience. The board in the cut shown above represents forty-eight sheets of paper made up as follows: two 6-sheets obtained from the Morgan Lithograph Company of the Bluebird photoplay, "Glorianna," two 3-sheet dates made up by a local lithograph house, an 18-sheet block title for "Glorianna," and a 12-sheet streamer of which they can order any quantity, thereby making the price extremely low, and the theatre's name. This latter they can use at any time. No circus ever had a more effective display than this one. If you want to know how it affected the Portola's business, write to the manager of the theatre. The address is prominently displayed on the streamer.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS" MADE WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY HIT

Feb. 22, 1917.

Moving Picture Weekly,
New York City.

"The Eagle's Wings," a Bluebird special feature production vividly portraying a graphic story of preparedness and patriotism, was shown at the Strand last week and went over big.

With the entire nation aroused over the nearness of possible war, "The Eagle's Wings" is indeed a very timely film offering. When our eight-piece orchestra, supplemented by our costly pipe organ, boomed forth "The Star-Spangled Banner" the audiences at practically every showing of the picture rose to their feet and applauded.

This play was well advertised here and the results were very satisfactory.

PULLING FOR THEM.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Gentlemen—Permit us to congratulate you on the sort of pictures you have been releasing, particularly during recent months.

Bluebird pictures have been consistently good. They have been pulling for us. The Saturday Evening Post advertising campaign has been helping us a great deal, also, and we back it up by continually advertising the Bluebird trade-mark.

There have been a number of recent releases that are particularly worthy of mention. They include Mary MacLaren in "Wanted—a Home," and "Saving the Family Name." Her latest picture, "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," which we played Monday of this week, was another excellent feature. "The Bugler of Algiers," "The Sign of the Poppy," "The Piper's Price," "God's Crucible," "The Devil's Pay Day," have been BETTER PLEASED.

Bluebird Photoplays,
Dallas, Texas.

Gentlemen—We have been using Bluebird features now for several months, and previous to this, had used several other features, but find our patrons are as well or better pleased with Bluebirds than any we have shown them. As long as we receive the same courteous treatment from the office, and the same class of pictures as in the past, we shall continue to use your pictures.

Respectfully yours,

Gentlemen—I beg to inform you that the Public High School of this city has chosen your feature picture, "The Right to be Happy," which we play on next Friday, as the best subject to be obtained for a benefit performance for the school. This is certainly a boost for the Bluebird pictures, as this choice was made after looking over twelve different makes of pictures.

THE YAQUI
A BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY
TO-DAY
THE YAQUI
TO-DAY

Palace Theatre, Juneau, Alaska.

BLUEBIRDS are extremely migratory, as may be judged by the picture of the Palace Theatre of Juneau, Alaska, in which "The Yaqui" has just been shown to a large and enthusiastic audience. The theatre is a large and comfortable one, looking more like a respectable suburban house than one situated in a frontier city like Juneau. The theatre opens at 6.45 every day of the week, and runs a program consisting of features and single reels, all of which are booked entirely through the Film Supply Company of Seattle, Wash.

SATISFY PATRONS.

Bluebird Photoplays,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Sir—Since reviewing your last release today, "The Bugler of Algiers," have decided that I owe you a letter of commendation on your product. I started with your No. 1 and played them all both here and on my circuit, and want to say that with very few exceptions (not as many as other high?class programs), they are box office attractions. Stories are diversified, well selected, cast for each strong and well suited to parts and the photography is excelent in all of them. The title work is beautiful. They satisfy patrons, which is the big idea. Make any use you see fit of me or this letter.

Wishing you and the "Bluebird" success, I remain,

Sincerely yours,
G. A. MAUK,
Phoenix Amusement Co.
Phoenix, Arizona.

MAGNIFICENT PHOTOPLAYS.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—A word of appreciation from me is probably only one in thousands, but I wish to express it for the magnificent photoplays you are giving us. Not only are the themes great, but the photography itself is far above the average. May you continue to hold the same high ideas you now have.

Respectfully,
(Signed) RUSSELL C. HUSSEY.

MORE THAN DOUBLED.

Gentlemen—Since I have been using your Bluebird pictures, my business has more than doubled on Bluebird night and my patrons are always pleased.

For the Voice on the Wire

These Stunts Will Set Your Whole Town Talking

THE public likes stunt advertising. First, because it is amusing; second, because it is entirely different—out of the beaten path, daring and unusual; and lastly because it attracts your attention, and people love to be attracted by unusual things. Get the attention of the People, said the great P. T. Barnum, and the rest is easy. That's why we have doped out these novel stunts for you. Any stunt you use will prove a big winner for you, and the more you use, the more advertising and publicity you give your serial. Use them all if you can, and if you can't use them all, use most of them. You will find that it will pay you big.

And no matter which you use—do them up in big style —don't start out half-heartedly. Bear in mind that the results on any stunt depend on how you put it over. Make a big thing out of any Stunt you use. The results will surprise you.

STUNT NO. 1—

It's a whale of a stunt—one that will set your whole town in a frenzy of delight and mystery—and will get you more real advertising than anything you have ever tried in your history. If you are located in a large city, you can hire any man to do this work—if in a small city, you may have to get some one from the outside that is not known to your local people. Here's the stunt—You advertise in your local newspapers that beginning on such a day (mention the date), a certain man (don't describe him, or what he wears or say anything about him) will appear on the streets of your city. He will have in his possession a bunch of tickets that will admit those who are fortunate enough to secure one, to any episode of "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE." OR if you want to be generous you can frame it so that the lucky ones will get a ticket that will admit them to all episodes. You announce in your papers that this stranger will appear in different spots of the town, and whoever approaches him and says: "ARE YOU THE MAN WITH THE TICKETS TO "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE" NOW BEING SHOWN AT THE ....THEATRE?"—will receive a ticket for "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE" serial. You state in your announcement that whoever approaches the right man (the Stranger who will have the tickets with him) must use the exact words as quoted above and you must publish this sentence in your announcement. If the sentence is stated any other way, the stranger (if you have approached the right man) will NOT answer, but if you do approach the right man and use the magic sentence as announced in the papers, the man will immediately produce the ticket and hand it to the person who has made the approach and who has used the right sentence. Note—It will be necessary for you to change the appearance of the man you use, daily. Don't send him out dressed in the same apparel twice, for the people will instantly recognize him. See that he changes clothes every day, and if he is caught more than once or twice the same day, see that he comes back to the theatre, dresses in a different suit, hat, tie, etc., and start him out again.

The first Stunt (No. 1) was published in the Purple Mask Advertising campaign book and caused such a sensation among Exhibitors who wish to use this stunt for "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE."

Once your man is caught by some one on the street, a crowd might collect, and they will recognize him. So you must keep him changed in appearance each day, or maybe twice a day if you want this stunt to keep the public of your town guessing. Talk this over with your local Editor. Tell him that you would like to have an article appear daily—supposedly written by the man with the tickets. You can have any of the Reporters or Editors write the articles, and each day the article will state that Mr. Stranger, the mysterious man who carries the free tickets to "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE" was in such and such a place, walked through so and so's store, rode on such and such a street car, looked into so and so's window for fully five minutes, etc., etc., without a single person approaching him. If these articles are cleverly written, you can work your whole town into a state of frenzy chasing the mysterious man with the free tickets to "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE," playing at the .... THEATRE.

Have the articles so written as to taunt the public in a pleasant way. Let the headings for the articles start off something like this:

> "WELL WELL, WELL, THE (Name of Your Town)
> PEOPLE ARE CERTAINLY SLOW. NOBODY EVEN > GOT CLSOE TO ME YESTERDAY."

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

LAST week, in his "Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk," Mr. Laemmle asked Exhibitors "What would you do without the Universal?"

And that brought to mind the query, "What would Universal Exhibitors do without the MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY?"

Have you ever thought of the time, money, labor and brains necessary to publish a 48 to 64 page magazine every week?

Has it ever occurred to you that the M. P. W. is the largest magazine of its kind in the world? Can you imagine a business so vast as to require such a publication EVERY WEEK merely to tell the news of its own organization?

This is not a bouquet throwing contest. It is an earnest endeavor to make Exhibitors appreciate the wealth of BUSINESS news this magazine brings them every week. The man who shows the Universal Program or who uses any part of the Universal Service should count his M. P. W. among his most valuable business assets.

"What has this got to do with putting it over?" you say. Just this. The whole magazine, from cover to cover, is filled with suggestions for any live Exhibitor. Stories of releases far enough in advance to help him book. Nows that shows him the trend of public taste. Announcements of the new pictures, serials, features, novelties, etc.

Next time you want to put "on" or "over" a good show, consult not only this page, but all the pages of the MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY.

THE Red Feather for March 19 is called "The Scarlet Crystal," and features the popular favorite Herbert Rawlinson, in the first long role he has appeared in since the injury to his leg which kept him out of pictures for weeks. The picture takes its title from a crystal ball which the hero purchases for his bride in Egypt. In it the girl reads all that is happening to her husband. The following suggestion for advertising this photoplay would be very effective, if you have the large arc lights outside your theatre, as so many do. Tint them with a wash of red watercolor paint, which will easily wash off when you are through with it, and letter the words "The Scarlet Crystal" on them. Another idea is to use red Chinese paper lanterns, round ones, strung across the front of your theatre, with electric light bulbs inside them, and one letter of the name of the picture on each one. Still another suggestion is to dress a man in the long black robes, and pointed black cap of the traditional magician. You may have cabalistic signs in white cut out and pasted all over his robe, if you like—triangles, and queer things that look like shorthand symbols, a pentagon, a big human eye, and so forth. Have him bending over a stand, draped in black, upon which rests a crystal. He should have a wand in his hand and wave it over the crystal—seeing visions in it.

THE L-Ko for March 21 is called "Defective Detectives," and features Phil Dunham. You can put on some "Sherlock Holems" sort of stuff in burlesque to draw attention to this. Have some huge footprints on the sidewalk outside your theatre. They can easily be painted on, or you can use a stencil. Get a tall man, and a short man and dress them in big overcoats with "deerstalker" caps on. The tall one should have a big magnifying glass, but this may be a mere circle of wire with a handle, as there need be no glass in it. He should examine the footprints carefully with this at intervals, while the short man admires him. They take false beards out of their pockets occasionally, and put them on with great solemnity. Or you may have a lot of footprints through the streets, and the men may trace them, and finally end up at a big poster announcing the show.

THERE is a wonderful war special for March 22. It is called "The Strangest Army in the World," and shows rare views of the Austrian troops who are fighting in the mountain heights. They are equipped with skis and snowshoes, and their maneuvers are very interesting as well as instructive. So few pictures of operations of the Teutonic forces have been received in this country, that this picture offers an unusual opportunity. This should be advertised by means of posters and slides run in the theatre several days before the showing. You may word your slides according to the sentiment in your community. If it is strongly pro-Ally, you need only say that these are authentic pictures of the troops used in fighting high up in the Alps between Italy and Austria. The picture will interest the audience no matter what their sympathies, and it should receive special attention.

ON Friday, March 23, is the second adventure of the series by George Bronson Howard's "The Perils of the Secret Service"; it is called "The Dreaded Tube." Here is an idea for putting it over. Get some boys on bicycles to ride through the town, with big cardboard circles attached to the wheels of their machines. Have the circles some bright color, orange or brilliant green, and letter them appropriately. Then send the boys through the streets, having them ride slowly one behind the other. The circles of card will not be expensive, and can easily be fitted over the hubs of the wheels. They should be the same size as the wheel itself. You can use this idea for advertising any picture that you run.

Of course, you don't, but just to please you and keep you in good humor we are handing you on this our sixtieth weekly anniversary, "The Scarlet Crystal," with a notable company headed by three honest-to-goodness stars. Take advantage of your opportunity and BOOK NOW.

"The Raid." With Neal Hart and Janet Eastman. Written and produced by George Marshall. Three-Reel Gold Seal Dare-Devil Western Drama. Released March 20. They say Neal Hart isn't an actor. They say that all he does is to go through scenes and incidents that were old stuff to him when he was a sheriff in Montana. Be that as it may, as the poets say, he is one of the liveliest acting guys in pictures today, and after nis work in "LIBERTY" and what he is doing now in smashing two and three-reel Westerns entitles him to all the glory there is actor or no actor. "The Raid" tells the story of Neal's unsuccessful wooing of the daughter of his ranch boss; of the kidnapping of the girl and her father by a band of Mexican bandits; of Neal's heroic rescue of the prisoners; of his dejection after their departure, and then the strongest, sweetest, punchiest, tenderest climax that ever wound up a hell-roarin' Western. Better get in on this.

"Defective Detectives." With Phil Dunham. Two-Reel L-Ko Detecatiff Burlesque Comedy. Released March 21. Here is a comedy that represents the difference between the methods of L-KO Komedies and the common or garden variety. Pushing another guy's face into a fat custard pie may be funny, but it is scarcely subtle. It may get a laugh from the lips out—but it won't get even a grin that comes straight from where you live. L-KO'S have the happy faculty of taking his bits from real life and burlesquing them; showing the funny side of every day occurrences, and that is what appeals to the average fan. Burlesque and travesty; good naturedly poking fun at customs and other things have put L-KO'S at the top where they belong. Don't let 'em tell ya different.

Harry Carey in "Goin' Straight." With Priscilla Dean. Two-Reel 101 Bison "Cheyenne Harry" Drama. Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released March 24. For nearly two years now Harry Carey has been goin' straight into the hearts of more than several millions of fans throughout the world, and has built up a following, because every one knows that Harry goes straight to the heart of any action he's mixed up in. If it's hard riding Harry takes his chances like the dare-devil he is. If it's a fight he is there with the punch that lands and sets the crowd wild with joy. A vigorous, alert, husky son-of-a-gun, Harry is, and when it comes to acting there are mighty few that can touch him whether in "chaps" or the soup and fish. Pshaw, I forgot to tell you the story. But never mind, it's a regular Harry Carey and the folks in your town will pack in to see it.

Here is a picture that is cleaning up more money for Exhibitors than any picture released within the past six months. It was originally intended for a State Rights Production; it was advertised as such, and much valuable territory was sold. Then BLUEBIRD Executives saw it, paid for it, and all State Rights negotiations were declared off.

Money paid for territory was returned and the picture was released as a special BLUEBIRD—not on the regular program. This Man Said

(No. 168. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

WHENEVER I think of those exhibitors whose backs have become bent with the weight of the feature rental burden, there also comes to my mind a little 280-seat house which, running the Universal's regular service program, does a weekly business of NOT LESS THAN $2,000!

Location? Sure, it's in a fine location with only FOUR other theatres ON THE SAME BLOCK battling with it for business. Every one of these houses is better-looking, as far as appearance is concerned, but when it comes to real old-fashioned business, the little 280-seater has them licked to a finish.

Now, while I won't mention the name of the house in this "Straight-from-the-Shoulder" talk, I'll tell you where it is in case you want to investigate and get the facts for yourself. It is located on Madison near Clark Street, Chicago, and is the ONLY house on that block running the Universal program.

There's nothing mysterious about this theatre's success. The management has merely been putting into effect the business principles advocated in these talks for many moons.

While the opposition houses have placed their main reliance upon long-winded, draggy feature subjects, the management of the little theatre has never departed from the Universal's regular service program. As a general rule the show is not allowed to run longer than FOUR REELS, and when the crowd is unusually heavy, it is cut to three!

Not long ago, I spoke to the manager of this house and in answer to my question here is what he told me:

"I've educated my people to prefer QUALITY to quantity. They know that when they see four reels of pictures in this house, they get four thousand feet of pure, unpadded and unadulterated ACTION.

"Furthermore, I advertise my 1- 2- and 3-reelers just as strongly as my opposition advertise their 5-reel features. When it comes to the question of good pictures versus bum footage, my house reports—and my competitors' house reports—will tell you which wins out every time!"

"Good pictures versus bum footage"—coming to think of it, here is a description that tells the regular-service-versus-feature story in a nutshell.

For the sake of your dwindling box office receipts, quit giving your patrons a lot of bum footage!

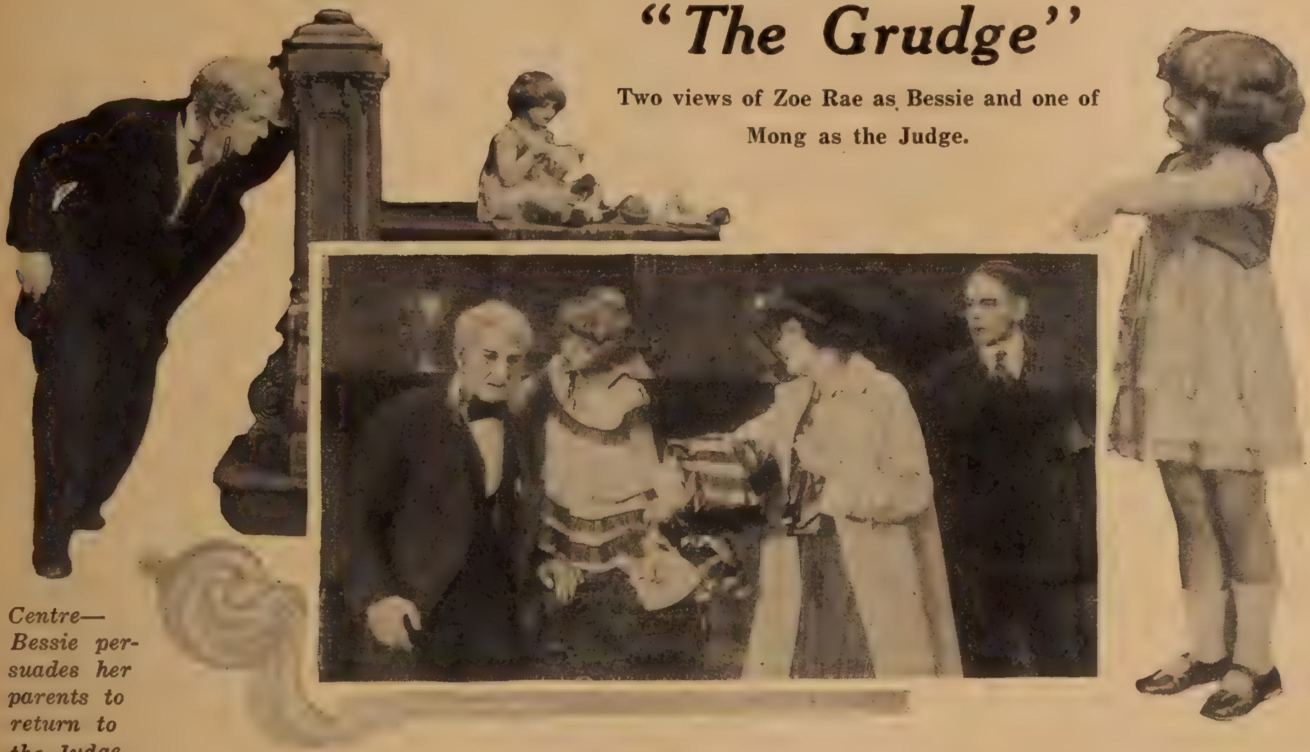
"The Grudge"

Two views of Zoe Rae as Bessie and one of Mong as the Judge.



Centre—Bessie persuades her parents to return to the Judge.

IT is welcome news to the fans that Zoe Rae appears in the Rex two-reel feature written by Harvey Gates, produced by William V. Mong, and called "The Grudge." Zoe is making so many friend for herself that her mail begins to assume formidable proportions. She receives letters and little gifts from all parts of this country, and of Canada, as well as many with strange foreign stamps, which she carefully soaks off for "her collection." She has the role of a baby peacemaker in this charming picture, which, although it features the tiny lady, is not in the least a "kid story." Irene hunt and Mong himself do fine work in important roles in the cast. The story concerns the old judge and his unfortunate daughter.

Judge Thurman is an irascible old gentleman who begrudges the small amount necessary to send his niece, Dora Flynn, to college. He is absolutely heartless in his business associations and refuses to help Thos. Hardy, who is president of a bank and this inadvertently causes Hardy to kill himself.

Attending the same college with Dora is Thos. Hardy's son, Alan, and the two have married secretly. Alan is summoned home by the death of his father and wires Dora of this. She has been unable to keep her secret, and it has reached the ears of the principal who has dismissed the girl. She is afraid to return to her uncle and obtains employment in the city. Alan learns of the part the judge had played in the death of his father and vows to break the old man. He is successful, and it is a bitter effort for the judge to seek favor from the younger man.

Meantime, Dora is unable to win a livelihood for herself and baby, and places it on her uncle's doorstep. Later she asks him to allow her to return home in the role of servant. The child, Bessie, has secured a place for herself in the heart of the judge through her winsome ways.

Alan comes to make a proposition to the judge regarding his financial position, and for the first time sees Dora. The judge is astounded at this revelation and pleads with the two to allow the child to remain. Alan is obdurate and the three leave, but have only gone a short distance when Dora persuades Alan to return.

MILITARY FLIER VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY.

"I REMEMBER some years ago when I made a number of flights in the air for moving pictures and it certainly was a novelty in those days."

The speak was Major J. Robinson Hall of the Aviation Corps, United States Army, who recently was detailed to duty at San Diego, California, after nearly two years as military observer with the German army in Europe. He was paying his first visit to Universal City and was escorted about the ground by Director Allan J. Holubar, who happened at the time to be producing a military feature, "The Reward of His Government," dealing with the European war. Holubar told Major Hall some of the details of the production, and the officer was much impressed with the possibilities for the screen.

Major Hall is an advocate of an increased aviation corps for the army and was interested to know that Roy Klaffki, Holubar's cameraman, is himself an aviator.

"SUFFS" MAKE LAST APPEAL.

THE weather, on the day before the inauguration of President Wilson for the second time, was anything but pleasant, but failed entirely to daunt the courage of the seekers of votes for women, who turned out in full force, to draw the attention of the public to their cause. They marched in silent parade around the White House, with their banners, as the culmination of the "Silent picket duty," which they have maintained for some time, outside the gates. The cameraman thought the rest of the country would like to see just the sort of a day it was which they defied with so much intrepidity, and so they appear as part of the Universal Animated Weekly.

AFTER EIGHT MONTHS' "WAR."

AFTER eight months of what Theodore Roosevelt calls "waging peace," the two New York regiments, the Twelfth and the Sixty-ninth, returned to the city, and marched up Fifth Avenue to the accompaniment of cheers of welcome which almost drowned the band. An impressive sight for the crowd was the armored motor-cars of the Twelfth, which have entirely proved their practicability on the border. The boys looked very fit, after their strenuous "campaign," but very glad to be at home again. The Animated, as usual, secured splendid pictures of them.

PREPARING FOR '17'S BATTLE.

IN the spring a young fan's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of ball. Just about a month will see the faithful flocking to the various ball parks, the voice of the rooter will once more be heard in the land, and there will be the usual horrible mortality among grandmothers. All the big league clubs are in the throes of spring training, in various portions of the country where the sun condescends to shine more frequently than it does around these parts. The Animated Weekly cameraman had a chance to visit the training camp of the Chicago Nationals, at Pasadena, and he sent in some views of the men in their new 1917 uniforms, which will make it still harder to wait a whole month before the official season opens.

PLAYING WAR IN THE AIR.

AMERICANS have every quality to make successful airmen, and though officially this branch of the service is weak, there are many amateur flyers in different parts of the country who are preparing themselves for a possible call for their services as air pilots. There are also schools of flying in different sections, where the volunteers are working hard in order to win positions in the U. S. army as air scouts. The Animated Weekly shows views of the school at Mineola, Long Island, with a flight of volunteer flyers, pursuing the "enemy's" scouts. We witness a sham battle in the air, with nearly all the thrills of a real one. A new kind of incendiary rocket is tried out. They are controlled by the aviator's foot, while flying far above the ground. We see the start of an armed biplane, and the fall of the airmen to earth, fortunately without casualties. The training is very complete and the pilot's license is well earned when it is finally awarded.

WOMEN CAN AID IN WAR.

ONE of the most significant phases of the great European war is the important service which has been rendered by women in all the belligerent countries. The Animated Weekly has filmed some of the occupations in which women of our country could engage, in order to free men for the fighting line. The pictures were made by the courtesy of the New York Hippodrome. Hundreds of women are qualified to drive autos, for the number of "chauffeuses" has increased enormously of later years. Women could also easily replace letter carriers. Some could handle freight, for the pictures show them doing it. Of course, they would be invaluable as nurses and caretakers of wounded and convalescents. They would make fine-looking traffic cops, street-car conductors, bus conductors and drivers, elevated and subway guards. In fact, the European women have proved themselves capable of filling positions for which no one before the war believed them fitted, and it is a foregone conclusion that the women of our own country would fully equal the record of the Old World if events should demand their efforts.

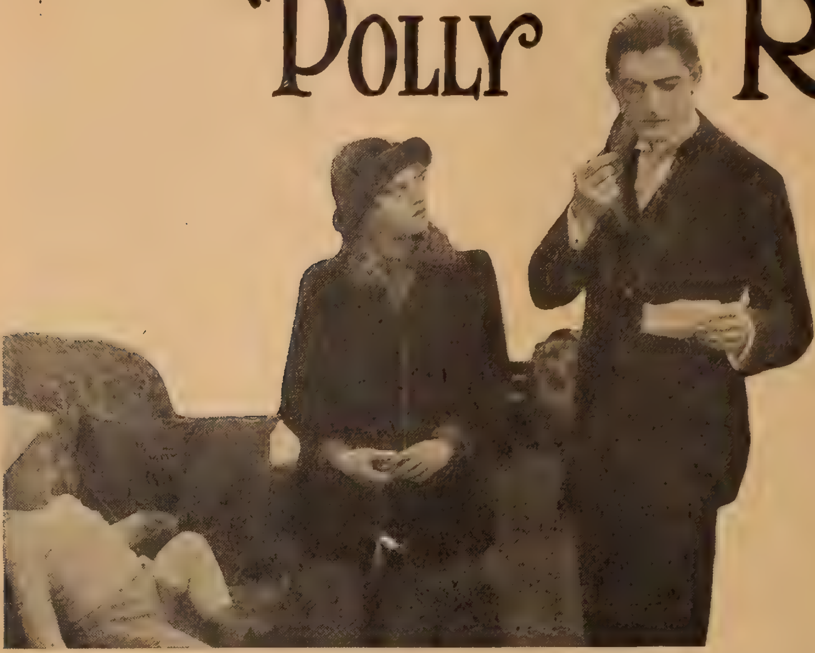
"POLLY REDHEAD"



Pollyooly brings a note from her aunt.

BASED on Edgar Jepson's "Pollyooly" stories, this Bluebird photoplay was adapted for the screen by E. J. Clawson and produced by Jack Conway, with Ella Hall in the dual role of two little "brick tops." One was a lodgings house slavey and the other the rich but domestically distressed nobleman.

CAST.

Pollyooly	Ella Hall
Lady Caroline	Gertrude Aster
Lady Osterly	Gretchen Lederer
Earl of Osterly	Charles Hill Mailes
Mrs. Brown	Helen Wright
Mrs. Meekin	Mrs. L. A. Emmons
Hon. John Ruffin	George Webb
Gedge-Tomkins	Richard Le Reno
Ronald	James McCandless
Edgar, the "Lump"	William Worthington, Jr.

THE Pollyooly stories of Edgar Jepson won a deserved popularity, and are still selling in book form. It is safe to say that more and more copies will be in demand after the screen version of them appears as a Bluebird photoplay, with Ella Hall in the best role she has had so far. The screen adaptation was made by E. J. Clawson, and the picture produced by Jack Conway. The resemblance between two children in widely separated walks of life is the theme of the story, and gives little Miss Hall a chance to do some wonderful work in characterizing the two, for she plays both roles. The subtle touches by which she distinguishes between the spoiled daughter of the Earl of Osterly, and the little waif who overworks herself to keep her baby brother from the poorhouse, prove that as a portrayer of children Ella Hall has no superiors on the screen. It is quite impossible to believe that she is over twelve years old.

As for the baby brother, he was played in the most ingratiating fashion by William Worthington, Jr., son and heir of the Bluebird director who makes plays with Franklyn Farnum and Agnes Vernon in them. W. W. Jr., made a hit at the advance showing of the picture at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway, New York, and received press notices which must have mad his parents almost burst with pride. The whole cast is delightful. George Webb does fine things with the would-be cynic, John Ruffin, who assists Pollyooly to keep the "Lump" from the poorhouse, and makes everything come out right in the end. Gertrude Aster is a picture as Lady Caroline, his accomplice in the plot to substitute Pollyooly for little Lady Marion, and Charles Mailes is most convincing as the Earl. To do justice to the cast, every member of it should have special mention, and then we should begin all over again to praise Ella Hall. Here is a synopsis of the story:

The Lump won't accept Marion on any terms.

Pollyooly's red hair is the bane of her existence. Her aunt is dying, and she takes upon herself the arduous task, for a twelve-year-old, of "doing for" two gentlemen, the Honorable John Ruffin and Mr. Gedge-Tomkins, solicitors, who live in bachelor apartments. Pollyooly goes on with the job, even after her aunt has passed away, in terror lest by losing it, the Lump," her baby brother, should have to be taken to the poorhouse.

John Ruffin is not much of a solicitor, but he has a very kind heart, and when his sweetheart, Lady Caroline, calls on him, she finds the young housekeeper installed. Caroline is struck, with the resemblance which the little redhead bears to Lady Marion, the little daughter of the Earl ofof Osterly, whose wife has left him, though he has refused her the custody of the child. John and Caroline scheme together to substitute Pollyooly for Marion for a few days, so as to allow Lady Osterly to get away to the Continent with Marion. They offer her twenty golden sovereigns, and the sight of so much wealth decides Pollyon the spot. Leaving the Lump in their care, she changes places with the little lady.

In the Earl's household, Ronald, his son, and the dogs are the only ones who question the changeling. But the grown-ups in their superior wisdom think that they know best. The Lump also refuses to accept Marion for his Pollyooly, but every one else is deceived. The plans of mice and men do not work quite smoothly, however. Pollyooly misunderstands her orders, and leaves the Earl's a day too soon. Ronald, who has found her out, meets her in the park, and here the Earl finds them and carries the little girl back by main force.

In the meantime, John Ruffin has promised to bring Lady Osterly and Marion, who are waiting at his rooms, their tickets. But the loveliness of Caroline puts everything else out of his head. The fugitives wait in anxiety, while Ruffin is informing the Earl that they have escaped him and are on their way to the Continent. Pollyooly, who has been having a dreadful time trying to convince the Earl's household of her real identity, is thus justified, and she runs out into the garden with Ronald.

The Earl, hearing by chance over the telephone the whereabouts of his wife and daughter, goes to Ruffin's rooms to get them. Lady Osterly will not let him in, and he is assailed by Gedge-Tomkins from across the hall, when he tries to force his way into the room. This altercation on the staircase brings Lady Osterly to separate the combatants. The Earl begs her to forgive and forget, and she at last consents to try their life together again. They then return to the house, where the butler and the dog are keeping guard over Caroline and Ruffin. He has just summoned courage to propose to her, and the presence of their guards is very embarrassing to both of them. Two happy couples are in the house, while out in the garden Ronald has just informed Pollyooly that she is "different," and has shyly kissed her. She says, "Well, I suppose we are engaged now?" as the picture fades.

"An Englishman's house is his castle, sir—his castle!"

REYNOLDS FILMS ALASKA STORY.

LYNN REYNOLDS and his company of Bluebird players have gone from Universal City to the snowclad mountains in the vicinity of Huntington Lake, California, for the purpose of securing snow scenes and correct atmosphere for a big story laid in Alaska, to be called "The Coate of the Klondike."

The Reynolds' company has been provided with fur clothing, snowshoes and a complete outfit for living in the wilds, even to the dog team of "huskies," which is maintained at Universal City for just such photoplays. Several Alaskans, naturally familiar with the life of the prospectors in the north, assisted Reynolds in making his preparations for the trip.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS BURNED.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS, who plays the featured role in "Hell Morgan's Girl," Bluebird Special, and in "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," a forthcoming Bluebird, had a narrow escape a few days ago, and as it is, one of her arms was painfully injured. The actress had been heating some water over a gas range when the sleeve of her kimono touched the flame. In an instant it blazed, but she was able to throw off the garment and get it out of the rear door before any damege had been done, although she did sustain some painful burns.

NEVA GERBER REFLECTS

When I first started out they intended to make me
An ornament bright of the bar—
Not a barmaid! Oh, no! the bar where you go
To settle your quarrels with lawyers, you know—
They thought I'd succeed my papa.

But I found the whole business incredibly boring,
My frocks must be frumpish, or critics be scoring
The taste of a lawyer for fashion adoring—
You know how attractive clothes are!

So I chose a career with a chance to look pretty,
And wear charming frocks at the big picture city—
You'll guess where it is or you're not very witty;
They're going to make me a star.

ADVENTURE No. 3 of the series, written and produced by George Bronson Howard, tells how Norroy saves New York from the plague.

Rose Lee	Elsie Jane Wilson

THE third adventure of the series, "The Perils of the Secret Service," written and produced by George Bronson Howard, and featuring Kingsley Benedict, is called "The Dreaded Tube," and takes place in New York City. Elsie Jane Wilson, remembered for many fine characterizations, returns to the Universal fold in the role of the woman, who sacrifices herself that the city may be saved from an epidemic of the terrible bubonic plague. Here is the story:

Michael Xabra, an anarchist, has been condemned to death for a dynamiting outrage in which four people perished. The Red Brotherhood, an anarchist society, the leader of which is Ferrand Boissevan, the keeper of a curio shop and an opium smuggler, have determined that if Xabra is executed they will spread germs of the bubonic plague throughout New York.

Rose Lee, secretary to the Governor of New York, goes to Chinatown for her weekly supply of opium, but is horror-stricken to read a notice that owing to the new laws, no more opium can be procured.

During her days as a free-lance stenographer, Rose had done some work for Boissevan. He was greatly attracted toward her, but she had repulsed him. Now he sees her in Chinatown, and sensing her predicament, hastens to her and promises to give her opium, on the condition that she report daily what the Governor intends doing about the case of Xabra. She finally consents.

Carson Huntley sees Rose slink into the curio shop and disappear by means of a sliding panel in the wall. Quickly he hides behind a curtain, and listening at the panel, hears some of the plot being discussed by Boissevan and his accomplice, Giovanni. Huntley telegraphs to Yorke Norroy that the Red Brotherhood is to be called together. Norroy advises Huntley to disguise as a Russian and go to the meeting of the anarchists under the name of Jacobus of Wilmington. Norroy is on his way to New York.

Carson learns that a test tube in the possession of Boissevan contains the culture of the bubonic plague and that if it were broken into the reservoir of the city the plague would spread like the fires of Hell. Yorke Norroy arrives. He goes to the Governor's office disguised as a Russian and puts Rose through a test to find out if she is one of the conspirators. Discovering that she is wholly ignorant of the plot, he unfolds his plan to prevent the disaster. Realizing that her life has never been of any good use to any one, she declares that she is glad to be of service, so that her death may save so many.

Norroy instructs her to get Boissevan to her rooms and there manage to break the test tube. He will prevent the spread of the germs by a strong chemical, which will destroy himself as well as the girl and Boissevan, for it will burn the whole house.

Rose entices Boissevan to her house and there, by use of strategy, gets him into a large closet which has a spring lock. Deciding that two lives will be sufficient sacrifice, she follows him into the closet and hurls the lamp at him. Hungrily, the flames catch the clothes hanging about, and soon the forms of the girl and man are seen still struggling amid the dense smoke and flames.

Norroy rushes into the room too late to save Rose, although he makes so great an effort to do so, that he is finally carried unconscious by Huntley from the burning house.

EPISODE TWO OF "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE"

"The Mysterious Man in Black"

EPISODE TWO of the surprise serial, "The Voice on the Wire," written by Eustace Hale Ball, scenario by J. G. Alexander and produced by Stuart Paton, shows the hero in a vain struggle to prevent another murder.

CAST.

John Shirley	Ben Wilson
Howard Van Cleft	Ernie Shields
William Grimsby	Wm. Canfield
Polly Marion	Neva Gerber
Red Warren	Francis MacDonald
Dr. Renolds	Joseph Girard

THE second episode of the surprise serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which was written in book form by Eustace Hale Ball, adapted for the screen by J. G. Alexander, and produced by Stuart Paton, with Ben Wilson in the lead, is called "The Mysterious Man in Black." We see Shirley, played by Wilson, determined to prevent the murder of William Grimsby, who has received the same mysterious warning over the phone. He enlisted the aids of Polly Marion, the actress, and his plans are carefully laid and as carefully carried out; but in vain. When the episode ends, the mystery is more baffling than ever.

As Howard Van Cleft is sitting in his library he receives a mysterious telephone call warning him that if he does not desist in attempting to find the murderer of his father, he also will be a victim. Howard acquaints his friend, John Shirley, with this news.

William Grimsby, an aged financier and roue, receives a warning of death. John approaches him with a scheme to save his life, to which Grimsby consents. In accordance with Shirley's plan he visits the latter's apartments. Shirley there makes up to resemble the aged financier and departs, leaving Grimsby comfortably ensconced in his rooms.

Some time previously, Shirley had visited the office of Dick Holloway, a theatrical manager, where he was fired upon by some unknown person. He tells Dick that he wants an actress who is beautiful and at the same time fearless. Dick promises to get this sort of a girl, and sends Polly Marion, whom Shirley thinks is just the type he wants.

Shirley, dressed as Grimsby, calls upon Polly and takes her to a cafe where the two dine. She introduces Red Warren, a cafe hanger-on, and a somewhat mysterious individual. When Shirley and Polly leave, they cannot find their own taxi and are forced to take another. As they ride along, the two begin to grow drowsy. Shirley finds the windows securely fastened. With Polly's diamond, he breaks the glass. On the road he is attacked by a muffled figure, which springs to the side of his car. He tries to detain the figure, but he escapes. Then gagging and binding the chauffeur, whom he puts into the machine so that Polly can keep guard over him, Shirley drives home, where he finds Grimsby dead.

Polly gets a mysterious phone call telling her to beware or she will be the next victim. Shirley likewise receives the same warning, but it only makes him more determined to solve the mystery.

ACTOR POOR BLACKSMITH.

HOWARD CRAMPTON once played the role of a blacksmith in a Universal film play when a woman came up with a horse and insisted upon him shoeing it. She would not give the actor an opportunity to explain he was simply playing the part in a picture and was so insistent in her demands he determined finally to get even. He selected a shoe two sizes too small for the hoof and, picking up the animal's hind leg, started to drive nails in the shoe. Then the woman severely upbraided him and declared she was going to report him to the humane society. When Crampton got an opportunity to explain that he was merely a moving picture actor, she said, "You may be a good actor, but you're a rotten horseshoer."

MOVIE

HERE is a picture of the reception which was arranged by Eddie Lyons, of the Universal Nestors, for his brother, who plays under the name of "Harry Nolan," in the same company. He sent word to the Nestor studio that he had just become a father, and so Eddie, aided and abetted by his side kick, Lee Moran, prepared a suitable greeting for his older brother, when he appeared for work. They purchased a baby carriage, an unbreakable doll, and a whole toy shop of other things, and grouped themselves so that the photographer could make a permanent record of the occasion.

Eddie's brother wishes it distinctly understood that it is no reflection upon the name of Lyons which caused him to adopt "Nolan" as a screen cognomen. A very prominent resident of Los Angeles happens to be called "Harry Lyons," and the mail of the screen actor and the public personage was constantly being confused. So the player decided to adopt another for the screen, as he could do so with no legal formalities.

"Any name so long as it's Irish," seems to have been his idea, and he does not disclose the reasons why he chose to be known as "Nolan." But the small addition to the family will carry on the traditions of their race as a "Lyons."

The photographer shows Eddie on one side of the happy father and Lee Moran on the other. Edith Roberts, leading lady of Nestors, is presenting young hopeful with a stuffed dog.

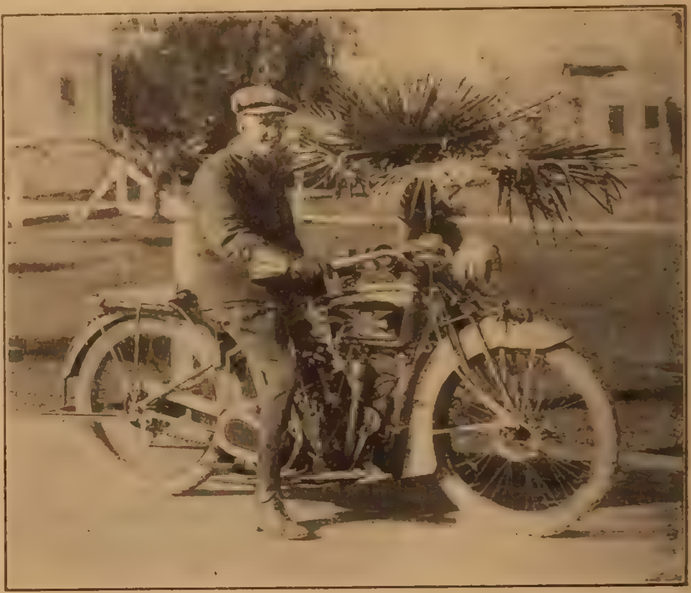
L-Ko Notes

SEVERAL changes have taken place at the L-Ko in regard to directors. Phil Dunham, the English comedian, is co-directing with Vin Moore, while Noel Smith has taken Dan Russell under his guidance.

Exhibitors who have been accustomed to seeing Dan Russel with his mustache will be surprised to find him appearing clean-shaven and running second to none when it comes to pulling guns doing a Western picture in which a bucking broncho has a leading role. Dan says he makes a deep impression in a most important part.

Phil Dunham, co-directed by Vin Moore, is making a fire picture. Mr. Dunham assumes the role of Fire Chief, whose affection for the Mayor's daughter gets him into difficultiles. An entire set will be burned.



Director Geo. Marshall and his motor cycle.

UNIVERSAL Director George Marshall is an enthusiastic motorcyclist, and this shows him on his metaled steed. Marshall, who has just signed a long-term contract, has been producing some stunning Western pictures, in one, two and three reels, with Neal Hart playing the leads for him. Among the most successful are "The Raid," a Gold seal three-reeler; "Roped In," a very funny comedy-drama; "They Were Four," and the two-reeler "Border Wolves," which made part of the Red Feather Double Attraction. He is working on another three-reeler now.

GRAMS

CLAIRE McDOWELL, whose next appearance will be as the star of the Red Feather, "The Bronze Bride," directed by Henry McRae, has put herself on record as saying that "she hates herself in modern clothes." So when she heard that she had been cast to play the role of an Indian girl, she was delighted, and set to work at once to study Indian lore, and to work out a costume which should be absolutely correct in every detail. The Universal Costume Department cooperated with her in every way, and the result is a real Indian garb, made of supple deerskin, fringed in the traditional manner, with beads, belt of leopard skin, headband, and moccasins embroidered with dyed porcupine quills—all complete. The costume is the real thing, not a mere property room imitation.

Claire McDowell as an Indian in "The Bronze Bride."

The straight braids of hair and the band of bead embroidery over the forehead are very becoming to Miss McDowell, and she deserves the title which she receives in the picture, "the best-looking Indian you ever saw." At the end of the picture she has to wear modern clothes for a short time, and really it is hard to understand her rooted objection to them, for she looks wonderfully well in them.

"Costume should never follow fashion indiscriminately," says Miss McDowell, "but should be designed to suit the individual. Of course, this demands taste, skill, judgment and knowledge, as well as a great deal of time, and it is no wonder that most women, in these crowded days, prefer to buy the things that some one else has designed for them. But that is only another reason why I am so delighted to have a costume picture to play, and I must say since joining Universal I have been fortunate in this respect."

This photograph lay on the Editor's desk
At the end of a perfect day.
To describe this burlesque would be too picturesque,
So we'll write what they ought to say. Ed.

"AHA, an author! I am mighty glad to meet you alone. This will give me an opportunity to obtain the point of view of the man who gets money for a production which the director and the scenario writer put over for him. Now, tell me, little one, what did you ever do?" said Edwin Stevens, the eminent director and manager of the Universal studio at Leonia.

"Don't you know? I wrote 'The Voice on the Wire,' the great Universal serial. I also wrote the book from which the film, which is being directed by Stuart Paton, was taken. But I want to tell you further than that that I was directing pictures when you, cinematographically speaking, were in swaddling clothes. I would be doing the same thing now except that the pictures that I made were too good for them. But now the industry has advanced very materially, and I hope to go back to producing again. Furthermore, your remarks about getting the money are extremely ill-advised, as might be expected from a director. An author very seldom gets a tenth of the money to which he is entitled."

Of course they might have said all this, but they didn't. The actual conversation ran somewhat like this:

"Well, Van, old boy (this to the ancient and honorable P. A.), how do you want us to pose?"

A. and H. P. A.: "Oh, I just want to get a picture of you two people together, that's all. Just look pleasant."

Gentle reader, behold the result.

"The Scarlet Crystal"

Vincent Morgan buys the crystal for his bride while traveling in Egypt.

RED FEATHER production, written by J. Grubb Alexander and produced by Charles Swickard, with Herbert Rawlinson starred and Dorothy Davenport and Betty Schade in his support.

A REMARKABLE Red Feather production is "The Scarlet Crystal," written by J. Grubb Alexander and directed by Charles Swickard. It tells an engrossing tale, in which the real is blended in a novel fashion with a suggestion of the supernatural. The main theme of the story is the strange power of a young wife to read in a crystal, which her husband has bought for her as a souvenir on their wedding trip in Egypt, the significant events which take place in his life when he is away from her.

This is the first picture in which the popular young star, Herbert Rawlinson, worked after an injury to his leg which put him out of business for nearly two months. Rawlinson has made his mark in pictures mainly in the light comedies, which have won him a world of admirers. His personality and magnetism have full play in a role of the drawing-room comedy type, and it is quite a surprise to find him cast for a part which has heavier demands upon him. He meets them all in a most satisfactory manner and receives splendid support from Dorothy Davenport, who is almost as much of a surprise in a "vampire" part, and Betty Schade, who is entrusted with the role of the young wife.

Marie tries to re-establish herself.

Director Swickard has given the production the most lavish settings possible, and in every way, story, cast and settings, this Red Feather is a memorable one. The story, which is is difficult to tell briefly from the complication of its details, is as follows:

Jonathan Worth and his wife live in Midvale and have an only daughter, Priscilla, a young girl whom they have safely sheltered from all knowledge of the darker side of life. One day she receives an invitation from her aunt in the city, a gay society butterfly, Mrs. De Puyster Forbes, to come and pay her an extended visit. Her parents are loath to let her go, but she prevails upon them to allow her to accept.

Mrs. Forbes is much interested in a rich young man, Vincent Morgan, who is apparently ready to expire from boredom. She thinks that a young unsophisticated girl may be the medicine that he needs to restore his interest in life, and so she sends to Midvale for Priscilla. The childlike simpilicity of the girl has the desired effect. She is welcomed cordially by her aunt, and supplied with pretty clothes. She soon takes her place in society, and wins the love of Vincent, who casts aside all his former associates and begs the girl to marry him. Among other things, she has been giving sittings for her portrait to a fashionable painter, who has fallen deeply in love with her. She, however, is interested only in Vincent, and accepts him when he proposes, much to the disappointment of Durant, the artist, who declares that his heart is broken.

Priscilla and Vincent are married and set out on a tour of the world, which brings them eventually to Egypt. A fortune-teller says that Priscilla is the kind of person who can see the real truth, and the inner meaning of things and Vincent buys her a crystal, in which she is to try her powers of discernment. After a long trip the Morgans return to town, and take up their social life again.

Durant has been unable to forget Priscilla and has tried numerous models in the meantime in the hope of finding one whose face will banish that of the woman who is lost to him. His present model is Peggy Lovel, an innocent young girl with an invalid mother to support. Priscilla meets Durant and he makes it plain that he still loves her, but she does not at once repulse him. Vincent is besieged by his friends, who beg him to return to the gay life with them, and declare that they have missed him dreadfully Marie DeLys, an actress, is particularly insistent, for she has never forgiven Priscilla for marrying the catch of the season, and longs to get Vincent back into her power. Vincent, however, will not listen to any of them, though he has a struggle with himself to be true to his vow, especially when he is angered by the attentions of Durant to his wife, which seem to him too marked. At length he goes to the studio of Durant, to buy the portrait from him which the artist painted of his wife before their marriage. While there he meets Peggy, and is sorry for her. Her evident innocence appeals to him, and he promises to befriend her if she ever needs assistance. While he is buying the portrait of his wife, she arrives at the studio. She sees through the curtains that her husband is there, and leaves without revealing herself to him.

The next day Durant delivers the portrait in person at the home of the Morgans. Vincent arrives as the painter is exhibiting the picture, and is very angry at finding the artist with his wife. When the man is gone he makes a scene, telling his wife that he has relinquished all his friends for her, and that yet she receives the man, whom gossip declares to be still in love with her, in their home. The next day, still believing in the duplicity of his wife, Vincent yields to the pressing invitations of his old friends and joins them. He reads in the paper that Durant has suddenly left town, and that a woman is said to be the cause of his going. He jumps to the conclusion that the woman is his wife, and furious, he rushes to the cafe, where he meets his friends. Marie is particularly pressing in her attentions to him and prevails upon him to call upon her.

In the cafe one night, where Vincent has been drinking more than is good for him, he sees an old friend, Billy Van Duyn, escorting little Peggy Lovel, the model, and about to enter a taxi cab with her. He remembers his promise to befriend the girl, goes after them and sends her home alone. He then returns to the cafe, and drinks to forget his disappointment in his wife. He returns to his home quite intoxicated. Priscilla has

"The Leap"

THE last episode left Detective Kelly and his men in a precarious position, from which the Thirteenth shows them extricated. It is called "The Leap," from the sensational jump which the reckless Queen of the Apaches takes from a roof into a moving automobile. Then the intrepid girl learns of a contemplated attempt to blow up the financial district of New York from the air. She is mounting to meet them in her biplane, when the episode ends.

Phil Kelly and his men release themselves from the room where Pat has trapped them, by shooting the lock from the door with their revolvers. When Kelly searches the house he finds the disreputable Johnson bound hand and foot, gagged and helpless, with a purple mask thrown over his face and a note pinned to his coat reading: "Sorry to trouble you, but the poor need the money more than you do."

The house being shaken by a violent explosion, Kelly goes to investigate, after releasing Johnson, and finds that the sunken vault has been blown up, and the money all removed. Further investigation proves that the gangsters have tunneled underground from the yard, drilled their way to the vault by working up from the bottom, and then exploded a heavy charge of dynamite, completely destroying Johnson's strong room.

When Kelly proceeds in his efforts to capture "The Purple Mask," she leads him a merry chase over roofs and house-tops, keeping just far enough ahead of the great detective to tantalize him by her activities. When she is ready to make good her escape, Pat does so by dropping into her machine while it passes under an archway at the entrance of an alley. Foiled again, Kelly is forced to confess his defeat to his superior officers.

Later one of Pat's men, who gain the friendship of a band of anarchists, learn that the promptings of revenge, and the fulfillment of their mad ideas, has made the anarchists determined to wreck New York's financial district. They propose to ascend in dirigibles and drop bombs on Wall Street in the hope of wrecking as much of the financial section as possible.

When this report reaches Pat, she makes a full investigation, and learns enough to confirm the rumor. Determined to thwart the anarchists, Pat makes arrangements for an aeroplane in which she proposes to rise above the anarchists' dirigibles and drop bombs upon them before they can do serious damage to the city. The episode closes with Pat entering her aeroplane just at the instant the anarchists rise from the ground in another part of New York to start upon their mission of revenge and destruction.

EPISODE THIRTEEN of the Super-Serial, written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, is called "The Leap," from the sensational jump by Pat into a moving auto.

SCREEN ASPIRANT SENDS AN APPRECIATION TO HOLUBAR.

HUNDREDS of letters arrive daily at Universal City from all over the world addressed to the actors and actresses, and each one usually contains a plea for a photograph and many of them are accompanied by extravagant words of adulation.

Allan J. Holubar, who is directing "The Reward of His Government" and also plays the lead in this five-reel picture, received a communication the other day which is given exactly as it was written, omitting, of course, the name of the writer.

"Kind Sir I wauld apreate your Photo very much as I have Saw you in the movies only twiced But I think you have The sweetist Face and that cunning little mouth of You's and Smile. I never Saw any one in the Picturs that I admire as I do you and I must Have your Photo. I sure am not ever going to Miss a pictuir that you are to apeare in for I sure do love to Se you act. I saw you in the taint of Feir Monday and Wnsday in stronger than Steel and I sure did injoy the Picture.

"I will close asking you to Be Kind enough to Send me your Photo By retern Mail Please and Please tell me How to get in to the movies."

THE Scenario Department at Universal City is in receipt of a letter from a lawyer in a Southern California city, making inquiry regarding a photoplay he submitted for reading. The legal gentleman writes, "I submitted 'The Undertow' and not having heard from you I rise to the surface to make inquiry."

"I wonder if a submarine is coming my way?" remarked the reader.

Louise's Lucrative Loveliness

Louise looks lovely in "The Gift Girl."

WHEN circus audiences were less sophisticated than they are now, the lovely creatures who appeared in the processions were always billed as "Circassian Beauties." Probably nobody knew just what "Circassian" meant, except that it stood for blondness and beauteousness, and was associated with flowing veils and bifurcated lower garments, like elongated gymnasium bloomers. Nowadays we don't hear much more about Circassian beauties. But when the Bluebird photoplay "The Gift Girl" is released, you will see the very epitome of the type in all its blondest glory.

Louise Lovely is brought up in a Persian harem, though she is really the daughter of an English officer, and if there are many more at home like her, there will probably be an expedition of bachelor Bluebird fans to Persia as soon as the war is over. In spite of the fact that they call her Rokaia, the little girl grows up to be the most distractingly pretty bit of trousered femininity who ever turned the head of mere man. You will have some faint idea of how she looks if you study the cut attentively.

Rupert Julian, who is the turbaned personage on the other side of the page, simply can't stand the strain, and urges her to run away to France with him, and small blame to him. The clothes which he chooses for her to go in would make any other girl look a perfect fright, but Miss Lovely is so well named that she defies even a Persian dressmaker's idea of a smart European traveling gown. Words can't do her justice—you'll have to see the picture. She has found that loveliness pays.

This is Rupert Julian as her tutor.

Carey as "The Fighting Gringo" Refuses to Play Hobson

A FIGHT with cans of tomatoes is a new one, isn't it? And with the price of canned goods going up as it is every week, too! But they spare no expense when it comes to the making of a Red Feather picture—especially a Red Feather with Harry Carey in it, who has not appeared in a release of this brand since "A Knight of the Range," the second feature of the series.

"The Fighting Gringo" is a promising title, for Carey, of course, is the belligerent personage. He is a sort of modern Ulysses who has wandered all over the earth, having adventures which would not make pretty reading in the society column. On the way to Panama he meets a pair of lovers who are deliberately muddling their affairs, and he takes them under his protection, and finally unites them, though he has to shoot the man to bring about the ultimate clinch. Incidentally, "Red"—that is his name—saves the life of the leader of the Nationalist party, and the cut shows the impulsive, demonstrative Latin idea of saying thank you, also "Red's" effective method of refusing any more Hobsonism.

"Red" refuses to be kissed.

Carey's chief difficulty in the picture was giving an imitation of a man who does not know how to ride, as he happens to be one of the finest horsemen in the country. In demonstrating the deficiencies of "Red's" equestion education, he performs some falls which would test the nerve of a Centaur. "It's a lot easier to ride like an expert than a novice," he declares.

THE Universal Nestor Comedy Company, directed by Louis W. Chaudet and featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran with Edith Roberts, believes in being absolutely up to date in the selection of film comedies and plans always when it is possible to make laughter out of topics of national interest and apropos of the time. For this reason, while the prices of potatoes and onions are soaring and steaks and lamb chops are only for the well-to-do, the Nestorites gathered about the typewriter and evolved a one-reel comedy based on the high cost of living.

The 11th Screen Magazine

ISSUE No. 11 of the Universal Screen Magazine contains many interesting things. The growing and harvesting of the humble but succulent peanut comes first, and there will be a great surprise for most of us when we find that the peanut is not a "nut" at all, but grows under the ground, like a sort of potato, hanging onto little roots, from which it is shaken into sacks to be shipped to us.

One of the famous characters of New York City, Bill Snyder of the Central Park Zoo, makes his bow, in company with many of his animal friends. Just by way of contrast, the magazine then takes us inside the Baldwin Locomotive Works, in Philadelphia and shows us huge engines in the making.

The reel closes with the greatest novelty of all, which has already excited comment all over the country. This is Animated Sculpture, and is the work of the young sculptor, Willie Hopkins, the inventor of the process, or stunt, or art, or whatever you like to call it. He won't tell how he get his results, but they are as mysterious as the plot of the new serial, "The Voice on the Wire," and the book of synonyms itself could not find a more mysterious comparison than that.

Hopkins's work has already appeared in former issues of the Screen Magazine. The editor possessed several different Animated sculpture cartoons, as one might call them, and had lost track of the artist. They aroused such a furore of interest and inquiry, when the first reel of the screen innovation was shown, that a nation-wide search, in which all sorts of Pinkertons participated, was instituted for the gifted sculptor. He was finally discovered, and induced to take up his residence at Universal City.

In Issue No. 11 he is seen modeling Joe Martin, the Universal ape, who has worked in so many pictures, that he may well be called a screen veteran. Joe is as gentle as a kitten, and as intelligent as—we were going to say a human being, but the recollection of several we have known forces us to make a less general comparison. He is keenly interested in the progress of his picture, and gives every evidence of understanding exactly what is going on. The sculptor asks for his approval, and Joe gives it by fervently kissing his own image on its own nose. (Joe's next professional appearance is with Henry McRae in "In African Wilds.")

Then the modeled head seems to come to life, in the mysterious fashion which the artist refuses to explain. The lips open and shut, and so do the eyes. He wrinkles his nose, winks, takes a deep breath, and otherwise behaves himself more naturally than his own original, who poses beside him.

A Daughter of The American Revolution in Universal Specials

Tina Marshall.

TWO very fine three-reel pictures have been set for release on the Universal program, one for April 3rd, called "The Magpie," and the other for April 10th, called "For Lack of Evidence." They will be "Specials," and were directed by Edwin Stevens, with Tina Marshall playing the lead in both.

Miss Marshall's name is very well known, from her experience as leading lady for Mr. Stevens on the legitimate stage. She did her first work for the camera in the screen version of "The Man Inside," in which she played opposite Mr. Stevens who had the title role. After that, he chose the mantle of the director, and she acted the principal part in his first production, "The Capital Prize." She supported Violet Mersereau in two of the Bluebird pictures which were directed by Stevens, and they are now working together on a five-reeler, in which she is starred.

Miss Marshall is one of the very few, if not the only Daughter of the American Revolution who is playing for the screen. She is a self-declared pacifist, but she is also a reluctant believer in the necessity for preparedness. She has taken a great interest in the support which the D. A. R. has given to the movement for the industrial preparedness of our country, though their advocacy of the Bluebird Special "The Eagle's Wings," which shows us how the manufacturing interests of the land could be enlisted in case of war with a foreign power. Miss Marshall claims her right to membership in the largest and most important society of patriotic women in the United States, by right of being the great-great-great grand-daughter of Colonel Sebastian Beauman, who, born in Austria, served his adopted country with honor and distinction throughout the American Revolution, and the French and Indian Wars, under the Father of his Country himself. At the outbreak of hostilities with England, Beauman, then a Major, and his company armed and equipped themselves at their own expense. When the British took possession of New York on September 15, 1775, Major Beauman was the last man to leave the city. His family fled to West Point, where news reached them of Arnold's treachery and the capture of Andre with plans and maps of the fortifictions in his boots. The maps had been drawn by Beauman himself for the use of Washington, and were stolen by Arnold.

Major Beauman went through the hard winter at Valley Forge with his troops, pawning his plate and furniture to provide for their necessities. At one time he and Lafayette were buried under the snow together for twenty-four hours, and were discovered by Washington's scouts, more dead than alive. Major Beauman was frequently the recipient of special honors at the hand of the Commander in Chief. He was present at the surrender of Yorktown and prepared a map of the siege of the town, which Washington requested him to engrave. As he was the last one to leave New York on its capture by the British, so he was the first to return in 1783, bearing the flag he ordered planted on the battery before the enemy left the harbor, which was done by a young sailor, who scaled the flag staff with great skill, as the enemy had removed all cleats, cut the halyards and even greased the pole. In the evening Major Beauman had charge of the fireworks which celebrated the victory.

HARRY CAREY in "Goin' Straight"

Right—The sheriff is interrupted by Cheyenne.

BISON Two-Reel Drama, written by Harry Carey and produced by Fred A. Kelsey. Carey, in his favorite role of "Cheyenne Harry," upsets the plans of opium smugglers.

CAST.

"Cheyenne" Harry	Harry Carey
"Pinnacle" Bill	Vesta Pegg
Billy Carter	Teddy Brooks
Mary Carter	Priscilla Dean
Dan Beckham, sheriff	Wm. Gettinger
"Tucson" Tom	Ed Jones
Wong Lee	Charles Bryden

HARRY CAREY and Fred A. Kelsey make a good combination, and the pictures they turn out together have the right ring of truth. This one, written by Carey, and produced by Kelsey, was arranged for the camera by both of them working together so that it is really a joint production. It shows Carey in his favorite character of "Cheyenne" Harry, apparently in the early days of that worthy's career, when he wore the insignia of a Texas ranger. The story is all mixed up with opium smuggling, and with the fortunes of a kid whom Cheyenne determines to save from his fate. This is how the incidents run:

Billy Carter and two Mexicans, Cuteo and Estaban, are smugglers of opium which they bring across the border from Mexico into the United States. The authorities are unable to apprehend them, so "Pinnacle" Bill and "Cheyenne" Harry of the Arizona Ranger Service are sent to assist the sheriff, Dan Beckham, and the inspectors in their search.

Cheyenne and Pinnacle put up at a Chinese restaurant. Cheyenne, becoming suspicious of Wong Lee, the proprietor, and the Mexicans, shoots a hole in the floor of his room, apparently by accident. His room is directly above the kitchen in which Wong Lee, Cuteo, Estaban and Billy are conversing and plotting. Enlarging the bullet-hole, Cheyenne is able to confirm his suspicions. However, he and Pinnacle wish to catch the smugglers red-handed and wait until that night when the law-breakers intend to make a trip across the border.

Late in the night, as the smugglers are about to cross the river intersecting the two countries, Cheyenne and Pinnacle as well as the sheriff's party, begin to fire. Billy attempts to get away and is pursued by Cheyenne. Harry overtakes the boy and when he discovers who it is, he allows him to escape across the line. Billy is the brother of Mary Carter, whom Cheyenne has always loved. Pinnacle then arrests Cheyenne, but gamblers by nature, they toss up a coin to decide if the prisoner shall be jailed or freed. The coin, fortunately for Cheyenne, falls "heads" up. He hands his Ranger badge to Pinnacle and rides across the boundary with Billy.

HOBART HENLEY, Universal star and director, who is producing features at the big Universal studios at Leonia, having made a hit with the Red Feather, "The Double Room Mystery," was amused recently upon the receipt of the following letter from an admirer who is anxious to uplift the screen:

With Phil Dunham

"Defective Detectives"

L—KO KOMEDY in Two Reels, directed by J. A. Howe and featuring Phil Dunham. A grand mix-up of disguises which ends on telegraph wires above the city.

Supervised by J. G. Blystone.

CAST.

Head Detective	Charles Inslee
His Pupil	Phil Dunham
Bride	Lucille Hutton
Another Bride	Merta Sterling

EVERYBODY is disguised so much in this typical L-Ko, which was directed by J. A. Howe, and features Phil Dunham, that it is rather difficult to make head or tail of the story. However, what does a little thing like a plot matter, when Phil Dunham is fooling with trunks and false beards and feminine attire? Lucille Hutton is a maddeningly beauteous bride, and Merta Sterling's unique brand of comedy is added for good — very good — measure. Something like the following is what happens.

Phil is about to graduate at the "School of Detecatufs," and he and the chief are trying the effect of various disguises on each other. A suspicious party is registered at the hotel, and the detecatufs are called in. They disguise themselves as porters and busy themselves with the baggage, in order to divert the attention of the guests. The bride, Lucille, and groom arrive and register at the desk. Soon after another pair, with Merta as the bride, also appear and ask for rooms. Their trunks are delivered and Phil is told to take them upstairs. He takes up Lucille's and leaves it outside her door, going down for Merta's. Charles comes along and takes Lucille's down on the elevator, under the impression that it was left there to be taken away. When Phil staggers up the stairs with Merta's, he is horrified to find Lucille's gone. In the confusion the trunks are delivered to the wrong rooms, and Merta nearly has a fit when she opens the one in her room and finds clothes much too small for her in it.

Phil and Charles, meantime, have made many changes in make-up and succeeded in deceiving no one but each other. Each thinks the other a suspicious character, until his disguise is removed. The trunks become hopelessly confused, each taking the wrong one into the hall. For some unknown reason, they find themselves on the roof, where they do stunts with the trunks over the edge. One trunk is landed on the telegraph wires, with the detectives and guests after it. There is a battle for the possession of the trunk high up above the city. At last trunk, detective and guests fall together in one heap, and the comedy comes to an end.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

Do You Use Them?

THE central figure of "Polly Redhead" is a twelve-year-old miss whose hair is flaming red. A decidedly novel stunt that would result in considerable comment consists in announcing that all red-headed children applying at the box-office on the afternoon would be admitted free, providing they are accompanied by an adult. Naturally, the latter would be required to buy a ticket, the result being that the redheads would merely be admitted at what practically amounts to half price.

A good way of putting the foregoing announcement over consists in dressing a twelve-year-old boy up in the conventional English schoolboy fashion, i. e., Eton coat, long trousers, high silk hat and Buster Brown collar. This youngster should distribute announcements worded as follows:

? ARE The management ?
? YOU of THE (name) ?
? A THEATRE invites ?
? RED every red-headed ?
? HEAD boy in town to be ?
? ? its guest at the ?
? showing of ?
? "POLLY REDHEAD" ?
? a BLUEBIRD Photoplay ?
? On (day and date here) ?
? ——— ?
? Minors are requested to come ?
? accompanied by their par- ?
? ents or guardians. ?
¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿¿

Another novel idea consists in having a large sign painted as follows:

THE LUMP WILL GET HIS BATH IN FRONT OF THIS THEATRE
At (time of next show here)
COME AND SEE HIM

This sign should be placed over an infant's metal bath tub (you get one for about fifty cents) partly filled with water. A little red-headed girl, dressed in a checked gingham gown, and with her hair done up in tight pigtails should pass out throwaways containing the same announcement. At the hours advertised, this little girl should ceremoniously wash a big doll.

U. CITY GREATLY INTERESTS ALBERT D. LASKER, AD MAN.

"THERE is no place in the world better advertised than Universal City, and advertised too, by the public," said Albert D. Lasker, of Lord & Thomas, Chicago, and one of the best known advertising men in the United States, to President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company one day this week, adding, "the thousands of visitors who have been attracted to this unique institution have spread its fame far and wide, and I am not surprised at the lavish statements relating to the exceedingly interesting sights they have witnessed here. I know I, too, will join the long procession of boosters of this wonderful picture-making plant and help along the personal advertising."

Accompanied by President Laemmle, whom he has known for many years and who frequently is his guest while in the Windy City, Mr. Lasker visited the various stages of the institution, many times expressing his delight at the scenes he witnessed being made for the different productions.

"Now I can well understand why the Universal Company is able to turn out such a large number of reels of film with unbroken regularity every week—it is because of the system in vogue here," said Mr. Lasker to the Universal City boss, adding, "everything moves like clock-work—system certainly spells success and you have it."

STUNTS for the various Episode of "The Voice on The Wire"

"HELLO; STOPPED AND TALKED TO THE MAYOR YESTERDAY AT THE CORNER OF .... AND .... STREETS AND NOBODY KNEW WHO I WAS."

"WAKE UP, YOU SLEUTHS OF (Name of Your Town), I THOUGHT YOU WERE GOING TO CATCH ME SO QUICKLY?"

"FOR FIVE FULL MINUTES I STOOD ON THE CORNER OF —— & ——— YESTERDAY, BUT NOT ONE SINGLE SOUL EVEN KNEW IT WAS THE MAN WITH 'THE VOICE ON THE WIRE' FREE TICKETS."

From the above you can see the tremendous possibilities with this novel MAN WITH THE FREE TICKETS STUNT. If carefully worked out beforehand by you and your Editor and if well handled by the writer of the articles, you can set your whole town crazy. Everybody will be hunting for THE STRANGER WITH THE FREE TICKETS TO "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE," PLAYING NOW AT (name of your) THEATRE. Talk this over with your newspaper men. They will help you work it out, and once you start this, you couldn't equal the free advertising you will receive for any amount of money. Go to it.

Have your Cashier or some special employee call up as many people every day as possible. When the person at the other end of the wire says—"Hello, who is this"—have your Employee say—"This is The Voice on the Wire"—and then hang up the receiver. This will cause no end of mystery and gossip. People called will be wondering who the person was that called and what the mysterious message of "This is The Voice on the Wire" means. They will talk about it and if your employee calls 100 or more people a day for a week before you begin to advertise your serial in the newspapers, etc., you will have worked up a tremendous campaign of mystery and you'll have the whole town talking. To get this stunt over in a big way, you MUST begin to do your calling on the telephone a week or ten days before you announce or advertise your serial openly. Even after you have begun to advertise and even after the public know that "The Voice on the Wire" is a serial photoplay to be shown at your house—you can continue to have your employee call up and simply repeat as before, "This is The Voice on the Wire" and if you want to make it still more effective have your employee add, "The great Universal Serial Photoplay now playing at the .... Theatre."

SAY: Do you use these stunts which are shown here? They are also carried in "The Voice on the Wire" campaign book which you can get from your exchange.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, Ont.—Announcement was made last week that the Strand Theatre, Toronto, had made an assignment on behalf of the creditors. The first of the year the Mark-Brock interests gained control of the theatre, and placed Clarence Robson in the position of manager. The business has steadily increased since the change of management, but it is understood that the former administration left debts amounting to over $8,000, which the new management did not care to assume.

All of the creditors of the company will be paid in full, and a new company will be formed to operate the theatre.

The Strand is one of the largest theatres in Toronto and shows first-run Bluebird productions. For a long time, it was the only theatre that could pay a first-run price for features and enjoyed great popularity until the Regent, a house seating 1,700 was opened last fall. The management of the Strand at that time did not take measures to compete with the new house and the patronage fell off to a considerable extent.

The new company will give the Strand a much-needed renovation, and it is thought that this will regain some of the patronage that has been lost.

R. S. Marvin, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre, Toronto, will start releasing a weekly devoted entirely to Canadian events, the first release being next week. He intends to cover the Canadian territory thoroughly, and will have cameramen in Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Calgary. It is intended to make three prints of the weekly and it will be released in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg at the same time.

A case which duplicates almost every detail up to a certain point the plot of "Shoes," a Bluebird photoplay which was presented at a local theatre in London, Ont., some time ago, is that of one of two sisters arrested last week on a charge of stealing several furs, shoes and other articles.

A city minister, who has interested himself in her case, has learned that she was earning but $6 a week. Sixty cents of this she used each week for carfare. Her parents took the rest.

Gerry Ruck, special representative of the Universal Company in Ontario, reports that he has just booked the Savoy Theatre of Hamilton, one of the largest playhouses in that city, with "Idle Wives." The price for the feature in this house was very large. Savoy seats 1,200 people and Mr. Stroud expects to play to capacity.

Members of the film community in Toronto were greatly shocked this week to learn of the death of Mr. Frank Riley in St. Michaels Hospital in Toronto. Mr. Riley, who was only twenty-seven years of age, has been confined to the hospital for about six months with inflammatory rheumatism and it was this ailment which eventually caused his death. He was a general favorite and had a host of friends, having been with the General Film Co., Vitagraph and Universal before his illness.

The Exchangemen's Association in Quebec are tendering an informal dinner to the exhibitors of the Quebec Province at the Windsor Hotel on Friday evening, March 9. Mr. Edward Gronau of the Canadian Universal Film Company in Montreal has been appointed secretary of this association. Mr. Gronau is well known in this territory and has proved himself to be a capable and hustling young man.

The St. John "Standard" of St. John is another paper which has done a great deal for the moving picture industry in Canada. For over a year they have had a daily theatrical column, giving personal reference to nine theatres a week and dividing the rest of the space to new items about the moving picture stars.

Miss Fairweather personally attends all screenings of the pictures in the exchanges and goes to considerable trouble to make the page as useful to the trade and interesting to the large circle of readers as possible.

been consulting her crystal and has seen the condition that Vincent is in. She is waiting to remonstrate with him, but at the sight of him, she rushes upstairs and locks her door. His servant helps him to bed and he dreams an ugly dream.

He thinks that Peggy sacrifices herself to him, and that she returns home to find her mother dead. She then takes to the use of drugs to still her conscience, and goes from bad to worse, until she becomes a crazed drug fiend. She seeks out the cafe where he is in the habit of going with Marie and makes a scene. Marie, in jealous rage, stabs him and herself. As he falls over her body he awakens to a realization that it has been a dream. Thankfully he rises and dresses to meet his wife. There is a mutual explanation and they determine to begin again with a better understanding of each other.

HOADLEY AND YOUNG JOIN BIG U.'S SCENARIO STAFF.

THE Scenario Department staff at Universal City was augmented this week by the appointment of two well-known writers, one being C. B. Hoadley and the other Waldemar Young.

Hoadley, who is one of the pioneers in motion pictures, was for many years a newspaper and magazine writer, and claims to be the oldest scenario writer, in point of service, now actively engaged in writing screen stories. He now is writing comedies especially for Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran of the Nestor Comedy Company.

Joining Carl Laemmle early in the picture career of the president of the Universal Manufacturing Company, Hoadley was connected with the original Imp Company, in New York, in the capacity of scenario editor and publicity writer. He has been associated with a number of motion picture concerns and says he is pleased to return to the organization presided over by Mr. Laemmle.

Waldemar Young, who formerly was dramatic critic at different times of the San Francisco Examiner and the San Francisco Chronicle, has been identified both with the newspaper and the theatrical game for the past fifteen years. Leaving the Chronicle in 1914, Young toured the Orpheum Circuit with his own company in his own burlesque sketch, "When Caesar Ran a Paper." He was advance agent for Gertrude Hoffman the season that well-known dancer had Theodore Kosloff, Lydia Lopoukova and the Imperial Russian ballet with her, and is widely known in theatrical circles. His first work on "the lot" was a five-reel comedy-drama for Franklyn Farnum.

"THE VOICE ON THE WIRE" COMPANY VISITS SAN DIEGO.

"THE Voice on the Wire" company at Universal City left this week for San Diego, for the purpose of taking a number of marine scenes for the detective serial being produced by Stuart Paton and featuring Ben Wilson with Neva Gerber playing opposite. Others who will go to San Diego and who play leading parts are Howard Crampton, Joseph Girard and Francis McDonald.

Six thrilling episodes of Eustace Hale Ball's remarkable serial already have been completed, and as each one is filmed additional exciting scenes are enacted before the camera and the mystery deepens. In San Diego a number of the players will leap from an ocean liner into the sea, which means a jump of approximately eighty feet while the vessel is steaming ahead.

Paton, who filmed the wonderful Universal feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," is noted for his work in directing not only at the bottom of the ocean, but on board ship.

NESTORITES' UKULELE FEVER.

THE ukulele fever in its most malignant form has found its way into the Nestor Comedy Company at Universal City, and Lee Moran is giving Edith Roberts, the little leading lady, lessons regularly upon the tuneful Hawaiian instrument. Eddie Lyons joins in the singing, so when the Nestorites are not busy making up or working before the camera, there is a regular concert in their offices.

"I'M THE FUNNIEST WOMAN IN THE WORLD"

I'M funny for 3 reasons—1st because I simply can't help it—2nd because it gets me the dough—and 3rd because it keeps Exhibitors' houses packed. In Joker Comedies we pack the market. That's why JOKER COMEDIES are being booked like hot cakes, not alone in America but in every part of the world. And not alone JOKER Comedies, but all the best laff-getters now being screened are labeled—

UNIVERSAL COMEDIES

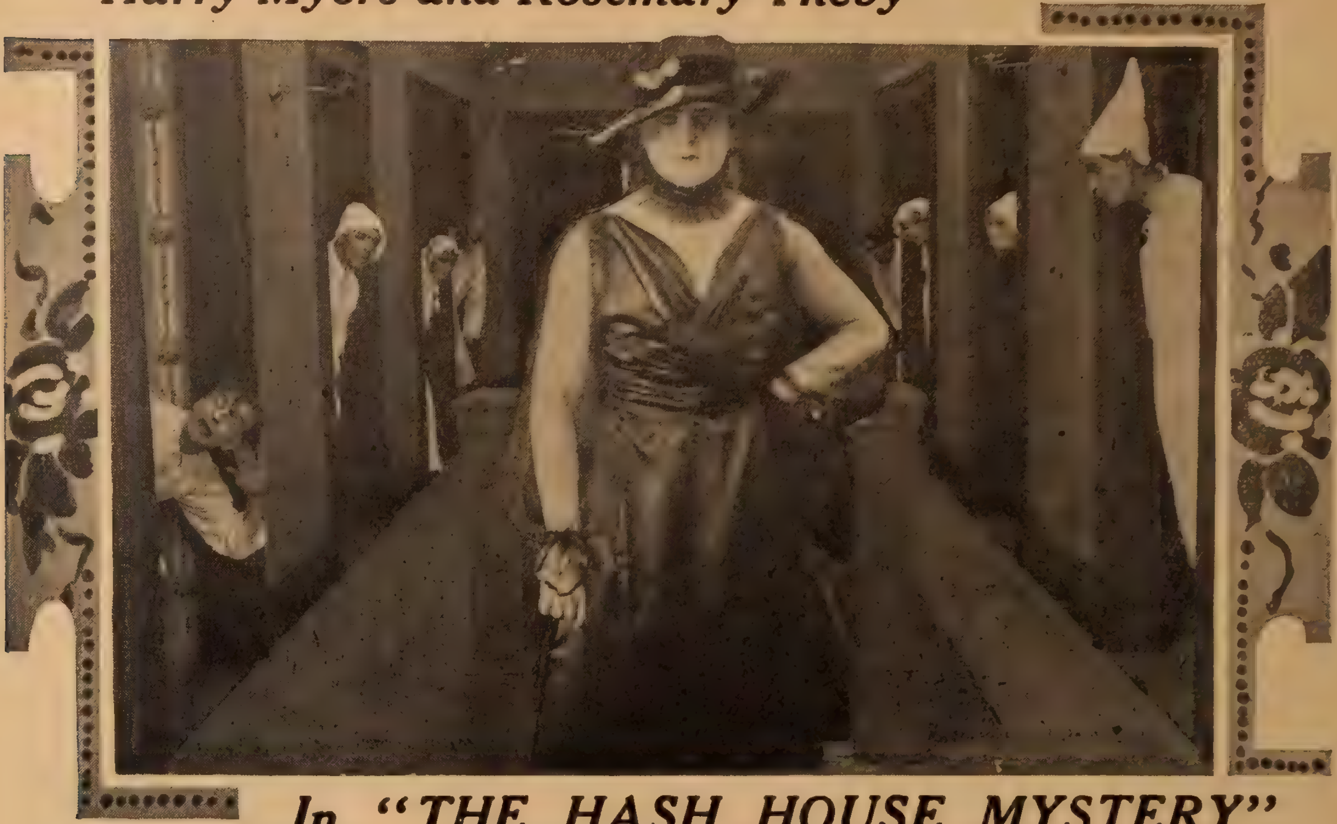
If you have the time, SEE each comedy yourself so that you may know when you read Universal advertising that it rings true. Book JOKERS—L-KO'S—or NESTORS through any of our 73 Universal Exchanges. Book 'em separately or get 'em on the REGULAR PROGRAM.

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby



In "THE HASH HOUSE MYSTERY"

THE wonderful female in the centre of the cut is none other than Harry Myers, though we do not expect you to believe it. He must have been a surprise, even to himself, in the role of the occult Princess Pashio, in this really comic Victor comedy, written by Helmer W. Bergman, from a suggestion by John B. Clymer. The story, perhaps because so many cooks were concerned in it, is unusually good, and really novel, and both the leading players have the sort of role which suits their talents best.

Rufe Eldridge, flat broke, is rudely interrupted from his dinner by the landlord, who propels him out of the dining-room into the office. He discovers a letter informing him that his aunt, Priscilla Ware, has died and left him an inheritance.

This turns out to be her boarding-house, "The Broken Shutter." Though brilliantly ignorant of the ways of managing a boarding-house, Rufe decides to take a chance. A young girl, Susie, applies to him and is accepted as a waitress. She tells him of a fortune teller who predicted many happy things for her. This gives Rufe a brilliant idea.

Rufe dresses himself in Oriental costume, and, presenting himself at his former lodging house, tells them that he is the Princess Pashio, finder of lost heirs and heiresses. He walks through the streets of Circleville blindfolded, the entire town at his heels. He is going to walk until he arrives at the house where a future heiress resides.

Rufe leads them up to his own house and tells them that this is the place. He opens a fortune-telling parlor and does a land office business. The boarding-house is filled to overflowing with the curious, who all pay him money for information as to who the heiress is.

To the men he says that she is a sleepwalker, who wanders around in the dead of night. The women feel that they are slighted, so he explains to them that he meant an heir instead of an heiress.

That night the women lie in wait for the sleepwalking heir and the men do likewise. Rufe has a lively time with the frenzied fortune fanatics, and is also doing a little courting on the side with the pretty waitress, Susie.

She, to carry out her end of the plot, walks down the hallway and is seen by Old Lollypop, Rufe's former landlord. He immediately thinks that she is the heiress and he pushes his suit and asks her hand in marriage. She replies evasively, but finally promises to marry him if he will buy the hash house from Rufe. The landlord is undecided about this, but the pseudo fortune-teller advises him to buy it at Rufe's price, as his fortune depends on it.

The landlord finally draws $10,000 out of the bank and gives it to Rufe, who immediately gets Susie and the two are about to leave to get married when the landlord and the other boarders overtake them. They are received with the information that Susie is the heiress, that the money received form the landlord and boarders constitutes the fortune.

"THE RAID"

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama, written and produced by George Marshall and featuring Neal Hart in a tale with plenty of thrills and a charming ending.

GEORGE MARSHALL is appearing on the program as author and producer with great regularity. His latest bid for popular favor is the Gold Seal three-reel picture called "The Raid," which features Neal Hart, and both of them are entirely satisfactory in it. Hart has a new leading woman, Janet Eastman, who played with him in "Border Wolves," in which she had the nerve to ride a horse for the first time in her life. Every member of the company, which includes some of the most daring horsemen in pictures, has constituted himself her teacher, so she is bound to become a regular lady Centaur in the near future. The ending of this picture, bringing the lovers together again in unexpected fashion, is particularly charming.

Neal Lawton, the foreman of the Circle W Ranch in Texas, is visited by the owner, Henry Arthur, and his daughter Evelyn.

At the ranch, in the guise of a servant, is a Mexican called Pedro, who in reality is the leader of a band of Mexican outlaws. Immediately, he sees a chance to gain money by kidnapping Arthur and his daughter, holding them for ransom. He tells his band to await his order for the raid. Some days later, Neal and the cowboys go to the round-up, leaving Evelyn and her father at the camp. During their absence, Pedro gives the signal.

Meanwhile, Neal has fallen deeply in love with the girl, but she refuses to listen to him, contrasting him with the men in the East. She realizes he could not give her any of the things to which she has been used. Neal is despondent over the situation, but tries to take it with good grace.

The outlaws take Evelyn and Arthur prisoners and carry them to the Mexican camp, where they are thrown into a hut. Neal and the boys return and find traces of the raid. They start on the trail and soon arrive in the Mexican camp, where Neal knocks the sentry on the head, and, exchanging clothes with him, sneaks into the camp alone. As he passes the hut, he hears a scream and, recognizing the girl's voice, immediately enters the hut and saves her from Pedro. He then hurries away with the two prisoners. He starts up the hill where the boys are waiting. Pedro rushes from the hut, calling his followers, but the cowboys begin to shoot, hitting him and causing the band to run for cover. Neal, Evelyn and Arthur hastily ride away on their horses and the two visitors are soon on the train going East.

The next morning at Lone Dog, Evelyn disappears from the train, and word is quickly sent to Neal, who receives the telegram as he is moodily thinking of her. He promptly sends the boys out in all directions to search for her, and starts across the country in the direction of the station where she was last seen. Later, he finds her on the desert and she tells him about leaving the train and buying a horse upon which she started back to the ranch. The horse had run away and she had been forced to struggle on as best she could. Neal is puzzled as to her reason for returning and she says, "I was coming back to you. Isn't it a woman's privilege to change her mind?"

TEACHERS FOR PREPAREDNESS.

SEVENTEEN hundred school teachers visited the Naval Training Station at Lake Bluff, Chicago, the other day, and a record of the event was secured for the Animated Weekly No. 63. Crowds going into the Auditorium to see the boys drill, are shown, also interior views of the drill. The teachers were invited to mess by the recruits, and much enjoyed their sample of the sailor's food. Some close-up of the fair visitors end the strip.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

THE reason that Exhibitors everywhere are "Putting 'em Over" is because the mighty Universal is always on the job of producing the class of pictures and the kind of subjects that Exhibitors can "put over."

That goes without saying, but it is just as well to remind you once in a while. You can get so used to having a good thing that you forget how bad conditions might be.

And just so that you won't think this is mere conversational hot air, let us remind you that the number of weekly releases on the Universal Program exceed in number of reels the combined programs of its competitors.

As for the quality, there are a good many thousands of SUCCESSFUL Exhibitors that are ready to tell you that they owe ALL THEIR SUCCESS and PROSPERITY TO THE QUALITY of the UNIVERSAL PROGRAM.

So when we ask you to use these stunts to help you in "Putting Them Over," we are asking you to boost something that has no equal in the wide, wide world.

ON March twenty-ninth there is a wonderful Educational, under the Powers brand, which gives the finest views ever taken of that masterpiece of Nature "The Grand Canyon of Arizona." Have a man in Western pioneer costume hand out throwaways, which have been gotten up to resemble a railroad ticket to the Grand Canyon. You must word the announcement on them carefully or people will think that you mean the ticket for a free admission. Have each one numbered, and announce in the papers, or by means of slides, that these throwaways are numbered, and that certain numbers, which you specify in the announcement, will entitle the lucky holder to an admission to the theatre. If you let the people know about this, you will have every one of them carefully examining his throwaway, and probably coming back for more.

THE Joker for March thirty-first is called "What the ——?" and takes those long suffering comedians, Gale Henry and William Franey, to Hades. Milburn Moranti is the Old Gentleman himself, who changes places with Bill, as the henpecked hubby of Gale, and then wishes he hadn't. A figure in the costume of Mephistopheles always attracts attention, and you might use some one in this garb, either to promenade the streets, with an announcement, to stand in front of the theatre and invite the passersby in to have a hot time, or to point dramatically with a trident to the posters of the picture.

THE Red Feather for March Twenty-sixth is "The Fighting Gringo," starring Harry Carey. This announcement in itself will probably be enough to insure you full houses, but there is no harm in making assurance doubly sure. The chief incident of this fine picture is the scene where Carey deliberately shoots Arthur Saxon in the arm in order to prove to the girl how much she really loves the man with whom she has declared she will have nothing to do. But there is not much of a suggestion for a stunt in that, though a good story could be built up about it. Probably the most effective thing you could do, would be to emphasize the scene in which Carey fights a gang of insurrectos, almost single-handed, and defeats them by using tomato cans as ammunition after the usual brand has run out. There is so much talk about the price of food these days, that a stunt on this incident ought to get over. Put a big pile of tomato cans—unopened, of course—in your lobby in some prominent place, and over them a sign reading something like this: "This is the costly brand of ammunition with which Harry Carey suppresses a revolution in the Red Feather, 'The Fighting Gringo.' Could you afford to do it? No wonder the cost of living is so high!"

BE sure to let the children know that a charming version of one of the prettiest fairy tales in existence, and a general favorite with the little ones, is coming on Sunday, April first, as a Rex. Elsie Alberts plays "Snow White" in a fashion which will bring the well known character to life for the kiddies, and every one of them ought to know that she is doing it at your theatre. Of course you have a mailing list. So let those of your patrons who have young children know that this picture is to be run on a Sunday, so that they can all get there to see it. Send special notice to the lower grades of the schools. Have a contest for a composition on the story, with admissions as prizes, if you like, but see that the news reaches the children, and they will do the rest.

A Few Letters from Universal Exhibitors

A THRILLER.

Universal Film Co.,
Spokane, Wash.

Dear Sirs—I just finished "Liberty" a short time ago and wish to say it held up better than any serial I ever ran. I did not get a very good start, but it picked up a little every week. It is a thriller from start to finish. I remain,

Yours truly,
R. G. GLENDENIN,
Mgr. New Pasture Theatre.
Colfax, Wash.

LOTS OF PEP.

Universal Film Co.,
Spokane, Wash.

Dear Sir—I received many compliments on "Liberty," many of my patrons expressed themselves by saying that it was the very best and most interesting serial they had ever had the pleasure of following and that they were sorry to see it come to an end. As it was very interesting from beginning to end, with lots of "pep" and not drawn out.

Personally I consider it a serial that the exhibitor is liable to make one mistake with it—the same as I did—I did not hold out enough inducements to pack the house the first episode. "Liberty" will do the rest until the last ring of the curtain. I started it with a half-capacity house and it picked up to the last with a packed house. Eddie Polo and Marie Walcamp respectively won a warm spot in many of the Coeur d'Alene movie fans hearts, while "Liberty" was being shown here.

Yours very truly,
N. E. HUFF,

SERVICE PROGRAM GREAT.

March 4, 1917.

Laemmle Film Service,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Gentlemen—The service program accompanying "The Purple Mask" on last Tuesday was great. The two-reeler had more pep and climaxes than some five-reelers I have seen. The comedy with Gale Henry was the best comedy I have ever seen her in and I like her. We also admire Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

Hoping for another such strong program for our next instalment of "The Purple Mask," we are,

Yours respectfully,
L. H. SWENSON.
Hastings, Minn.

S. R. O. EVERY DAY.

Universal Film Exchange,
St. Louis, Mo.

Gentlemen—Sincere congratulations for your splendid serial "Liberty."

It has been the best box office attraction we have had in quite a while, in fact, the best drawing serial we have ever shown, with each week we would have an increased attendance. Would put out the S. R. O. about two o'clock each afternoon.

We regret very much you did not extend this subject as you had the opportunity for so doing.

With best wishes, we are,
RODNEY C. DAVIS,
Mgr. Kozy Theatre Co.
Paducah, Ky.

DRAWING BIG CROWDS.

Universal Film & Supply Co.,
Spokane, Wash.

Gentlemen—In regard to the serial "Liberty," will say it has been drawing big crowds, chiefly owing, I think to the story dealing with a national situation and also because of showing so much excellent horsemanship.

Mgr. Opera House.

Wonderful Expressions of Opinion

STARTED RIGHT.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir—In reply to your letter of the 23d in regards to what method we used in putting Bluebirds over.

We had up to this time tried various features and had not received the attendance that we thought we should have; they would come out strong at the first, then the attendance would drop, you might say, all at once.

In looking into this we found that the features had too much of sameness about them, that is, they were all society dramas or bordering thereon. In looking over the Bluebird releases we found that they had a variety, each feature something new for the patron, it was different and naturally with each difference there was a curiosity aroused, yes, and they are still a-coming.

Had "Behind the Lines" last night with a good attendance, every one pleased. Next Tuesday will have a larger crowd on account of the people boosting the last one, they all tell the other fellow what he missed, and then the next feature has an increase.

Our success in a big measure is due to J. H. Calvert, your manager at Omaha. He personally saw to it that the first ones were good; now we have found that all that we have had were that, but, you understand, some do not have the punch that others do, and Mr. Calvert gave us subjects that pleased, and after they had seen so many and then one that lacked the punch, all they said was, "It was not as good as the last, but at that it was fine." In other words, his co-operation at the very first laid the foundation, and that is what helps us now.

We do not advertise them in the newspaper, as the people here have followed the ads in the "Saturday Evening Post," but we instead use a mailing list and we have found that more effective, except of course in announcing the fact that we were to take on the Bluebirds and telling of their merits; this we did, and then we talked it up with people who really "knew pictures." They of course came and with the influence they had, it naturally drew many others.

The 20th of this month the Commercial Club had included with each banquet ticket one admission to see the Bluebird, "The Evil Women Do." There were 68 tickets sold. The majority came, the rest had business that detained them.

Bluebirds built our feature business so that now we have created a Bluebird Night. Prior to the time we used them we did well to make our expense. A few made us money, but the most we figured on just breaking even.

You will notice that there is nothing new in our method, and our success is due to the Bluebird and J. H. Calvert.

Yours very truly,
HOPKINS & LARSON,
Mgrs. Majestic Theatre.
Oakland, Neb.

P. S.—We cannot enter your contest as our lobby is too small, and about all that we have room for is photos.

HIGHLY SATISFACTORY.

Bluebird Photoplays,
Omaha, Nebr.

Gentlemen—Our first showing of your play, "The Great Problem," was highly satisfactory with the public and ourselves. Your film was in excellent condition. We are well pleased.

Your program bookings with us for this month and next appeal to us very much.

Yours very truly,

IN A CLASS BY ITSELF.

Ottawa, Feb. 23, 1917.
Bluebird Film Co.,
Montreal, P. Q.

Dear Sir—Having just recently discontinued from the exhibiting end of the film business, in your territory, I who am always called a "crab" by exchanges on account of my peculiar and harsh judgment about photoplays, take great pleasure in complimenting the Bluebird production, "The Man Who Took a Chance."

Seeing it in Ottawa's finest photoplay house, The Regent, where the projection is second to none, I enjoyed the play immensely. The house was packed to the roof, and seats about 1,800. Now, what I wish to point out to you, is this, that "The Man Who Took a Chance," was enjoyed much better than Charlie Chaplin in "Easy Street," which was supposed to be Chaplin's funniest yet.

Sitting in the centre of the house, and packed as it was, I observed, the popular opinion, and by the expressions on the faces, it was an easy matter to ascertain, just exactly how much the Bluebird was enjoyed. In future, I will be anxious to see a Bluebird play, and if the others are enjoyed as much as the one above, then Bluebird can safely be recommended, as second to none or in other words "In a class by itself."

Yours truly,
S. DARWIN,
formerly manager London Theatre, Montreal.

TAUGHT A LESSON.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen—We ran your photoplay, "The Right to Be Happy" last Friday night and I am writing to let you know that we considered it one of the finest that we have ever had. Old and young enjoyed it equally. My little boy was present and grasped the lesson and I would not take a good deal for the impression that it made on his mind. The acting was of the best. We are very grateful to you for the film.

Sincerely,
CHAS. E. COBBEY,

PLEASE CONTINUE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,

Gentlemen—We want to congratulate you upon the supreme value that you raised the Bluebird photoplays to, and also "The Play's the Thing" policy that you have kept.

We are very sure that our patrons are with us in this statement from the comments that are received daily.

There is only one thing that we exhibitors can ask and that is to continue your releasing of these supreme productions.

With best wishes for continued success, we are,

WANTS "LOVE'S LARIAT" AGAIN

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen — If you have seen "Love's Lariat" and know what it is like you will know what our people like. That is the best comedy we have ever had. People sat in the house and laughed until they cried, and when they passed out they could not say enough for the picture. It is good for an audience to cry sometimes. They don't want to look on the melancholy side of life all the time. We find enough distress in our midst that we cannot side-step. So I am inclined to the idea that our Monday program should be bright and cheery, lots of real fun, and not a line to tend toward the vulgar. At the end of "Love's Lariat" the bunch says, "Hell—he's ruined!" That went off fine, because it broke the love scene and balanced it up. Keep away from the sex problem or any scene carried too far having to do with a woman led wrong by a man and her suffering for it. Although it be the finest acting and most dramatic moments it is not so good. Our people don't want their children to see it, and if the kids can't come, why the parents won't dare.

"Love's Lariat" is fine. I am going to ask you for a rebooking on it for some Saturday night, for our Saturday night crowd to see. I know it will take.

Yours very truly,
N. E. BOATRIGHT.
Tabor, Iowa.

• ALL TO THE GOOD.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen — The Plaza Theatre grows more proud of its Bluebird program, which it is showing two days in each week; and as time goes on we grow more and more convinced that it is one of the most attractive programs now on the market.

For one thing, we like the careful, expert attention paid to detail—a matter in which so many producers are not sufficiently interested. In the Bluebird photoplays there is just enough detail without being too much.

Another feature in which we are particularly interested is the Bluebird's wonderful outdoor work. It seems to us that no other producer except the Bluebird is realizing the almost unlimited possibilities of the great out-of-doors, with all the picturesque beauty which nature has endowed it.

The Bluebird photography is good and constantly growing better. The motion picture going public is just beginning to thoroughly appreciate the difference between good, poor and indifferent photography—to understand what an important part the cameraman plays; and from all sides we hear kind comments about Bluebird photography.

These, as we see it here at the Plaza Theatre, are only a few of the phases of the general excellence which go to make up Bluebird popularity—a popularity, by the way, which we find to be rapidly on the increase. We have thus far absolutely no criticism to make of Bluebird pictures; they are, to use a popular expression, "all to the good."

Very truly,
J. E. BRYANT,
The Plaza Theatre Co.,
Waterloo, Iowa.

HAS RUN 58 BLUEBIRDS.

From an exhibitor in Centralia, Ill., G. L. Pittenger, who runs the Grand Theatre of that town, seating 1,200 people, comes a letter after an experience with fifty-eight productions. That is about the entire list of Bluebirds. Praise after such a full and complete experience is praise indeed.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
St. Louis, Mo.,

Dear Sir—We started using the Bluebirds from the first release, and they have been getting better and better, until now I do not think they have a peer as far as photography is concerned, and I consider them among the best of features in every way.

We want good, clean pictures, and that is what Bluebird always are, and I recommend them very highly to any one who wishes first-class pictures. Yours very truly,

G. W. PITTENGER,
Pittenger Grand.
Centralia, Ill.

WELL, THEY ARE!

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Nebr.

Gentlemen—If the other four features which I booked for the month are as good as "Behind the Lines," I will be more than pleased, as I got more praise on "Behind the Lines" than on any feature I have run for the last two years; and you know I have been bucking the feature business for a long time and have run features from a lot of companies, and some mighty good ones, too. When I get praise from my patrons on a feature you can gamble it was good and will please two-thirds of any man's audience in the city or country town. I will cheerfully recommend "Behind the Lines" as being high class and a top notcher in every respect, and one that will please the most critical audience. Yours truly,

A. A. ULM,
Orpheum Theatre, Randolph, Nebr.

ONE GRAND PICTURE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen—The Bluebird Photoplay, "The Bugler of Algiers," which I put on last Thursday, January 11th, was one grand picture, appreciated by all and a success in every way, although the weather was cold and disagreeable. While only mentioning the one above all Bluebirds are in the same class and that is the best.

J. H. DALES,
Princess Theatre, Rochelle, Ill.

IF YOU DOUBT—TRY THEM.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Gentlemen — I have been using Bluebird pictures for about eight months, and will say I am very well pleased with them, as they all have good, clean stories and should satisfy almost any one, and I think they are getting better all the time. Would say that any one who is in doubt as to their quality should try them, and I know that they will be convinced. Wishing you success, we are,

W. H. KETCHAM,
Princess Theatre.

UP TO THE MINUTE.

Bluebird Photoplays,

Gentlemen—Must state that Bluebird plays are up to the minute. The only trouble is they end when my patrons have only had half enough.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Three Weeks from This Week

Harry Carey in "The Fighting Gringo." With Claire Du Bray. Sixty-first Red Feather. Story from a popular magazine series by Henry Wallace Phillips. Directed by Fred A. Kelsey. Released March 26. We haven't had a chance to see Harry Carey in a Red Feather since the second of the series, "A Knight of the Range." That was a corker and this is another. Harry is a husky, two-fisted adventurer, traveling to Panama, on his own. He takes an interest in a girl and a man, who haven't sense enough to let the course of their love run smooth. Harry determines to fix their affairs for them. He does it by shooting up the man deliberately, just to convince the girl how much she loves him. Then he personally conducts the suppression of a five-cent revolution, and puts a regiment of insurrectos out of business with tomato cans for ammunition. With the price of canned goods going up every day, too, the way it is! When he's fixed things for every one else, he takes the road again; but they never forget him and you won't, either. This is a picture that really deserves the name "feature."

"The Startling Climax." With Val Paul, Fred Church and Gertrude Aster. Directed by George Sargent. Gold Seal Three Reel Novelty Drama. Released March 27. Fans, meet Mr. George Sargent. He is a new name on the program, but let us tell you right here that you are going to like him. That is, if he puts over any more pictures like this Gold Seal, and he says he's going to, right along. There is a novelist in the story and his friend, and a lovely girl who becomes his stenographer. Yes, you've guessed it. They do marry. But she isn't quite the kind he thought her, though he has to feign death to find it out. He is already to fight his friend for her, when bing!—comes the startling climax, and you'll have the surprise of your life.

"Dippy Dan's Doings." With Dan Russell. Two-reel L-Ko Joyfest of Jocularity. Released March 28. 'Jevver see Dan as a chambermaid? He's just too cute for words. The corner policeman would fall for him like a ton of coal, and he'd be the belle of the annual ball of the Ancient, Honorable and Amalgamated Order of Anything at all. This two-reel riot starts him out as a chauffeur. Of course, his employers want to fire him, but they can't. Asbestos is his middle name. Lucille Hutton—she's in it, too, as the cutest cutter of cuticle you ever put your eyes on—causes him to leave his job. Then somehow or other, they are all in a Pullman car together, and they chase each other over the roofs of the train in a fashion which no one but lunatics and L-Ko Komedians would attempt. You don't dare miss this.

"Steel Hearts." With Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill. Two-reel 101 Bison. Directed by Henry McRae. Released March 31. Talk about your daredevils of the films! This girl, Marie Walcamp, takes the bally bun, bai Jove, as they used to say in dear old Lunnon. She climbs up on a rip-snorting demon of a horse, which promptly throws her. She is dragged for yards, with her foot in the stirrup and her curls in the dust, right across the path of a locomotive. Lee happened to be driving it—he's a millionaire engineer, by the way—and that's all that saves Marie. He makes a jump to get her, that is going to make the fans gasp right out loud. Later, as if that was not enough for one picture, he saves her from his degenerate brother in a fight that pretty nearly does for both of them. This is one whale of a two-reel picture and would get them in on the seventh day of the World's Series.

COMBINATION BLUEBIRD COMMERCIAL WINDOW DISPLAY.

ANY advertiser of Bluebird photoplays can take a profitable leaf out of the experience book of W. A. Bach, in charge of the Advertising and Service Departments of the Canadian Bluebird Company with profit to himself almost any day. His latest advertising stunt is a combination window display arranged between the Bluebird Company of Canada, and the United Cigar Stores, as shown in the cut above. The cigar people wanted to advertise a brand of chocolates, and they called them Bluebird chocolates for that purpose, with attractive boxes, and incidentally, good chocolates. They arranged with Mr. Bach a co-operative advertising scheme which was mutually agreeable and profitable to the cigar company and to the Bluebird Company. The results were very satisfactory indeed, the display attracted crowds of people, and the fact that one of the theatres showing Bluebird features was located next door to the window which carried the display was fortunate for that theatre, as the manager very soon realized. A reproduction of this advertising plan is used here not only as an example of enterprise, but as a hint to other exchanges and exhibitors who may wish to profit by the example.

BLUEBIRDS SELECTED FOR WORTH WHILE FILMS.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—Mr. Calvert, handling the Bluebird films here, has certainly been very kind and helpful to us, in helping us on our "Worth While Friday Night" programs. Last Friday night we ran "The Measure of a Man." One of my members said, after the program that that was one of the best missionary sermons he had ever received. I think he expressed the thought of the entire audience.

The Bluebird Photoplay, "The Right To Be Happy," made a great impression on our audience, a good part of which consisted of children. It held their attention from start to finish, was splendidly acted, and the lessons taught were of the very finest nature. Every one present was made better, I am sure. All were enthusiastic in their praise of the film, and I have heard from it a number of times since. I am glad to speak thus frankly in regard to this film, because I have had to turn down film after film that I did not think was the proper thing to show; but certainly no one could object to anything in "The Right To Be Happy." It is fine, and could be shown with profit and benefit in any church in the country.

Sincerely Yours,
CHAS. E. COBBEY,
First Christian Church.

TRUE TO LIFE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen—Just writing you a line to let you know how much we appreciated the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Measure of a Man." One of my young men said at the conclusion, "That's as good as any missionary sermon you could preach." I felt that the influence of the play was wholesome, and I know from having been pastor of a little church at Eureka, Montana, the centre of the largest lumber interest in the entire State, that the setting and characters were true to life. If you have any more plays on a par with this one, or "Measure of a Man," we will indeed consider it a pleasure to run them. Many thanks,

Yours truly,
CHAS E. COBBEY,
First Christian Church.

Gentlemen—Your letter of the 17th received, and in reply will say that Bluebirds are doing fine for me.

Last Wednesday I ran "The Right To Be Happy," and took in more money on Wednesday than I did last Saturday, on which day I ran Mary Pickford. Bluebirds are my best drawing card. Next Friday I am running a Bluebird feature entitled "The Eagle's Wings," and if you can spare the time I would be glad to have you come up and see it

I think if you advertise Bluebirds and get the people started they will prove your best card. I have run them nearly three months and the crowds are picking up every week.

Gentlemen—"The Right To Be Happy" drew a big crowd and that was not all. It pleased the majority and hit the high spots in the line of high class entertainment. "QUITE SOME JOSHER."

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Omaha, Neb.

Gentlemen—Last night we showed "The End of the Rainbow." We have been showing features at 10 and 15 cents. After having gone into the matter at some length, we came to the conclusion that we could no longer afford to run features at that price. Last night our ten and twenty-cent prices went into effect. The weather was fine, the picture splendid, and we had a good house. The raise did not seem to affect the crowd. After they had seen the picture, my patrons spoke to Mrs. B. about it being so fine. They liked the Western scenery, the Red Woods forests, the Sierra Nevada country. I thought when you called on me some three months ago and told me "you would make them ask for Bluebirds," that you were quite some "josher," and I readily promised to use them if you would make them ask for them. I do not recall any Bluebird that has fallen flat, and it has been a real as well as a reel pleasure to show Bluebirds.

Very truly yours,
N. E. BOATRIGHT.

GET ON

(No. 169. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

THERE'S just ONE thing that balks the average exhibitor's efforts to make money.

It's his lack of NERVE!

Harsh words? Maybe so---but they're TRUE!

In the last six weeks I've asked more than a hundred exhibitors to tell me frankly why they persist in hanging on to the feature policy that is putting them deeper into the hole every day.

In practically every instance the answer was this, "MY OPPOSITION!"

Here's how one man summed up the situation:

"I'd go back to the regular service program in a minute if my opposition did the same thing. I'd like to have the increased turnover that the short, snappy, regular service show brings. But as long as the other fellow continues to dish out features, I've GOT to follow suit!"

In other words, this exhibitor and others like him haven't the gumption to start the ball rolling. They lack the nerve to jump to the front and grab the business waiting for the LEADER.

If these men weren't blind as bats they'd realize that the REAL reason for the falling off in picture theatre patronage is due to indigestion---MOVING PICTURE INDIGESTION!

Where, in the old days, the short, diversified show added a zest to the fan's appetite, the modern feature monstrosity is giving patrons enough footage in ONE performance to satisfy their picture appetites for a WEEK.

Don't wait for the other fellow to point out the way back to BIG business. Don't let your wishbone continue to act as your backbone. Crowded houses are waiting for you. A fat bank account is BEGGING you to come and claim it------

GET ON THE JOB!

Lucille prepares to defend her honor. The Rescue. The honeymoon of a millionaire engineer.

"Steel Hearts"

TWO-REEL Bison Drama, written by Wright Roberts and directed by Henry McRae, in which Marie Walcamp performs some astonishing feats of horsemanship.

CAST.

David Driscoll	E. C. Wallack
Lucille Lawton	Marie Walcamp
George Belmont	L. C. Shumway
Jack Belmont	Lee Hill
Lucille's Maid	Gypsy Sontoris

THIS is one of the sort of pictures which have made the Bison brand famous. It was written by Wright Roberts and produced by Henry McRae, with Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill, aided and abetted by L. C. Shumway, in a series of thrilling stunts which are guaranteed to take away the breath of any fan.

Lucille Lawton is the ward of David Driscoll, superintendent of the Belmont Iron Works. George Belmont, the head in the industry, is the pampered pet of society. His younger brother Jack is just the opposite. Jack inherited a big block of railroad stock from his father, and desiring to know more of his investment, enlisted as a worker on the railroad and has risen to the post of engineer.

Lucille is a very spirited girl and passionately fond of outdoor sports, especially riding. She has set her heart on purchasing a magnificent spirited horse and she and her guardian are about to quarrel over the matter.

Lucille, defiant because of the men's objections, mounts the horse and rides off. Driscoll is very much worried and gladly consents when George Belmont suggests he will follow the girl in his car. The horse runs away and drags Lucille.

Meanwhile, Jack has taken his regular run and as he approaches a street crossing, is horrified to see a horse dashing toward the train with the rider dragging from the saddle. Jack calls the fireman to take his place and leaping from the train, succeeds in bringing the horse to a stop. His brother drives up and Jack surrenders the unconscious girl to him to be taken to a hospital.

It is two months before Lucille fully recovers and desiring to thank her rescuer, goes to the railroad yard to find the engineer. George and his friends are on a joy ride and meeting Jack, try to persuade him to join them. Jack refuses, saying that it is time for him to go on duty. He comes to his engine and is greeted by Lucille. Jack is embarrassed by the girl's thanks. He promises the girl to call on her the following evening. George has fallen in love with Lucille and promises Driscoll that if he will use his influence to favor his suit, that he will receive a large compensation.

Lucille has become more and more interested in Jack, and George is very bitter because she neglects him. When Jack calls at the house he finds George there. Driscoll monopolizes Jack's time, leaving the girl to George.

Next day George indulges freely in liquor and arrives at the plant in a bad humor. He broods over his jealousy during the day. Driscoll tells him that Lucille will be alone that night and suggests that he call. Lucille has retired for the night when George arrives and forces his way through the door. The maid tries to keep him out and a struggle takes place between them in which the maid is knocked unconscious. Lucille tries to get Jack on the phone and leaves word at the office for him to hurry to her house. She barricades her door, but George, in his drunken frenzy, breaks the door down and attacks her. Jack has received the message. Hastily cutting off the engine, he and the fireman make a dash for the house in the locomotive.

Driscoll has become anxious and set out for the house. On the way his car is wrecked by the speedy engine driven by Jack, and he is pinned underneath. The maid has revived and attacks Belmont again. He throws her down the stairs. Jack breaks in and they have a terrific fight. George is knocked down the steps. He picks himself up and leaves.

Jack comforts Lucille when Driscoll is found to be only bruised. Learning George's real nature, he is glad that he has received such a good lesson.

WELCOMING GERARD HOME.

NO returning traveler in recent years has been given so enthusiastic a welcome as that accorded to ex-Ambassador Gerard, upon his arrival from his arduous service in Germany. The Animated Weekly shows him arriving at Key West and disembarking from the ship which brought him from Havana. We see the black boys diving for coins around the vessel. As he landed, Mr. Gerard wished to write a message, and a proud little American was delighted to offer his shoulders as a table. Mr. Gerard's welcome to New York is seen. Mrs. Gerard is beside him, and we also see John B. Stanchfield making the address of welcome to which Mr. Gerard replies. Mayor Mitchel was also present to honor the diplomat.

N. Y. GIANTS IN PRACTICE GAME

ONLY a little while now until the magic words, "Play ball!" The Animated Weekly sends a forecast of what we may expect along about the middle of April, in some scenes from the training camp of the New York Giants, which show the athletes in the process of getting into condition for the 1917 campaign. The first practice game between the Giants and Dallas team, in which the regular New York line-up was employed was recorded for us, and shows our friends Heinie Zimmermann, Benny Kauff and Jim Thorpe, who is trying for a regular position, at batting practice before the game. We see the pitchers working out—Waite Hoyt, the sensational schoolboy; George Smith, of Columbia University, and Causey, a recruit of this season. General scenes of the game in which the Giants lost to the Dallas club by a score of 2 to 1 close the scenes.

CZAR NICHOLAS II ABDICATES.

MUCH interest will be felt in the recent portraits of the Czar, who is now known officially as Nicholas Romanoff. The Animated Weekly presents a striking view of him, while yet in the days of his glory as Czar of all the Russias, and supreme over the destinies of 180,000,000 persons. In the picture he is receiving an ovation from his troops and people, and does not look like a man, who in a few short months, was to be stripped of all his honors. No phase of the European situation has excited more interest than the happenings in Russia.

LEARNING TO FLY FOR UNCLE SAM.

THE Aviation School at Newport News, Va., is a popular place for visitors just now. Last year it was full of men learning to fly for the British army. Now it is crowded with students who wish to become airmen for Uncle Sam. Every possible effort is being made by the authorities to have the men ready for their licenses in record breaking time. The War Department urges the speedy instruction of the army flying students, in line with the other "preparedness" measures. The Animated Weekly shows the crowds of people who are attracted to the grounds to see the trial flights. Groups of the would-be airmen are seen in close-ups. Among them is the son of Secretary Lane. We see machines rising from the ground, in full flight, descending, and making a landing. This last is the most difficult, for it is in landing that most accidents occur.

BANTAMS FOR THE FRONT.

THE One Hundred and Forty-Third Battalion of the C. E. F. left Canada this week for the front, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Brice Powley, from Victoria, British Columbia. This battalion has received the name of "Bantam" from the fact that every man in it is under size. But small number of inches is no indication of lack of soldierly qualities, and the historic Napoleon proved it once for all. There have been several regiments of "Bantams" recruited for the war, and strangely enough it has happened very often that men who have enlisted in their ranks have grown so much under the influence of the out-of-door life and the training they receive, that they have ceased to be "Bantams" and have had, with much regret, to be drafted into other regiments. This seems to prove that if we could only eliminate killing from warfare it would be the finest outdoor sport in the world. The crowds waiting to say good-by were so dense that it took the men an hour to go a block.

THE CHURCH WITH THE FLAG.

IT is the day of preparedness, and the churches do not intend to be left behind. The Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of Pittsburg, Pa., is the first church in the country to hoist a flag, and has been given the nickname above by many newspaper writers.

"THE GIFT GIRL"

THIS Bluebird Photoplay is based upon the stage success by H. R. Durant, called "Marcel's Birthday Present." It was arranged for the screen by E. J. Clawson, who has been responsible for so many Bluebird scenarios, and directed by Rupert Julian, who also took the part of "Malec" in the production. Louise Lovely is starred as the English girl, brought up in ignorance of her parentage in a Persian harem, and Emory Johnson is the young Frenchman to whom the strayed beauty is sent by his father as a birthday gift. The most unusual story runs like this, and it gives Miss Lovely the best opportunity she has ever had to look triumphantly beautiful:

While traveling on the highroad between the ancient city of Persepolis and the Persian seaport of Bushire, Major Abercrombie, who had been making excavations in the ruins of Persepolis for the British Museum, ordered the Kurds to pitch a tent in haste. Though they had been hurrying at a fast pace in order to reach the English residency at Bushire because of the delicate condition of his wife, they were too late. There, in the indefinite stretches of a Persian forest, the English woman gave birth to a baby girl, and then died.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, based upon the play by H. R. Durant, called "Marcel's Birthday Present," adapted for the screen by E. J. Clawson and produced by Rupert Julian, with Louise Lovely in the lead.

CAST.

Major Abercrombie	Rex de Rosselli
Rokaia	Louise Lovely
Marcel	Emory Johnson
Malec	Rupert Julian
Marquis de Tonquin,	Wadsworth Harris
Dr. Eglantine	Frederick Montague

Malec confronts Rokaia.

Amercrombie looked at his dead wife in a dazed, bewildered manner, and then turning away, he staggered out into the forest. He had not wandered far, when he was shocked into his senses by the sight of a crouching lion. Later a number of lions were seen nosing about, while various pieces of the Englishman's clothes were scattered on the ground.

Left alone with the dead woman and the child, Khaled, Abercrombie's faithful servant, seeing the Kurds opening the trunks belonging to his master, laid the baby by its mother and tried to remonstrate with the camel drivers. One, having sneaked upon him from the back, swung a strangler's cord and threw Khaled to the ground, when the others fell upon him with their knives.

Uzun Hasan, the good vizier of Shiraz, was waiting for the rest of his party and heard the crying of a babe. He sent his trusted secretary, Malec, to find the child, and following the cries, they soon discovered the dead woman and the babe. Instructing his slaves and secretary to bury the corpse, the vizier and Malec mounted their horses and rode to the palace, where Uzun Hasan's four wives were delighted with the child and made a great fuss over her.

She grew up a laughing, dancing, bright-eyed beauty whose name was Louise in various poses of loveliness both before and after leaving the harem.

Rokaia. She was the favorite of the wives and also of the whole household, Malec as well, who, though now much older, looked at the girl with admiration and desire.

Seeing the man to whom she was to be married, Abu Beker, the Sheik, a great fat, black, greasy merchant, Rokaia was badly frightened; and when Malec disclosed to her the fact that she was not the child of Hasan and suggested that she go away with him, she was only too glad. But as she was leaving the room, her monkey set up such a screeching and shrieking that all the palace was aroused, and Malec waiting for her below the window, was forced to fight with the guards and then to hide in order to escape alive. Rokaia, already possessing her steamship ticket to Marseilles, and greatly terrified, found herself at the boat, and timidly embarked.

Arrived at the city of Marseilles, her purse was stolen by two crooks, and lonely and bewildered in the big place, she was the easy prey of a dandy by whom she sat in a park. As he was leading her away, she was struck by an auto belonging to the Marquis De Tonquin, a noted old roue of the city, who with his friend and doctor, Dr. Fabre D'Eglantine, was just returning home after an afternoon at one of the popular cafes. In the confusion, the dandy thought it best for him to disappear, while the Marquis and the Doctor took Rokaia tenderly to the Marquis' house, where she was carefully cared for by the kind housekeeper.

The fight between the students and the Persians.

The Marquis De Tonquin had a son whom he dearly loved. Realizing from personal experience, the evil that comes from a dissolute life, he determined that Marcel should not live as he himself had lived. He had just received a letter from the college informing him that the boy was incorrigible. Never thinking that escapades could concern anything but women, he and D'Eglantine concluded that Rokaia would make a good companion for Marcel. So she went as a birthday present from the father to his beloved son.

Seeking the address of Marcel, Rokaia stopped by a Persian vendor and asked him in his own language for assistance. He was astounded to hear the language and also at the roll of bills which she carelessly displayed. After she had bought two cages of canaries and a queer toy of him, she went on her way.

Rokaia and Marcel were immediately taken by each other's looks, but the boy was deeply humiliated that his father had sent her. He could

SALUTATIONS.

THE Moving Picture Weekly extends its felicitations to the Moving Picture World upon the occasion of the tenth birthday of the oldest trade magazine in the moving picture field. The editor of the Weekly, in company with almost the solid business end of the industry located in New York, attended the World's most excellent dinner, enjoyed its fare, laughed with the others at its takeoffs on the producer, director and scenario man, personally congratulated John Wylie, Epes Sargent, "Pop" Hoff, and George Blaisdell, and met Mr. Chalmers. If there is one thing more than another upon which the World is to be congratulated after ten years of wonderful and well-deserved success, it is upon the spirit of broad-mindedness which prompted those at its helm to invite the representatives of the other trade magazines in the same field.

Revealing Roberta

By MARJORIE HOWARD

"The Day of a Debutante"—wouldn't you say
If these pictures appeared in a style magazine?
How she rises and rides in the cool of the day,
In the chicest new habit that ever was seen.
How she goes to the club for her luncheon and sport,
While wearing a sport's suit of ecru and green,
And a big shady hat that an artist has wrought
For a dainty young miss who is just seventeen.
In the evening she's gowned in a tulle party-frock
With a glimpse of a glitter, a hint of a sheen;
And her partners come 'round in a circling flock,
Like courtiers who beg for the grace of their queen.
Well, she isn't a butterfly lady at all;
Her standards are high, her ambition is keen.
Her family name? It is Wilson—that's all—
She's the dainty Roberta you've met on the screen.

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama, written by Karl Coolidge and produced by George Sargent, with Val Paul, Fred Church and Gertrude Aster in the leads.

CAST.

George Telford	Val Paul
Gould Hunter	Fred Church
Harvey Reed	Dan Leighton
Margy Summers	Gertrude Aster
Ormsy	Charles G. Briden

GEORGE SARGENT is a new name among the producers at Universal City, but he will soon be well and favorably known if he continues to produce more pictures of the quality of this Gold Seal three-reeler, written for him by Karl Coolidge. The story carries a surprise ending, and is as follows:

Wealthy through inheritance, George Telford has become justly famed as a short story writer. He has just finished a story when his friend and critic, Gould Hunter, calls. They talk of the story and Hunter suggests that though good, the story is spoiled by its ending. He says that platonic friendship is a rare thing, and that few men would give up their wives without a fight. In his opinion, the public looks for the "different ending." Harvey Reed, for years the Telford family physician, is also present. He and Hunter soon leave the house, while Telford stands thinking of Hunter's criticism.

Margy Summers, an orphan, weary from a day's vain search for employment, enters her rooming-house and is seen by Ormsy, a barbarian of the underworld. He confides to an accomplice that a pretty girl lives there and to keep his eye on her.

Margy reads an advertisement for a stenographer, wanted by George Telford. She is thinking of answering it when a tennis ball flies through the window. Telford himself appears to learn if any damage has been done; he takes the ball, apologizing to Margy.

Later Margy is admitted to Telford's house by the butler. Telford is out, but she is allowed to sit and wait, and esconced in a large chair, she falls asleep. Here Telford and Hunter find her. She is engaged, and it is not long before both these men are interested in her. Telford finally proposes, and she, apparently deeply in love with him, accepts his offer. They are soon married, even though Reed, who, called to Margy's rooming-house, had seen her talking to Ormsy. He warns the author that she may be the wrong girl for him.

As the weeks fly by Telford begins to suspect that Margy has married him for his wealth. She is constantly in the company of Hunter, and they seem deeply engrossed in one another. Telford is miserable, and this fact is noted by Reed, who urges him not to be hasty, for the change from almost poverty to wealth has perhaps unbalanced Margy. The doctor warns Telford that a violent quarrel might cause his death, as Telford has a weak heart. One night, Hunter and Margy return from the opera and Telford sees the stain of crushed violets on Hunter's shirt front. The bouquet of violets on Margy's corsage is badly crushed. He becomes furious, and Margy rushes between them.

Reed receives a note telling him to follow the bearer of it. He is led ten miles away in a machine and there finds Telford. The author tells the story of his twin brother, who had run away from home years before. They heard he had died in South America, but really he had been in prison for fifteen years for forgery. His heart was weak, like Telford's, and the shock of meeting proved too much for him. He died in the room.

Telford stays at Reed's country home for six months. He determines that if at the end of that time, he finds Margy loves Hunter and has forgotten him, he will give her up freely. When he returns, Margy tells him he is too late, she has come to love Hunter. Telford, confronting Hunter, tells him he was right when he said no man would give up his wife without a fight, and that he is going to fight for Margy.

Telford is typewriting feverishly when Hunter and Reed enter the room. The author informs them, that, acting on Hunter's suggestion he has rewritten his story with the "different ending." The husband does fight to get his wife back, but Hunter declares that it all depends on the sort of a woman you marry.

DAN'S

DOINGS

Three scenes showing Speedometer Bill in three different stages of the "Doings."

L—KO 2-Reel Delectable Decoction, delineating death-defying daring. Featuring Dan Russell.

CAST.

Speedometer Bill	Dan Russell
The Judge	Vin Moore
The Manicure	Marjorie Ray
The Judge's Wife	Jean Hathaway

THIS story, featuring Dan Russell, begins in a taxi cab, with Dan as the chauffeur, but it ends on the top of a train, with Dan being chased madly by Vin Moore, in the role of an irate husband. The only regret we have in seeing it is that Marjorie Ray, who plays the maddening manicure, leaves the cast so early in the picture. Here is what you might call a futurist sketch of the plot:

The cops put a rope across the street to discourage speeders, but all they could catch was a cow. Later they were more successful, when Dan, the chauffeur, came along with the manicure in his machine. They were taken to the police station. Both Dan and the judge were interested in the manicure, but the judge had the disadvantage of possessing a jealous wife. She happened to hire Dan's care, and he ran her over a terribly rough road, and then was arrested for speeding again, and taken before the judge again. As they have already encountered each other over the manicure, Dan is afraid that he will get a very long sentence. But the little manicure drifts into the court room, carrying the hat which the judge has forgotten and left with her. The officer of the law can see nothing else, and is in terror, because his wife is in the courtroom. Dan thinks he is going to get off after all, but the judge creates a disturbance by pull-a gun, and Dan crawls on a board from the window of the courtroom to that of the opposite hotel. He is not aware that he has entered the judge's rooms.

The judge comes in, and goes upstairs. Dan hears him coming, and hastily disguises himself in the sheet, putting on a pillow-case for a cap. He takes up a feather duster, and pretends to be the housemaid. The judge enters, and happens to step on the sheet which Dan is wearing. It is pulled off, and the judge recognizes the chauffeur. Dan beats it hastily and hides in the mail-bag in the office of the hotel. The judge and his wife decide to leave town. Dan, in the mail-bag, is loaded onto the same train which they take. The clerk finds him, but allows him to take refuge in a Pullman. The judge and his wife are travelling in the drawing-room. She comes out and and seats herself in one of the chairs. A man tries to flirt with her, and the judge angrily sends her back to the compartment. She leaves her coat, and when Dan comes into the car, he disguises in it. The judge takes him for his wife, and sends him into the compartment, too. Dan and Mrs. Judge confront each other, and hearing the judge returning, they hide Dan in the berth. The porter comes in to make it up and Dan is discovered. The chase leads to the top of the car, and they race back and forth over the roofs of the cars. An engine full of police is pursuing them, and Dan finally is forced to dive from a bridge into the river below.

LITTLE ZOE RAE, the Universal wonder-baby, is a regular outdoor child, and loves nothing so much as a day in the country, dressed in a bathing suit, or boy's overalls. When continuous picture-making begins to get on the little lady's nerves, her mother begs a day for her from the directors who literally fight for her services, and off they go, in Zoe's own automobile, to spend a day in the open.

Zoe has been promoted to the dignity of driving the car herself, and she is rapidly developing into a "speed demon." One day when she refused to be satisfied with the moderate pace which safety demanded, her father told her that she must be careful, and not want to go any faster, or she would be pinched by the first cop they met. This made a deep impression, and later, when daddy himself had taken the wheel and put on a bit of speed, Zoe said:

"Drive slower, daddy, or we'll be pinched, and then we'll be all black and blue!"

STARTS A FAD

THE European war is responsible for all sorts of unlooked-for results, and among them is the adoption of the humble overalls as a working costume by the fair sex. It is not only the war-workers in the belligerent countries who have done so, but girls employed in peaceful pursuits in our own country have followed the example of their belligerent sisters. Molly Malone, the little leading lady who will appear soon in a Bison picture called "The Tell-Tale Clue," claims to be the first girl to have worn overalls as an outing dress.

Little Miss Malone has had a lot of experience of out-of-door life, and is quite an expert at camp-cooking, and the art of living in the open. She realized that skirts were an inconvenience with which a sensible woman should dispense, and that the cheap, easily obtained and practical overalls would make an ideal camping costume. Most women would not look very well in them, perhaps, but they are exceedingly becoming to Miss Molly. Just to prove it, she wears them in a picture called "The Fair Masquerader," which she made under the direction of George Cochrane.

UNIVERSAL
IMP SPECIAL

STRIKING POSTER FOR "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE"

THIS is the advance one-sheet for the wonderful series of "The Perils of the Secret Service," which has already made a tremendous impression wherever shown, not only on account of its timely nature and the inherent drawing power of a series of this kind, but on account of the masterful manner in which it was directed for the screen by George Bronson Howard, the author of the original stories. The poster shows Kingsley Benedict, the star of the series as Yorke Norroy, (and, by the way, there are only seven episodes instead of eight, as previously announced, and as shown on this poster). This striking poster was drawn by Daniel Sayer Groesbeck, the well-known magazine and novel artist, who has contributed to nearly all of the popular magazines, and has illustrated a number of well-known books. In addition to his advance poster the Morgan Company of Cleveland is getting out special one, three and six-sheet posters on each of the seven episodes of the series. All of the paper is extremely striking, and clearly represents the interesting character of the series. Most of the posters, too, were drawn by artists of wide reputation. All of them are in the five colors in which the poster on this page was produced.

MOVIEGRAMS

BEN WILSON DIRECTS A FINE VICTOR

BEN WILSON is a good deal of a versatilitist. (That is a new word, but one for which there has been a crying need for a long time. Somebody was bound to invent it and it might as well be the Moving Picture Weekly.) Here is Ben playing the lead in the big mystery serial, which critics pronounce to be the best yet, and which is fully living up to the promise of its title "The Voice on the Wire." At the same time, his name appears on the program as the director of one of the best comedy-dramas which have appeared under the Victor brand in many, many moons.

This masterpiece among Victors is called "Somebody Lied," and a scene from it is reproduced at the right. Harry Carter is the little tin god husband, who "never drinks, never smokes, never dances, never plays for money," and never does anything, according to his own prospectus of himself, but play the archangel. Priscilla, his believing little wife, who dresses up in a white wig and Revolutionary panniers, goes to a masked ball and flirts her head off with a Pierrot. In the meantime, friend l. t. g., whom she pictures as having a lonely evening at home, and who is a hollow deception as an angel, is having a wonderful time at a gambling place, which the police have picked out for a professional visit that very night. Complications follow each other so fast that you can hardly keep up with them, and Ben Wilson has made a superfine job of the development of this rushing action, which Miss Dean and Mr. Carter maintain at the true comedy tempo.

Priscilla Dean presents one of the best arguments for a return to the costuming of our ancestors which has ever been seen. She looks so bewitching in her white wig and panniers that she will probably get into the dreams of every masculine spectator.

When frocks do up in the back.

SUCH A LITTLE DIRECTOR

SINCE Ruth Stonehouse has been promoted to the proud position of director, the rest of the actors at Universal City are trying their best to treat her with the added respect due to her dignity. Franklyn Farnum, the Bluebird star, seems to have forgotten that she is not just a little girl, as he plays "Ring-around-a-camera" with her.

NESTORS SHOCK VISITORS

THE strain of producing a good comedy every week for fifty-two weeks in the year is a considerable one, but you would never think so to look at the picture of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the leading lights of the Nestor Company, which performs this feat regularly, under the direction of Louis Chaudet. The consistently high standard maintained by this trio, assisted by Edith Roberts has been the subject of high praise from those who know the effort and hard work that such an undertaking entails. Of course, some of the comedies are funnier than the others—that is only natural, and certainly "Shot in the West," the Nestor for this week touches the high-water mark, even for Nestors.

Edith is a Boston novelist who comes to the Woolly West for local color. The town of Grizzly Gulch which has long since reformed, decides to return to the "bad old days" for her benefit. Eddie poses as "Rat-

"THE FIGHTING GRINGO"

SIXTY-FIRST Red Feather, from the well known "Red Saunders" stories, by Henry Wallace Phillips, adapted for the screen by Maude Grange and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, with Harry Carey as his star.

HENRY WALLACE PHILLIPS is a well-known name, and the most popular thing he ever did was his "Red Saunders" stories, which were published in a widely read magazine. A scenario was concocted from them by Maude Grange, and given to Fred A. Kelsey to produce with Harry Carey in the role of the wandering, adventurous hero. Then the result was set for the sixty-first Red Feather photoplay. Carey has a part after his own heart, in which he plays Cupid for a pair of silly lovers, personally conducts a revolution, brings a dishonest missionary to book, and otherwise takes the affairs of personages and nations into his own capable hands. This is the first Red Feather with the popular actor in the leading role since the second of the series, "A Knight of the Range," which is still in demand. Here is the story:

On their way to Panama, Mr. William De La Tour Saunders, otherwise known as "Red," a big, husky, redheaded adventurer of experience, who wears continually a most engaging grin, meets Mary Smith and Arthur Saxon. He becomes very friendly with both these young people and soon learns that Mary is on her way to do missionary work with a Mr. Belknap and that Arthur is seemingly following her. During the voyage, Arthur and Mary alternately quarrel and agree. The lover plays his violin as a means of reconciliation, but Mary always tells him that though she loves him, he must prove himself to be a man before she consents to marry him. Arthur loaths Mr. Belknap and denounces him in the most descriptive terms, but Mary is loyal to the missionary and becomes angry whenever he talks against the man. Red does all in his power to bring the two lovers together and is greatly amused by their petty quarrels.

Arthur tells Red his story.

At the dock when the ship anchors, Jim, a big rancher, comes on the deck and asks the captain for a husky white man who can be trusted for foreman at his ranch and store. The captain recommends him highly to Jim. Through his iron grit, Red wins out in every difficulty. Thrown from his horse, Red is hurled into the stomach of Orinez, a little fat Spaniard, who is head of the Government party and the ablest man in Panama. Red saves him from three bandits one night and the two men become good friends.

Red goes often to see Mary, but when he mentions Arthur's name, she demands that he never speak of him before her. He senses that Belknap is to blame and warns her not to allow him to influence her against Arthur.

Red then goes to the store of Perez where Arthur is working, and finds the young fellow in a most deplorable condition. Arthur tells them why he has been drinking so hard.

From the time they were children, Mary and Arthur had been sweethearts. They met Belknap, and Mary became vastly interested in missionary work, while Arthur, distrusting the man, was unable to turn the girl against him. Their engagement was finally broken and Arthur was turned out by his father.

Learning that Mary was going to Panama, Arthur followed her. One night, he had been accosted by a street woman, who was almost starved and who fainted in his arms. He had carried her to the store, fed her and then taken her to his room to rest, after which he left the place. Belknap had witnessed this scene, and had hastened to tell Mary about the incident, putting a false light on the whole affair. When Arthur next saw her, she told him that his presence was an insult and ordered him to go away from her.

Red determines to remedy things in his own way. He goes with Perez to his home to dinner and in the course of the evening, discovers that they are related, as both are descendants of the De La Tour family. While they are eating, Orinez rushes into the room and tells them that, having followed Belknap, he had seen him meet Zampeto, the leader of the new revolution, and had heard him promise to make the converts join the revolution, if Zampeto would endow his mission when he becomes president.

Red hears that the insurrectos are on their way to the ranch, so with the help of three of the men, he barricades the store and prepares to put up a fight. Red and his men finally use cans of tomatoes as arms, hurling them into the crowd, but both are wounded severely by the time Jim and a troop of American soldiers come to their rescue. Red, when all is finished, falls unconscious.

Orinez, Perez and Jim arrange with the troopers to trap the revolutionists that night. When Red finds out about their plans, in spite of his helpless arm, he joins Arthur and the other men in a little hut far from the town. Without any explanation, he deliberately fires at Arthur and wounds him in the arm, but after Arthur has finished swearing at him, he nonchalantly states that he wants to tell Mary he is wounded and he couldn't tell a lie to her.

The insurrectos are caught in their own trap and Red with Orinez and Perez, goes to the mission. He makes such a noise that Belknap soon enters. He lunges at Red with a drawn knife, but suddenly Red pulls out his revolver and thrusts it in the man's face. Informing Belknap that his plans have been discovered, he gives him an hour to make his escape on the condition that Belknap threaten him with his knife. Mary rushes into the room and tries to protect Red. He tells her he can't fight, as he is hurt and that he came to tell her that Arthur is wounded. She wildly demands to be taken to him. When Belknap springs to the door as though to follow them, Perez and Orinez swing open the shutter and remind him that he has only an hour.

Though Mary refuses to listen to his talk of Arthur, Red insists upon telling her the whole story. They hurry to the hut where Arthur is pacing the room in feverish anxiety. Mary starts running when they are nearly there. Arthur meets her, puts his one good arm about her as she flings her arms about his neck. Red turns away and goes alone toward the town.

Red does his best to efface himself.

SINGER'S ACCIDENT SHOCKS UNIVERSAL CITY.

THERE were numerous expressions of keen regret at Universal City over the news that Mme. Schumann-Heink had been injured in an automobile accident at St. Louis. The world's greatest contralto never comes to California without paying a visit to the capital of filmland and her radiant, wholesome personality has warmed the hearts of all the Universal employees to whom on such occasions she has very generously sung in her most gracious manner.

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company, upon learning the news, sent a telegram to the famous singer informing her of the shock to every one at the picture city and wishing her a speedy recovery.

P. A. POWERS MEETS AN OLD FRIEND.

MARSHALL LORIMER, who has been engaged in newspaper work for many years not only in this country but in Europe and the Orient, and who at present is the Southern California representative of the Rounder and Playbill, the leading amusement publications of the Pacific Coast, had a pleasant hour at Universal City this week with P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Big U organization, who crossed the continent recently for a short visit to the Pacific Coast studios of the company.

Detective Kelly and his assistants read of the plot against the city.

The mystery of Pat's boudoir.

"The Purple Mask" No. 14--"Sky Monsters"

PAT SAVES NEW YORK FROM BOMBARDMENT BY HOSTILE AIRSHIPS IN THIS CHAPTER OF THE SERIAL, WRITTEN AND PRODUCED BY GRACE CUNARD AND FRANCIS FORD, AND IS TAKEN PRISONER.

IN Episode 14 of the serial "The Purple Mask," which is nearing completion, the intrepid Pat ascends in a biplane far above the city of New York, to destroy the hostile airships from which the anarchists are bombarding the financial district of the city. For the first time the girl falls into the hands of her pursuers, and Kelly, convinced of her services to the Government, determines to save, instead of hunting her.

In the preceding episode Pat had thwarted the purpose of a band of anarchists who, prompted by a spirit of vengeance and malice, had designed to drop incendiary bombs on Wall Street and destroy the financial district of New York by an attack from the sky.

When they approached New York in their airship, passing down the length of Manhattan Island, while consternation reigned throughout the city, Pat was ready in a biplane to approach them before they reached lower New York, and to attack their air-craft from above. Timing her movements with exactness, she was high above the anarchists before they reached their destination and by dropping bombs upon the craft operated by the criminals, rendered them helpless. They were glad to escape with their lives, when they finally effected a safe landing in one of Brooklyn's suburbs.

The unprecedented exploit of the anarchists naturally attracted the attention of the Government, and when investigation pointed to the "Purple Mask" as having participated in the raid, orders were issued from Washington that the girl must be apprehended at all hazards. Phil Kelly was called in by Secret Service operatives to assist in the capture.

While Pat was walking through the grounds surrounding her home, the officers captured her, but she was immediately rescued by the Apaches. In a few moments Pat was again at the mercy of the officers who forced their way into a room where the Apaches were in session. The girl refused gracefully to submit, and when an opportunity came she smashed the officers over the head with heavy vases she snatched from the sideboard, and started a mix-up that permitted her to escape through the window.

Secret Service men who were watching outside, chased Pat with a view to capturing her. She led them over roofs and house-tops, until she attempted to slide to the earth and safety by using the branches of a tree. When she hit the ground there was an officer waiting to handcuff her. The men led Pat to their automobile, but as they were about to drive away the Apaches again attacked them.

With one handcuff attached securely to Pat's wrist, the officers fastened the other bracelet to the framework of the automobile, while they engaged in a desperate fight with the Apaches. Pat's men were overcome, and the episode ends with Secret Service men driving away from the scene in their automobile, with Pat their prisoner.

EPISODE THREE of the Great Surprise Serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which was written by Eustace Hale Ball, adapted for the screen by J. G. Alexander, and produced by Stuart Paton, with Ben Wilson as the star.

CAST.

Polly Marion	Neva Gerber
Red Warren	Francis McDonald
Howard Van Cleft	Ernie Shields
Dr. Renolds	Joseph Girard
Jap Valet	Frank Tokonaga
Capt. Cronin	Howard Crampton

THE third episode of the great surprise serial, is called "The Spider's Web," and serves still further to complicate and deepen the mystery of the two preceding chapters. Eustace Hale Ball well understands how to create suspense, and J. G. Alexander, in adapting the story for the screen, and Stuart Paton the director, have succeeded in keeping it red-hot throughout the instalment.

John Shirley, the famous detective, arrives at his apartment in time to receive a telephone from the voice on the wire that his colleague, Polly Marion is in danger. He rushes to her apartment and finds that his car has been stolen.

He reports the theft to the police, but finds his car with a note of warning in it. He starts on his mission, but the car explodes from a bomb, and he goes to the police station and explains. He is delayed, but arrives in time to save Polly from being killed by a mysterious disembodied hand.

That night he and Polly go to a party at the rooms of the mysterious Red Warren. Red forces Polly to ask Shirley to meet her there. Shirley notices that Warren's hand bears a resemblance to the hand of the morning's adventure. The fact is noticed as Warren is showing him an old family coat-of-arms, telling him that an ancestor of his had a grafted hand.

They leave the party at a late hour and Shirley is attacked on his homeward journey, succeeding, however, in overpowering his assailants.

Arriving home he finds that Howard Van Cleft, the young millionaire, has sent a note telling him of a contemplated yachting cruise, as he fears to remain in the city longer. Shirley phones for assistance and hurries to the deck, where, in a running fight on the river, he saves the life of Howard and sees him safely started on his journey.

He arrives home after his day's adventure and accidentally reads in a medical journal of a wonderful operation in which a human hand has been grafted upon an arm. He thinks of Warren and recalls the coat-of-arms. He cannot fathom the fact that the mysterious hand was disembodied. The mystery is now deeper than ever.

NO JITNEY FOR WILSON.

BEN WILSON, star of the serial "The Voice on the Wire," and who in the past has directed a number of feature productions, resents the suggestion that merely because he owns an automobile and drives it, that he is operating a jitney between the film capital and Hollywood. A few days ago, as he was driving away from the studios, a stranger stepped up to him and said, "I want to go to Hollywood."

"Climb in," said the actor, and he drove the man over the pass. At the end of the ride he stopped and the man, after alighting, dug down in his pocket and handed Wilson fifty cents. The actor looked at him surprised and said. "What's that for?"

"Why, take our your fare," said his guest. Wilson informed the man that his perfectly good automobile was not engaged in the transportation of passengers and that he had not as yet reached the stage where the collection of jitney fare was necessary, even with the high price of gasoline.

OUTDOOR MEETINGS AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

UNIVERSAL CITY has been the mecca not only of scores of tourists during the past week, but also of many motion picture exhibitors and exchange men. A number of the film folk visited the cinema capital both to renew their acquaintance with Carl Laemmle, president of the Big U organization, and to see the sights of the institution while others came for the purpose of consulting him regarding business matters.

It has not been unusual to witness gatherings of the exhibitors and exchange men out of doors at Universal City, presided over by President Laemmle, at which affairs of mutual interest have been discussed, this being possible because of the delightful balmy weather that has been "on tap."

"SNOW WHITE"

REX Three-Reel version of the immortal fairy tale, with Elsie Alberts as the little housekeeper of the dwarfs.

THE favorite of favorites with lovers of fairy-tales is "Snow White," and the three-reel version of it which is offered as a Rex release with Elsie Alberts in the name part, presents the evergreen story at its best.

The story opens in the ante-room of the royal bed-chamber. The good queen, Snow White's mother, dies. A year later the king brings home a new, wicked queen. There is an elaborate ceremony of investiture. Snow White is presented to her new mother. The queen sees in writing in her magic mirror a message to the effect that Snow White will be prettier than she. The queen is in a jealous rage. The king leaving for a short period, confides to his queen the care of Snow White. No sooner is the king gone, than the wicked queen, under threat of beheading, compels a hunter to carry Snow White to the woods and slay her. The hunter weakens at the critical moment and sets Snow White free. He kills a rabbit, and in the blood of the slaughtered animal dips his handkerchief, which he shows to the queen as proof that he has carried out his mission.

Snow White sees a cottage in the distance. She goes to this little house. Finding it apparently vacant, she enters and searches through the rooms. In the fireplace a pot is boiling. The table is spread. The beds are made. She lies on one of the beds and falls alseep.

Seven little men are at work in a mine. At the close of the day they stop their labor and, in military order, march across the fields to their little home. They discover that some one has been there. The leader searches the rooms and finds Snow White. He summons his mates and together they awaken the sleeper. Snow White agrees to keep house for the little folks.

The queen, through her mirror, has learned that the hunter has played her false and that Snow White still lives. The next day she goes in disguise to the hut. She gives Snow White a poisoned comb. Snow White falls unconscious. When the dwarfs return they soon discover the trouble and remove the comb, restoring Snow White.

The next day the queen returns. In spite of the warnings of the dwarfs the wicked woman is admitted by Snow White. The queen induces her to eat of a poisoned apple. Snow White falls dead. The dwarfs, returning at night, bemoan the loss of their princess.

The queen learns of the death of Snow White. The glass tells her: "Oh, queen, there is none in the land so beautiful as thou."

A prince now comes upon the scene. From a hill he sees a strange sight. He dismounts and approaches a casket of glass, surrounded by seven mourning little men. He leans over the casket and kisses the face of the still figure within. Immediately Snow White comes to life.

The king and queen are at the head of the court assembling to greet a new prince and his beautiful bride. Of course, it is the prince and Snow White. The wicked queen is exposed and turned out. The king welcomes his restored daughter and her prince and gives the two his blessing, and—of course—they live happy ever after.

GRETCHEN LEDERER NOW IS FULL-FLEDGED U. S. CITIZEN.

GRETCHEN LEDERER, one of the well known leading ladies of Universal City, arrived at the studios a few mornings ago and proudly exhibited a document to her many friends. It was the final decree of the United States District Court admitting the actress to full American citizenship, or what is commonly known as the second papers.

Miss Lederer is a native of Germany, where she was educated for the operatic stage, and it was upon her arrival in the United States some years ago that she decided to give up grand opera for pictures. Since then she has been very successful and has made an enviable name for herself as a screen actress. Recently she has been playing important parts in the Lynn F. Reynolds Company. Five years ago Miss Lederer took out her first papers and no sooner had the requisite time elapsed than she appeared before the judge of the United States District Court in Los Angeles and took her final examination.

Thrills in "The Bronze Bride"

EDDIE POLO'S first picture since he "died" so dramatically in the last episode of "Liberty," is "The Bronze Bride," the Red Feather for next week. Henry McRae had charge of the production, and you may imagine how he revelled in the chance to use Polo's reckless daring in all sorts of precarious situations. The "big thrill" comes when the two men, Frank Mayo as the somewhat weak-kneed hero, and Eddie as the resentful brother of the Indian heroine, meet in a terrific struggle on the very "tip" edge—as the children say—of a precipitous cliff. It isn't new—this situation, but surely no two men ever risked distruction more rashly than these two. You will see some pictures of this hair-raising encounter when the story of the picture is given in this magazine next week.

Athletic feats in films would seem to be something quite new, to hear the way that some people talk about them. Such conversation makes Eddie Polo smile rather wearily. He has been endangering his own life and limb in pictures so long, that it is amusing to hear a screen player's possession of physical strength and muscular development spoken of as a novelty. He made his screen reputation in the days when serials were newer than they are now, and as Universal serials have a habit of going all over the earth, so there is no player in pictures who receives more foreign letters than Eddie Polo. The manners and customs of the Occidental world may seem strange to the Orientals who have acquired the movie habit, but Eddie's magnificent physical development, and the uses to which he puts it, speak to them in a language which is more readily understood than Esperanto, and find an immediate response. In "The Bronze Bride" he quite surpasses his own record, and that alone is enough to insure the success of the picture.

But it has a lot more to recommend it, and its strongest bid for popularity is the work of Claire McDowell, who is starred in the role of "A-Che-Chee," a sort of Indian version of "Madame Butterfly." She is called in the picture "the best-looking Indian you ever saw," and this description is well-earned. She has

VIOLET THE CHANGELING.

"I can be a hundred different ladies and no lady at all—all in one week," said Violet Mersereau, as she donned the picturesque rags of her next impersonation "Susan" in the Bluebird picture "Susan's Gentleman." "Clothes always influence me. I'm exactly what they want me to be. I'm 'it' as soon as I get into them and I stay 'it' until I take them off. That is why I simply must have my costume to suit the character in my screen work.

"When I wear rags I'm a poor, appealing wistful sort of person, with all the feelings of a street urchin. When I'm a society girl I have all the sensations of wealth and luxury, and am just a butterfly, not thinking at all. When the last scene that I play on a working day is petulant, then I stay that way till I land at my mother's door; when it's flirtatious, I'm afraid that even Mike, my chauffeur, knows what I've been playing that day. It may get me into trouble some day, this tendency of mine, but I can't help it."

"One touch of this, and you die in horrible agony!" said Norroy.

THE Crimson Blade" is the title of the fourth adventure of Yorke Norroy, the astute secret agent of the United States diplomatic service. The series as a whole bears the title "Perils of the Secret Service," and was written and produced at Universal City by George Bronson Howard, with Kingsley Benedict as the star.

Herman Von Ladenburg, ostensibly the agent of a Saxonian gun factory, had orders to supply the Filipino rebels with the munitions of war. And the man who watched him to see that he did nothing of the sort was Yorke Norrow, Secret Agent of the Department of State. Von Ladenburg was to start for Hong Kong the following day, but for some reason unknown to Norroy, he was going to stop off in Neropa, Turkey. Norroy told his confidant, Carson Huntley, that it was their business to see he stopped there permanently.

Meanwhile, Miss Cecilia Reginald, one of those American girls who declare they can take care of themselves as well as any man, had arrived in the little Turkish town of Neropa.

On that same day, Hassan Bey, the assistant Minister of War and autocrat of Neropa, saw the American girl and determined to get her at any cost. He ordered his Chief Eunuch Mesrour, to kidnap her that night.

Von Ladenburg, Norroy and Huntley arrived at the town where Norroy registered their names as Ludwig Fulda, a Saxonian, and his secretary, Hoffman. In the lobby he met the American Counsul and disclosed to him his real name and purpose.

When Von Landenburg went to see Hassan Bey the guard told him to come that evening, and though there would be a different gate-keeper then, he would leave orders for him to be admitted. Huntley, hidden nearby, heard these words with great satisfaction.

After Von Ladenburg had left, Huntley, waiting for a chance to move on without being seen, was noticed by Cecilia. She threw a note, wrapped about a hard object, to Huntley informing him who she was and that she was held a prisoner unless she consented to marry Hassan Bey.

Norroy determined to keep Von Ladenburg's appointment with Hassan Bey. He managed to get the Saxonian in a drunken stupor and hastened to the palace. There Hassan Bey, thinking Norroy was Von Ladenburg, for he had never met the man, showed him many firearms and finally brought forth a poisoned dagger, one prick of which would cause death after five minutes of indescribable agony.

Huntley, having been too anxious to wait for Norroy to finish with Von Ladenburg, had gone to the palace to rescue Cecilia and had been taken

"David's Idol Dream"

IMP Two-Reel Drama, story by Adele Farrington, scenario by Malcolm Strong and production by Walter Morton. Phantasy and reality blended in a novel way.

CAST.

Dave	Jay Belasco
Letty	Madge Kirby
Paul Steward	Rex Rosselli
Mrs. Steward	Miriam Shelby
Their daughter	Elizabeth Janes

THE dream that David has in this Imp two-reeler, written by Adele Farrington, adapted for the screen by Malcolm Strong and produced by Walter Morton, is one of the wildest phantasies ever imagined by the brain of an artist. Charlie, the big elephant of the Universal zoo, was pressed into service for the imaginative part of the picture, and performs like the veteran he is. Jay Belasco, who is supporting Kingsley Benedict in the series "Perils of the Secret Service," has the lead. The story runs like this:

Dave is a struggling young artist who has a great penchant for heathen idols and can scarcely resist the temptation of possessing every one he sees. He and Letty, who is an illustrator, are engaged, and are waiting until Dave can sell a painting upon which he has long been working. At last it is completed and he takes it to the art dealer's, who that day has had returned to him a hideous-looking idol. Paul Steward had previously purchased it, but his wife had insisted upon its erturn. While it was in the possession of the Stewards, their small daughter had amused herself with stuffing its gaping mouth with everything she could discover, including her mother's valuable string of pearls. The art dealer offers to exchange the idol for the painting and Dave happily takes it home.

Letty is angered and breaks their engagement, returning to her own room on the floor below. Dave is disconsolate and sits down to muse over his unhappiness in losing Letty. He falls asleep and has a dream in which he thinks some strange man is trying to take Letty from him. In his excitement he knocks over the idol which falls with a loud crash and the string of pearls falls from the open mouth. Letty, in her room, hears the terrible thud and hurries upstairs. The two lovers become so much engrossed with each other that they forget all about the idol.

Meantime, the loss of the pearls is discovered and the Steward chauffeur is arrested for the theft. They trace his movements and find that Steward had sent him with the idol to the art dealers. The detectives immediately deduce that the art dealer is the fence. He stoutly disclaims having the jewels. They visit Dave's apartments and there discover the jewels hanging out of the mouth of the idol. They remember that the little girl had found enjoyment in feeding the idol and the mystery is solved. Happiness comes to the lovers, for Paul gives Dave an order for several paintings.

captive by Hassan Bey just as he entered the window. The guards had taken him to the court where they had begun to torture him.

Norroy had found the note left by Huntley saying that he had gone to the palace. While the Turk's back was turned, Norroy snatched up the poisoned dagger and told the man to bring out his prisoners. Though Hassan called his guards, they were appalled at the sight of the dagger and refused to go near Norroy. When the captives were brought into the room, Norroy forced Hassan to phone the American Counsul to hasten to the palace. By use of the dagger, they all escaped from the place. The Turk, crazy with anger, ordered Mesrour to follow Norroy and either to kill him or lose his own life.

At the hotel, Mesrour, climbing through the window and mistaking Von Landenburg, who sat in a stupor at the table, for Norroy, stabbed him in the back. He was just going to kill Huntley, when Norroy entered the room, causing him to flee. Norroy, about to shoot the Turk, lets him go when Huntley says that Hassan will kill him anyway.

PRAISES "EAGLE'S WINGS."

THE employees of the Oregon Washington Railroad Navigation Company, (Union Pacific System), publish a semi-monthly magazine which in itself is a credit to the editors and the organization back of it. It is entitled the Pacific Semaphore, and deals exclusively with the activities of the O. W. R. R. and N employees' Club, and the business of the railroad. They departed in the February 17th number, however, from their usual custom, and gave "The Eagle's Wings," which showed at the Strand Theatre, in Portland, the following paragraphs of commendation:

FILM WELL WORTH SEEING

THE Semaphore is going to depart from its usual custom and give a moving picture house some free advertising. The Strand Theatre, Portland, last week showed a film called "The Eagle's Wings." It presented a patriotic appeal for preparedness, and showed a number of pictures of munition factories, enlightening the onlookers as to the manner of making the implements of warfare. President Wilson's picture was displayed, the United States Flag fluttered in the breeze and patriotic selections were rendered by the orchestra. The display of these pictures, the likeness of the president, the appearance of soldiers, the procession of battleships and the wonderfully interesting industrial scenes, were appealing.

The management of the Strand is congratulated on its production. More films of this character and fewer reels of the salacious nature that are so popular, and fewer of the so-called comedy films which are indescribably vulgar, will elevate the moving picture show. It can teach patriotism and love of country.

NAT. ASS'N. APPROVES COCHRANE PLAN

At the quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, held last Thursday, the most important matters taken up were the consideration of a letter from R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, dealing with a plan for securing the co-eporation of national advertisers, a report from the all-star Film Committee showing the wonderful potentialities in the five-reel feature which they are putting together from the films of all of the companies in the industry, and a report from John C. Petterjohn, attorney for the Exhibitors Protective Association of Indiana, who addressed the board briefly at the request of Frank J. Rembusch, and told them how Indiana secured its Sunday opening law. A committee of which Mr. R. H. Cochrane is chairman was appointed to put the plan outlined in his letter into immediate operation, and a meeting is being held this week to put the plan into operation. Mr. Cochrane was named as chairman by the committee of which the others members are Arthur Gaines, "Wid" Gunning, Fred Beecroft and Harry Reichenbach. In as much as the Association wished to lose no time in putting the plan in operation Mr. Cochrane was informed by telegraph at Universal City, Cal., where he has been for a few weeks. He wired his pleasure at the acceptance of the plain but stated that he would not be back for some time. He further suggested that Joe Brandt, General Manager of the Universal, take his place on the committee.

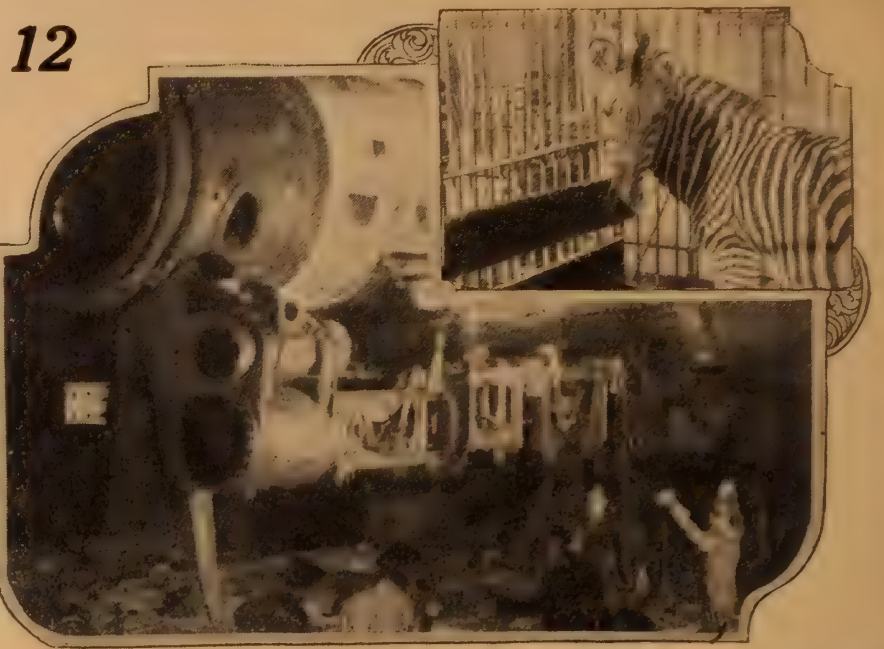
What's in No. 12 of the Screen Magazine

THE infinite variety of the Universal Screen Magazine is perhaps its outstanding characteristic. In Issue No. 12, for example, we begin with views of one of Uncle Sam's life saving stations, with the drill of the men who risk their own lives without thinking about it, just all in the day's work. From this we take a big jump to a Florida alligator farm, where hundreds of the creatures are raised for the sake of their value to bag-makers. After the alligators, we are asked to give our attention to a cooking lesson by the Screen Magazine's expert, Mrs. A. Louise Andrea. She shows us all the steps in the process of making apple snow, and it is safe to say that the women in the audience will follow her every move with riveted attention.

So far, in Issue No. 12, there has been nothing of special interest to the kiddies. But they are not to be neglected, so along comes a study of the making of unbreakable dolls. It is always fascinating to see the complicated machinery which is necessary for the making of even a simple thing, and doll heads, with their careful modeling, are anything but simple. A new secret combination of materials is used to give a substance which defies the hand of time, and can be thrown over the side of a baby buggy innumerable times, without the smallest danger of losing any of its precious features. The head comes out of the machine soft and bendable, and it is most amusing to see the workman push it into all sorts of shapes. As it cools it hardens into rigidity, and then the hair, eyes and lips are painted on by expert men.

The number finishes with a study of Joe Martin, the famous Universal ape, who poses for a bust of himself, modeled by the inventor of the mystifying Animated Sculptor, Willie Hopkins by name. Then the bust comes to life, and Joe seems perfectly delighted with it.

Varied as this number is, the others have been fully as diversified. Last week, for example, it presented pictures of the making of a locomotive, which were taken at the Baldwin works at Philadelphia, and in the same reel, studies of the animal charges of "Bill" Snyder, the famous head of the New York Central Park Zoo, who is known far and wide as a wizard with wild creatures.



MOVIES MOBILIZED FOR WAR

MOBILIZE the movies!

This is the slogan under which the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers have instituted a campaign to swing the tremendous influence of the great industry into line for patriotism and preparedness. The association comprises the publicity men of virtually all the producing companies, who, when the present national crisis arose, saw in the machinery of the moving picture activities, the most powerful and direct appeal possible, to arouse the citizens of the United States to a realization of their privileges and attendant responsibilities. The formation of a National Duty Committee followed.

Upon placing the suggestion before the executive heads of the great corporations which they represented, the publicity men were immediately given, not merely endorsement, but carte blanche to call upon any member of each of the organizations. Accordingly President Wilson has been notified of the instrument at his command.

But, most important of all, for the first time in the history of the world, a government has at its disposal a means of presenting to the most unlettered person a clear and convincing statement of the situation at an hour when the real peril is that the peril may not be understood or appreciated. The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers believe that the only danger in which the republic may find itself is the same as that which existed in England for almost two years after the great war began—apathy. The first intention, therefore, is to make every man who possibly can be reached through the moving picture, understand that this is HIS country, and if the country is forced into war, it is HIS personal war. Following are the various divisions of the campaign, as outlined:

1. MOTION PICTURES. The organization of a quick acting, easily handled, fully responsible bureau in New York City, which shall immediately prepare two feature motion pictures to be shown before twenty million people.

2. SCREEN SLIDES. The preparation of fourteen slides with proper slogans and patriotic appeal which will induce recruiting. These slides to be changed daily.

3. POSTERS. The preparation of 24-sheets, 6-sheets, 3-sheets and 1-sheets by poster artists of exceptional ability, and this art service to be voluntary. The securing of the co-operation of bill posting companies throughout the United States, so that such posters should be given the right of way over all commercial and theatrical posters.

4. NEWSPAPER AND MAGAZINE ADVERTISING. The preparation of page, half-page and quarter-page advertisements by expert advertising men. This service also to be voluntary in behalf of recruiting.

5. NEWSPAPER PUBLICITY CO-OPERATION. Immediately getting in touch with the editors of the newspapers in the United States and arranging for the publication on notice of material.

CANADIAN NOTES.

TORONTO, Ont.—Camp Borden will open in about three weeks, and the two theatres in the camp, The Strand and the Kitchener, will open about April 10. Manager Marvin of the Strand is already contracting for the best features on the market for this theatre. The Camp will be larger than last year and the largest aviation school in the world will be situated within the grounds. There will be over two thousand aviators in the school by the first of May.

There was a meeting of the Theatre Owners' Association of Ottawa on Sunday, February 25th, at which all owners were present except Mr. Carling of the Flower and Mr. Clancy of the Dominion. A great number of subjects of material importance were discussed and immediate action will be taken to effect certain reductions in the overhead.

Ottawa, Ont.—On February 17th the Francais Theatre, Ottawa, closed its doors on account of a disagreement between Harry Brouse, the tenant, and Patrick Labelle, the landlord.

The Francais reopened March 8th, with pictures and stock burlesque.

Ken Finley is at the head of the new management and was in Montreal last week buying some new scenery for the house. Finley was previously managing the house and has many friends in the Capital City.

Toronto, Ont.—The Universal Company is offering to the exhibitors of Ontario a five-reel Red Feather Feature consisting of a three-reel Social Drama and a two-reel Western story. It is reported, however, that as the three-reel part of the feature has been condemned, the Ontario Exhibitors may not have an opportunity of judging the value of this new idea.

Toronto, Ont.—A delegation of the Executive of the Ontario Exhibitors' Association met with the Exchangemen at the meeting rooms of the Exchangemen's Association during the past week and discussed the matter of film deposits. The matter was thoroughly discussed and it was finally decided that the Exchangemen should take it up in their own meeting and act upon the resolutions which have been presented to them by the Exhibitors. This get-together spirit, which is a direct result of the organization methods employed very shortly and which resulted in the formation of the present Association of Exhibitors, has already had its effect in eliminating much ill-feeling and misunderstanding between the two sections of the business in Ontario. A meeting of the Exchangemen is called for Wednesday, March 14th.

The film business in Toronto has suffered two nasty little fires during the past week, one being on March 14th at the Mutual Office, where fortunately very little damage was done, and the other one at the Red Mill Theatre on Yonge Street, during which several reels of films were destroyed, the operator injured slightly in one of the fires. The damage in both cases, owing to efficient fire protection, was very slight.

One of the evening papers in Toronto came out with the interesting statement that the Orange Order in Ontario intended to protest to the Ontario Legislature against the practically exclusive featuring of Roman Catholic Priests in films. It was pointed out that very rarely was a minister of any denomination used in the moving picture, and they felt this was unfair to the Protestant people. Ontario is a very strong Orange section and, in fact, it is claimed that the Orange party practically controls political movements in this section in contrast to the influence of the Roman Catholic party in the province of Quebec.

The Rialto Theatre of this city, one of our leading picture houses, announces a new change of policy whereby they will present an up-to-date musical comedy in conjunction with the pictures, and Mr. Johnston, the manager, is very optimistic over the outcome of same. They will run the Red Feather brand on the leading days of the week, namely, Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. J. Lanthier of the Empire Theatre, Quebec City, was a visitor to the Universal Exchange at Montreal and has booked Universal Service for his house owing to an exorbitant demand for same from his patrons.

Mr. Harry Becker, Bluebird representative for the Quebec District, has just returned from an extensive trip through this territory and has booked his features in the leading houses throughout the Province.

The UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE

The man who won't listen to the straightest tip he ever got in his life—BOOK THE UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE—either doesn't care to make money or else he has so much business he doesn't want any more.

To the latter we make no appeal—to the former we haven't anything to say—BUT—to the Exhibitor who is in dead earnest about his business, who wants to fill up the dead days and dull spots and empty seats during certain parts of the week, we say direct, loud and clear—BOOK THE UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE. It gives your people what they want to see—what they have never seen before—what they will continue to clamor for once you give them a taste of it. The U. Screen Magazine was intended for issue twice a month. Now it's issued once a week. POPULARITY (based on what it has been and is pulling for Exhibitors) has made this necessary. AGAIN—our straight tip to you—BOOK THE UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

From Citrus Grove to Gold Mine

By GRATER SAYLES.

THE industry is still full of exhibitors who regard success as a mere matter of luck. While in a Universal exchange the other day, the writer overheard two theatre owners discussing the success achieved by a third exhibitor who had purchased a house long regarded as a ripe, juicy lemon.

"He's got wonderful luck!" one of the men enviously declared. "That lemon he bought broke half a dozen men before he took hold of it. Yet he steps in and in six months makes it the best paying proposition in the neighborhood. Why, if you or I had bought that house we'd have lost our shirts!"

Investigation has revealed, however, that brains plus plenty of perspiration—and not luck—have converted the lemon grove to a gold mine.

The present owner of the house in question is a man who doesn't believe in allowing his wishbone to take the place of his backbone. Instead of wishfully waiting for business to come to him, as the previous owners had done, this exhibitor went after patronage in a sturdy, two-fisted fashion that simply couldn't fail to prove resultful.

Generally speaking, exhibitors may be divided into three classes. The first is made up of men who believe in advertising and who know how to advertise; the second consists of men who, while they believe in advertising, don't know how to advertise efficiency; the third class embraces those exhibitors who think advertising, with the possible exception of posters and slides, a sheer waste of good money.

The exhibitor referred to belongs to the first class. His mailing list contains upwards of a thousand live names—the utmost care being taken to weed out the names of those people who move out of the community.

His house organ, while by no means elaborate, is nevertheless more than a mere jumble of type crudely thrown together, and the advertisements regularly inserted in the community paper are attention-attracting, readable and interesting.

When the news that he was considering purchasing the dead theatre spread about, there were friends a-plenty who urged him not to sink his money into a dead sure loser. Convinced, however, that the real reason for its inability to make money for previous owners was nothing more or less than poor showmanship, the exhibitor took the old house over.

The first step taken by the new owner after the theatre had been thoroughly renovated was the staging of a housewarming party. For a week before the event took place, the neighborhood was literally snowed under with circulars, letters, posters, etc., inviting everybody to attend.

No admission was charged. People who entered the house on the night of the party found it specially and tastefully decorated for the occasion. Furthermore, as each person passed through the doors, he or she was handed a numbered coupon and the purpose of this coupon was revealed when, later in the evening, a drawing was held and twenty people who held lucky numbers were presented with passes good for five free admissions.

Although a regular picture entertainment was presented, the affair was an informal one. Careful canvassing resulted in information which revealed the identity of many people in the audience who could sing or recite. These people were urged to step forward and contribute to the gayety of the house-warming party.

That the affair was a tremendous success was revealed when the exhibitor and his wife personally visited the people living in the neighborhood. This tour was made with the idea of enabling the owner of the newly opened house to get acquainted with possible patrons. Where it was found that the people visited were patrons of opposition houses, free passes were presented in an effort to get them to visit the new theatre.

In the course of her tour of the community, the exhibitor's wife discovered that a Mother's Club was meeting in the homes of the members for want of a regular meeting-room. The woman promptly suggested that the club meet at the theatre. The house was offered rent free, upon condition that the meetings be held during the morning hours. This offer was enthusiastically received.

Upon learning what his wife had done, the exhibitor went her one better. When the members of the Mother's Club assembled at the theatre several days later, they were shown a film dealing with the better babies movement. Although the cost of renting and projecting this film amounted to several dollars, the theatre owner figured that the resultant good will and advertising were more than worth the price.

The success of the first meeting at his house gave the owner an idea. When the Mother's Club next assembled, he suggested that the organization hold a Baby Show at the theatre. This suggestion was approved and the Board of Health was induced to send a representative who, with one of the neighborhood physicians, acted as judges.

This and similar showmanlike stunts soon enabled this exhibitor to achieve the result he had in view—the establishing of his theatre as the community's social center. His readiness to further every worthy movement won for the house a host of loyal friends—friends who gave him the word-of-mouth advertising money couldn't buy.

Knowing that his ultimate success absolutely depended upon the manner in which he succeeded in pleasing the average fan, this showman ballotted his patrons in an effort to ascertain their film likes and dislikes.

Now, the five reel feature had figured prominently in the performances presented at the erstwhile lemon from the day the present owner opened it. To his surprise, he discovered that many of the ballots revealed a demand for the diversified show consisting of 1, 2 and 3-reel subjects.

Fearing to change his policy merely because one voting contest favored the short subject show, the exhibitor held two more contests. As the result of the facts brought to light, he promptly made arrangements to present a short subject show on alternate days. This enabled him to please the lovers of short subjects and those people who expressed a preference for the five-reelers.

From the very start, cheerfulness, courtesy and clealiness have been this showman's watchwords. An usher who got into an argument with a patron was promptly discharged. The man who succeeded him was warned of the fate that overtook the discourteous employe.

When the cashier turned up with eyes red and swollen one morning the exhibitor learned that an ulcerated tooth had caused her a bad night. He promptly sent her to a dentist and took her place in the box office. This because he felt that he couldn't afford to have any but smiling employees in and about the theatre.

Before the house is opened for the day, the owner's wife makes a personal inspection to make sure that the porter has done his work thoroughly. Everything that could possibly insure perfect ventilation has

ARMSTRONG IN DENVER.

THE Universal Film Exchange of Denver is now in charge of Edward Arsmtrong, who was formerly located in Salt Lake City as manager of the exchange there. Though his office is in Denver, Mr. Armstrong now has charge of the Salt Lake City and Butte, Mnt., exchanges as well.

Mr. Armstrong has always proven himself conscientious and efficient, and a live wire exchangeman. Leave it to Mr. Hoffman, general manager of Exchanges, to pick the live ones for promotion.

D. O. REESE

Now Manager Kansas City Exchange

R. C. CROPPER has resigned his position as manager of the Universal Film & Supply Company of Kansas City to go into other work. D. O. Reese, formerly assistant manager of the exchange, has been appointed manager to succeed Mr. Cropper, and is now in full and complete charge of the Kansas City Universal office. Mr. Cropper, as a letter to the exhibitors in the territory indicated, left the office which he has successfully held for three and a half years with regret, and wished his successor all of the support and co-operation which the Kansas City territory had accorded him.

FROM CITRUS TO GOLD MINE.

been given careful attention and so the patrons are not attacked with the sleepy, drowsy feeling that overcomes the patron after an hour or so in some moving picture theatres.

Analyze this showman's experience as the owner of the lemon house and it will be readily seen that the element of luck, after all, had nothing to do with the success that has come to him. Had this man placed his chief reliance in his wishbone instead of using the brains God gave him, there isn't the slightest doubt but that another man would have dropped his bank roll and another black mark would have been chalked up against the house.

What this exhibitor has accomplished, any exhibitor can accomplish. If you own a ripe, juicy lime, try making it and yourself factors in your community and see how quickly the citrus warehouse becomes a gold mine.

A TRUE INCIDENT.

It Happened in Racine and is a Strong Proof of the Drawing Power of "Liberty."

A SMALL boy accosted the manager of the Strand Theatre at Racine, Wis., and asked him for a nickel. When the Strand manager asked the boy why he wanted the nickel, the boy stated that he wanted to see "Liberty," which was being shown that day at the Bijou Theatre. The manager then suggested instead of giving the boy a nickel that he come into the Strand and see the show there gratis. The boy absolutely refused to accept this invitation, and the Strand manager thereupon handed him a nickel so that he could see "Liberty" at the Bijou, and gave him a note addressed to Mr. Owen McKivett, manager of the Bijou, which reads as follows:

"Dear Mac—Not only do you take all my patrons to see 'Liberty,' but I also have to slip them the change. It makes me pretty mad. When you get filled up, open the tunnel. I will need them. Yours cordially,

"BERT HALL,
"Strand Theatre."

No wonder, after booking this serial, that the management of the Bijou Theatre adopted the slogan, "Where they tickle a nickel to make it act like a dime."

Without any noise—shouting—loud acclaim—we say to you, BOOK "THE PURPLE MASK" and get the two greatest serial stars on earth—Francis Ford and Grace Cunard—to keep your house playing capacity. Cunard and Ford are magic names. Don't kid yourself. You know it, so do thousands of shrewd Exhibitors. Cunard and Ford in "The Purple Mask" are getting the kale for Exhibitors all over the world. Don't overlook this winner, and BOOK NOW if you can get it in your territory. Any of the 73 Universal Exchanges will send you a complete Ad Campaign book and other dope. Tomorrow never comes. TODAY is the day to do business. Do IT.

"THE GIFT GIRL."

easily discern that she was perfectly ignorant of occidental life and customes. He made arrangements for her to live in the apartment opposite his, and in spite of the insinuations of the landlady and his many college friends, the boy remained a true friend to the girl, appreciating her innocence and worth.

Meanwhile Malec had arrived in the city and had gone to an Asiatic boarding-house, where he heard of Rokaia from the Persian vendor, who was pompously telling of his meeting with her. Learning from him her address, Malec hastened to the house and warned the girl that she must go with him. Although against her will, she did as he directed, for she unconsciouslv feared him.

As they were leaving the house, a student saw them and told Marcel. He thought it a joke until he went to her rooms and found them empty. An expressman came to the house for Rokaia's trunk and from him, they learned the address of Malec. A number of students with Marcel jumped into a taxi and rushed to the place. The Marquis and D'Eglantine who were visiting Marcel, also decided to get Rokaia, for Marcel had hotly asserted that he intended to marry her.

Though the students fought desperately with Malec and the other Asiatics at the boarding-house, they were defeated. The police being called, the students were led away to jail. But when the Marquis came to the house, and in his grand manner asked for Rokaia, the Asiatics and even Malec came near salaaming to him, and allowed Rokaia to depart.

When Rokaia saw the bloody and bruised condition of Marcel, she was deeply concerned and looked for her handkerchief to wipe away the stains, but finding none, she searched Marcel's pockets for his and with stern contenance remarked, "You've lost your handkerchief."

THRILLS IN "THE BRONZE BRIDE."

some of her strongest scenes with Frankie Lee, who plays her little son, and who has a conception of realism in acting for the screen, which is painfully true to life. Painfully true, that is, for Miss McDowell. Little Frankie is torn away from his Indian mother by his white father, and misses her very much. At the end of the picture she is restored to him, but she is wearing the garb of civilization and he does not recognize her. At last he takes out the stuffed rabbit which has been his favorite toy, and this leads him to realize that the strange woman is really his mother. Then he throws his arms around her neck and hugs her.

"Hug her tight!" cried Director McRae. "That's right. Eat her up! Bite her ear!"

Frankie literally obeyed, and poor Miss McDowell gave a shriek of pain. Fortunately shrieks do not register on the screen, and McRae assured her that great realism had been added to the picture, and that is always supposed to console a picture actress for any amount of bodily suffering.

NESTORS SHOCK VISITORS

tlsnake Ike," and Lee as the sheriff, who has to shoot one of the boys occasionally, just to maintain order. Out of this combination, they extract one thousand feet of pure humor, which is a guaranteed cure for the blues.

This last week the Nestors have been working on another excellent story which is called "The Home Wreckers." Lee Moran gives another of his justly celebrated female impersonations in this, and an incident of the picture's making, nearly caused some perfectly good visitors to Universal City, to expire from shock. They saw Lee, dressed up in the latest Parisian finery, stroll off the set and casually light a cigarette. Coming from the section of the country which believes that smoking is a strictly masculine prerogative, the visitors were horrified. But when they heard the "lady" shout to his partner, they realized that they were looking at a mere male, and the day was saved.

Let's Get Down to Cases Mr. Exhibitor

We take it for granted that you're wise enough to understand what an Animated Weekly means to your business. We believe you know that thousands of people come to your Theatre, particularly to see a Weekly in pictures. If you don't understand it—WAKE UP—RISE—SHAKE YOURSELF—COME OUT OF YOUR STUPOR—GET "HEP" TO YOURSELF. Ask your patrons by means of a slide if they want to see an Animated Weekly. Give your people what they want if you hope to stay in the picture business. If you don't it's a thousand to one cinch your nearest competitor will.

The UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY is shown every week in the year at the STRAND and at the RIALTO Theatres on Broadway, New York City. If the U. Animated is good enough for these two (America's first and foremost moving picture theatres) it is good enough for any house in the world. The Strand and the Rialto don't use the U. Animated just because they love to pay the film bills, not by a long shot. They use the U. Animated because it's a money bringer, a crowd getter and a profit payer. All this you can very easily get for yourself by booking the Universal Animated Weekly thru any of the 73 Universal Exchanges or direct thru the Does Every Music Cue Sheet Help the Musician?

By M. Winkler

I FIRMLY believe that every musician, or rather every leader playing for pictures, is capable of compiling a perfect musical Cue Sheet providing a chance is given him to review the picture at least one day ahead of the opening performance.

Such Cue Sheets compiled and adopted by a musician are of use only to himself, but absolutely not good for publication; by this I mean to be reprinted in different newspapers or on press sheets issued by the different film companies and to serve as a guide and aid to all those musicians whose theatres are booking that certain film production.

This is quite a risky statement, but I will kindly ask the readers of these columns to read the following lines, which, in my estimation, will sufficiently prove and convince that my statement is logically correct. Two days ago I received a Cue Sheet from a film company located in Chicago, together with the respective film it was intended for with the advice to hand this Music Sheet to my orchestra leader and impress it upon him to use same, as it practically was the solution of the musical problem as far as this film was concerned, but a careful study of this Cue Sheet convinced me of the fact that it is far from being so. First of all, 50% of the numbers suggested in this Cue Sheet were only published for piano or organ, but not published nor obtainable for orchestra. This fact leads to the remark that the "she" or "he" who made up this Cue Sheet is only a pianist or organist without any orchestra experience. In case of this person being an orchestra musician the very same condition would prevail. This means that the suggested music would be obtainable for orchestra only and not for piano or organ. This factor, on the first sight decreases the value of such Cue Sheets at least 50%, and if exactly figured it means "half work" or "half done," and this is just as much as nothing, as it only confuses the musician instead of being of any assistance to him. Now is the question, what kind of an individual do we really need to be able to make a perfect Cue Sheet, a Cue Sheet consisting of music compositions obtainable for piano, organ and every possible orchestra combination? This question is easily answered. The man or woman doing such work must not only be a musician of merit with long years of experience, but also a man in the music business.

He must at least have several years of experience in a large music house selling every one's editions and handling an international stock. Our Cue Sheets printed in these columns consist of numbers which can be bought everywhere and are obtainable and playable for any orchestra combination or single instrument within reasons; by this I mean piano-organ or any orchestra combination. It is about time that film companies realize these facts as outlined in the above and see to it that their Music Cue Sheets be compiled by men who are not only musicians, but also men with experience in the music business.

A perfect Cue Sheet must also not only give the title of the composition, but also clearly specify the character of the Musical Numbers suggested. (Example—After Sunset 4/4 Moderato) by Pryor, etc., so as to enable the musician to substitute with a number of a similar kind if he does not possess the one mentioned.

How a live wire exhibitor took advantage of a Fair.

HOW A LIVE WIRE EXHIBITOR TOOK ADVANTAGE OF A FAIR.

MR. ALFRED S. BLACK owns a large number of theatres throughout Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine. In Rockland, Me., there was a food fair held recently, and Mr. Black, who is a live wire and participates in everything which is of interest to his public, decorated a booth for display, and had a Universal day. The New England Universal Film Exchange of Boston, where he obtains all of his first-class pictures, aided him with photographs, souvenirs, and advertising matter, and the result was that the Universal booth proved the most attractive booth at the fair. The accompanying photograph will prove it.

"LIBERTY" ALWAYS CAPACITY.

Laemmle Film Service,

Gentlemen—Despite the severe cold weather that we have experienced throughout this winter, "Liberty" always played to capacity houses both at Ladysmith and at Phillips, Wis. It surely is a winner.

Yours truly,

RECORD BREAKING BUSINESS.

Central Film Service,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Gentlemen—I feel that it is about time for me to "'fess up" in regard to serial pictures. I must say that I have been most agreeably surprised with the results obtained from the use of "The Purple Mask." It has certainly exceeded my utmost expectations in every respect, and the interest seems to be growing with each episode, until I feel certain of a record breaking business throughout the entire sixteen weeks.

This in spite of the fact that I am playing it on the poorest night of the week, and owing to the fact that heretofore I had very little faith in the business getting power of continued pictures, I gave it very little publicity in the start.

You may rest assured that I shall rely on a serial to take care of my Monday night business from now on, as this seems to be the only sure method of getting the people out on that night.

Very truly yours,
C. D. HILL,

HAVE HOPPED ENOUGH.

Universal Film Co.,
Spokane, Wash.

Dear Sir—I thought it would do no harm to drop you a note and let you know we appreciate the Universal service you are furnishing us. We have hopped around enough with different film companies and we find your service fills all requirements.

We have run a lot of serials and must say that "Liberty" is the most satisfactory. I have even seen the kids go wild over it every night and the grown ups are just as crazy about it. It is the only serial I have never had a complaint on. Every number is A No. 1, and it has held every patron right through.

Also wish to compliment you on the Animated Weekly and the Screen Magazine. The Screen Magazine is a great addition to any program, and I would back the Weekly against any put out.

Yours for success,
PETE C. CARTER,

IT'S A BEAR.

Universal Film & Supply Co.,
Spokane, Wash.

Gentlemen—"Liberty" is by far the best serial I ever ran and I can get scores of my patrons to swear by it. In fact my patrons are sorry it has come to a close. I would earnestly urge any exhibitor that is thinking of running a serial to grab this one, for it is honestly a bear, and can't help but fill any house, no matter where located.

Very truly yours,

REBOOKING "LIBERTY" SERIAL.

Universal Film Exchange,
New York City.

Gentlemen—As a thoroughly satisfied exhibitor and greatly elated at my recent success with your "Liberty" serial, my anxiety to express my high esteem for same has prompted me to send you this note.

I desire to compliment the members of the Universal Film Company, through yourself, upon their wonderful forethought in releasing to exhibitors an unparalleled serial like "Liberty," which has, in my case especially, drawn the largest Tuesday night crowds my theatre has ever had the pleasure of accommodating.

It is almost impossible to believe that a theatre just showing the "Liberty" serial, without a feature, would draw such a tremendous crowd, but that is the case with us and in addition, we can boast that Tuesday night has become our best night instead of our worst, as formerly simply through the use of this wonderful serial attraction, "Liberty."

As you most likely know, I have rebooked "Liberty" to begin Friday, February 16th. Long live "Liberty."

Very truly yours,
WM. RICH,
Mgr. 16th St. Theatre.
Brooklyn, N. Y.

BEST EVER.

Universal Film Exchange,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen—In regard to yesterday's feature, "It Happened in Honolulu," I will say it is one of the best pictures I have ever seen. Not only yesterday's feature, but all our Red Feathers are up to the Universal standard.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH THIBODEAU,
Prop. Lyric Theatre.

OFFERS PLEASING VARIETY.

Consolidated Film & Supply Co.,
El Paso, Texas.

Dear Sir — I take pleasure in vouching for the drawing power of "The Purple Mask," which I am now running at the Wigwam. This is the first straight serial, with one exception, that I have run since the days of "Kathlyn," and I am more than pleased with the results.

The picture is filled with thrilling situations and the sets are most elaborate and classy. With its scenes in high society and in the underworld of Paris it offers a variety that should please every class of society.

Yours very truly,
WILL R. WINCH,
Mgr. Wigwam Theatre.
El Paso, Texas.

HE'S RIGHT.

Mr. Carl Laemmle, Pres.,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City.

Dear Sir—By accident I picked up the February issue of the Moving Picture Weekly and noticed your "Talk No. 162." I have been waiting for the big firms to realize that the "features" are being pushed too hard.

I am one of those who miss the old "short ones," and was a real fan at the time, but now seldom drop into a theatre. Always a long one or a series, and they get tiresome.

The peculiar part of the whole thing is that in the hotel last night, an argument started and finished up, indicating you are right, at least from the viewpoint of a few of us.

Yours truly,
LIN GARDNER.
Newton, Iowa.

HAS USED UNIVERSAL SERVICE FOR FOUR YEARS.

ONE of the most prominent and prosperous exhibitors of motion pictures along one of the most thickly populated thoroughfares of New York, one which is illuminated at night like Broadway by the flashing signs of its hundreds of moving picture theatres, is Maurice Seidlitz, manager of both the Grant and Empress Theatres on 116th Street. Mr. Seidlitz expresses in his letter below his opinion of the great Universal program, but his actions are even more convincing than his words, for in the four years during which the Universal program has been in existence Mr. Seidlitz has never discontinued for one day the constant use and exhibition of that program, and from one end of 116th Street to the other the success of the Grant and Empress Theatres is well-known. Here is a letter from Mr. Seidlitz.

Maurice Seidlitz, Manager of the Grant Theatre.

Gentlemen—Having played all releases of the Universal Program for the last four years, I want to congratulate you upon your good judgment and the live wire methods your concern uses to benefit the theatres that use your service.

While the program has invariably been good, it continues to improve. I am glad to say that I have been building up a clientele of steady patrons.

I am writing this without solicitation and only out of thanks for your co-operation. Trusting that your service will be as good in the future as it has been in the past. I remain,

Yours very truly,

STUNTS
for
"The Voice on the Wire"

THESE stunts have been carried in the Weekly for the last three weeks and have made a fine opening for wide-awake Exhibitors to introduce the new serial in a clever manner. They and others are carried in The Serial Campaign Book. Get one from your Exchange. Ed.

Stunt No. 3—

In plenty of time, say a week or ten days before your serial is announced openly—arrange to stop between your pictures during your performance and have a telephone bell ring in the Theatre. Try and have this telephone bell located right in the main section of the house and then during the interval between pictures during your performance when the bell rings, have some one in your employ shout out loud —(as though replying to some one on the other end of the line)—"Yes, this is the Voice on the Wire." Have this repeated say twice or three times every night and always do it between the showing of pictures when the house is quiet. Your employee should call out loud—good and clear so everybody will hear the strange reply of, "YES, THIS IS THE VOICE ON THE WIRE." This will arouse a lot of comment among your patrons. After you have openly announced or advertised the serial in ads, etc., you can continue the same stunt—but then have your employee call out, "YES, THIS IS THE THEATRE THAT WILL SHOW THAT WONDERFUL MYSTERY SERIAL 'THE VOICE ON THE WIRE.'" That's all he should say. In order to get the entire attention of all the people in the house, your employee can begin his conversation in a loud tone thus: "YES—Yes—yes—I hear you—Yes—This is the Voice on the Wire," etc. Thus by shouting Yes—Yes—Yes, etc., loudly, he will attract the attention of every one in the house and prepare them for the remainder of the message which is as stated: "This is the Voice on the Wire." This is a crackerjack of a stunt and one that will arouse a whale of a lot of comment, gossip, etc., etc.

Stunt No. 4—

Dress up a man with a large black shawl covering the upper part of his body and completely covering his head. Leave the right arm bare and have the rest of his body (the entire upper part) covered with this black shawl, head and all. Then send him out to walk the streets, all day long with no sign or anything by which he can be identified with your serial to be shown at your Theatre. This blanketed figure will cause a tremendous amount of wonderment and speculation as to who he is and what this crazy nut can be doing. The more streets he covers the bigger the results. Have this man continue his walks everywhere for at least 3 or 4 days before you openly announce your serial in your theatre or in advertising in the newspapers. Then after you have announced it—paint on the shawl the words—"I am .... in that great Universal Serial 'THE VOICE ON THE WIRE' at the —————— Theatre," and let him cover the same streets that he covered while wearing the black shawl unpainted. This is a cheap stunt and a crackerjack one. Your newspapers will run editorials on it if you talk this stunt over with your newspaper men. Perhaps your man might be arrested.

If you can have him arrested, you can get a tremendous amount of free advertising in the newspapers by special beforehand arrangement with the newspaper men. If your man is to be arrested by arrangement with the police, have him make a bluff fight to attract a crowd, thus enabling in the write ups to allow the newspaper men to make a startling affair out of it.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

WITH the launching of that splendid serial of mystery—"The Voice on the Wire"—comes the recollection of the marvellously successful string of Universal Serials that have appeared for the benefit of Exhibitors at regular intervals during the past two years and a half.

Applying these recollections to the purpose of this page we are reminded of what seems to be the unanimous opinion of thousands of Exhibitors who have made money on these multi-reel releases.

The opinion, phrased in a thousand ways, reaching us by phone, by wire, by letter, by personal talks, through the men in the 73 Universal Exchanges, may be boiled down to the following:

> "If you want to put over a good, strong serial like those the Universal produces, boost hard for ten days or two weeks before showing the first episode, and get them in. After that a weekly reminder will keep them coming."

That is why the Universal prepares such elaborate campaign books for all serials. That is why stunts galore are always suggested in detail in these books. That is why you will find on page 44 of this issue "STUNTS" for the greatest serial ever filmed—"The Voice on the Wire."

Now is the time to get busy. Not only with the stunts, but with the novelties, heralds, banners, slides, ready prepared ads and publicity matter. There is a wealth of material awaiting your selection. When you get down to brass tacks and consider this as a business proposition—as a paying investment and not a speculative expense—then, you, too, will be writing us letters, and their inspiration will be packed houses and increased net profits.

EVERY day is not serial day, so here are some suggestions for the others. The Red Feather for April 2d is called "The Bronze Bride," and features Claire McDowell in the role of an Indian woman, with Eddie Polo as her brother. Indian stunts are always effective, and the costume is easy to procure. The employees around your house may wear them, or you may have two standing outside the theatre. Have a street stunt, if you like, consisting of a Red Man's moving day. A horse with the two shaft-like poles dragging behind him, and a big bundle fastened to them. An Indian brave leading the horse, and a squaw following, holding a little boy in native dress, by one hand. Let the people know that Eddie Polo will perform some of his most startling feats of strength in this fine Red Feather, by means of slide announcements, run several days before. You may have a lobby decoration of wigwam and evergreen boughs to suggest the North Woods, where the scene of the picture is laid, if you like.

AN incident of the remarkable Victor comedy which is set for April 5th and called "Somebody Lied," is the chase by a man in Pierrot costume of an automobile, in which sits a beautiful masked lady. The comedy is a wonder, and is acted by Priscilla Dean and Harry Carter under the expert direction of Ben Wilson, who is at present starring in "The Voice on the Wire." You might stage this stunt as an ad for the picture.

ADVENTURE No. 5 of the series "Perils of the Secret Service," which was written and produced by George Bronson Howard, is called "The Man in the Trunk," and it is the best yet. Kingsley Benedict, as Yorke Norroy, rescues his friend by disguising himself as the Mexican Governor. Chloroforming the Governor, he hides him in a trunk, in which he is shipped across the border. You can create a good deal of excitement if you do something like this. Have two express men come out of your theatre carrying a trunk, which they load onto a wagon or truck. Have them climb up on the driver's seat, and drive slowly off. Then have the trunk lid slowly open, and the man inside climb cautiously out. He may then begin to distribute throwaways announcing the picture.

NOT every town is fortunate enough to have a zoo. But when the Powers Educational for April 5th is released, the zoo will be brought to every town. It is called "Hagenbeck's Wild Animals" and every child in the place should be given an opportunity to see it, for the views of elephants, giraffes, camels, kangaroos, lions and tigers, are simply wonderful. Notice should be sent to the schools and made through slides and posters in advance. Use your mailing list to let the people know that "The zoo has come to ——— (the name of your town) and installed itself for one day only at ——— (the name of your theatre)." You ought to round up every kid in the place on this, to say nothing of the grown-ups.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Three Weeks from This Week

"The Bronze Bride." With Claire McDowell, Eddie Polo and Charles Mailes. Sixty-second Red Feather Production. Released April 2. Directed by Henry McRae. The peculiar genius of Director McRae is well illustrated in this absorbingly human story. No other director knows so well how to get thrills and punches in his stories and pictures, and at the same time keep his characters alive, human and likable. The story is that of a disinherited son, who wanders into the far North, and because of his friendliness to a pretty Indian girl, is compelled by her tribe to marry her. Years pass and their little son is four years old, when a letter from his heart-broken father leads the boy to take his son and return East, leaving the Indian mother to mourn in loneliness. The scene changes to the East, where, with characteristic force, Director McRae gives you the punch climax which has made his pictures so popular. A distinctly worth while picture that will more than ever make your fans eager to see Red Feathers.

"The Magpie." With Tina Marshall. Directed by Edwin Stevens. Three-Reel Gold Seal Underworld Drama. Released April 3. Think of it, you men who are looking for "good stuff." A star like Tina Marshall, who was Edwin Stevens' leading woman on Broadway when he was the talk of the town. A picture directed by Edwin Stevens himself. A tremendous figure in the theatrical world, Mr. Stevens has directed some remarkable five-reel features, but this is one of his first essays in the short reel field. The result is five reels boiled down to three, with some of the most surprising punches you ever saw in your life. Tina has the misfortune to look like "the Magpie," a notorious woman pickpocket, and how their fortunes are interwoven, together with some clever detective work, make a three-reel picture that, for surprise, suspense and punch has rarely been equalled.

"The Star Witness." With Lee Hill, Lena Baskette and Elizabeth Janes. Laemmle Two-Reel Heart Interest Drama. Released April 4. They didn't give Lee a full size star to play opposite him in this picture, so to make up for it they substituted two of the cleverest children in the world. Elizabeth and Lena win your sympathy from the start, and after Lee, a shipping clerk, falsely accused of theft, is placed on trial, his little daughter, Elizabeth, plays the "star witness" in a manner most unexpected by those who have the privilege of seeing this wonderful two reels of human-interest. Here is a picture that you can boost and boost hard. Do it. It will get you lots of business.

"Somebody Lied." With Harry Carter and Priscilla Dean. Two-Reel Victor Marital Drama. Directed by Ben Wilson. Again a smash for the big Universal Program. Just as though Ben Wilson wasn't busy enough playing the lead in that marvelous serial, "The Voice on the Wire," here he hands us a two-reeler of the utmost originality and big enough, with surprises enough, to crowd a five-reeler to the limit. Harry is supposed by Priscilla to be an angel. She goes to a ball, leaving him to his books. As soon as she is gone Harry hies himself to a gambling place. It is raided, and to escape, Harry changes clothes with a friend who has been to the masquerade ball, where he had flirted with Priscilla. Harry sneaks home, and is discovered by the startled Priscilla, who, from his costume, thinks he is the man she flirted with. Just how these two "in wrong" people settled their affair is a corking climax to a splendid picture. It will stand a lot of boosting.

The Eagle's Wings

Thrilling Patriotic Timely

With An Irresistible Appeal To Every American Man, Woman & Child

Based on a nation wide theme; thrilling with situations that warm the heart, excite the truest emotions and command the closest attention and ultimate approval, "The Eagle's Wings" is the sensation of the season.

Now, when the country is aflame with patriotic fervor—now, when all eyes are on the war shadow that hovers over the land—this tremendous picture is easily the most timely and appealing subject ever released.

A BLUEBIRD Extraordinary

IMPORTANT: Fifteen hundred Chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution have arranged through their National President, Mrs. William Cumming Story, to give this remarkable picture their heartiest support wherever shown. This is an opportunity for you, Mr. Exhibitor, that may never occur again. Early application for booking reservations is most urgently suggested. AS FOR YOU MR. EXHIBITOR

If you understand the difference between a weak, wishy-washy serial, and a great big overwhelming success, with enthusiastic crowds and money pouring in at every episode, you won't hem or haw or hesitate, but you will book

LIBERTY

We haven't the space in this advertisement to publish 100th part of the congratulatory and complimentary letters and good wishes we have received from Exhibitors who have shown "LIBERTY." In one town, Mr. Exhibitor—in one town of less than 40,000 people, five theatres showed "LIBERTY," two of the five showed it TWICE and each time got the big money. What serial do you know of or ever heard of that played five theatres in a town of 40,000 with two repeaters and with big profits to each house INCLUDING the repeaters?

This is "case hardened talk"—in other words, what we tell you here is FACT. We don't care a whoop what serials you've shown, we will put "LIBERTY" up against any serial your house ever exhibited and guarantee to snow any other serial under. "LIBERTY" hits you now when the entire country is clamoring for patriotic serials. Now, while the possibility of war confronts our country, you can do a double duty. You can arouse and inspire your community and pack your coffers as well by giving the finest serial entertainment your house ever played. Send for the big ad campaign book to any of the 73 Universal Exchanges. Do it today, or communicate direct with the Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

AS week after week passes with a constant stream of suggestions for stunts appearing on this page, we are more than ever convinced that Exhibitors should find this the most helpful page in the Moving Picture Weekly—with one exception.

If you are not in the habit of looking at the advertising page of the Universal Program, or if you are not in the habit of reading the page headed "Blue Ribbon Advance Notices," then you are missing a marvelous opportunity.

There is no denying the fact that the Universal Program Service is the greatest on earth. There are thousands of successful Exhibitors who give the Universal Program all credit for their prosperity. But there are others who, through mental laziness, will not take the trouble to keep informed regarding the service that may be secured through open bookings.

If you will make it a rule to read the pages mentioned above you will be in possession of facts that will enable you to choose your program pictures more intelligently, and you will also be making your selection from the best releases in the world.

Keep informed as to what is on the market. That is just as much a part of your business as it is to take in money at your box office. When you become thoroughly in touch with all the specials, programs, etc., available for your bookings you will learn that the Universal Program exceeds in both quantity and quality all its competition combined. Then you will be in a position to choose wisely and to put over a splendid entertainment for your patrons.

THE Red Feather for April 9th is called "Mr. Dolan of New York," and concerns the adventures of an engaging young fighter, played by Jack Mulhall, who takes advantage of the craze for American boxing in Paris, to try his fortunes in the French capital. Later he goes to a mythical principality and falls in love with the king's ward, getting in solid with his small and stout Majesty, by curing his indigestion with exercise. The way you advertise this comedy-drama, depends upon the spirit of your community. If your people are interested in sport, play up this end of it. Announce the picture as you would a sporting event. Have your lobby arranged to suggest a gymnasium or training quarters. Have two men in running clothes—spiked shoes, sweaters, runnings drawers—jog-trot through the street, in and out of the traffic. One of them should have a placard stating that they are in training for the big bout—Jimmie Dolan vs. Spider Flynn, with the address of your theatre. If this sort of thing does not suit your territory, emphasize the laughable contrast between the king and the prize-fighter. Have a little fat man in a crown and ermine trimmed cloak, wearing military uniform under it, posed on a throne in the lobby, and a typical American chap, in sweater and cap, seated on the arm of his throne.

ON Thursday, April 12th, there is a Rex human-interest drama, called "Uncle John's Money," which is a very much worth-while little story of real life. You might do something like this to draw attention to it. Have some fac similes of dollar bills struck off, and strew them in the streets, or pass them out with your tickets a day or so before you run the picture. One side should look as much like a bill as the law allows, and the other should have an announcement that this is some of Uncle John's Money and that if you want to know what he does with the rest of it, you can find out at your theatre on —— date.

POSSIBLY you can arrange with the principal jeweler in your town to co-operate with you in advertising the sixth adventure of the series, "Perils of the Secret Service," which is called "The Signet Ring," and was written and produced by George Bronson Howard. Have a talk with him, and see if the idea of a window display of signet rings, in connection with the picture appeals to him. You can arrange for the placing of a case full of them in your lobby, and have them guarded by a man in police uniform, while a card gives him the credit for the display, and he can extend the same courtesy to you by placing a card in his window calling attention to the picture.

There is an Imp on Sunday, April 15th, with the alluring title "Eyes in the Dark," which is a real thriller. It would be effective if you could arrange to show, before you run the picture, a big staring pair of eyes, arranged in the following manner: This may be used for a stunt inside the theatre, if you like, or arranged for a lobby attraction. Have a black curtain against the wall, and with the folds parted over pieces of glass, as large as you like. On the glass have eyes painted, and arrange lights behind them, which you can suddenly turn on, so that the big eyes are illuminated unexpectedly.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS HAVE PURCHASED OUTRIGHT

"HELL MORGAN'S GIRL"

Now a BLUEBIRD Special

This production was so big and so lavish; so out of the ordinary and unusual that it was to have been marketed on the State Rights plan. After certain territory was sold, the picture was seen by BLUEBIRD Executives, who were so impressed with it that they bought it outright. It was withdrawn from State Rights sale, and money paid for territory was returned. It is now a BLUEBIRD Special, not on the regular BLUEBIRD Program. It is delighting BLUEBIRD audiences all over the country and playing to packed houses. It is a picture that you can count on to show you handsome net profits. Get full particulars from your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or from BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 Broadway, New York.

GOOD

(No. 170. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

WHILE out at Universal City recently, I asked a famous prize-fighter, who was visiting the world's largest film city, how he felt when the gong rang for the beginning of a fight.

"Scared to death!" he replied. "But after the other fellow wallops me once, I get so blame mad at his nerve in thinking he can get the best of me that I sail right in and lick him!"

I can name a dozen exhibitors who would have made world's champions had they been pugilistically inclined. These men sailed right in when old man Bum Business soaked them a few and fought back as hard as they knew how. Today, they are among the biggest men in the business.

There would be less dead theatres in the moving picture graveyard today if their owners had fought back INTELLIGENTLY when they ran into the first wallop.

For instance, there were the men who fought the ten-reel shows presented by their competitors by staging eleven-reel entertainments. There were the men who turned their theatres into hardware emporiums on certain nights of the week, because their competitors were giving away free groceries. And, last but NOT least, there were the men who turned away from the money-making, one-, two-, and three-reel regular service shows because the other fellow did the same thing.

I don't know how YOU feel about it, but every moving picture fan to whom I've spoken has told me that he'd a heap sight sooner see a five or six-reel diversified program show, WELL PUT ON, than an eight or ten-reel montrosity put on with just one purpose in view—that of packing 'em in and getting 'em out.

Now, the point I want to make is this. The last winter proved a bad one for many exhibitors. Only the Lord Almighty Himself knows what the coming summer has in store for the picture theatre owner. Therefore, it's up to every man who has a dollar invested in a house to take inventory and then decide upon ways and means of squeezing every penny of revenue out of his community that it can legitimately be made to yield.

If bad business has walloped you—FIGHT BACK—but make sure that your PRINCIPAL weapons consist of the dependable money-making UNIVERSAL PROGRAM and THE BRAINS GOD GAVE YOU!

The real Magpie.

"THE MAGPIE"

EDWIN STEVENS has produced a splendid three-reel picture, from the story by George Dana Smith, which was arranged for him by John G. Brownell. It will be released as a Gold Seal with Tina Marshall, the little actress who has been supporting Violet Mersereau in the Bluebird photoplays made at the Fort Lee Universal Studio, under the direction of Mr. Stevens. In this case the director had an unusually good story to work with, of which he took full advantage, and the result is a fine achievement.

Dorothy Gerard, daughter of Senator Gerard, has been visiting friends in Grantwood, a suburb of Washington, D. C., during her parents' absence in California. A letter arrives from her father informing her that they are on their way home. He mentions certain robberies that have taken place in Washington and instructs Dorothy to run into town and remove certain private papers from the library safe. While reading the letter it dawns suddenly on Dorothy that the family silver, which her father commanded her to place in storage, has been forgotten. The thought that something might have happened to it creates a panic in her mind, and she decides to go back at once. She is still further disturbed when she reads an account of robberies on her own street by a certain clever crook, called "The Magpie," and she is dumbfounded to see in the picture of "The Magpie" almost a replica of herself.

Before leaving for Washington she receives a telephone call from her fiance, Robert Gray, and accepts an invitation to attend a play that evening. She explains to Bob that she will be compelled to miss the first act but will be ready at nine; at which time he is to call for her at her home in Washington.

Dorothy arrives in Washington about eight in the evening, expecting, of course, that John and Mary, the caretakers, will be at home. As she quietly enters the house the sound of falling silver greets her ears. Cautiously creeping toward the portieres separating the library from the dining room, she peeps through, and sees the cherished family silver being carefully packed in a suit-case by a very ugly-looking burglar. The neighborhood is a series of closed houses; the telephone is impossible as the burglar would overhear. Dorothy is at an utter loss how to proceed when the picture of "The Magpie" flashes across her mind and she decides instantly to play the role and capture the burglar by strategy. Quickly arranging her headgear to resemble the Magpie's, she assumes a jaunty, carefree air and pulling aside the portieres she confronts the burglar. His practised hand falls on the gun by his side, but he drops it to remove his cap. He realizes he is in the presence of a real crook—the notorious "Magpie." Dorothy explains that she was working on the safe and heard him at work. Knowing that the safe contained nothing that would interest the burglar, Dorothy (just explaining her marvelous skill) opens it before his eyes. He is amazed at her cleverness and offers to work with her fifty-fifty. Dorothy accepts the proposition, and "Bill" invites her to visit his den at forty-nine Water Street and "split the swag." Dorothy proposes a bottle of wine before the starting, and the burglar, taking the suit-case with him, starts on a hunt for the ice-box. In the meantime Bob has left his club in a taxi and is on his way to Dorothy.

The burglar returns with the wine. He is getting nervous and wishes to be off. Dorothy succeeds in detaining him until almost nine o'clock, when he suddenly seizes the suit-case and tells her he is going. She realizes she has got to accompany him if she wishes to regain the silver, and, dropping a note at the door (written when "Bill" was rustling the wine) she leaves with the burglar for forty-nine Water Street.

A few minutes later Bob arrives and finds a note Dorothy has left. He rushes into the house and sees the library in disorder, the safe open and the wine on the table. Here he finds another note reading exactly like the first: "Danger, Dorothy, 49 Water Street." He is about to leave when Kelly, the patrolman, calls to him and orders him to throw up his hands. Bob pleads to be allowed to go, explaining Dorothy's peril. Kelly laughs at him. Bob lights into Kelly, slams him an uppercut which floors the patrolman and dashes out.

At forty-nine Water Street the burglar and Dorothy quarrel over the division of the swag. Dorothy, pretending anger, swaggers up to the door on which hangs the burglar's coat and, stealing the gun from his pocket, covers the burglar and holds him until Bob arrives. While Bob and Dorothy are rejoicing over the

THE U. S. steamer "Orleans" was the first cargo ship to arrive in Bordeaux after the "sink-all-ships" edict had gone forth, and she received a royal welcome. Thirty thousand Frenchmen were on hand to welcome the intrepid captain and the crew, as she docked at ten o'clock in the morning. She arrived in the port of Pouillac at five-thirty, and a special boarding officer, with a corps of special police went on board. She was cheered by all the other vessels, as she made her way between them to the docks of Bordeaux. All the vessels were decorated in her honor. The Prefect and Mayor of the city, with many other notables were received by the captain on board the "Orleans." A procession was then formed, which walked to the City Hall. Views of the officers of the ship, Captain D. Tucker, commander; Lieut. Sorenson, Second Officer; Lieut. Fornson and Lieut. Evans are also shown to us. The Animated Weekly's Bordeaux correspondent sends these unique views.

COPS WEAR CORSETS.

COPS in corsets is the latest, and the Animated Weekly deals in the latest, so we have the celluloid record of the biggest cop in the world being introduced to, and into, the mysteries of a whole-bone harness. He is "Big Tim," one of the finest of Pittsburgh, Pa., and it takes considerable whalebone to make a corset for him. Pittsburgh has passed a law to compel the beautification of her police force in this manner, and a close-up of Bib Tim being fitted for his is an interesting sight. "Bananas," the famous ex-prize-fighter, now a policeman, is also invested with the instrument of elegance, but it is not formidable enough to cause any discomfort, for we see how easily the big fellows can exercise in it. One of the Pittsburgh papers is running a full-page lay-out of the cops in corsets.

FATHER AND SON IN SAME CONGRESS.

THE Bankhead family believe in the proverb, "Like father, like son." Senator John H. Bankhead of Alabama has been a member of the Legislature, either of his State or of the country, for thirty years, and his son has recently been elected a member of the Lower House at the nation's capital. The two men posed together in Washington for the cameraman of the Animated Weekly, and their portraits are shown in Number 65.

WOMEN IN THE NAVY.

THE first woman to enlist for duty in the U. S. Navy is Miss Loretta Walsh, who becomes chief yeoman in the Naval Coast Defense Reserve at Philadelphia, Pa. The affair took place in the Naval Home. Miss Walsh is eighteen years of age, and is seen in the Animated Weekly, wearing a uniform similar to that which will be issued to all women who take advantage of the new emergency law. The old man who is seen with the first woman in the navy is an inmate of the home, Patrick O'Donnell, who was on the same ship as Fighting Bob Evans before Fort Fisher in the Civil War, and was wounded at the same time as the admiral. O'Donnell and the girl are typifying the old and the new in the navy. Miss Walsh will be employed as a stenographer. There is also a class in wireless, where young members of society are being taught to take a hand in sending and receiving messages.

RUSH FOR ENGLISH WAR LOAN.

PICTURES of the tremendous demonstration which greeted the launching of England's "Victory Fund," in Trafalgar Square, London, have been sent over from the Animated Weekly's English correspondent, and are shown this week. Immense crowds awaited the arrival of the Lord Mayor, and were entertained by selections played by the Guards Band, while they waited. When the chief dignitary finally appeared he was cheered by the mass of people and addressed them in a speech about the "Victory Loan."

Terence Flynn	Bradley Barker
Tom Neville	Sidney Mason

KATE JORDAN wrote the story of a little waif in New York, the daughter of a groom, and an English lady, and John C. Brownell made it into a Bluebird Photoplay for Violet Mersereau. Edwin Stevens, who has already put two Bluebirds to his credit, directed it, with Sidney Mason and Bradley Barker as the leading players in the support of the little star.

Miss Mersereau works very hard in this dual role, which gives her an opportunity to go all the way from tragic pathos to the piquant impertinence of a street urchin. She also has an opportunity to wear gowns as varied as the two characters she portrays. A fancy dress ball shows her as the daintiest of Juliets, but she does not look any prettier in the traditional pearl cap of the Veronese, than she manages to do in the rags of the little waif, who steals soup for her "boarder." Here is an outline of the story:

Nancy Croyden, daughter of Sir Jeffrey Croyden, of Croyden Hall, has been visiting friends in Paris. There she meets Ora Tourette, a fascinating widow, and invites her to Croyden Hall for a visit. Shortly afterward, Sir Bevis Neville, who is madly in love with Nancy, calls at Croyden Hall and is immeasurably surprised to find Ora there.

Susan helps herself to soup.

Sir Bevis has had an "affair" with the handsome widow, but had thrown her over. Ora's purpose in visiting Croyden Hall was to work out some plan of vengeance that might cause Sir Bevis to regret his action in leaving her in the lurch. In Terence Flynn, Nancy's handsome groom, Ora finds a medium through whom she can operate her scheme.

Nancy is in love with Terence, but the difference in their station is a barrier that seems insurmountable. When Nancy confesses to Ora, the widow takes advantage of the secret to rid herself once for all of Nancy, and thus be free of a rival in Sir Bevis' affections. At a Hallowe'en ball, given at the Hall, the dancers are masked and costumed. Ora writes a note to Terence, telling him of Nancy's love for him, advising him to take advantage of the masked ball.

Ora's further plans for Nancy's embarrassment succeed so well that Sir Bevis comes upon the groom at the instant he is holding Nancy in his arms. Sir Bevis draws his sword, Terence defends himself and wounds Sir Bevis. Nancy thinks that the groom has killed his master. Terence proposes to Nancy that they forthwith elope, and Ora gives them money for their passage to America.

Terence takes to heavy indulgence in drink, and when his wife dies, leaving him a daughter as a legacy of their marriage, Flynn keeps the same mean lodgings in which he had lived, and little Susan grows up to share his poverty. Meanwhile, continuing her vengeance against the Neville family, Ora succeeds in a plot to entangle Tom Neville, nephew of Sir Bevis, in the meshes of a card sharp, who continues to cheat until finally Tom catches his antagonist at his crooked work. In the fight that ensues, pistols are drawn. One of the guns falls during the scuffle at Ora's feet. While holding it in her hand, pointed at the struggling men, Ora unintentionally discharges the revolver. The bullet strikes and kills the card sharp and Ora lays the crime upon Neville. In the confusion, he escapes.

Tom runs away to America, and finally, by rare chance, becomes a roomer in Susan Flynn's humble flat. When Susan's father attempts, in his drunken rage, to strike his daughter, Tom interferes and thus gains Flynn's enmity. Subsequently Flynn sees Tom's picture in a newspaper, advertising him as a fugtive, and in a spirit of revenge Flynn betrays Tom to the police. Neville is arrested and sent to England, where he is tried for the murder of the gambler and sentenced to a long prison term.

Subsequently Flynn dies, and when he realizes that the end is at hand he writes a letter to Sir Jeffrey Croyden, enclosing Susan's picture and telling who she is. Sir Jeffrey sends at once for his granddaughter and installs her at Croyden Hall as his heiress. While driving to Croyden Hall, Susan sees Tom Neville, in prison garb, working on the highway.

Susan is much disturbed at having seen Tom as a convict. She enlists her grandfather's aid, and together they determine to put Ora to the test. She gets Sir Jeffrey to send to Ora, inviting her to be the guest of the daughter of her old friend. Ora, unsuspecting, accepts, and arrives at Croyden Hall. Susan, in New York, has been a devoted reader of "penny dreadfuls," and her favorite, "The World Against Her," supplies her with a plot for the righting of the wrong done to Tom.

She finds the Juliet gown which was worn by her mother on the night of the quarrel and elopement with Terence Flynn. With the assistance of Sir Jeffrey she stages a ghostly scene, in which she appears to Ora, just as her grandfather is questioning her about the details of the old story. Ora, terrified by the apparition, breaks down and confesses that it was she herself who accidentally killed the gambler, and that Tom is innocent. For old time's sake, Sir Jeffrey shows mercy to her and Tom.

A FEW days ago Harry Carey, who is featured under the direction of Fred Kelsey in Western photoplays at Universal City, was making a scene at the county jail in Los Angeles. The inmates naturally were interested in the work before the camera and one of them, hearing Carey called by his name, shouted "Hello, Harry!"

As the actor was leaving, the man said, "Come and see us again sometime, Harry." To which Carey replied good-naturedly, "So long, fellows, I may be back any day."

"U-um! Smell how good!" cried Susan.

"Good-by, my England!"

RUTH "TRIES IT ONCE."

"NEVER again shall I ride with Mary MacLaren," said Ruth Stonehouse shortly after arriving at the Bluebird studio several days ago. "Look at me," the star of many Red Feathers, continued, "here I am all blown to pieces and with my mind entirely unfit for directing, acting or anything else. Mary certainly is a demon for speeding and I am just thinking she is trying to cut short her career.

"I told the little lady yesterday that my own car was out of commission and would have to remain in the garage for repairs for a few days, so she volunteered to call for me and take me to and from the studio. But one ride has been quite sufficient, believe me. This morning the roads were exceedingly wet after the heavy rain of last night, but their dangerous condition made no difference to Mary. We went at an unusually fast rate and, notwithstanding the fact that we passed two wrecks on Cahuenga Pass, my escort to the studio kept on her way as if nothing had happened.

"I started from home as a young woman—now look at me—I feel like I have aged to such an extent to be called grandmother. Be assured, so far as I am concerned, Mary will have to travel alone hereafter."

Molly Malone and Mignon Anderson raise the flag.

ACTRESSES RAISE FLAG AT UNIVERSAL CITY

UNIVERSAL CITY is prepared. There has been a tremendous outburst of patriotism at the picture capital, which had an opportunity for expression the other day on the occasion of the raising of the new flag to the top of the new pole. Mr. Laemmle, Universal's president, ordered the pole while on his recent visit to the film capital, and the picture players turned out in a body to celebrate the first flying of the nation's emblem.

Lots were drawn for the honor of handling the halyards, and fell to Molly Malone and Mignon Anderson, two of the prettiest players in the company. One of the orchestras, which was playing for a dramatic production, was requisitioned to lead the "Star Spangled Banner," and the great group of players clustered about the base of the tall pole joined in singing the national anthem, as the red and white stripes, with the starred blue field, rose for the first time into the sunshine.

At the film capital they give President Wilson's daughter, Mrs. Wm. McAoo, the credit for the formation of the volunteer company among the Universal players. All unconsciously, she brought about the organization of a company as spectacular as the famous "Rough Riders" of Colonel Roosevelt. There are 6,000 inhabitants at Universal City, and among them hundred of daring, hardy, experienced chaps, who form ideal material for soldiers.

MOVIES MOBILIZED FOR WAR.

THE first call to arms of the National Duty Committee of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers has gone out. At the regular weekly meeting held on Thursday, the advertisers entertained four officers of the Army and Navy at luncheon, and before the meeting broke up plans had been formulated for a National Duty Week, and the week of April 8-15 was designated as a fitting time to concentrate the forces of the moving picture industry upon the duty and responsibility of citizenship in this national crisis.

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers had as their guests four Army and Navy officers—Captain G. W. Harvey of the Army, and Lieutenant Commander Marian Epply, Lieutenant J. M. Patton and Lieutenant A. M. Cohen of the Navy. It was by them that the suggestion of a National Duty Week was made to the Association, which was enthusiastically received, and plans immediately discussed for putting it into operation. It was decided to send out a summons to every moving picture manufacturing company to observe the week of April 8-15 as a national duty week, to include in its program so far as possible all of the patriotic films possible, to arrange its posters in such manner as to bring the crisis of the country to the attention of as many of its citizens as possible, and in every way to arouse America to the danger in its supine and defenseless attitude. It was unanimously voted to ask all of the manufacturing companies to attach a trailer to one or all of the films which are issued during that week, reading substantially like this:

> Your Country needs YOU Now!
> The United States Naval Reserve force is in need of men from all trades and professions to enroll at once to guard our coasts. Service for war time only. Apply at once to the United States Naval Reserve Force, 26 Cortland Street, New York, or any United States navy yard or recruiting station.

Lieutenant Commander Epply outlined a campaign, upon which he and

VICE-PRESIDENT OF FORD COMPANY VISITS U. CITY.

"I GUESS there are enough of us here to make up a full company," smilingly said Frank L. Klingensmith, vice-president and treasurerer of the Ford Motor Company, to the General Manager of Universal City, one day this week. Mr. Klingensmith had motored from the Beverly Hills Hotel with his wife and three children, and several prominent men of Detroit.

"Henry Ford told me that when he was here he made the acquaintance of your big elephant and several of the camels, but he did not ride any of them," said the Vice-President of the Ford Company.

"Why not act as chauffeur to one of the ships of the desert yourself," suggested the G. M., to which the latter replied, "Very well, I'm willing to take a chance."

And he did so, remarking after a jaunt across the Universal ranch, "Well, the beast was a little shy on cylinders, but he is possessed of a plethora of motion that will shake all the microbes in one's system to their doom."

"SOMEBODY LIED"

"Don't hold my hand!" said Dolly.

Willie was having the time of his life.

BEN WILSON is certainly a versatile person. Here he is playing the leading role in the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," and winning some of the highest praise of his career for doing so, and on the same program a two-reel comedy, directed by him, is released, which is a masterpiece of its kind. The story was written for him by Mrs. E. M. Ingleton of the Universal Scenario Department, and adapted for the screen by Maie Havey, and his leading players are Priscilla Dean, who looks ravishingly lovely in the white wig and panniers of her Revolutionary ancestors, and Harry Carter in the role of a little tin god of a husband, who proves to be a regular rounder, after all. Here is the plot of this very delightful comedy, in which Ben Wilson has touched his high-water mark as a director.

Willie and Dolly are perfectly happy, each thinking the other flawless. Dolly is very proud of her husband and believes that he never has done anything wrong in his whole life, for he says, "I never smoke; I never drink; I never dance; I never attend masked balls." She at last persuades him to let her go to a masked ball with her friend Evelyn and her mother. Willie says he will stay home and have a quiet evening with his books.

VICTOR Two-Reel Comedy-Drama, written by E. M. Ingleton, adapted for the screen by Maie Havey and produced by Ben Wilson, with Priscilla Dean and Harry Carter in the leading roles.

While Evelyn is flirting with a young man, Dolly is dancing and enjoying herself with Pierrot, who is greatly attracted toward her and with whom she slyly coquets. But when he attempts to make love to her she rebels and refuses to allow him to escort her home. Early in the morning she returns to her home with Evelyn, still haunted by the image of Pierrot, and after kising Willie's picture, goes to bed and is soon fast asleep.

Meanwhile, Willie is at some gambling rooms, in shirt sleeves. The room is dense with smoke; the drinks are being passed around constantly; and among them all, Willie is the most reckless bidder and the greatest drinker. He is having a most exciting time. Finally Pierrot joins the crowd of men. He is still disguised in the outfit he wore at the masked ball.

Suddenly the police begin to raid the gambling rooms and the banging of their clubs and axes is very distinctly heard by the players. All make a dash to escape, but there is no getting away, for the police have already entered. Willie slugs two of the officers and then, with Pierrot, hides in the butler's pantry and locks the door. The policemen have seen them go into the other room and are soon battering down the doors. Pierrot exchanges clothes with Willie, who climbs through the skylight; but the men soon find that Pierrot is not the one who knocked out two of their followers and, seeing the skylight, they rush after Willie. After many narrow escapes, Willie at last eludes his pursuers and enters his own home.

As he enters the bedroom, he makes too much noise and Dolly is awakened. She looks at him and seeing the costume of Pierrot, screams in terror and pulls the covers over her head. When Willie approaches her, she begs him to go away and promises that she will never flirt again. This makes Willie suspicious, and, tearing off his mask, he demands to know what she means. But she asks him what he means by being in that outfit and when she finds some poker chips in his pocket is horrified. They come to the conclusion that they are both human and have their own individual faults.

"THE ONE AND ONLY."

THE General Manager of Universal City has made an interesting discovery. Dorothy Dix, famous throughout the country for her intensely interesting newspaper articles of the past score of years, while visiting Universal City recently said to him, "You may not believe it, but with all my writing I have never written a scenario."

"That is indeed surprising, Miss Dix," replied the General Manager, "and you certainly stand in a class by yourself."

"She does need new shoes." "See my shoes!" "Where did that come from?"

"THE STAR WITNESS"

THE STAR WITNESS," written by Grant Carpenter, adapted for the screen by W. Gibson, and produced by John McDermott, is one of those releases which leave you with a feeling of intense satisfaction. There is no "movie stuff" in it; it is just a tale of real life, with real people, whom we might meet every day and be glad to know. But it holds the interest of the spectator from start to finish, just because it is so real and true. Here is the story, in which Lee Hill, Lena Baskette, the child dancer, and Elizabeth Janes have the important roles.

John Watts has a hard time making ends meet with his modest salary, for his wife, Mary, has been an invalid for many months and his child, Annie, needs clothes badly. In the mammoth department store where John works there has been a long list of missing articles, and finally a detective is called. Things continue to disappear. The detective begins to suspect John and watches him closely.

Annie has become a friend of Lolo, the little daughter of a wealthy judge. Lolo one day presents her with a doll called Angelina, wrapping it in the paper which has just arrived from the department store. The detective had seen John wrap this package and he had noticed the look of desire which the younger man had given the doll.

Tucker, the driver of the delivery wagon, had placed a parcel on the seat of the wagon and in turning a corner it rolls off into the gutter. He reports it as a missing article. Annie is talking to her friend, the policeman, and both notice the package. He tells her to keep the shoes that are in the parcel, as the address has been washed away.

John has to be at work unusually early one morning and tells Mary to send Annie with his lunch. The child is delighted, and wraps it in the paper in which Angelina had come.

The detective is at the desk and offers to take care of Annie's package for her father. He notices the new shoes which the child proudly displays and recognizes them. Then seeing the paper, with the address of Judge Andrews plainly written on the outside, in which the lunch is rolled, he concludes that he has found the thief.

John is arrested and put in a cell. The evidence seems to be asolutely against him, but finally Annie is called as a witness and tells about the doll and the shoes. Even her father thinks she is imagining her story, and James sneers openly. Judge Andrews has charge of the case and the court is adjourned until Lolo and the policeman can be brought as witnesses. After their testimony, which corroborates Annie's the case is dismissed and the manager and superintendent of the department store hasten to congratulate John and to show their pleasure in his release. They tell him the firm has not appreciated him but they will try to make amends. The driver turns out to be the thief.

DIRECTORS WORKING ON TWO PHOTOS SIMULTANEOUSLY.

THE recent rainy weather at Universal City rather upset the plans of some of the directors who were preparing to make exterior scenes for their current photoplays. As a result several worked on the filming of two separate stories to take advantage of all of the interior work necessary and then to be in shape to proceed to photograph the exteriors upon the return of sunshine.

Bluebird Director William Worthington was filming "Bringing Father Home" and "The Car of Chance," both comedy-dramas. By this method practically no time was lost in production.

Harry Carey, working under the direction of Fred A. Kelsey, was not so fortunate, however, as the Western stories had but few interior scenes, and in order to make up time Carey and Kelsey recently have been working almost from daylight until dark at the town of Newhall with two stories under way.

The same condition surrounded George E. Marshall's Western company, but not a word of complaint was heard from either directors or players, as they were equally as anxious to keep ahead with their productions as was the management.

PRISCILLA’

By MARJORIE HOWARD

As the "Genteel Vampire" in "Even As You and I."

DUAL personality has been a favorite theme for novelists and playwrights ever since it was discovered. Of course, the movies have not overlooked its possibilities; they don't overlook anything. Ever so many film plays have been based upon the strange phenomenon of more than one individuality, forced by strange chance, to share one body among them.

Priscilla Dean, the brilliant young beauty who has been illuminating Universal pictures for nearly a year, and who appears this week on the program as the fascinating heroine of Ben Wilson's fine Victor comedy, "Somebody Lied," is immensely interested in the subject of dual personality. She declares that she is perfectly certain that her own singularly attractive form is the medium of at least three distinctly different individuals, and perhaps several more occasional visitors besides.

"I can't explain myself to myself any other way," she says, "and I was a puzzle to every one who knew me, even to my mother, and a perfect enigma to myself, until I hit upon this explanation—and I hate puzzles, they bore me to tears. I don't stay the same sort of person long enough to get used to myself. I never have, and it was very perplexing, until it was made clear by the 'triple personality' discovery.

"As a child, I would change so often and so completely, that none of my playmates really knew me. Some days I wanted to do nothing but play with dolls. No one was ever so domestic as I would be for a while. Mother encouraged that phase all she could, for though she let me go on the stage at the age of four, to play with dear old Joe Jefferson in the immortal 'Rip Van Winkle,' she was always a firm believer in a thorough housekeeping education for girls. I learned to sew by making dolls' dresses, and to cook on my toy stove. But just as mother was beginning to feel quite encouraged, and sure that I should marry some good man and be a model housewife, another Priscilla would put in an appearance—a Priscilla who didn't care for the most beautiful doll in the world, who hadn't the patience to hold a needle, and would let the kettle boil dry, while she practised fancy dancing in front of the mirror.

"While that personality had control, I was a perfect little peacock, always posing before the glass, and insisting so vehemently on being a dancer that they were forced to give me lessons, or there would have been no peace in the house. Then, just as my teacher was prophesying a career for me as an exponent of the light fantastic, I would lose interest, and become so stupid that he was in despair. They thought I was a bad little girl, while really the third Priscilla had assumed control.

"Then I'd be a regular little hoyden for a while, and want to climb trees and play with the boys, and I'd come in with my 'gathers'—that curse of little girlhood—hopelessly torn. No wonder mother did not know what to do with me. After that, the actress in me would hold sway, and they would think that they had a second Bernhardt on their hands; for I acted all over the place, and went to sleep with Juliet under my pillow.

"Of course, I had to learn to manage my many selves somehow. Otherwise everybody's life would have become impossible, my own included. But motion pictures were the saving of me. You see, in the picture game, you could use a thousand personalities, if you had them, and think yourself lucky to have so many. Life in pictures is so varied that it is too highly spiced for a great many people. But it just suits me, with my complicated individualities. All I have to do is to see that the hoydenish one has the upper hand when I'm doing a Western heroine, that the domestic one is in charge when I'm somebody's dear little helpmate in a drama, that the dancer has the 'full speed ahead' signal when I'm given a stage personage to portray, and there I am—all responsibility out of my hands! Isn't that convenient?

"In 'Even as You and I,' I have the role of a 'genteel vampire,' who comes to a bad end, it is true, but more through recklessness than innate badness. Well, that just suits the Priscilla who loves to drive a car a little faster than the maker intended it to go, and who would be a 'speed demon' if she could. All I have to do is to turn her on, and the part plays itself."

As her lovely self.

"The Bronze Bride"

RED FEATHER PHOTOPLAY, from the novel called "His Mother's People," by J. R. Burkey, adapted for the screen by Maude Grange and produced by Henry McRae, with Claire McDowell, Eddie Polo and Charles Hill Mailes.

HIS MOTHER'S PEOPLE" was the name of the story, by J. R. Burkey, from which the Red Feather Photoplay, "The Bronze Bride," was made by Maude Grange. Then it was given to Henry McRae for production, who chose a fine cast headed by Claire McDowell, Eddie Polo, and Charles Hill Mailes, to interpret it. The pictures on this page give some indication of the sort of thing which fans have come to expect when Eddie Polo's name is in the cast. McRae provided him with a great opportunity, and he made the most of it. The fight between him and Frank Mayo provides a thrill for the most blase picture-goer. The fine story runs like this:

Disgusted with his son's conduct since his return from college, William Ogden turns him out to make his own way in the world. Harvey, intoxicated, makes his way to the station and gives the agent a bunch of bills, asking for a ticket to "as far as that will take him." It takes him to Elk Head, in the Canadian North Woods.

Here he meets Joe Dubois, a hunter and trapper, who is broke. Harvey pools his money with Joe's outfit, and they go into business together. Black Lynx, the head of the tribe of Hurons who trade in furs with the town, comes to Joe to bargain for wares. With him is his beautiful daughter A-Che-Chee, and her brother. The girl immediately falls in love with Harvey. She shoots a rabbit and presents it to him as a love token. Later she falls from her horse and Harvey goes to her assistance. His action is misinterpreted by her brother, who has a profound distrust of all white men, and who warns Harvey to keep away from his sister. Harvey is trapping, when his leg is caught in a steel trap and it is A-Che-Chee who finds and releases him. She takes him to his cabin and nurses him devotedly. Black Lynx and her brother come to the cabin in search of her. In spite of her protests, they insist upon an immediate marriage. Harvey consents, as he thinks the wedding won't be legal. Joe has been away on a trip and returns the day of the marriage. He is there when the Indians arrive with a priest. Rather contemptuously the chief informs Harvey that they have been Christian for a long time and that the ceremony will be a binding one. Harvey, in great distress, protests that he will not be a squaw man, but Joe tells him the affair has gone too far. They are married.

Three years pass. A-Che-Chee has been very happy with her baby boy, and Harvey has been lulled into content. But a letter from civilization reaches him, and he cannot resist returning to his father. He fears to take his bronze wife with him and cruelly determines to steal away with the baby while she is absent. When she discovers their flight, she is overcome with grief and wants only to die. Joe, however, who has an uncle in the town to which Harvey has gone, persuades her to follow her husband and try to win him back. Dazedly she obeys him.

Harvey has told his father that his wife is dead. The little boy entrenches himself firmly in his grand-father's affections and seems to have forgotten his mother. But one day a picture of an Indian on a magazine cover recalls her to him and he begins to cry for her, and for his stuffed rabbit, his favorite toy. Harvey's heart is touched. He confesses to his father and sets out in haste to fetch his wife. At Elk Head he learns that she has left and there is no trace of her movements. He returns to town.

A-Che-Chee, in the meantime, has arrived with Joe at the home of his rich uncle. Joe tells her story, and his aunt and cousin undertake to fit the Indian girl for her entry into society, where Harvey may no longer be ashamed of her. They order pretty clothes for her, and teach her the usage of society. She is very docile, but still dazed with grief and lack of understanding. She is to make her first appearance on the night of a reception given by Harvey's father.

ception, and the Indian is nearly faint with anticipation of seeing her boy. She has carried the stuffed rabbit which he loved, with her in her muff, The little boy is the success of the occasion, and is in a fair way to be spoiled with attention. With tears in her eyes and longing in her heart, she waits for him to notice her. He glances at her, and turns immediately away to another. Almost overcome with her disappointment, the poor woman takes the rabbit out of her muff and holds it out to him. He stares at it, then with a cry he grabs it and is led to look more closely at the woman. Recognition comes to him, and with a shout of joy he leaps at her and throws his arms around her neck. At this moment, Harvey, depressed by his failure and full of remorse, arrives at the house, and there is a happy reunion in which A-Che-Chee forgives him his cruelty with an almost divine selflessness. They make their home in the city, for the grandfather cannot part with his grandson.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS HAS SCARE.

LIKE most young women, Dorothy Phillips, one of the Bluebird stars, has a distinct aversion to snakes. Recently while she was with the De Grasse Company in the high mountains in the vicinity of San Bernardino for about two weeks, she was always on the lookout for the dreaded snakes. One day William H. Stowell and Lon Chaney, members of the company, heard a scream and running over, found Miss Phillips scampering away from the underbrush. "Snakes!" she cried. "Where?" chorused the two actors, as the pretty actress pointed toward the underbrush. She failed to appreciate the laughter of the two when they told her that snakes hid in the winter time and never have been seen crawling about in the snow with which the mountains were covered nearly all of the time the company was there filming scenes. Her next Bluebird is "The Girl in the Checkered Coat."

PRECIOUS AS JEWELS.

"IT might be a good idea to place a cordon of police around those vegetable stands," said P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Company to the General Manager of Universal City the other day, at the same time pointing to three stands filled with garden truck, all of which was being used in the street scene.

"Why the minions of the law?" asked the Universal City chief.

"Well, you know, automobiles are being offered for onions and potatoes nowadays and somebody might start a raid," replied the custodian of the Big U's strong-box, with a merry little twinkle in his eye.

Three striking scenes from "The Voice on the Wire."

"THE VOICE ON THE WIRE"

Episode Four "THE NEXT VICTIM"

IN the fourth instalment of the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which was written by Eustace Hale Ball, and is being produced by Stuart Paton, with Ben Wilson in the lead, another victim is added to the list of those who have succumbed to the mysterious force, in spite of the best efforts of the authorities. The interest increases in this chapter, and the end comes with a shock which leaves one on edge for the next episode.

Detective Cronin has arrested Shirley's Japanese valet and is surprised to receive a phone message from Shirley to release Sato, but he does so. Jackson follows Sato to a garage, where he is later assailed and overcome by two crooks. One, left to guard him, is induced to change places with him. Jackson escapes and Sato, arriving immediately after, discovers the deception of the crook and kills him. Cronin soon learns that the phone message was a false one, but does not know from whom it came.

Polly Marion, Shirley's assistant, has disappeared, as also the officer who accompanied her. "Red" Warren has kidnapped her and is determined that she shall pay the price that night.

Meanwhile, Shirley, hastening to Polly's apartment, finds the list of those condemned by the "Voice," and noting the name of John Vance, warns Vance to phone him upon any unusual happening.

Shirley, Cronin and one of his men then drive madly to Warren's home, where Cronin and Short force an entrance, demanding Polly Marion. Shirley climbs up to the bedroom in which Polly is held prisoner. Warren at last opens the bedroom door, only to foil the detectives, himself jumping into the room and locking the door. His hired assasin is in the act of choking Polly and is encouraged by Warren to rush the job. But a shot is fired and the man reels and falls, at the same time as Cronin and Short break in the door and cover Warren with a revolver.

IN the fourth installment of the great mystery serial, written by Eustace Hale Ball and produced by Stuart Paton, John Shirley, played by Ben Wilson, fails to protect the third victim.

The phone in Warren's apartment rings and as Shirley is lifting the receiver, Warren breaks away, rushes in and swings a blow at Shirley's jaw. A mysterious hand is seen at the phone. Tensely listening, they hear a voice say, "Fix everything for Vance to-night."

They immediately dash to Vance's home. They find that Vance in the meantime has received a mysterious note warning him of trouble. Later, Shirley lies in Vance's bed, Cronin sits beside Vance, revolver in hand and Polly guards the library. At midnight a hand appears near the bed in which Shirley lies. He fires a shot and the hand disappears. At sound of the shot, Cronin and Polly run frantically into the room, where they discover blood stains, and then, of a sudden, they realize their folly in leaving Vance unprotected. They rush back to him, only to find him dead. The window curtains are moving, but no one is to be seen, inside or out.

The phone is again ringing. Shirley lifts the receiver but dashes it to the floor. His disappointment is so intense that he breaks down, and Polly goes toward him to offer what sympathy is possible in such a situation.

U. CAFE SIGHTS FASCINATE.

"YOU are not eating," said the General Manager of the Universal Company to Joseph Blethen, President and General Manager of the Seattle Times, who was among the prominent visitors at Universal City this week. "The "Boss" of the motion picture plant and the newspaper luminary of the Northwest were in the big restaurant at the noon-hour, when the former made the remark.

"Eating? Who wants to eat?" questioned Mr. Blethen. "All I want to do is to drink, and even if I do come from a dry town I am drinking in the unusual sights of this place of gastronomic exercises."

And the head of the Seattle Times continued to feast his eyes on the strange assemblage in the restaurant —the millionaires and the tramps, the brokers and the cowboys, the imps and harpies of Hades, the Sisters of Mercy and the Mexicans, Indians, etc. "One of the most interesting sights that has ever been presented to me," remarked Mr. Blethen, "and alone well worth a visit to Universal City."

Movie Hero Does What Stage Hero Talks About

"ONE of the biggest differences between motion pictures and the stage, from the point of view of the active participant in both is that in pictures you have to be able really to do the things which you just talk about on the stage," says Jack Mulhall, who has recently been promoted to the rank of Red Feather star, under the direction of Raymond B. Wells, whose next picture, called "Mr. Dolan of New York," is a strenuous affair which bears out his contention.

As Jimmie Dolan, a lightweight who has taken advantage of the French craze for American boxing to invade Paris in the hope of making his fortune, he has to do all the stunts which, in a play, he would be content to converse about. First he is knocked out in a bout with "Spider" Flynn, played by Francis McDonald, who is appearing in the serial "The Voice on the Wire," and then he has to perform the same operation upon his adversary. When the scene shifts to training quarters Jack has to demonstrate his ability with the punching-bag instead of merely swaggering about in sporting togs, as the stage hero might do.

"An audience in the theatre is perfectly satisfied if the rest of the characters talk about the wonderful prowess of the hero as a swimmer, a boxer, runner or horseman," continues Jack, "but in a picture house the hero would not stand a chance of sympathy from the spectators if all he had to explain his deeds of daring was a lot of subtitles. If he's supposed to be a boxer, he's got to prove it. Francis McDonald nearly broke my jaw for 'Mr. Dolan,' but all the sympathy I got was a congratulation on the 'realism.'"

Bluebird Shows The Real Sculptor's Studio

MANY of the scenes of the Bluebird photoplay, "The Pulse of Life," are staged in a sculptor's studio, and for once the "local color" will be absolutely correct. Rex Ingram, who produced the picture, is a sculptor himself, and knows what such a workshop really looks like. He has put his knowledge into the picture, and the result is rather a shock to the layman.

Most film fans picture an artist's studio as a big room, with rather "artistic" light effects, loaded down with drapery, cushioned couches, luxurious rugs, vases, statuettes and all sorts of objects of art. It will be a surprise to them to see the real thing in "The Pulse of Life," which is just a shanty-like room, with a big north light, a bare floor, plain plastered walls, a model stand, like a small wooden platform on a turn-table, and a high stand upon which rests the unfinished bust upon which the artist is working. There are shelves against the wall to hold other examples of his work, and that is about all. The place is just about as luxurious as a barn, but just as suitable to the sort of work which is done there. Another illusion is dispelled.

Mr. Ingram knew what he was doing when he set his stage in this way, for he is a sculptor himself, which accounts for the realism of the scenes. In the play, M. K. Wilson has to model a bust of Gypsy Hart, the leading lady. Mr. Ingram made a bust of her lively and piquant features, which is the very image of her—another most unusual occurrence in any photoplay.

A real sculptor's studio in the coming Bluebird Photoplay "The Pulse of Life."

BANKER STRAUS GUEST OF UNIVERSAL CHIEF.

CARL LAEMMLE, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, entertained another president during his recent visit to Universal City. This was S. W. Straus, head of the New York, Chicago and San Francisco banking firm of the same name. Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Straus are old friends, but it was the first time that the latter had seen a motion picture plant. After luncheon in the big cafe President Laemmle gave Mr. Straus a "personally conducted tour" through Universal City.

The sights were all new and novel to the financier, who frequently expressed both surprise and delight. Mr. Straus told President Laemmle it was all so interesting that he wanted to repeat his visit, whereupon the chief of the Universal organization told him to "come again and make yourself entirely at home."

THE serial, written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, reaches the climax of excitement in this chapter, called "The Floating Signal."

CAST.

Patricia Montez	Grace Cunard
Detective Phil Kelly	Francis Ford
His Assistants	Pete Gerald, Jerry Ash
Pat's Aunt	Jean Hathaway

EPISODE NO. 15 of the big serial, written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, is called "The Floating Signal," the climax of excitement is reached. We left Pat a prisoner for the first time, but needless to say, she escapes, and her adventures become more breathless than ever.

Secret Service officials take their prisoner to the Federal jail and she is there ordered held until word can come from Washington, finally disposing of her. Pat is allowed the freedom of the jail corridor, one side of which is marked by the outer wall of the jail and the other is lined by cells. There is but one prisoner in these cells, a man Pat discovers to be one of the anarchists who have been captured following the air-raid on New York.

Pat gains this man's confidence and learns from him that the Secret Service men are preparing to attack the anarchists in their headquarters, located in West Farms, a suburb of New York. There, in an old shack known as "the Frenchman's cabin," the anarchists are preparing a warm reception for the authorities. Later on in the evening the guard is withdrawn by the warden of the prison, who believes Pat is safe in the corridor with the anarchist securely locked in his cell.

Pat's gangsters have sent representatives to trail the officers to jail following the girl's capture, and the men learn that Pat is imprisoned in one of the wings of the jail, abutting on an unfrequented street. The gangsters take an electrically equipped wagon to the jail, and by using a high ladder contrivance at one end of the truck, reach up to the high window of the corridor, saw the bars and free the girl.

Just when she is descending to liberty, a police patrol comes along and engages the thugs in a fight. Pat manages to escape during the excitement, having first taken a revolver from one of her men. She runs to the street-corner nearby, hails a passing taxi and, with her gun at his head, forces the chauffeur to drive as she directs to West Farms.

Meanwhile the Secret Service men have made their attack on the Frenchman's hut. The anarchists having dug a tunnel under ground for the purpose of insuring their escape, plant a bomb in the house, coupled with a wire, in readiness to be fired by electricity when the proper key is pressed. On entering the cabin the officer sees this wire and cuts it, thus thwarting the anarchists' purpose.

When the men in the tunnel realize that their mine has failed to explode, they hurry through the underground passage, taking with them a container of nitro-glycerine, with which they purpose to blow up the Secret Service men. Pat arrives on the scene just as the anarchists emerge from the tunnel.

The shouts of other Secret Service operatives who have remained outside call the men from the hut, and they emerge just as the anarchists attempt to hurl the nitro-glycerine. Pat sees the motion and shoots the man who is about to throw the explosive. The nitro-glycerine falls at the feet of the anarchists, and the great shock wrecks the Frenchman's hut and an overturned stove fires the debris.

Pat sees a man in the ruins, through the open door, and jumping to her feet, after she, like everybody else, had been thrown to the ground by the explosion, she rushes into the ruins of the cabin and drags out the chief of the Secret Service detail.

his associates had been working, for a naval display to be made by merchants throughout the length and breadth of the land in National Duty Week. This plan, and the machinery for putting it into execution, had been carefully thought out, and the Naval Reserve Force has already prepared letters to every large and small mercantile house throughout the United States, to trade magazines in the various industries, and to Chambers of Commerce in all cities.

This National Duty Week campaign will occupy the attention of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers pretty largely until after April 15, and much of the work which they have already started will be diverted to this particular object. Lieutenant Patton laid particular stress upon the fact that the Naval Reserve Force is a branch of the service which is quite distinct from the regular naval force. From the Naval Reserve Force the United States Navy hopes to man and equip the auxiliary vessels in the navy, and to fill business, clerical and managerial posts for the period of war only. A man doesn't have to enlist for any definite number of months or years in order to serve his country in the Naval Reserve Force. This force, too, is one which is desperately needed to put the navy into the most effective condition, relieving trained men for actual fighting service aboard the men-of-war, and assuring the vessels of the supplies, communication, ammunition, etc., without which they are helpless.

The new branch of the navy known as the Submarine Chasers come under this head.

"The Man in the Trunk"

THE MAN IN THE TRUNK," adventure No. 5 of the series, "Perils of the Secret Service," written and directed by George Bronson Howard, is the most thrilling, so far, of all the adventures.

Cissy Reginald comes to Yorke Norroy, chief of the American Secret Service Agent, to find out what has become of her sweetheart, Carson Huntley. Norroy is very anxious himself, for he has not heard from Carson for three weeks. The valet brings a note to Norroy from Huntley which reads, "Give the bearer of the message one thousand dollars and he will explain how you can save me." The money is quickly paid.

The Mexican bearer explains that Carson is held a prisoner by Diego Rey, the governor, who intends to keep him captive until he tells how the noiseless machine gun is made.

Cissy is willing to do anything for Huntley. They arrange for a troupe of girls who, with Cissy, are to dance at the Mexican theatre. There Diego Rey becomes deeply infatuated with her. She leads him on and finally invites him to her apartment for supper. Norroy gives her a pellet to put in the man's wine and a tube of ethyl chloride. She is to saturate her handkerchief and hold it over Diego's nose when he is unconscious from the effects of the pellet.

Diego Rey arrives. Norroy is hidden behind some curtains to help Cissy in case of danger. The Mexican is so ardent that he refuses to drink any more wine although the girl tries to force that containing the pellet upon him. He attacks her and, terrified, she screams. Norroy rushes in and the two men fight. Diego Rey is soon overpowering Norroy, but the girl, seeing this, quickly breaks the tube and saturating her handkerchief with the chloral, holds it under the Mexican's nose with both hands, while Norroy grasps Diego so that he is unable to break away. He falls unconscious and is promptly tied and gagged. Yorke then disguising himself as Diego and donning his uniform, leaves Cissy to guard him with a revolver and hastens to the prison in which Huntley is held.

He has no trouble in gaining entrance to Huntley's cell, as the guards think him Diego Rey. He finds his friend hung to the wall by handcuffs and exhausted from lack of sleep. Norroy orders the guards to release the prisoner, and as soon as they are left alone, exchanges clothes with Huntley, who hastens from the prison to Cissy's apartment.

Diego Rey is put into a trunk, in which Norroy had bored many air holes, and Huntley, Cissy and the other girls of the troupe, with the trunk, hasten across the Mexican border.

At the right time, Norroy discloses his face to the guard and demands that Pedro Gonzales, Diego's lieutenant, come to his cell. The Mexican is astounded to see Norroy, who informs him that if he wishes to see Diego Rey again he will have to rush with him across the border.

Jim Kennedy is living in the big timber district of the West and is fond of gambling, but does not play straight. One of the rangers becomes suspicious of him and they fight.

A forest fire breaks out and all the men are called out; Kennedy is injured and Martin takes him to his cabin to care for him. At last Kennedy feels that he is able to move on, but so much has Martin become dependent upon his society that he dislikes to have him leave, and decides to tell him of his past history and its sorrow.

Martin has been married to Rose. They had lived happily; but a certain Kenneth James, in spite of the fact that he himself had a wife, made love to Rose and so succeeded in implanting the seeds of jealousy in her mind against her husband that she finally left him. Martin was heartbroken.

The next morning, the two men have breakfast, but both have spent a very unhappy night. Kennedy tells Martin that he thinks he will shave before he leaves, and when he does so, Martin recognizes him as the purloiner of his happiness. THE VOICE ON THE WIRE
THE GREAT UNIVERSAL SURPRISE SERIAL

New smashing 24-sheet poster just issued by Morgan. Wonderfully effective board.

STUNT NO. 5.

Have large 18-inch wide and 10-foot long streamers painted and have them hung in prominent spots in the main streets of your city on wires high in the air. It may have to be done at night and you may have to get special permission from the city to allow this to be done. If you can secure permission by all means have these streamers hung up. They will cause a lot of comment. Have these streamers carry the following mysterious message, "LOOK OUT FOR THE VOICE ON THE WIRE." After you have openly announced your serial in advertising, etc., change the reading in these streamers to read, "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE" the great Universal surprise serial now playing at .... Theatre. This is a great stunt and if you can get it over, do it.

STUNT NO. 6.

Hire some sign painter, or some good, bright boy that can handle a brush and send him out say about 3 o'clock in the morning with a paint pot and a brush and let him paint in this message on all the good spots on the sidewalks on all the streets that he can cover every night for a few nights: "LOOK OUT FOR THE VOICE ON THE WIRE." Your boy might be arrested and if so your notoriety will be tripled because the newspapers will pick it up and make news out of it. Be sure to have this message painted in front of every newspaper office in your town if possible. Thus with this mysterious message, somebody in the newspaper offices will pick this stunt up and publish a story on it.

Note)—If in any of these stunts is a chance to frame up a news story with the local newspaper men on any stunt you pull off, so much the better for you. Talk over these things with your local editors and newspaper men and if you can't get their co-operation, go ahead and use whatever you can of these stunts without the papers' co-operation. They will pick it up sooner or later anyhow, especially if you pull any one of these described here.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, Ont.—The Publicity Service Department of the Universal Film Co. of Toronto, arranged with the United Cigar Stores to carry out a window display in one of their stores on Yonge Stret, whereby the cigar stories advertised Bluebird Chocolates and the Publicity Department loaned them portraits of Bluebird stars, banners, photographs, etc., which made up a combination display for the mutual benefit of both parties. The idea has been widely commented upon and has been entirely successful.

A report in circulation in Toronto that Mr. Brady of the Madison Theatre had sold out his interest is denied by him.

Mr. W. Gladish of the Canadian Motorcycle and Bicycle Trade Journal, has brought to the attention of the exhibitors a way in which moving picture exhibitors can cash in on the big bicycle week to be held in Ontario on the 31st of March to the 7th of April. Meetings are going to be held in the various towns and local lodges of the Big Bicycle Association are to be formed. Now, if the exhibitors will get their film exchanges to supply them with films featuring or using bicycles and advertise them as a special attraction for the cycle men, they will undoubtedly make a little extra money. Mr. Gladish is doing all he can to promote a co-operation between the cycle men and the movie men on this deal, and deserves to be supported.

MONTREAL, Que.—Mr. Kashin of the Midway Theatre, Montreal, has scored a distinct hit with his lobby display for the Bluebird feature "The Reward of the Faithless." Mr. Kashin, who is known throughout the district and in fact most of eastern America, as a most advanced lobby display man, secured the large gold throne from the House of Commons at Ottawa and with curtains and hangings from the local City Hall worked up a lobby display that was most impressive. Moreover, he linked the display up with the disclosures recently made by the Russian Priest Iliodor in New York. Thus bringing the interest of current topics to bear on the producing of patronage for his house. Results we believe have been most successful.

On Friday, March 9th, at 11:30 o'clock, the first annual banquet of the Film Exchangemen's Association of Quebec was given in the Blue Room of the Windsor Hotel, Montreal. From every point of view the affair was pronounced a success. Seventy-three men representing every branch of the local industry sat down from the Dinner Committee to the Czar of the kitchen.

T. O. Byerle, the president of the association, presided. Shortly after the oysters he started the ball rolling by calling on Mr. Gerald Barry, president of the Canadian Motion Picture Association to address those present. Mr. Barry in the name of the association, assured Mr. Byerle of the pleasure and satisfaction it gave him to see this demonstration of co-operation between the exchanges and exhibitors.

Mr. Bouchard, M. P. for St. Hyacinthe, then spoke on the new taxes and how they effected the small town exhibitor. Mr. Bouchard owns and operates a picture house in St. Hyacinthe. He assured everybody present that he would use all his powers in Quebec to see that the different representatives were brought to an understanding of the many difficulties of the exhibitor to-day and that the taxes now levied on them were too heavy.

Many other subjects of interest to all were discussed and the opinions of many were heard on the benefits that would result from co-operation between those interested in the industry. Music was furnished by a special orchestra and several vocal numbers were rendered by Mr. Johnston, Mr. Farrel and Mr. Mason.

Powers Educational.

A visit to Carl Hagenbeck's animal park is the subject of a wonderful educational. We see the large bird lake, with many species of wild fowl living in harmony. Then we visit some members of the deer family, and go on to the enclosure with the zebra, the "dandy" of the horse family. We pass the ostrich, the ibex, and the Chamois, coming to the pool which contains the sea lions and seals. Then comes the cage of the polar bear, and after that the comical pnguins. Reindeer come next, and then we visit the elephant.

The favorites of the zoo, the monkeys, are seen at their tricks. There are also pictures of the camel, the giraffe, the kangaroo, and finally of the finest of all—the lions and tigers, kings of the jungle.

"THE BLUE PRINT MYSTERY."

Laemmle Drama.

With King Baggott.

Walter Johnson, a young mechanic, has invented an automobile attachment that will revolutionize the trade. Williams, for whom he works, is desirous of purchasing it. But his superintendent prevails upon him to allow the idea to be stolen, then discharges Johnson. Slawry has so enmeshed himself in Williams' affairs that he can hardly call his soul his own. Williams' daughter is in love with Johnson and overhears the plot to steal the invention. She upbraids her father for listening to such a scheme. She then goes to Johnson and tells him of the plot. Johnson, the next day, is discharged and Slawry induces a sailor to steal the blue prints of the invention. Adamson, the sailor, then starts to blackmail Slawry, telling him that he will reveal all if he is not well paid. Slawry defies him, so Adamson tries to regain the blue prints from Williams' house. Williams hears some one breaking in his library, and confronts Adamson. In the subsequent struggle Williams is killed. Johnson has been meeting Grace clandestinely, and is accused by Slawry of the crime. A strong circumstantial case is made against him, as he has been seen leaving the house at the time of the murder. An uncle of Grace, who is a physician, secures a piece of the glass that Adamson broke from the window to open it. In doing this he cut his hand. A microscopical examination shows that the blood adhering to the pane is from a man suffering from Kala Azur, an incurable Oriental disease. The doctor, believing in Johnson's innocence, advertises that he has a sure cure for the dread malady. Adamson answers the ad, and the doctor charges him with the crime and he confesses all. Johnson is released.

The officer resents the interruption, and starts to beat up Mr. Phan. The fish flies out of his mouth and into the mouth of the cop. He hurries back into the cellar. A delivery boy comes with a case of beer. Mr. Phan sticks him into the dumbwaiter and keeps the beer.

"THE DAWN OF DECENCY."

Big U Drama.

Slade rushes to the mine in time to pay off the men, and later, thanks to the gambler's kindness, is able to wed his sweetheart.

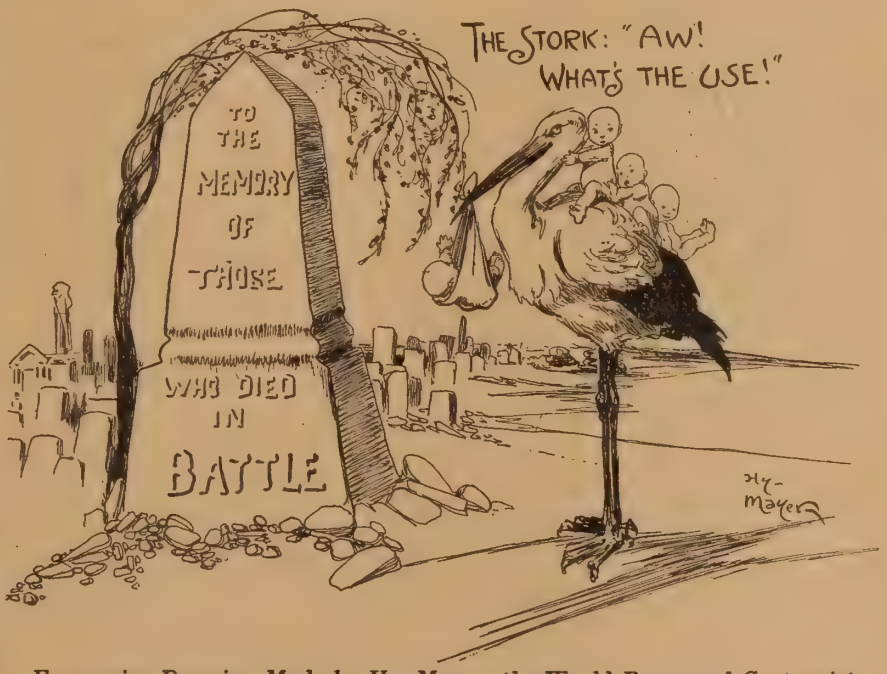
UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE, ISSUE NO. 13.

Issue Number 13 of the Universal Screen Magazine begins with views of the preparation of food in one of the big hotel kitchens of New York City, all of which establishments are under the constant supervision of the inspectors from the Board of Health.

Porpoise fishing off the Atlantic Coast comes next. The porpoise is a member of the whale family and oil, selling for forty cents an ounce, is extracted from them, and used for lubricating the works of fine watches and chronometers.

The transformation of an old mill into a plant for the making of shells is a timely picture. Beauty hints illustrating the care of the nails, and posed by the famous beauty of the stage, Justine Johnstone, are included as feminine preparedness.

The reel closes with a few moments with Willie Hopkins and his animated sculpture, which may well be called "Miracles in Mud."



THE STORK: "AW! WHAT'S THE USE!"
TO THE MEMORY OF THOSE WHO DIED IN BATTLE
Hy-Mayer

Expressive Drawing Made by Hy. Mayer, the World Renowned Cartoonist for the Animated Weekly.

SCREEN MAGAZINE No.13

Two scenes showing a model kitchen in an up-to-date hotel.

A PLACE of high efficiency is the kitchen of a great metropolitan hotel, where the preparation of food is reduced to a science. Issue Number 13 of the Screen Magazine takes us into the sanctum sanctorum, and shows us the highly paid "artists" at their fascinating work. All stages in the preparation of innumerable dinners, each different from the others, are shown, from the arrival, checking and storing of the raw materials, to the covered dishes containing the appetizing viands ready to serve. The pictures are so graphic that the mouths of the audience begin to water.

System is the magic by which so many meals are served in so short a space of time. There is a place for everything and everything is in its place. Each man is in charge of a certain phase of the work, and scrupulous cleanliness is observed throughout the whole process. The pictures in the Screen Magazine bring the intimate details of these mysteries to the uninitiated, almost more clearly than a visit to the kitchen itself.

From the preparation of the meals of a Sybarite to porpoise fishing on the Atlantic Coast is something of a jump, but variety is the spice of the life of the Screen Magazine. These huge fish are taken by the thousands each day in nets. We see the fishermen off for the "net planting," and later the hauling in of the fish. The porpoise is a member of the whale family, and an oil is extracted from its flesh which is worth forty cents an ounce, and is used to lubricate the works of chronometers and the finest watches. A full-grown porpoise weighs about 200 pounds, yet they are among the most graceful of all living things. A school of them playing around a ship is a beautiful sight. One of them leaping in play is shown among these pictures.

Every road leads to preparedness nowadays, and the Screen Magazine is no exception. We are shown an old mill, in which junk gathered from the four corners of the earth is transformed into death-dealing missiles of war. A huge magnet is used to handle the mass of all sorts of metal, which is melted in a blast furnace. Molds are filled with the molten stuff, and at last we see the finished shell casings leaving the mill.

Feminine preparedness is not neglected, for now comes a lesson in manicuring, by none other than the famous Broadway beauty, Miss Justine Johnstone, now scintilating in the cast of "Oh, Boy!" She shows just how to shape the nails with a flexible steel file, and the important and delicate preparation of pressing the cuticle into place with an orange stick, tipped with absorbent cotton. The nails are then rounded with an emery board and polished first with rosy paste and then with nail cake.

More Animated Sculpture by Willie Hopkins, which are well named "Miracles in Mud," close the reel. Preparedness is his theme, and he shows us a marvelous cartoon.

AUTHOR WARMLY PRAISES WORK OF LYNN REYNOLDS.

ALICE HEGAN RICE, whose delightful stories have earned her an enviable position in the literary world, has written Lynn F. Reynolds, Bluebird director, a letter highly commendatory of one of his recent productions as follows:

"New York, Feb, 18, 1917.

"Dear Mr. Reynolds—Yesterday I saw your dramatization of 'Billy-Goat Hill' for the first time, and I want to tell you at once how much I like it. You have gotten the spirit of my book admirably, and handled the various incidents with taste and discrimination.

"The Universal people heard that I was in New York, and showed the reels for me at their studio, and I took pleasure in telling them how much I liked your work.

"Now that I know what you can do, I am asking the Century Company to send you a copy each of 'Mr. Opp' and 'Sandy,' and I want you to read them carefully and give me your opinion as to their suitability for the screen. I have had letters about them from various companies, but did not wish to take the matter up until I was certain about the firm and the director.

"Thanking you for your sympathetic handling of my story and congratulating you on its success, I am,

"Yours sincerely,

"ALICE HEGAN RICE."

BIG U AMAZES CHICAGOAN.

"THIS is one of the most wonderful enterprises I have ever seen in my life," said Harold Nichols of Chicago, who is connected with one of the large advertising firms of that city, as he walked about the stages at Universal City with his wife and Eugene Menz, assistant to General Manager Frank Barham of the Los Angeles Herald.

"I have always wanted to see pictures being made, but my conception of it was so entirely different that I am amazed, not only at the magnitude of Universal City, but at the remarkable methods employed. While it is true that you have the ideal climate and a remarkable location, the fact remains that it takes a good head to manage it all and keep everything moving with such precision."

Nichols and his wife have become so impressed with Southern California that they have decided to leave Chicago in the near future and make their home in the southland. Mrs. Nichols laughed as she said, "I suppose my husband now will want to be a moving picture star."

Many famous people have been making a spring pilgrimage to the film capital, and every one of them has endorsed the opinion that Universal City is a most interesting place.

SCENARIO IN SHORTHAND.

A DOCUMENT all in shorthand addressed to the Scenario Department at Universal City was received this week. Of course, no one in the department could decipher the hooks, dots and dashes, and the document was passed around among the stenographers in an adjoining room. One of the girls found it was written in the system of shorthand she uses, and soon finished a transcript which was returned to the head of the Scenario Department. It proved to be a complete scenario accompanied by a letter which also had been sent with it in shorthand.

What Nielson Did!

By GRATER SAYLES

NO, "U-6" is not the name of a German submarine. It's merely the key which enables the keen-eyed searcher to locate the little town of Wayne, Neb., on the Rand-McNally map of the Blackwater State.

As towns go, Wayne doesn't loom up importantly. Its population is only 2,140, but of special interest to the moving picture industry is the fact that it includes one of the livest, shrewdest exhibitors that ever owned a theatre.

His name is M. B. Nielson, and the house he runs is the Crystal. Right here let us state that the Crystal doesn't pretend to rival the Rialto of New York, or the Coliseum of Seattle in point of size and luxuriousness. As a matter of fact, you could tuck the Crystal's three hundred seats into a corner of either of the picture palaces just mentioned and then hardly know of their existence.

But if the Crystal is small, its owner is big. Big in showmanship ability, big in ideas and big in courage. He has demonstrated all this by the manner in which he, in the face of almost overwhelming odds, took hold of a dead house and in less than five months converted it into one of the most profitable theatres in Nebraska.

Nielson became the manager of the Crystal Theatre on October 27th last. At the time he took hold, the house was playing hide-and-seek with the sheriff with the strong possibility that any day would see it put out of the game. Business was bad in spite of the fact that it was the only theatre in town, and the only day upon which the then owner could expect an even break was Saturday.

On January 1st, Nielson celebrated the New Year by purchasing the Crystal—lock, stock and barrel. The progress he had made since becoming identified with the theatre was sufficiently encouraging to prompt him to take the step which would enable him to put all of his ideas into effect without hindrance.

It was to be expected that many of Nielson's friends implored him to think twice before purchasing a house that had never made a nickel for its former owner. Nielson merely grinned, however, and the moment the papers had been signed, got busy on an advertising campaign that presently made every man, woman and child sit up and take notice.

Wednesday, so far as the Crystal was concerned, had always been the bluest day of the week. The business done on that day rarely ever paid for the cost of the juice used to shoot the pictures on the screen.

Carefully studying the situation, Nielson determined to convert his blue Wednesday to Bluebird Wednesdays. An exhibitor of wide experience with features, he knew that all he needed to do in order to put Bluebirds over with his patrons was to advertise them properly.

Now, Nielson is a firm believer in the business possibilities that lie in the exercise of personality. It is his never-failing practise to personally greet every man, woman and child entering the Crystal. As the result he knows them and they know him. Best of all, they have come to regard him as a personal friend.

"The Right to Be Happy," a Bluebird based upon Dickens' immortal "A Christmas Carol," was scheduled to be shown on Wednesday, February 14th. From the day he received the confirmation of his booking, Nielson told every person visiting the Crystal of the wonderful treat in store for them in this Bluebird.

Of course, the exhibitor didn't depend entirely upon this word-of-mouth advertising. He backed it up by calling in person upon the heads of the local high-school and college (Wayne is the county seat) and to these officials he explained the nature of "The Right to Be Happy."

Like the shrewd showman he is, Nielson took care to arm himself with a copy of a letter written by the Mothers' Club of Omaha, endorsing the production. This, and other similar credentials won the good will of the educators and caused them to become boosters for the Crystal. Naturally, Nielson took pains to see that the very best element in town were informed regarding the outcome of his interview with the heads of the educational institutions and the result was that those people who had been inclined to look down upon the "movies," and to deplore their "pernicious" influence, were induced to visit the little house.

Nor did Nielson overlook the opportunity of enlisting the aid of so powerful an ally as was to be found in the Wayne Herald, the local newspaper. Advertising placed with this paper brought this about and in addition caused the editor to appoint a member of his staff as Moving Picture Editor. A department headed "Crystal News" was started, resulting in valuable publicity for Nielson.

Nielson compiled a mailing-list and used it for all it was worth. The result of all this advertising was experienced when February 14th rolled 'round. On that day, the Crystal did MORE BUSINESS THAN ON THE FOLLOWING SATURDAY WHEN A MARY PICKFORD PICTURE WAS PRESENTED!

Naturally, the success which attended the showing of this Bluebird tickled Nielson clear through. Nor did he keep his satisfaction secret. Word of the clean-up he had made on February 14th reached the ears of other Nebraska exhibitors and they wrote, asking for facts.

We have just stated that the Wayne Herald has been one of Nielson's allies. As a matter of fact, this exhibitor has had the foresight to have each production written up after as well as before its presentation. He gives two reasons for this. First, the people who have seen the picture enjoy the criticism published in the paper. Second, those people who passed it up are made to realize how good a production they missed seeing.

Not long ago, a New Jersey exhibitor absolutely refused to do any advertising in connection with his Bluebird pictures because he could book subjects released by an organization which specializes in sex stories and so do a good business without advertising.

Herein lies the difference between this short-sighted individual and Nielson. Censorship is raising its ugly snout in the New Jersey community. The different women's organizations are demanding a closer and more rigorous supervision of films presented at the local theatres. In other words, this exhibitor's policy is "I'm looking out for to-day—to-morrow can take care of itself!"

Nielson is building for to-morrow. Advertising the brand rather than the star, he is absolutely unaffected by the changes which may occur in the dramatic personnel of the Bluebird organization. Of equal importance is the fact that instead of regarding the Crystal Theatre as a serious menace to the welfare of the juvenile element in town, Wayne folks look upon the little house as a place of instruction as well as amusement. The New Jersey exhibitor's venture is built upon sand. Nielson's enterprise rests on a rock foundation.

In a recent statement, the Wayne exhibitor asserted that the people in his community do not patronize his theatre on Bluebird days because they have no other place to go, but because they can't stay away!

Of special interest to his brother exhibitors is the fact that intelligent merchandising has enabled Nielson to raise his admission price to 15c. In commenting upon this, the Wayne exhibitor said:

"The manager of a picture theatre in a small town not far from Wayne, recently told me that the people of his community absolutely refuse to pay more than a dime to see a show. IF THIS EXHIBITOR ONLY KNEW THAT HIS PEOPLE COME TO WAYNE REGULARLY EVERY WEDNESDAY AND PAY ME FIFTEEN CENTS TO SEE BLUEBIRDS, I WONDER WHETHER HE WOULDN'T BOOK THESE FEATURES AND ADVERTISE THEM AS THEY SHOULD BE ADVERTISED.

"The best proof of what I have just said," he continued, "is the fact that where I started out with a losing game, I am now COMPELLED to run matinees. If any man is inclined to doubt my statement, he's welcome to come out here and see for himself!"

In a way, Nielson's methods may be compared with the methods used by the average Japanese farmer. It is said that a Jap can throw a handful of soil over a rock and make it yield a crop. The secret of it all is patience, infinite care and "know how."

By the exercise of patience, infinite care and "know how," Nielson has succeeded in working his losing proposition up to a point where he not only gets every possible bit of revenue out of Wayne, but also makes the surrounding towns contribute to his box-office receipts.

There are hundreds—perhaps thousands—of Crystal theatres scattered throughout the country. With but few exceptions, these houses can be developed and brought to the profit-producing stage by use of the methods pursued by Nielson.

In an article entitled "Know Your People!" published in the Moving Picture Weekly some time ago, we declared that no exhibitor could hope for permanent success unless he cultivated his community as the intensive farmer cultivates his soil.

Nielson has demonstrated the truth of our assertion. Test it out in your community and see whether you cannot do what Nielson did!

HUNGARIAN ACTRESS AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

THE office of the Engaging Director at Universal City was converted into a small stage for a quarter of an hour a few days ago when Ferike Boros, the well-known Hungarian actress, gave a scene from "A Fool There Was."

Miss Boros had come to Universal City with letters of introduction to the General Manager from Daniel Frohman and Alan Dale and other luminaries in the theatrical firmament, and she had been referred to the Engaging Director. It was at her own suggestion that she gave a taste of her quality and at its conclusion she was warmly praised for her rendition of the scene.

Miss Boros has had some cinema experience in the East and is now in California for a short visit.

Bluebird Contest Won

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, Inc., feel highly elated because of the great success of their advertising contest for exhibitors of their product conducted during the month of February. So far as known, this is the first time that a motion picture corporation has encouraged exhibitors to submit their advertising ideas in competition. The purpose of the contest was to assemble the schemes and methods of advertising adopted by the various exhibitors in promoting Bluebird photoplays in their individual towns. Subsequently these ideas will be incorporated in pamphlet form and will be distributed by Bluebird to exhibitors everywhere, that each man may borrow from the ideas of his fellow workers to such extent as he may deem desirable in his own particular case.

The judges of the contest comprising the Board of Directors of Bluebird, rendered their decision March 15. As originally announced $100 was to be divided; $60 as the first prize, $40 as second, and then it was stipulated that in the event of one or more exhibitors submitting a campaign that was worthy of either of these prizes, that an additional sum would be allotted so that contesting displays of equal merit might be rewarded. It so came about that $80 in addition to the original $100 has been awarded the successful contestants. Here are the winners: Frank A. Gould, manager of the Rex Theatre, Reading, Pa., won first prize for the most ingenious and extensive general advertising campaign. Sixty dollars was the first prize. Mr. Gould was fortunate in having a week of Bluebirds to increase his opportunities for the display of his advertising genius. He devised many contests and awakened public interest in Bluebirds to a remarkable degree, giving Bluebirds the record week for his house.

Harry P. Caulfield, manager of the Garrick Theatre, Los Angeles, won second prize for general display as applying especially to billboards, the newspapers and his lobby. Because of the inventiveness Mr. Caulfield displayed, plus the elaborate and costly character of his advertising methods, Bluebird judges decided to vote a special and additional prize of $20 to the Pacific Coast showman.

Mr. E. J. O'Keefe, manager of the Cort and City Square Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., was awarded a special first prize of $60, because the judges considered his campaign so remarkable in its excellence and showmanship that it fully entitled him to share in the first prize honors.

Honorable mention for excellence of newspaper advertising and lobby display was given to G. M. Luttrell's Majestic, Jacksonville, Ill.; E. Wing's Pastime, Coshocton, O.; W.A. Kaiser's Fourth Street, Moberly, Mo.; H. M. Thompson's Griffin, Owen Sound, Can.; P. C. & E. R. McIntyre's Rose, High Point, N. C.; and W. Wock's Gay, Dauphin, Manitoba.

For the reason that the ideas of an advertising contest was exploited for the first time in February, it is remarkable that so large a number of entrants was received. The interest was widespread and the plan so entirely successful that Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has decided to establish another contest for April, details of which will later be set forth. The awards will be announced May 15 .

A Few Ways Successfully to Advertise "20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA"

WHEN Von Hornberg of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, Wash., booked "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" for one full week at his beautiful 2,100-seat house, he set out to fill every one of those seats from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. on each of the seven days.

Von Hornberg didn't wait until the picture was showing to begin his campaign on this biggest of under-water pictures. February 23d, two days previous to the beginning of the run, found an eight inch news item in the Seattle Times, headed "Exciting Battle Undersea Shown." And every day until the very last day of the successful run not a single issue of the newspapers appeared without some item in its news columns. On Sunday, the first day of the showing, the Times contained a two-column head, a reproduction of a scene from the picture and a full column story.

A full broadside was fired in the mid-week issue of the Times. The Film Page that day carried a picture of Jane Gail, star of the undersea drama. The cut was two columns wide and seven inches deep. To catch the eyes of those people who by some chance might not see this picture of the star, a two-inch news item appeared on another page.

When it came to advertising, Von Hornberg used up gallons of printers ink. Unless stone blind, every inhabitant of the far coast city was sure to read that the Liberty was going to show the thrilling bottom-of-the-sea picture. There was no possible chance of getting away from it. Von Hornberg's way of telling about "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" simply made one feel like hiking right down to the Liberty.

The day before the week's run began, the Seattle Star ran a smashing piece of advertising, a half page deep and across four full columns. To get a firm grip on the man on his way home from business, the Times was selected to carry the message every night. Monday found an 840-line advertisement telling the story; Tuesday, 336 lines; Wednesday this was increased to 560; Thursday found a 42-centimetre shot in the form of four full columns. All told, the paid advertising space totaled 5,600 agate lines or 400 inches. That's real ADVERTISING!

Each piece of copy of the entire series was a masterpiece. The illustrations reproducing scenes from the undersea picture took 80 per cent. of the space. The name of the theatre could not possibly be overlooked. Plain bold letters that stood out, immediately linked up the picture and the theatre.

When it comes to advertising and showmanship, Von Hornberg is a past master. Every exhibitor who follows his plans of campaign is dead sure to hit it right.

Another man who has made it a cardinal point in exhibiting "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" is James V. Bryson, who has the State Rights to this wonderful picture for the Middle West Territory. The order that Bryson gave the supply department of the Universal was the most staggering one ever received all in one bunch. But not satisfied with that, Bryson went to the Western Newspaper Association in Chicago and made arrangements with Wright A. Patterson to make up and deliver to his order three whole pages of publicity and advertising material in plate form, adapted to the use of any paper in the United States. These consisted of one whole page story beautifully illustrated with striking pictures and designs, a page of individual news cuts which can be used separately or in display, and a page of seven stories, one column each, which can be used on consecutive days or all in one day. This is real publicity of the most effective sort, and this way of handling it is highly recommended to any and all of the State Rights buyers of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" in any territory.

Ask J. V. Bryson of Minneapolis how he used this kind of publicity and what success he had with it.

DIRECTORS THREATEN PATON.

DIRECTOR Stuart Paton at Universal City a few days ago was threatened with expulsion, ostracism and everything from assault to murder by half a dozen other directors. The reason for the dire threats was that in the filming of the sixth episode of "The Voice on the Wire" Paton was required to set fire to the scenery, which resulted in clouds of smoke blowing over the stages.

Paton is a Scotchman with a large amount of humor and he told Director William Worthington that if he should "shuffle off this mortal coil" Worthington would be punished by having to finish the serial. Consequently, his brother director promised Paton he would have a further lease of life if he would cease smoking up the studios. Paton hurried the scenes and after the smoke had cleared away all was again serene.

JOKERITES ENACT COMEDY AT DOOR OF NESTORITES.

"HEY, why don't you go down in front of your own dressing-room if you're going to make noisy comedy?" called out Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran from the quarters of the Nestor Company at Universal City to Gale Henry and William Franey of the Universal Joker Company, who were working on a set in front of them.

"We moved down here to give you folks an idea of real comedy," chorused back the Jokerites. This was followed by a volley of fun back and forth between the two comedy companies and attracted the attention of several hundred of visitors who were watching the Jokerites film their burlesque on the Universal feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which they have entitled "20,000 Legs Under the Sea."

This comedy is what Franey calls a "Laffer" from start to finish. He is enacting the role of "Captain Nemo," while Miss Henry is the "Princess Daaker" and Milburn Moranti plays "Charles Denver." The Jokerites are filming the comedy in two reels and the marine portions are being made at Balboa, on the Pacific Coast, south of Universal City.

DIVERSION FOR UNIVERSAL ACTRESS.

AFTER finishing her work at Universal City a few days ago, Edith Roberts was driving to Los Angeles with her director, Louis Chaudet. He was going too slowly to suit the little actress.

"Why are you in such a hurry?" he asked.

"I want to get home and put on my skates," she declared, "we have a lot of fun skating on the street in front of the house."

Speaking of the incident the following day to Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the leading comedians of the company, Chaudet declared that Edith is really a child and naturally loves everything that all other young girls enjoy.

"It never occurs to her," said Chaudet, "that it seems rather funny to older people that a lady of the screen, even if she is only seventeen, would enjoy roller skating on a public thorough fare. The latest Nestor release is "Mixed Matrimony."

Superiority of Universal Serials

BEST ONE-REEL FEATURE.

Universal Film Exchange,
Newark, N. J.

Gentlemen—After exhibiting your Screen Magazine reel, I am glad to inform you how well pleased my patrons were with it. I personally asked some of them how they liked it and from their comments I can praise it as the best one-reel feature I have ever shown in my house. Will at all times be pleased to know of other "dark horses" along the line.

Thanking you for your advisability of same,

Yours for success,

BEST SERIAL.

Universal Film Co.,
Spokane, Wash.

Dear Sir—This serial, "Liberty" is sure great. It's a good box office attraction. My patrons can hardly wait for the next episode. It is one of the best serials I've ever run. It's got the punch and action to hold the audience in suspense. I would like to see more of such plays put out, it would mean more profit for the exhibitor. The greatest trouble with most of the plays that are being put out, they have too many sickening love scenes. The people get tired of them.

NOTHING LIKE IT.

Universal Film Exchange,
Denver Colo.

Gentlemen—We want to tell you what a wonderful run we had with "Liberty." Never anything like it in this history of the Princess Theatre. It's the greatest money-maker ever played here. We are more than pleased with the results.

Yours very truly,

SECOND TO NONE.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Iowa:

Gentlemen—The Universal "done something" when they released the serial "Liberty." I know, for I have run 'em all, with the exception of "The Broken Coin," and "Liberty" has done more for me than any serial since "The Master Key."

The above statement refers to what it has brought me. As to the value of the serial from an entertainment standpoint, it is second to none. If you were near the theatre on Friday, when we show it, you would hear the cheers of the younger generation, and that is always a sign of "something doing."

The success of the above-mentioned serial, in my estimation, is due to the fact that every one is like the famous 101 Bison features, and the subject is timely.

Thanking you for your co-operation, and for the excellent ways of always "getting them there" (have never been delayed as yet), I beg to remain,

Yours, very truly,

FULL OF LIFE.

Film Supply Co.,
Portland, Ore.

Gentlemen—"Liberty" is one of the best serials I have ever run. The picture is full of life and excitement from start to finish. The opening date for "Liberty" was very much against me, weather bad, and strong competition, but in spite of all "Liberty" kept increasing the box office receipts. I just ran the tenth episode to the best business yet, showing that it is gaining at that stage of the picture. Yours truly,

C. F. PERKINS,

A MONEY-GETTER.

WANTS 40 CHAPTERS.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Iowa:

Gentlemen—"Liberty" is all O. K. I wish there were forty chapters. It has averaged up to this date six hundred sold tickets, and we played last night to seven hundred. I think this is pretty good for a small town and a run-down theatre.

W. L. Price, Linden Theatre,

THANKS FOR "LIBERTY."

Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd.,
Toronto, Oont.

Gentlemen—I wish to thank you for the business I am doing with your serial "Liberty." I have run eight episodes of this serial, and cannot accommodate the people coming to see it on the two nights it is in my house. In fact, I have had to place seventy more seats in my theatre, and still feel that I could put a few more in if I had the seating capacity. This surely is a wonderful serial.

Yours very truly,
W. G. STURGESS,

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Three Weeks from This Week

"Mr. Dolan of New York." With Jack Mulhall. Sixty-third Red Feather Production. Directed by Raymond Wells. Released April 9. Jack Mulhall has become immensely popular in his Red Feather pictures. He is clean-cut, handsome, active and has a most ingratiating smile. He knows how to get his personality over, and the fans want him in the picture all the time. He has plenty of opportunity in this his latest release, written and produced by Raymond Wells. He portrays Jimmie Dolan, who has just been defeated for the middleweight championship of the world. He and his manager are in Paris, broke. They are standing in front of a pawnshop when Jimmie receives an offer to impersonate a certain prince. The prince himself is due to attend at court, where it is understood he is to marry the princess. He much prefers motoring with a lady from the Opera, and induces Jimmie to play his part. There is a beautiful love story in this fine picture, and all sorts of swift action from beginning to end. Also there is a surprise climax and a surprise ending that will tickle your fans into fits.

Harry Carey in "Hair-Trigger Burk." With Claire Du Bray. Three-reel Gold Seal Western Drama. Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released April 10. There is story, punch and pep enough in this remarkable picture for the average five-reel feature. And with it all you get the inimitable Harry Carey, a big star who has appeared in some of the greatest features ever released. Harry and a pal, having been doing a bit of stage robbing, are in hiding. They are surprised and the pal is shot. They make a get-away, and the wounded man knows he is to die. His son, who knows nothing of his father's crimes, comes west in search of him, and finds him dying. Harry gives his word that he will never let the boy know his dad's secret, and through three reels he proves what it is to be a faithful comrade. There is wonderful action, and some of the most remarkable Western stuff ever staged.

"Uncle John's Money." With George Berrell, Malcolm Blevins and Marjorie Ellison. Two-reel Rex Heart Interest Drama. Directed by George Cochrane. Released April 12. George Berrell is one of the finest character actors on the screen today. As Uncle John, who wants to find out which one of his nephews is most worthy to be mentioned in his will, he has a wonderful part. He goes to live with the one who is well-to-do, and at a reception he pretends to be intoxicated and disgraces the party. The poor brother extends timely aid, and the climax answers Uncle John's question for him in a happy manner.

"The Kidnapped Bride." With Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill. Two-reel 101 Bison Romantic Adventure Drama. Directed by Henry McRae. Released April 14. As usual, Henry is there with the punch, and Marie plays up to all the stunts in a most hair-raising manner. Marie is a foundling, and after she is grown her own family come west on a trip, and her own brother falls in love with her. She is travelling with the family, who do not know of her relationship, when Lee, thinking he is about to lose her, holds up the train, kidnaps Marie, hurries to a preacher and marries her. How her identity is discovered and what it meant to the happy young couple makes one of the strongest romantic dramas we have seen this season.

Dear Sir—It has always been my policy to give everything and everyone all of the credit that is due. The credit that is due you personally is in consideration of the fact that you so faithfully handled a machine situation for me that has proven to be entirely satisfactory in every respect. The credit due the MOTIOGRAPH machines that I am now using is due them because of their actual value to me.

For many years I used other makes of machines which I will not mention, and found that even though they gave me fairly good results they lacked the final touch of mechanical workmanship which the MOTIOGRAPH machine possesses. My operator, Mr. R. J. Clark, has demonstrated to me the fact that it is actually possible to project a more steady and nearer flickerless picture with these machines than with other machines that I have heretofore used. To my belief the material used in these machines is of the highest quality and with our all-day grind, we are almost in a position to know by this time that there is practically no wear out to this machine.

Trusting that all of your other customers are as well satisfied as I am, and wishing you continued success, I am,

Yours very truly,

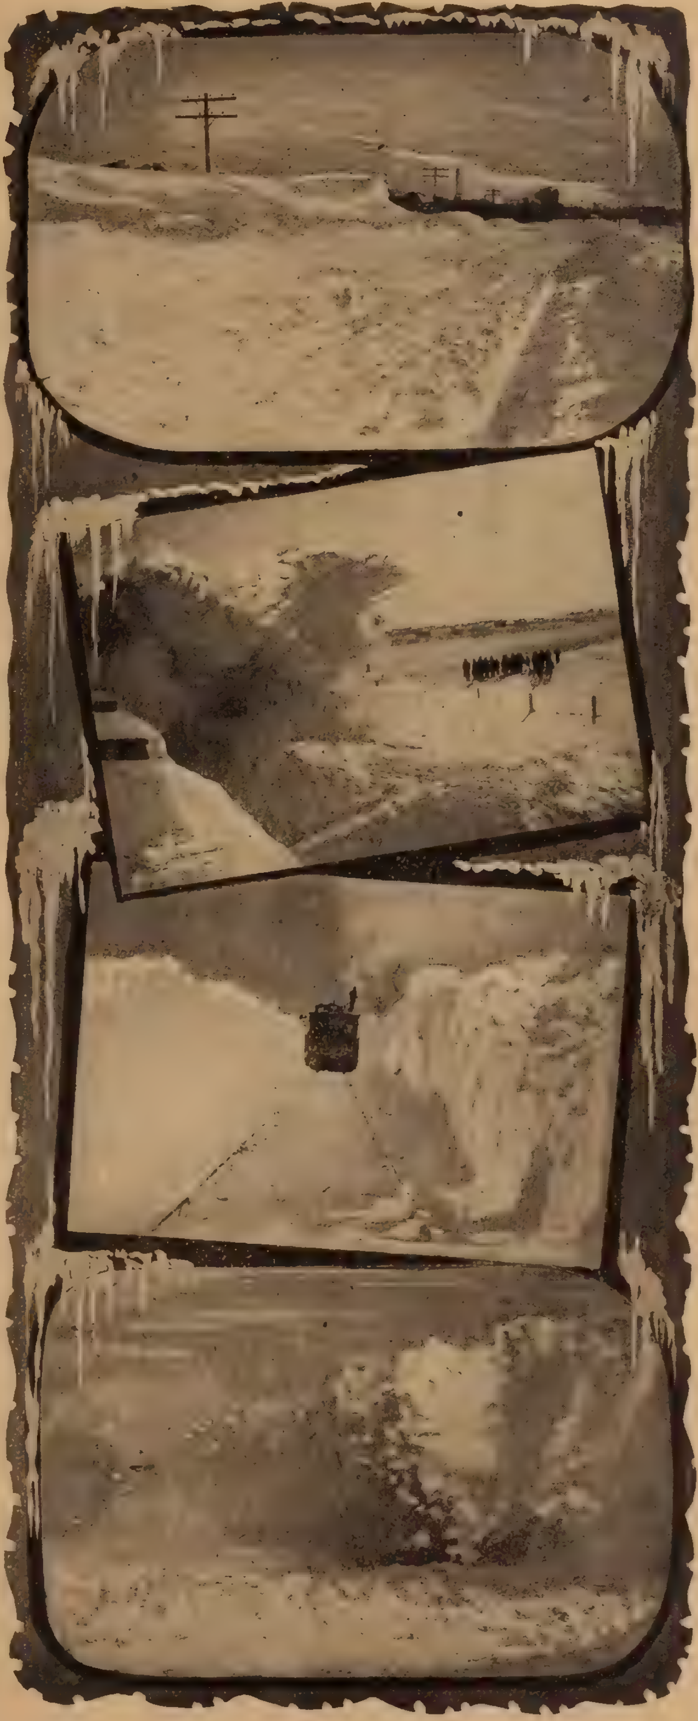
Film Exchange Operations Under Snow Drawbacks



FOR most of the exchanges the winter is about over, and hold-ups and snow drifts and intense cold is but a recollection. However, they are not forgetting it so readily in Minnesota, as the photographs on this page show. They were sent to the Moving Picture Weekly by Julius Bernheim, manager of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., of Minneapolis, and show the difficulty with which the railroads keep their right of way open through the snow drifts which are a usual accompaniment of winter in Minnesota and the surrounding territory. Snow drifts twenty feet high are not at all unusual, and strange to say, they seem to take an impish delight in heaping themselves across the railroad tracks.

The Moving Picture Weekly is fortunate in being able to present action pictures of a snow plow tearing its way through two snow drifts, and hurling snow in all directions as from a gigantic explosion. It is these gigantic billows of snow which cause such grievous disturbances of schedules and a corresponding financial loss to all exchanges in such territories.

Gentlemen—I am showing your screen magazine, and have been ever since it came out. I find it very good material to build up a program, and will say it has increased the value of my program considerably since it came out.

There is only one thing against it, and that is that it is not released often enough. I also see that you advertise for ideas, judging from the number of my patrons that request the privilege of taking a look into my projection room, I thought it would be a good idea to show them the booth and the operators at work on the screen.

The average patron does not have the slightest idea of how motion pictures are projected.

Hoping my idea will be given some consideration, I beg to remain, Very truly yours,

F. B. HAMMOND.

YOU CAN

(No. 171. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

IF there is one man whose handclasp means more to me than the warm grasp of all the world's crowned heads, it is that of the chap who has FAITH in his ability to succeed where others before him have failed, and the COURAGE to stick to the job until he has won out.

M. B. NIELSON, whose story was published in last week's issue of this magazine, is just such a man. If you haven't read how this exhibitor made a little 300-seat house, located in a town of about 2,000 population, one of the most profitable in his part of Nebraska, by all means turn to page 36 and read it NOW.

There's a world of inspiration in the story of this showman's five-month fight for existence. There's a moral in it, too, that will put hope into the hearts of exhibitors who are on the verge of giving up the battle, and backbone into the spirits of those picture theatre men who are despairingly uttering the words: "What's the use?"

Nielson won out BECAUSE HE REFUSED TO ACKNOWLEDGE FAILURE! At the time he purchased the Crystal Theatre, at Wayne, Nebr., it was as dead as a smoked herring. Yet, his courage and his faith in his ability to make good enabled him to fill the rows of seats that had been conspicuously empty.

Has it ever occurred to you that SHOWMANSHIP and GENERALSHIP are, in a way, one and the same?

DO IT!

Back in the days of the Civil War, Lee was able to put up a smashing fight for years because he knew the ground on which he was fighting better than any of the commanders opposing him. His marvelous maneuvers—maneuvers which are being imitated right now over in Europe—were mainly possible because he was not the type of man who believed in letting grass grow under his feet. Knowledge of his territory, plus his ceaseless activity, enabled this great general to hold out as long as he did.

Nielson is a man of the Lee type. He studied Wayne until he knew it better than its oldest inhabitants. He made it his business to know every man, woman and child who might be considered a possible patron and studied their likes and dislikes—catered to the latter so faithfully as to absolutely crush out of existence the prejudice against the screen in Wayne. And the campaign which finally brought success was as masterful in its way as that waged by any military commander.

You can conquer the problems that confront you if you TRY HARD ENOUGH! NIELSON-IZE YOURSELF AND SEE HOW QUICKLY SUCCESS WILL COME TO YOU!

SCENES FROM THE RED FEATHER PRODUCTION "The FLOWER OF DOOM"

With GYPSY HART & WEDGEWOOD NOWELL

Burk talks to the Kid.

"You've got nerve!"

"Don't let him know!" said Bill

HARRY CAREY

IN

"Hair-Trigger Burk"

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama, written by Eugene B. Lewis and produced by Fred A. Kelsey. A most congenial role for Harry Carey, in which he shows his remarkable prowess with a gun.

CAST.

Burk	Harry Carey
The Kid	Teddy Brooks
The "Vamp"	Claire Du Brey
Bill	Vesta Pegg
Sheriff	Bill Gettinger

THERE is a scene in this Gold Seal, written by Eugene B. Lewis and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, in which Harry Carey draws a gun so rapidly that your eyes can hardly follow it. "Do you suppose they cut the film there?" was asked even by the experts in the Universal projection room, when the picture was shown. Of course, they did not cut the film, for the biggest reason for Harry Carey's popularity with the fans is that he can always do what the character he is playing is supposed to do; and he never had a "double" for a scene in his life. Supported by Claire Du Brey, who looks magnificently handsome in the role of the dance-hall vampire, and Teddy Brooks, as the "kid," Carey draws a fine picture of the frontier character, in a story which runs like this:

Burk and his gang have just robbed the stage and are riding furiously, pursued by the sheriff and his posse. Bill is wounded and Burk stops for him. They escape down the stream, and the sheriff loses the tracks.

Bill is fatally hurt, but Burk and his men do all in their power to help him. They arrive at a small shack and lay him on the bunk. Not long afterwards, a young fellow approaches the shack, saying he is looking for his father, Bill Simmons. He is led to the bedside of the dying man, who implores Burk not to let his son know what sort of man his father really is. Bill dies, after having extracted a promise from Burk that he will care for the Kid.

Burk and the Kid start to a distant mining camp. The Kid reads a letter from his father about the Daisy May Mine, which his father seems to own. He asks Burk about it, and Burk evades the question, saying that the mine has been "pinched out."

They arrive at the mining camp and there the "Desert Vampire," a trafficer in hearts, becomes instantly interested in the Kid. Burk refuses to drink or to let the Kid drink. The "Vamp" sneers at him and threatens to shoot him, but he ignores her. The Kid, however, is greatly attracted, and when he has the chance, drinks and dances with her. He later dresses and goes down to the gambling hall while Burk is asleep. Burk wakes and goes after him; he gets the horses and they set out again.

Burk and the Kid are prospecting; but the Kid dreams of the "Vamp" and suddenly decides to return to her. Burk is unaware of this and continues his work. The Kid is welcomed by the woman and he meets Bob Hancock, the owner of the Daisy May Mine. The Kid immediately becomes suspicious. Finding that Hancock bought it, he quickly rides back to Burk and accuses him of selling the mine and keeping the money. He insinuates that Burk was the cause of Bill's death. Burk, heartsick, brings forth two bags of stolen gold, telling the Kid that this is all they ever got out of the mine. The Kid takes the gold and hastens back to the "Vamp."

The "Vamp" persuades the Kid to let her take care of the money, promising to go East with him. Then she tells Bob Hancock of the gold and the sheriff is summoned. The Kid refuses to admit that he has the loot stolen from the stage, but says it is from the sale of the Daisy May Mine. They all laugh at him. Burk arrives at the saloon unseen. He draws his revolvers and pulling the "Vamp" from her hiding place behind a door, forces her to get the gold. He gives it to Bob and, with the help of the Kid, who keeps the crowd back, backs to the door. The two of them jump quickly onto their horses and ride away, the sheriff and the saloon men firing after them.

ACTRESS ENTERTAINED BY SCHOOL GIRLS.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS, who is playing the featured lead in De Grasse's Bluebird production, "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," is a great favorite among the high school girls of Hollywood, where she makes her home. A few days ago a number of the girls gave a tea in honor of the dainty actress, and as a further mark of their appreciation of her work before the camera and her happy disposition and friendship toward them, they went in a body to one of the Los Angeles theatres to witness "The Piper's Price," in which Miss Phillips is featured. The actress plans in the near future to give a party for the girls at her Hollywood home, and has decided to accept an invitation to address their society within a few weeks.

EVEN DOGS WILL ENLIST.

DOGS have proved their usefulness in warfare on many European battlefronts. The dogs of the United States are not going to be left out. A. W. Litchfield, of Libertyville, Ill., has trained his to real warfare, and the Animated Weekly shows the results of his work. We see one of them climbing a ladder, and then running over ledges toward a wounded man. They jump high fences, carrying Red Cross bandages for use in First Aid, and defy almost any obstacle between them and the men that they are sent out to find. It has been proved that many wounded are discovered in this way, who might otherwise have been left to die of their injuries. On the battlefront there is usually no meat to spare for the dogs, so these have been trained to subsist upon wasted corn, instead of their natural food. At the end of the picture we see a close up of the animals and their trainer.

PREPAREDNESS CAMPAIGN.

SOME of the finest brains in the Western world, are being devoted to the task of arousing the United States to the necessity of preparedness, and of showing them the most effective ways of meeting the many problems. Rear Admiral Fiske, retired, was caught by the Animated Weekly cameraman as he was making a speech in New York City. It is not only the big men of our own country who are working for the all-important cause. Sir Herbert B. Ames, head of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, which has collected $35,000,000 for the support of the dependants of Canadian soldiers who are at the front, and Commodore Aemilius Jarvis, in charge of Naval Recruiting in the Dominion, are visiting us at the present time, and are speaking at public meetings to tell us how the problems of war have been met by our neighbors. They came to this country at the request of the Navy League, and spoke at two meetings in New York City, at the Banker's Club, and at the Waldorf.

"MIDDIES" BECOME ENSIGNS.

FOR the first time since the Civil War, the graduating class of the Naval Academy at Annapolis received their diplomas before the scheduled time. Class Day is still many weeks off, but the seriousness of the international situation decided the authorities to make the middies of 1917 into Ensigns without waiting for the appointed day to come. The Animated Weekly correspondent secured views of Secretary of the Navy Daniels arriving with his staff for the ceremony of graduation, and of the class drawn up to receive him. In his speech to the young men, the Secretary told them to emulate Farragut: "Damn the torpedoes! Go ahead!"

SOLDIERS OF TO-MORROW.

OUT in Chicago they are fully aroused to the necessity of naval and military preparedness, and even the schoolboys and girls have caught the martial spirit. The Animated Weekly correspondent sends in views of the high school pupils parade to show real preparedness. The boys, 150 strong, marched through the Loop in khaki uniforms, and the girls, 67 of them, followed in Red Cross dresses. They were students of the Deerfield-Shields High School of Highland Park, the first high school in the United States to accept military training. They were on their way to see motion pictures of "Heroic France," which were being exhibited for the benefit of the French War Fund.

"THE PULSE OF LIFE"

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY WITH WEDGEWOOD NOWELL AND GYPSY HART

REX INGRAM has chosen for the setting of this Bluebird photoplay, some of the beautiful scenery of the Californian coast, in contrast to the squalid dives of New York's underworld. This story was written for him by E. Magnus Ingleton, and he cast Gypsy Hart and Wedgwood Nowell for the leading roles. Miss Hart had a small role in Ingram's picture "The Reward of the Faithless," in which her work stood out with such prominence, that she was promoted to the rank of a Bluebird leading lady for this picture. She recalls Anna Pavlowa in appearance, and possesses a face upon which fleeting emotion is registered with extraordinary vividness. As Lisetta, the little Italian who longed for the world, and was so cruelly treated by it, she has a role which calls out the best that is in her. Wedgwood Nowell gives another of those finished characterizations of villainy for which he is rapidly becoming famous, and the rest of the cast are entirely adequate to the tasks set them.

It's best to be off with the old love before you are on with the new.

Lisetta, daughter of an old fisherman, Luigi Maseto, lived in a little settlement, on the shore of the Isle of Capri, off the coast of Italy. Beautiful and lovable, she was idolized by her father and her brother Domenic. There were those among her neighbors who sighed and declared that Lisetta was too ambitious to be wasting her life tending nets and keeping house for her men folks.

Very often, when alone in her father's hut, Lisetta would gaze out to sea and wonder where the passing ships went; she would dream of the great countries they would visit and, secretly, long to be away from her narrow environment and out in the great world.

When Serrani, an Italian artist, who had lived in New York, and was now home on a visit, chanced one day to see Lisetta as she sat upon a great rock overlooking the sea, dreaming of far-off lands, he made himself known to her and began at once to practice his wiles upon her. In the end Serrani prevailed upon the girl to go with him to America, leaving behind a note to her father, saying that she was weary of the life she led and longed for a change.

Soon after reaching New

Lisetta accepted the position of dancing partner to Dago Joe.

York, Serrani tires of his peasant sweetheart and casts her aside. By chance she falls under the influence of Dago Joe, frequenter of underworld cafes, and becomes his partner in dances and revelries of the eccentric type. Graham, a sculptor, in his search for models from when he might mould life-studies, discovered Lisetta in one of the cafes and secured her consent to pose for him.

In constant association with the girl Graham became enamored of her beauty and the really fine mental poise of a person from whom so very little might be expected. His love is reciprocated.

The news of Lisetta's betrayal had reached the little fishing village in Italy, and her brother journeyed to America to avenge his sister's wrongs. Through the Italian consul he located Serrani, now a prominent artist in Washington Square, and went to his studio to make Serrani pay the penalty.

When Domenic climbed through the studio window, he saw Serrani seated with his back to the light. Stealthily approaching, Domenic snatched a dagger from its resting place upon the table, struck, and left it sticking in Serrani's heart. The original ownership of the dagger was traced to Graham, who had given it to Serrani, and the sculptor was condemned to die, proof having been obtained that there had been ill-feeling between Graham and Serrani over the girl, Lisetta.

Domenic lingered in New York, earning his living as a laborer, and watched the progress of Graham's trial for the murder of Serrani. When the day approached for Graham's execution, Domenic's conscience began to smite him, and finally, at the eleventh hour, he hurried to a police station and confessed his crime, thus saving Graham from execution.

Her experience in America has been so distracting and her heart was so full of disappointment and grief that Lisetta decided to go back to the little fishing village in Italy from whence she came. There Domenic joined her, after he had served a prison term as punishment for his vengeful crime.

Their old father had died, and now they sat together on the rocky coast and watched the ships sailing out into the unknown, no longer envying them, but thankful for a refuge in the backwaters of life.

Graham, meantime, returns to his original love, Molly, a girl of his own class, and no longer seeks his models in the underworld.

INDIAN SONGBIRD AT U. CITY.

PRINCESS TSAININA REDFEATHER, the noted Indian interpreter of songs which have been written around tribal melodies of the American Indian, was an interested visitor this week at Universal City, being accompanied by Charles Wakefield Cadman, the famous American song writer, his mother and a party of friends from the East. Mr. Cadman and the princess have just finished an extensive tour of the East, during which the latter sang the Cadman Indian songs to accompaniments played by the composer. While at Universal City they found an old friend in the person of Bluebird Director William Worthington, formerly an opera singer of note and an accomplished musician. The result was that the Cooper-Hewitts had to be turned off for a few moments while the friends had a talk about music and the allied arts.

Jack Mulhall of New York

Two pictures of the young athlete who is being starred in his own right.

JACK MULHALL is a true product of Little Old New York. A brown-haired, blue-eyed, twenty-six-year-old, of Irish parentage, born within sound of the crowds of its Great White Way, educated at its public schools and Columbia University. He even had his first experience of the stage in the old town, with the West End Stock Company, which used to hold forth near Broadway, somewhere in the Thirties, and where he was in a fair way to become a matinee idol. But pictures began to interest the young chap, who has been an athlete all his life, and is a swimmer, horseman, oarsman, boxer and expert fencer. When your greatest joys are in the great outdoors, why elect a career which must be followed within four walls? When pictures begin to call to a boy of this kind, "he won't never heed naught else." Into the movies he plunged, with the old Biograph, and remained until they shut up shop, when he went over to the biggest producing concern in the universe. That was last May, and he at once began to appear in the "support" of various women stars, Ruth Stonehouse and Flora Parker De Haven among them. But Jack is not the sort to remain anybody's leading man for very long. He's apt to do the leading himself, if there is any going on; and when the powers that be discovered that he was making a habit of running away with the honors in a picture, they decided to turn him over to Raymond Wells, and let them do their worst together. Their worst is most remarkably good and presently we were reading on the front of theatres, "Jack Mulhall in 'The Terror,'" or in "Mr. Dolan of New York," instead of the derogatory, "With Jack Mulhall" after somebody's else name. So Jack is now a full-fledged star in his own right, and his latest picture, "The Hero of the Hour," is so good that it is being released as a special attraction.

"The Signet Ring"

ADVENTURE Number Six of the series, "Perils of the Secret Service," written and produced by George Bronson Howard, with Kingsley Benedict starred.

CAST.

Alida Astaire	Warda Lamont
Yorke Norroy	Kingsley Benedict
Huntley	Jay Belasco
Von Zyl	Fred Harrington
Peyton Carr	Willard Wayne

THE most ingenious plot of the series, "Perils of the Secret Service," which was written and produced by George Bronson Howard, is presented in the sixth adventure, calleded "The Signet Ring." Kingsley Benedict does some fine work as Yorke Norroy, in a tale which has particular timeliness just now, when international spying is the theme of greatest interest in the newspapers. Fantastic as these things seem, the stories of the machinations of foreign agents, which appear in even the most conservative journals every day, outrival them in wildness, and prove once more the old adage that truth is stranger than fiction. Here is an outline of the clever plot of this adventure:

Peyton Carr, a young naval officer, and the inventor of the Carr submarine, which is expected to revolutionize undersea warfare, has committed suicide, because of his love for Alida Astaire, the most dangerous woman in Europe. She has in some way caused the death of several prominent men of different nations. The plans of Carr's invention have been stolen from his room by Alida and she sells them to the Saxonians at a fabulous price.

Yorke Norroy, Chief of American Secret Service Agents, is called on the case. Making believe to Alida that he is in love with her, he discovers her fear of being shot as a traitor because of the war, which has just broken out. He gives her a curious signet ring which he tells her will protect her anywhere among Englishmen. Later, he sends a message written in the Saxonian code, to the Chief of the Saxonian spies, informing him that there will be a traitor at their meeting that night.

When it is dark, Norroy, Huntley and several men surround the house in which the meeting of the Saxonians is taking place. They break into the room and threaten to spare no one. Alida, not recognizing Norroy, because of his mask, sees on his finger a signet ring similar to the one she is wearing. She displays hers and begs for protection from Norroy, who allows her to leave the room. Then he confronts the Saxonians with "Have I proved there was a traitor among you?"

Alida rushes frantically to Norroy's flat. He treats her very coldly and taunts her with her affair with Peyton Carr and the other men. He leads her to the window, where she sees Von Zyl and his men waiting like tigers crouched for their prey. She begs for mercy. He is at first cruel and hard, determined to show mercy to her as she showed it to Peyton Carr, but at the last moment he weakens and allows her to leave through the back entrance. When she has left, full of hope, Norroy looks into the mirror and calls himself bad names for his clemency.

HEALTHY PIANO MOVEMENT.

WHEN eleven directors at Universal City ordered pianos for their productions—all on the same day, something that has never occurred before at the Big U. studios—the manager of the "prop" rooms, literally speaking, "went up in the air."

"Eleven pianos all at once and we have only six!" he exclaimed. "That puts us strictly up against it."

The serenity of the boss of the property rooms, however, was disturbed only for an instant, for he set himself to the task of arranging tactfully with the various directors so that his corps of able assistants were enabled to keep all six pianos working for the eleven company heads.

The constant switching of the musical instruments from one set to another caused the production manager to remark to a visiting newspaper representative, "Here's a business note for you, 'A good healthy movement in pianos at Universal City to-day.'"

RUTH CLIFFORD'S HOURS OF SLEEP REVERSED.

"I ALWAYS had been brought up to believe that beauty sleep comes between the hours of nine and twelve at night," said dainty Ruth Clifford, who is playing at Universal City the leading role in the five-reeler, "Eternal Love."

"But my director was in a hurry to complete his production, and one morning I had to be made up at eight o'clock and we finished the picture at three o'clock the following day. By four o'clock I was at home and in bed; at five-thirty I was called for dinner, and I went back to sleep by nine-thirty that night. I did not awaken until noon the next day. Perhaps I did lose on the question of beauty sleep, but the law of average prevailed and consequently I made up for lost sleep even if it was at the wrong time."

The hand approaches nearer and nearer. "Is it all right, Polly?" asked Shirley.

"The Voice On The Wire"

HERE is the fifth episode of the great mystery serial, and we have no more idea than you who the "Voice" really is. This chapter of the story by Eustace Hale Ball, produced by Stuart Paton, is called "The Spectral Hand."

CAST.

John Shirley	Ben Wilson
"Red" Warren	Francis McDonald
Capt. Cronin	Howard Crampton
John Carns	Frank McQuarrie
Dr. Renolds	Joe Gerard
Polly Marion	Neva Gerber

THE fifth episode of the great serial, written by Eustace Hale Ball, and produced by Stuart Paton, with Ben Wilson starred, is called "The Spectral Hand," and brings the mystery no nearer solution. Ben Wilson, as the detective, John Shirley, is shown in his most determined effort so far to save the life of the threatened victim, John Carns. We discover that there is an old secret connected with the life of the victims in Paris, years before the story opens, but we are given no inkling of what the story may be.

After the discovery of the mysterious death of John Vance, Shirley, Cronin and several other men are sitting at the breakfast table when John Carns is announced and asks to see Vance. Upon seeing the corpse of his friend, Carns screams and mutters, "Paris! Paris! Paris!"

By the list of persons condemned by the "Voice," Shirley sees that John Carns' name follows that of Vance. He determines to keep Carns in his own home to try to prevent further disaster.

Two detectives are sent to "Red" Warren's home, but find no one there, they enter and are puzzling over the phone's being disconnected when but a few minutes before, Shirley had been called and had been answered over this very instrument, when Warren, his hunchback and a crook, taking them by surprise, make them prisoners.

Shirley becomes alarmed because of the non-appearance of the two men and sends Cronin after them. Arriving at "Red's" before he can be seized, Cronin, too, is taken prisoner.

Warren receives a mysterious message over the phone which informs him that Carns must be "gotten" no matter what it costs, even though Shirley is keeping him in his own home.

At midnight, Shirley, Dr. Renolds and a detective are still vigilantly guarding Carns. Each man holds a revolver in readiness for any emergency that may arise.

Slinking around the house of Shirley, are "Red" and his accomplices. In spite of all their strategy and mysteriousness, they are as yet unable to get Carns.

Suddenly the window curtains of the room where Polly is guarding Carns begin to move. We see the hand enter, and grope to the key, which is turned in the lock. Polly sees the hand, and cries out to Shirley, who is seated with drawn revolver outside the door. The hand hovers over the breast of Carns, while Polly batters at the door, and Shirley, seizing a chair, pounds on the panels. Below stairs, Doctor Renolds jumps to his feet, and leaves the room through an open window. We see the muffled figure in the garden, and the episode closes with the scene in the bedroom. Will Shirley get the door open in time?

PRESIDENT LAEMMLE HOST TO CHICAGO CUBS' OWNERS.

PRESIDENT CARL LAEMMLE of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company a short time ago was the host of the managing directors of the Chicago Cubs, who came to Universal City with the other members of the party to witness the spring training of the ballplayers. The guests of honor were A. D. Lasker, Charles F. Weeghman, A. D. Plamandon, W. M. Walker, Adolph Spielman and their families.

Mr. Laemmle took his guests to the animal arena, where they witnessed Director Henry McRae film scenes for his current photoplay, "In African Wilds," featuring Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict.

Upon their departure for Pasadena the members of the party told President Laemmle it was the most enjoyable day they had spent since their arrival in California.

DAN RUSSELL ADOPTS LAMB.

DAN RUSSELL is emulating Maud Muller with the greatest success in this picture. Ever since he shaved off his mustache for "Ring Rivals," Dan has been working in this innocuous guise, and he says that it has changed his disposition completely. Gone is his aggressive Hibernianism. A gentle, lovable, sweetness has taken its place, and you can see by the expression of the lamb that the timid creature has not the least fear of the one-time "Irish Terror." About the only relic of his nationality is his insistence that the feather in his Simple Simon cap shall be of a pure pea-green.

It is the two Smiths, Noel and Dick, who are responsible for the chance in Dan. They have insisted between them in turning him into a wingless, haloed angel, and as they have the entire direction of the company of which he is the ornament and the delight, he has been forced to leave his character in their hands. It will be curious to see whether his screen admirers will appreciate the change in him.

"I have played almost every type of human that there is," says Dan, "but I hardly expected, at my time of life, to return to the 'down on the old farm' sort of boy. However, it's all in the day's work, as the huntsman said when the lion ate him."

MOTHER OF FOUR LOVES THE MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY.

MRS. EDNA REMMELE is the mother of these two sunny youngsters, who by the way, are twin girls, and were born a year ago—and two other children. Their home is in Adrian, Michigan. In spite of the fact that her four merry-makers keep her time well occupied, she never overlooks the Moving Picture Weekly, to which she is a subscriber. She reads the book thoroughly from cover to cover, and does not fail from time to time to write a commendatory note of her interest in the magazine. In fact, she says that it adds to the joy of living. She is a great movie fan, too, and is teaching her children to follow in her footsteps.

HERE ARE THE "VOICES ON THE WIRE."

THE company which is producing the mystery serial, "The Voice on the Wire" is working so hard at it, that they decided the other day to have a permanent monument of their industry. So they all lined up before the camera, and here is the result. Stuart Paton, the director, sits in the middle, almost hidden behind his goggles. Neva Gerber is at his left, and Ben Wilson at his right. Directly behind his chair are Joe Girard, Francis MacDonald and Howard Crampton, who have important roles in the serial, and grouped around them are the various police officers, rogues and victims whose adventures make up the thrilling story. Last, but not least, are the two cameramen, and the members of the orchestra, who provide "shivvery" music for the maneuvers of the disembodied hand which performs all the mysterious crimes which make this a unique serial.

The entire company of the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," lined up for the camera with Stuart Paton seated in the centre and Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber on either side.

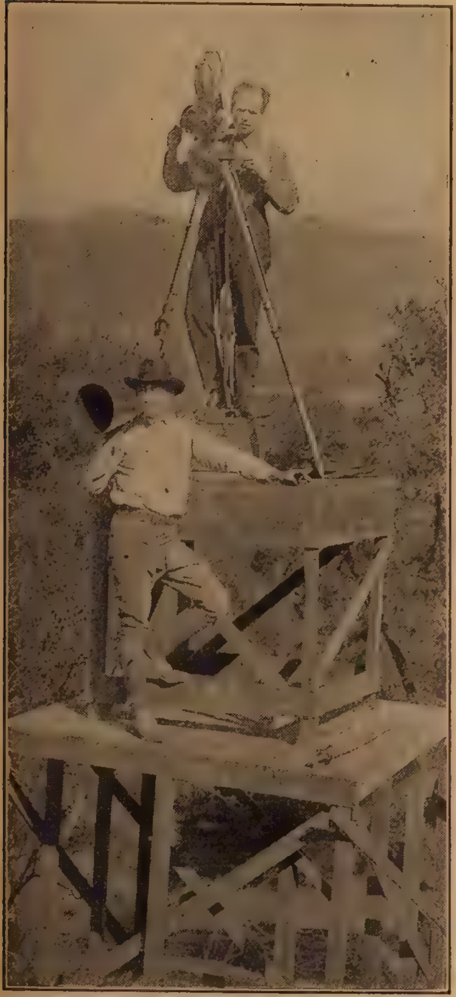
Pioneer Tin Lizzie, the most treasured possession of the Joker Company.

HOLUBAR FILMING BATTLE SCENES.

THE great public is always interested in "how they do it in the movies." Here is a picture which shows how Allan Holubar directed his striking battle scenes in a coming Bluebird, called "Treason." A high platform, or rather two, was erected overlooking the place chosen for the conflict, and the cameraman was stationed, somewhat precariously on the top of it, with his trusty machine. The director, armed with his megaphone, stood on the "first story," and gave his directions to the huge numbers of actors and extra men who were engaged for the scenes.



How Allan Holubar directed the battle scenes in "Treason," coming Bluebird.

GALE HENRY AND THE PIONEER ELECTRIC OF THE PACIFIC COAST.

ONE of the treasured possessions of the Joker Company is Gale Henry, and the other is her Tin Lizzie, the pioneer electric of the Pacific Coast, which is almost as remarkable in its way as she is herself. They were both constructed upon a model now extinct.

Gale is the only person who understands the idiosyncrasies of the machine, so she is the only one who is allowed to run it. They trotted it out for use in a recent Joker, and it made the hit of the piece. The entire company lined up in and around it, and were photographed as a souvenir of the occasion. William Franey occupied the place of honor beside the "chauffeuse," Charles Conklin was posed gracefully at its side, and Milburn Moranti was grouped picturesly in the background. When the scenes were made, the relic was carefully lead back to the Joker property room, and covered with a large tarpaulin, from whence it may emerge again when a Joker script is found which is worthy of its appearance.

NEW PERILS FOR KINGSLEY BENEDICT.

"OUT of the frying-pan into the fire"—Kingsley Benedict has grown so accustomed to danger since his appearance in "The Perils of the Secret Service," that he has welcomed the chance to play in a wild animal drama, under the direction of Henry McRae.

"I've never done anything so interesting in my life," he declares; "there is something fascinating about it, and I should just as soon continue to work with lions, tigers and elephants. It looks hazardous, but everything is done for the safety of the player."

"Mr. Dolan of New York"

WITH JACK MULHALL

RED FEATHER Photoplay, written by Fred Myton and produced by Raymond B. Wells, with Jack Mulhall starred in the role of a lightweight champion, seeking his fortune in Europe.

"Spider" is counted out.

CAST.

Jimmy Dolan	Jack Mulhall
Thomas Jefferson Jones,	Noble Johnson
Alicia	Julia Ray
Count Conrad	Al. McQuarrie
The King	Harry Mann
Prince Frederick	Ernest Shields
Mlle. D'Orsay	Grace Maclean
"Spider" Flynn	Francis MacDonald

Jimmy cures the King's indigestion.

JACK MULHALL is certainly a comer, and in Raymond B. Wells he seems to have found a most sympathetic director. Their latest production is called "Mr. Dolan of New York," and was written for them by Fred Myton. It is one of the mythical principality stories which have taken place in the modern world, of the fairy tales which were popular when the race was younger. But a thoroughly up-to-date touch is given to the story by making the hero a prize-fighter, who takes advantage for the Parisian craze for American boxing—a conspicuous feature of French life before the present war—to seek his fortune in Europe. How he finds it, and the unusual form in which it comes to him, make a comedy drama in which the laughs come thick and fast.

Jack finds the role of the young fighter most congenial, and he is supported by a fine cast, in which Nobel Johnson, as his trainer, and Harry Mann, as the little fat king, who became a convert to the strenuous life, shine very brightly. Julia Ray is a newcomer to Red Feathers, and one who will be welcomed. Here is a synopsis of the events in the story:

Jimmy Dolan, profiting by the Parisian craze for American boxing, with Thomas Jefferson Jones, his trainer, had just been defeated in a fight with "Spider" Flynn, who had fought Jimmy so many times that it had become a habit. Jones had bet their whole bank role on the battle and was now despondent.

Twenty-four hours from Paris, in the little principality of Konigstadt, lived a King and his ward, Countess Alicia, a beautiful girl who was courted by Count Conrad, the King's nephew. Alicia would not listen to him in regard to marriage, although she liked him well enough.

The King received word that Prince Frederick was to pay them a visit and, hearing that he was seeking a wife, he became very enthusiastic, thinking of Alicia, whom he loved with paternal affection.

Count Conrad received a message from the Prince asking him to come to a certain cafe to meet him, and there Conrad found Frederick in company with a Mlle. D'Orsay, with whom, he was told, the Prince had made arrangements to travel. He begged Conrad to say he was stricken with scarlet fever and could see no one for two months. The Count consented, but immediately was struck with an idea and planned to be revenged on Alicia.

Jones and Jimmy had pawned their last valuable and entered the cafe to indulge in something to eat. There the Count saw Jimmy, and, calling him to his table, offered him twenty thousand francs if he would impersonate Prince Frederick, gain Alicia's consent to their marriage and thus humiliate her. Urged by Jones, Jimmy accepted the proposition and Conrad began to teach him courtly manners. Jones was to play the role of an Arabian bodyguard to Jimmy.

Led by Conrad, Jimmy and Jones were presented to the King and to Alicia, and though Jimmy's language was rather queer they had been warned by the Count of the Prince's eccentricities. He and Alicia were promptly interested in each other. Jimmy told funny stories to them and cured the King's indigestion.

Some days later, Jones and Jimmy read in the newspaper about "Spider" Flynn's being the champion of all Europe and both were very indignant. He sent Flynn an insulting message, challenging him to another battle, and Flynn immediately accepted.

The King decided to call on Jimmy informally, and found Jones and his friend boxing. Encouraged by Jimmy, the King took to boxing and had a gymnasium built in the palace.

Meanwhile, Prince Frederick and Mlle. D'Orsay had quarrelled. He hurried to Konigstadt and arrived there the evening of a dance given in honor of Jimmy. Jones saw him at the hotel, and with Jimmy's help tied him in a chair. The Prince escaped and rushed to tell the King of the outrage. He at last managed to make himself known to the King, who realized that Jimmy was an imposter.

The big fight was on between Jimmy and "Spider" Flynn. A great crowd had gathered for the affair and among them were the King, Alicia and the Prince. After a hard struggle Jimmy defeated Flynn and the King was one of the first to congratulate him. Then he pointed to Alicia and Jimmy vaulted over the rope to her. The King watched them with a smile. The King looked from Alicia to Jimmy, saying there was a Count's title vacant in Konigstadt and that he hadn't had a good boxing match since Jimmy left. Jimmy was stunned with delight.

Prince Frederick.

"Do what I tell you and I'll make your fortune," said Conrad.

Count Conrad and Alicia, the King's ward.

CAREY BUYS RURAL HOME.

HARRY CAREY, who is featured in Western stories at Universal City under the direction of Fred A. Kelsey, has tired of the city life with what he calls its humdrum artificial existence.

A few days ago while his company was working in the neighborhood of Newhall, a few miles from Universal City, Carey purchased an attractive piece of land with a house, stables and a corral already built upon it. The actor has moved to what he terms "rural simplicity," taking with him his collection of dogs and his horses. In addition he purchased an automoble so that he can make the trip back and forth with ease. Carey appears on this week's program in the Gold Seal "Hair-Trigger Burk."

RAISED TO LEADS IN HER SECOND PICTURE

Neva is rescued from the opium joint by Harvey. Scene from "The Flower of Doom," next Red Feather.

WHEN Rex Ingram produced "The Reward of the Faithless" for the Bluebird Photoplays, he used, for a small part in some of the Russian scenes, a girl whose face was new to all the Bluebird officials. She did not have much to do. She stood in the background, in the scenes which were filmed in a little Russian eating house, frequented by the artist-hero; smoked cigarettes with all the airs of an inhabitant of Greenwich Village; shook her bobbed locks; and smiled a crooked smile at the habitues of the place. But little as she had to do, she made an impression, for her face was a type quite out of the ordinary run of motion picture actresses. More than any one else, she resembled Anna Pavlowa, in the days when the Russian Ballet first ventured from the fastnesses of Petrograd, and she danced her way straight into the hearts of the audiences of the Western world.

Many inquiries unearthed the information that the girl with the unusual personality was one Gypsy Hart, and that she would soon be seen in a larger role. And when the Bluebird picture, "The Pulse of Life" appeared, it was discovered that she had been given the lead. Then Rex Ingram undertook the production of the sinister-named "Flower of Doom," and he again chose Gypsy Hart to play the lead for him. As "Neva Sacon" she has the role of a dancer in a cabaret, to whom the wealthy "Savinsky" (played by Wedgwood Nowell), is devoted. He gives her a ring which later leads to her rescue from an opium joint in which she has been kidnapped. Millard K. Wilson plays the part of the reporter, Harvey Pearson, who falls in love with the dancer, and marries her in the end of the play, after she has been rescued.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER IN THE SAME PICTURE

"THEY only do it in the movies," is the caustic comment of the high-brow when the screen actress is forced by the exigencies of the script and the agencies of "double exposure" to play herself and her own mother in the same picture. Ella Hall has done plenty of dual characterizations in her time. Her last Bluebird, "Polly Redhead" was a film of this kind; but her next, "A Jewel in Paawn," will show a departure from the usual thing.

Her own really truly mother will play the role of her screen parent, and if you miss the introduction of the characters, you will know it at once, for there never was a stronger likeness between two women. Ella Hall is just her mother over again, only twenty years younger.

In "A Jewel in Pawn," which was written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, and produced by Jack Conway, Miss Hall is starred, and

"The Eyes in the Dark"

IMP Two-Reel Drama, with Leah Baird in the leading role. A tale of the occult power of Oriental priests on the trail of a stolen sacred ruby.

The sinister face watches the unconscious possessor of the sacred stone, who has no idea of its history.

THE EYES IN THE DARK" is the provocative title of the Imp two-reel drama, which features Leah Baird. The old idea of a jewel stolen from the forehead of an idol in a heathen temple of the Far East, has been used in a theme for a picture which taxes even the resources of the motion picture camera. The handling of the sinister eyes which follow the unconscious possessor of the jewel is tremendously impressive, and will bring a thrill to the most sophisticated. Here is the story:

Gerald Mortimer, a tourist in the Far East, steals a ruby from a temple. He sails on a liner bound for New York. Mortimer is troubled with his heart and, in addition, is frightened by the fact that he is being followed by two Orientals. An evening later, he dies in his deck-chair after giving the ruby to Watson, a friend.

Watson arrives in New York. He visits his sweetheart, Margaret, and shows her the stone, telling of his adventure. As he talks his gaze wanders to the window. He observes two eyes fastened upon him. Snatching the ruby from Margaret, Watson leaves. On his way home he narrowly escapes death by some falling bricks.

Arriving home, he finds his butler transfixed with terror. Unable to get a rational explanation, he retires to his room and turns down the lights. The door opens; he sees two eyes looking at him from the foot of the bed; he fires, but the eyes remain. Watson turns on the lights; no one is present. The next morning Watson tells two friends who call about the ruby. One of them—Prince—determines to get the ruby for himself.

An evening later Watson, his sweetheart and Prince go to the Cafe. Margaret wears the ruby. During the evening the lights are suddenly turned off; there is a wild scramble. When the lights are turned on, Margaret has disappeared along with the ruby. Watson rushes to his home.

Meantime, the Orientals get Margaret to their room. To their astonishment, the ruby is not on her breast. Where it lay is a red mark. They then force her to telephone to Watson, asking him to come to her assistance. Watson is trapped. Both prisoners assert they know nothing of the ruby.

The Orientals then use their occult power. A vision is presented and in it they see one of the friends—Prince—snatching the ruby as the lights go off in the cafe. The Oriental priests visit Prince in his home and after a terrific fight manage to take the stone from him. They then return to their rooms. Watson, in the meantime, manages to 'phone the police. However, the priests escape with the ruby. Watson and Margaret are set free. The last scene shows a vision of the temple and the ruby being restored.

AND "GAS" STILL AVIATING.

THE rainy season practically having come to an end, Universal City has become again a bustling beehive of increased activity. Of the twenty-six companies, more than twenty are in constant operation. Some days find most of the companies in Los Angeles, Hollywood, Pasadena and at the beaches, or on the desert at Oxnard and the transportation department is taxed to its limit daily.

The highest number of machines sent out one day during the past week was sixty-two, and among them were six sightseeing cars, carrying fifty passengers each, more than 700 people being transported to the various outside locations.

PALMER NOW U. SCENARIOIST.

FREDERICK PALMER, one of the best known scenario writers of the film colony of Los Angeles, is now supplying comedies for Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, stars of the Universal Nestor Company, in collaboration with C. B., or "Pop" Hoadley. Palmer joined the Universal Scenario staff this week after nearly three years with the Keystone Film Company, where he held the position of assistant managing editor. Previously to this Palmer wrote many film comedies and dramas as a free-lance while located in Los Angeles as editor and publisher of the Rounder, for many years the representative theatrical journal of the West.

Palmer was born in New York, where he was educated. Entering newspaper work, he was associated with Eastern dailies, later forsaking the pen for the grease-paint and spending a number of years on the stage, appearing in vaudeville and drama. While "on the road" Palmer found time to gather much material which he has used in the preparation of many short stories that have appeared in various magazines and newspapers throughout the country.

While publishing the Rounder Palmer's editorials attracted considerable attention among members of the theatrical and motion picture profession and were widely copied in this country.

MANAGERS' AND EXHIBITORS' DEPARTMENT

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, Ont.—Mr. J. A. Morrison, proprietor of the Star Theatre, Meaford, Ont., has disposed of his business to Mr. L. G. Weir, of Seaforth, who will take possession about the first of June. The new proprietor has been in the business for a number of years and intends giving the movie fans of Meaford a brand-new line of pictures.

The Kings Playhouse Theatre in Toronto is using a unique idea to build up two of the weak nights, also to counteract some unusually stiff competition. The idea consists of a beauty and popularity contest, being conducted with the assistance of the publicity service department of the Universal Film Co. The theatre is trying to discover who is the prettiest and most popular girl in the section immediately surrounding the house, and for this reason is conducting the contest. Every patron of the house is entitled to a vote and the ballots are issued for this purpose. At certain periods of the contest the young lady's photo is shown on a slide and also exhibited in front of the house. At the conclusion of the contest there are two or three prizes being offered to the winner, and there is no doubt the Universal Company will see that the lucky girl will receive considerable publicity, which may mean much to her in future.

Moving picture fans in Kitchener, Ont., have heard with regret that Manager "Pop" Phillips has sold his interest in the Grand and Theatorium, and will shortly retire from the amusement circle of the above city. Mr. Phillips' interest in the above theatres has been purchased by Mr. H. H. Jennings, formerly owner of the Mary Pickford Theatre, Toronto.

Nova Scotia is threatened with a War Tax on theatre tickets similar to that effected in Ontario. At present its provisions are as follows: 1c. Tax on all 5c. tickets, 2c. on 10c. tickets, 3c. on all 15c. tickets, 4c. on 25c. tickets, 5c. on tickets 25 to 50c, 10c. on all tickets over 50c.

In a leading article on the subject, the Halifax Herald knocks the idea with considerable vigor and points out that since prohibition has been in effect in the Province, the moving picture theatres have claimed large numbers of soldiers in the town, as well as their wives and families, much to the betterment of the community, both financially and morally.

Halifax has assumed new importance as a Canadian city and seaport, owing to the recent regulation of the British Government to make it the point of call and examination instead of Falmouth, England.

Owing to this fact, the city is always filled with soldiers passing through on route for the front or stationed for garrison duty. Sailors also throng the city from patrol boats and British warships. Naturally the great influx of population has been a big boom to the moving picture house, especially in view of prohibition, as pointed out by the Herald.

"The Prisoner of Love"

FINAL EPISODE OF

"The Purple Mask"

THE big serial, written and produced by Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, comes to an end, as all things must, and Pat renounces masks of all colors forever.

CAST.

Grace Cunard as	Patricia Montez
Francis Ford as	Detective Phil Kelly
Pete Gerald as	His Assistant
Jerry Aash as	Another Assistant
Jean Hathaway as	Patricia's Aunt

EVERYTHING must come to an end in this world, even a Ford and Cunard serial, though the fans usually beg that they may be extended. In Episode Sixteen, called "The Prisoner of Love," the adventures of "The Purple Mask" come to their logical conclusion and Pat consents to become Mrs. Phil Kelly and give up masks forever. There is no let up in the excitement because this is the last chapter, and the adventures of Kelly and the Purple Mask continue to be thrilling until the very last scene.

Pete Gerald as Kelly's assistant.

Her mask is off for good.

When the excitement had subsided somewhat, the officials placed Pat in an ambulance that had been called from a somewhat distant hospital. The anarchists had all made good their escape from the scene of the explosion, but some of them remained in the vicinity to complete a further purpose they had hurriedly planned. The Chief of the Secret Service, still insensible, was placed in the ambulance along with Pat, and the drive to the hospital began.

Upon arriving at a spot favorable for the anarchists' purpose, the ambulance was waylaid and Pat was kidnapped from the vehicle. The hospital attendant and the ambulance driver were bound to one of the wheels and the anarchists hurried away with their girl captive. Pat was carried by her captors to a hut on the end of a lonely pier and there locked up.

Meanwhile, Phil Kelly, back from Washington with word that Pat was to be released, was told of her adventure at the Frenchman's hut. When he hastened to the hospital, he found the ambulance had not returned and hurried off to search for the girl, depending upon his detective intuition to locate her. He believed the anarchists would go to the waterfront, and followed there. Taking rowboats, Kelly and his assistants searched under the piers.

When Pat had time to take in her surroundings, she discovered a life-preserver in the room under the dock where she had been confined. There was a pot of paint and a brush handy, and on this she wrote a message for help, telling where she was being detained. Then she dropped the life preserver through a trap door in the floor, and it fell in the quiet waters under the pier.

Kelly, in searching, discovered the life preserver, and hurried to Pat's relief. He found a ladder that led from the water up to the trapdoor in the planking above, and climbed up. When he left his skiff, he forgot to tie it, and the boat drifted away. Kelly discovered that Pat's captors had tied her in a canvas bag. It was their purpose, she had heard them

DAN RUSSELL

in

"RING RIVALS"

L—KO Two-Reel Komedy, starring Dan Russell, in the role of "The Irish Terror," and directed by Noel and Dick Smith.

CAST.

Dan, the Irish Terror	Dan Russell
Battling Bull	Dick Smith
Hot Dog Hattie	Gladys Roach

THIS is the comedy for whose sweet sake Dan Russell sacrificed his dear little, dinky little mustache. Oh, Art! Art! what crimes are committed in thy name! This pugilistic phantasy was directed by Noel and Dick Smith, who may be seven hundred and seventy-second cousins, according to the book of the tribe of Smith. But if they are, they don't know it. What are the ramifications of the Smith family to men who have the grim task of making the public laugh? They got a good start when they put Dan into a typical Western make-up, for he's worth double the price of even a war-time admission. This is what happens to him, in his pursuit of the distractingly handsome Hot Dog Hattie.

Dan, the Irish Terror, is attracted by the charms of Hot Dog Hattie, but she does not care for him, as her affections are set upon Battling Bull. Both are members of the Stock Yards Athletic Club, and Dan sends Bull a challenge, which is accepted. A curly-haired poodle is the messenger. The fight is fixed for a certain date and both commence to train.

Dan decides to get a line on Bull's work. He goes to his training quarters, climbs up on a box and peeps through the transom. What he sees there disconcerts him so much that he kicks the box away from under him. The Bull sees him and shuts the transom on his fingers. Dan comes swaggering out, and his appearance is so formidable that all who see him make a dive for the man hole in the middle of the street.

The day of the fight arrives. Dan has arranged for some dirty work, which fails to operate against Bull, and Dan is knocked out. Dan sneaks away from the ring, passing the guy who is handling the gate receipts. Dan slugs the man and makes off with the dough. He takes it to Hattie, shuts her up in her own hot-dog booth, and pushes it off down the steep grade of the street. He clambers on top of it and dresses himself there. The booth falls over a bank, and Dan rescues Hattie from the ruins. They are chased, but he manages to board a Western-bound train with her. Bull finds a lone hot dog which tells him of her fate.

Out West, Dan's prowess soon makes him master of the town. He shoots up all who oppose his supremacy. Hattie still dreams of Bull, and when he arrives in town in the guise of a tramp she recognizes him. Bull challenges Dan to another fight. Hattie disguises herself as a cow-puncher in order to be present. She pours glue on the seat in Dan's corner, and revives Bull with dope when he threatens to collapse. Dan is knocked out of the ring, and chased down the street, while Hattie and Bull fall into each other's arms.

L-KO NOTES

IN some of the scenes taken for a forthcoming L-Ko Komedy, a lighthouse, which had been specially constructed, was torn down, and proved to be as sensational a piece of work as has been undertaken in many a day. It was necessary to employ a hundred and fifty men, and two steam dredges to get the lighthouse to move, and then in order to induce it to fall, a tug was employed, whose tow-line was fastened about the building. Then the signal full speed ahead was given, and the structure fell with a crash. The technical department had spent three months in the erection of the lighthouse.

The two L-Ko Smiths, Noel and Dick, who by the way are not related, have Dan Russell under their supervision, and are directing him in a two-reel comedy, which changes his former aggressive Irish temperament to the sweet and lovable "Down on the Farm" type.

Vin Moore was thankful when the iris closed for the last time on "Love and Blazes." The picture, in which Phil Dunham is starred, has been a series of wire, crooks, and fire, in which the action has been speeded up beyond the usual rate, even for an L-Ko Komedy. The next picture with Phil Dunham will be a railroad story.

Mr. Louis Jacobs, business manager of the L-Ko, gave a farewell dinner to Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, on the eve of his departure from the Coast to New York. The affair took place at the Log Cabin.

Dr. James is called.

Uncle John.

Uncle John decides to stay.

HERE is a story from real life, about an old man and the disposition of his fortune, which is a relief after the mistaken identity, twin brothers, doubles, and all the other tricks of the trade. This Rex picture, written by Henri Canard, adapted for the screen by Fred Myton, and produced by George Cochrane, is concerned with people whom we meet every day, yet their adventures in trying to apportion Uncle John's money, make a most interesting story, which runs as follows:

John Holden, the elderly bachelor, is a man of considerable means. He has two nephews, William and James. He tells his friend Adams, president of the National Bank, that he intends going back East to get acquainted with his nephews.

William is one of the officers of a brokerage concern. His wife is taken up with the smart set. James, on the other hand, is a struggling young physician. He is married and has two children.

Uncle John writes William that he is contemplating a visit and requests him to notify James. He and his wife decide to keep the secret from James. John is a pretty wise old duck and begins to see that things in William's house are not as they should be.

Mrs. William gives a tea in honor of her guest and the sensibilities of her friends are shocked by his breezy way. Thinking it will increase her social standing, William's wife inserts a notice of the arrival of Uncle John. This comes to James' notice and he visits William's house, but is sent away by Mrs. William. William and his wife are quarrelling one day and are overheard by Uncle John. To test William, he borrows money from him on several occasions and, going to a downtown saloon, is having a high time. One of William's friends phones him that his uncle is trying to drink up the town.

William, deeply mortified, gets the old man home.

William wires the bank in which his uncle has had funds and learns that Uncle John has drawn out the small balance that he had carried.

Uncle John is really sober but pretends to have delirium tremens. Doctor James arrives to take care of the patient. As soon as the old man appears rational, William orders him out of the house. James feels pity for the old man and offers him a place under his own roof. Uncle John gladly accepts. A short time later William is severely shocked, when he learns that the trust company in which he is working will be run by James, who is managing the affairs of his millionaire Uncle John.

YOUNG MILLIONAIRE ACTS IN A UNIVERSAL PICTURE.

IT is not often that a young millionaire plays a part in a photoplay, but Albert Ralphs, son of the late millionaire grocer of Los Angeles, did so in a Universal picture recently. Mrs. Ralphs, the young man's mother, had given her consent to one of the Universal companies to use the spacious and artistic grounds of her palatial home in Hollywood and an automobile figured in several of the scenes.

The machine brought to the grounds did not conform to the elegance of the home and the director instructed the assistant to telephone to the studios for another car. Young Ralphs, who was watching the operations of the company, volunteered his own beautiful car, and the director said it would be used if he would consent to play the role of the chauffeur. Ralphs said he would gladly do so if the director thought he would not spoil the film.

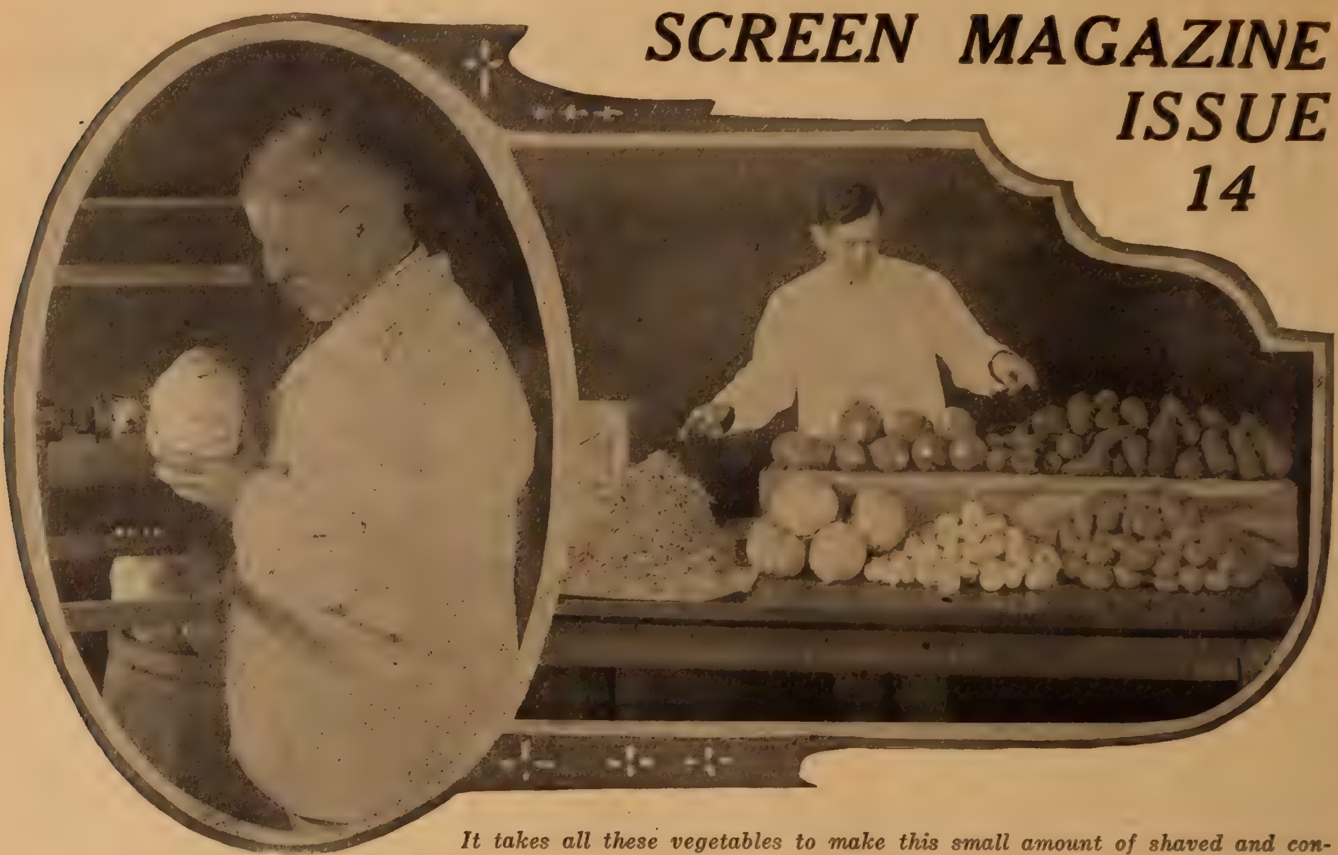
"Consider yourself an actor right from this moment," replied the director; "pay no attention to the camera—you are only a chauffeur for the next couple of hours." And that's what young Ralph was for more than two hours, piloting his car in and out of a number of scenes.

FARNUM LIFE ELK MEMBER.

FRANKLYN FARNUM, star of the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Clock," arrived at the studios a few mornings ago and took great pride in exhibiting a life membership in Boston Lodge No. 10 Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

The life membership was a present to the young actor from mutual friends in the Hub, where he made his home for a number of years. A large number of the actors at Universal City are members of this order and the hope springs in the mind of many of them to have a similar certificate.

SCREEN MAGAZINE ISSUE 14



New way to core cabbage.

It takes all these vegetables to make this small amount of shaved and concentrated food.

PUT the words "High Cost of Living" in a title or a caption, these days, and you will catch the attention of almost everyone. That is why the first subject in the Universal Screen Magazine, Issue No. 14, which shows a new process of preserving vegetables, less expensive than canning, is sure to prove immensely interesting to the public. The water which all fruits and vegetables contain in so high a proportion, is extracted by drying the shredded foods, and in this way the producers find it possible to provide as much nourishment in a ten-pound box as was formerly contained in a barrel or more. Flat dwellers take notice!

We see the machine which washes and peels potatoes sixty times as fast as it can be done by hand. Then they are shredded by another machine, and placed in the dryer, which removes the water without impairing the food value, taste, color or aroma. Another interesting machine cores cabbages before shredding. A barrel of "dry-fresh" soup vegetables contains enough to make 6,000 portions of vegetable soup. The warring armies in Europe are subsisting almost entirely on this type of food. It is interesting to see a pile of the fresh vegetables as they come from the market, and compare their bulk with the little pile of dried shreds which equal them in value after they have been subjected to this process. Then Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, the Screen Magazine's cooking expert, prepares an appetizing dinner from the dried vegetables, which become almost their original size when they are cooked in water. The sight of them, ready to serve, will give a confirmed dispeptic an appetite.

"Young men who didn't go West," is the attractive caption of the second subject, and shows us views of some of the men who have been content to remain in little old New York. Colonel John A. Murray, for thirty-seven years, has been an important factor in the U. S. Assay Office. "Big Dick" Daly has untangled the traffic at the corner of Dey Street and Broadway for twenty years. For twenty-nine years John J. Hanley, warden of the Tombs, has been in service there. Lieutenant Kennell has served as bodyguard to New York's mayors since 1895. Max S. Schmittberger, Police Inspector, has spent forty-three years in the department. "Smoky Joe" Martin has fought the city's fires for thirty-three years, while for forty-four, James Lent has been delivering mail to the citizens on his beat. The Bishop of Wall Street, William Wilkinson, stops in the street to address the crowd while the camera catches him doing it.

To most of us X-rays are more or less of a mystery. The Screen Magazine No. 15 reveals the secrets of this wonder of modern science in a practical demonstration of the greatest interest. The X-ray, we learn, is regulated by hydrogen, and when in use, the tube is encased in a glass globe, which nearly encircles it. The glass contains lead which protects patient and surgeon from stray rays. The discovery is now used by dentists to detect faulty teeth, while the Orthodiagraph is used for the examination of the chest. We see the operator preparing to take a photograph of the bones of the hand, and the finished result which reveals an old fracture of the index finger.

The Issue closes with more "Miracles in Mud" by Willie Hopkins, the discoverer of Animated Sculpture, a feature of the Screen Magazine which has proven extremely and deservedly popular.

R. H.'S REPARTEE.

While R. H. Cochrane, Universal's first Vice-President, was visiting U City, he was warned against sunburn. "Oh! I wouldn't mind adding a little more color to Broadway!" he replied.

"THE PURPLE MASK."

say, to row her to a freight boat anchored some distance down the bay, and then take her out to sea.

Kelly prepared a surprise for the anarchists by having Pat bind him in the canvas bag. Then Pat climbed down the ladder and plunged into the sea. While she swam along near the docks she was rescued by the crew of a tug and hauled on board. When she explained why she was swimming in the water, and further told the plans the anarchists had made for her disposal, the boatmen decided to watch for the attempt to transfer the canvas bag and its occupant to the freight boat.

They had to wait but a little time, when they discovered four men rowing out from under the pier and in the bottom of the boat the canvas bag could be plainly seen. The anarchists rowed Kelly to the freight boat and, once on board, he pulled the strings loose, as Pat had tied them for his convenience, and gave battle to his captors.

Kelly put up a stiff fight, but would soon have been overpowered if he had not climbed the shrouds and quickly jumped into the sea. The tug boat captain pulled "The Sphinx" out of the water and hurried ashore with his two passengers. Kelly told Pat that she must abandon her practices and her adventures or the Government would imprison her. She consented.

And in the years that followed, Pat became confidential adviser in the detective agency of "The Sphinx," and as Mrs. Phil Kelly she was in full partnership. Their little girl liked nothing better than to be dressed in a reproduction of the costume her mother had worn when she was "The Purple Mask."

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER IN THE SAME PICTURE.

Mrs. Hall plays the mother who leaves her little daughter as a pledge in a pawn shop. When she makes her first appearance on the screen, the majority of the audience will think that she is Ella, playing a double role in a clever make-up. Later they may imagine that they're looking at the most wonderful of double exposures. As a matter of fact, the still pictures from the film prove the remarkable resemblance between the two, which adds greatly to the realism of the story, which is absolutely charming from first to last. Walter Belasco, the brother of the great producer, gives a life-like portrayal of the old pawnbroker, and Antrim Short is excellent as the newsboy champion of Nora, the little girl played by Miss Hall.

POLICE OFFICIALS POSE WITH A UNIVERSAL LION.

"IF any man had told me before I left London that I would enter a closed arena with a lion I would have said he was dreaming," remarked R. J. Lewis, advisor to the Traffic Commissioner of the world's greatest metropolis, to Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, at Universal City during the president's recent visit to Universal City.

Mr. Lewis had visited the motion picture plant in company with John L. Butler, Chief of Police of Los Angeles, and President Laemmle had suggested that as the London police official was quite a social lion in his own "home town" he might display a bit of British nerve in posing with one of the Universal lions for his picture. "You, too, Chief," said President Laemmle, addressing the boss of Los Angeles' "dandy coppers."

"Well, I will if Mr. Lewis agrees," answered the Chief. Both of the officials thereupon courageously entered the arena, where they posed with one of the lions which was being used in a number of jungle scenes in the course of filming by Director Henry McRae.

"Good, that's the sort of bravery I like to see," said President Laemmle after Messrs. Lewis and Butler had left the arena, adding, "when we want some new actors to work with the wild animals we will know where to look for them."

"THE SILENT PRISONER."

Laemmle Drama.

With Ethel Grandin.

Grace's father, a smuggler, is shot and killed in a fight with some revenue officers. Grace engages her lover as the skipper of their ship. While on board they have a disagreement, in regard to smuggling. As her lover is not a smuggler, he disapproves of it, and decides to take the ship to shore. Upon reaching shore he is taken in custody by a revenue officer and put into jail. He is forced to divulge the secrets of the smugglers, or whatever he knows about them. The revenue officers set out after Grace. John makes his escape from the jail and in a motor-boat goes to warn Grace of revenue officers. Upon his arrival he is informed that the smugglers have captured a daughter of one of the revenuers in vengeance for the killing of her father. The officers reach the boat, and Revenue Officer Hardin is intensely surprised to see his daughter a captive. John is holding a gun at her head and tells the revenue officer if he will let Grace go he can take his daughter with him. If he doesn't he will shoot his daughter. The officer sets Grace free.

Harmon Hicks	Milton Sims
Charmion	Eileen Sedgwick
Hank	Ralph MacComas
I. M. Bunk	Charles Haeffli

Harmon Hicks was very enthusiastic about ancestors. He lived in a small country town, and Hank was in love with his daughter Charmion. Hicks received a note from Professor I. M. Bunk, saying that Harmon was descended from royalty. Harmon stiffened into a regal manner, and with Charmion began to cultivate aristocratic airs.

I. M. Bunk arrived in the village. Hicks was dressed up like the Lord Mayor of London and Charmion was in all her silks and laces. Bunk was instantly smitten with Charmion's looks. Charmion languidly told Bunk that he must bring her a dog with a blue-blooded pedigree.

After making a fictitious chart, Bunk went to find a dog. Hank climbed through the window into his room at the hotel and there filled out a chart to suit himself.

Hicks was delighted with his pedigree and immediately invited the neighbors. Hank exchanged the chart tacked on the wall for the one he had made.

The neighbors began to snicker. Hicks found out the substitution and threw Bunk out of the house.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

"THE PULSE OF LIFE" as its title suggests, deals with every phase in the life of a human being. We see the daughter of a Sicilian fisherman leave home, sail for America and thrown by fate into the company of a young artist in New York. The wanderlust so strong in every individual and which plays a big part in the story, can be appealed to, in this way: On one side of a throwaway have a reproduction of a railroad ticket printed, and on the other side have the following:

HAVE YOU EVER HAD THE WANDERLUST?
Whether yes or no, SEE the soul-gripping realism of
"THE PULSE OF LIFE"
at the (name) Theatre
on (date)

Get a man to go around town beating a bass drum. Have painted on the sides of the drum or on the front of the drum and on the man's back place signs reading:

QUICKEN THE HEART THROBS
SEE "THE PULSE OF LIFE"
The new Bluebird Photoplay
at the (name) Theatre
TO-DAY

Another method of arousing interest is to hold a guessing contest for two or three days before you show the picture. Have a large placard cut in the shape of a heart and have it painted red. On it have the following:

FOR LIFE'S UNCERTAINTIES

From the bottom of the placard have a clock suspended and an announcement of the contest reading as follows:

CAN YOU GUESS at what time this clock will stop? To all persons guessing correctly will be given two FREE PASSES to
"THE PULSE OF LIFE"
The gripping Bluebird Photoplay

The clock should be so wound that it will stop each evening. The names of the winners should be written on a sheet of paper and placed on the box-office window together with an announcement that the prizes will be awarded on the day of the showing of the picture.

Send the attached letter to the names on your mailing list. The investment will prove a profitable one.

Mr. Exhibitor—Have you a mailing list? If not, by all means get one at once. There is no better way of building up your patronage. Ask your Bluebird Exchange manager to show you how. This service is free. Send the following letter to the names on your list.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, Inc.

Dear Friend—The babe in the cradle and grandfather in his old armchair; the rich man and the pauper; in frigid Alaska and tropic Italy; everybody—everywhere—feels it!

What is it that leads us all on—and makes up the maelstroms and havens we find here on earth?

For the answer see "The Pulse of Life," the heart-throbbing Bluebird Photoplay at the (name) Theatre on (date).

It will repay you tenfold.

By all means COME!

Cordially yours,

Another Bluebird Advertising Contest

SO successful was the February Bluebird advertising contest that the company has decided to hold another contest during the month of April.

Thanks to the manner in which the exchanges co-operated, over two thousand exhibitors participated in the contest that was won by Frank Gould of the Rex Theatre, Reading Pa., and Mr. Caulfield, of the Garrick Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.

There should be double the number of contestants taking part in the April event. It is to the advantage of the entire organization to have every man booking Bluebirds come in on it. It means better business for them and better business for us.

The February advertising contest won a host of friends for the organization. It has done much to prove to exhibitors Bluebird's interest in their welfare.

PRIZES

Two prizes are offered. Prize No. 1, $60 in gold, will be awarded to the exhibitor who conducts the best general advertising campaign on Bluebird features during the month of April. Prize No. 2, $40 in gold, will be awarded to the exhibitor who conducts the best billboard and newspaper campaign on Bluebird features during the month of April. If more than one exhibitor is deserving of the first or second prize, additional prizes to the same amount will be presented to as many exhibitors as may be entitled to them.

EXHIBITORS ELIGIBLE

All theatre owners who are Bluebird exhibitors at the time this announcement is made are eligible for the prizes. To be considered a contestant for Prize No. 1, the exhibitor will be required to forward a letter completely outlining the campaign conducted on the Bluebirds presented during the month, together with copies of all advertising matter and novelties used in the general advertising campaign; to be considered a contestant for Prize No. 2, the exhibitor will be required to forward photographs of the posters used to advertise Bluebird presentations, together with information as to the number of sheets used, and copies of the newspaper advertisements and publicity stories on Bluebird productions.

The judges who will pass upon all entries submitted will consist of the Board of Directors, the General Manager, and the Advertising Manager of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

The contest commences on April 1, and continues until midnight of April 30.

It is highly advisable that all contestants forward their entries to the Manager of Sales Promotion, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., at the earliest possible moment. It is also advisable that all contest matter mailed be registered. This to insure against lass.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF WINNERS

The Board of Judges will meet not later than May 15th, when the winner of the April advertising contest will be announced. May 15th was decided upon in order that exhibitors located at distant points of the country be placed on an equal footing with exhibitors located near New York in submitting their contest material in ample time for the consideration of the Board of Judges.

EVERY EXHIBITOR SURE TO BENEFIT

Every exhibitor entering the April Bluebird advertising contest is sure to benefit thereby. As in the February contest, the winning ideas will be made public so that all Bluebird exhibitors may put to work the ideas of the live wires who won the big prizes.

COME IN ON THIS CONTEST AND WIN ONE OF THE PRIZES.

A Letter from Prize Winner, Frank A. Gould

GOULD won the Bluebird First Prize in the last contest, and this is what he has to say about it and about Bluebird Photoplays.

A LETTER FROM GOULD.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—Your letter containing check from Bluebird Photoplays, also words of praise, received. In expressing my appreciation all I can say is "Thank you," with a great big T.

Bluebird week was a decided success, and my receipts were 40 per cent. above usual weeks, and more than 20 per cent. over my record week for 5 years.

Bluebirds have, since their inception, been favorites among my patrons and it is a common remark to have patrons ask when and where the next Bluebird will be shown.

I have never exhibited on my screen or seen exhibited in any theatre, photoplays with photography, beautiful settings and splendid scenarios and wonderful acting, such as constitute Bluebird productions. Not because I have been awarded a prize does this deserved comment come from me, but I would take an oath any time that these are my sincere personal feelings.

I have always unhesitatingly recommended "Bluebird" to my fellow exhibitors. The best argument is the business you do, and here it is: "I do more business on Bluebird night than any day in the week."

When I decided to have a special "Bluebird Week," the thought of winning the prize did not enter my mind. I knew that the special advertising and little stunts would get the business, and I was very much pleased with the results, in fact the receipts exceeded my expectations. With a view to helping some other exhibitor in "putting over" Bluebirds, I submitted my material, and the prize being unexpected, is all the more appreciated.

Kindly extend for me to the Board of Judges my sincere thanks, and to Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., my very, very best wishes. Again saying many, many thanks and "Long Live Bluebird," you'll always find me a Bluebird booster. Most sincerely,

FRANK A. GOULD.

THREE BABY LIONS AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

UNIVERSAL CITY'S wild animal population was augmented this week by the arrival of three baby lions. They were born on Monday last and Daisy, the mother, who has played star roles in many a jungle photodrama, and the little ones "are doing quite well."

The general manager of Universal City suggested that the triplets be named respectively Laemmle, Powers and Cochrane, after the, president, treasurer and vice-president of the company, who are at the present time spending their vacations on the coast, but in deference to the wishes of these gentlemen other names will be given to Daisy's furry children.

Four hours later the films of the big blaze were being shown at the Superba Theatre on Broadway, only one block away from the eventful scene.

"THE KIDNAPPED BRIDE"

BISON Two - Reel Drama, written by Wright Roberts and produced by Henry McRae, with Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill in the leads.

CAST.

Richard Harding	E. N. Wallack
Ruth, as a child	Lois White
Ruth, grown older	Marie Walcamp
Jack Morgan	Lee Hill
Richard Harding, Jr.	L. C. Shumway
Rancher Martin	Marc Fenton

A TYPICAL Bison is "The Kidnapped Bride," which was written by Wright Roberts and produced by Henry McRae, with the intrepid Marie Walcamp, and Lee Hill in the leads. There are riding stunts galore, some beautiful scenes on a California sheep reach, and a breath-taking railroad hold-up for finish. Here is the story:

Ruth, a child of three, is taken with her little brother to the beach. She strays away, follows a dog into a boat, and is cast ashore on an island, where there are extensive sheep ranches. A gang of outlaws make their headquarters there, and take the child to their cave. They find her picture pinned into her sash; it had just been taken and she would not part with it. The outlaws set out for the mainland; all but one, who remains to take care of the child. The Hardings think that she is drowned.

Ranchman Martin heads a party to round up the outlaws. The one who remained is shot and killed, and Martin finds Ruth and takes her home to his wife.

Fifteen years pass. Martin has legally adopted Ruth, and she thinks herself his daughter. She loves Jack Morgan, the son of a neighboring rancher, who has incurred the dislike of Martin. He warns the young man to stay away from his child, but the two meet frequently in secret.

Martin has struck oil on his property and interested some capitalists, of whom Harding is one. Harding comes to investigate the strike, accompanied by his son Richard, a head-strong and rather irresponsible young man. He makes Martin an offer, which Martin at first does not care to accept. The Hardings decide to stay several days and give him time to change his mind.

Richard sees Ruth in bathing, and is struck by her beauty. They meet, and though he is much attracted by the girl, Ruth distrusts and dislikes him in return. At the end of a week, Harding has persuaded Martin to sell, and to accompany him in his special train to the city to conclude the deal. Martin insists upon Ruth's going, too, as he has found her with Jack and wants to break up the intimacy.

Jack thinks that she is to be forced into a marriage with young Harding. He suggests that he and the boys hold up the special and rescue Ruth. They carry out their plan, and Ruth and Jack decide to be married at once, in order to avoid the wrath of Martin. Martin, with Harding and his son, determine to get Jack, and they return to the ranch. Jack and Ruth, with the cowboys, arrive, and the marriage is disclosed. Martin is furious, and tells Jack that Ruth is not his daughter and never was, that she is the child of a sheep-stealing outlaw. He asks his wife to bring the picture that was found on her. Harding, looking at the photograph, recognizes it as his lost child. He claims Ruth as his daughter, and announces to Martin that he will double the price of the oil land and then give it to Jack for a wedding present.

MILITARY BOOSTER FOR UNIVERSAL FILMS.

COL. JOHN B. McDONALD, of the United States Cavalry, who is attached to the Western Department of the Army, which is under the command of Major Franklin Bell of San Francisco, was one of the notable visitors at Universal City recently. Col. McDonald is making an inspection of the Field Artillery and Cavalry of the National Guard of the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Montana and Utah, and was accompanied to Universal City by Charles M. Savage, his secretary, and Capt. Jesse McComas, Commander Battery A, First Field Artillery of the California National Guard. The party came early in the afternoon and did not leave the plant until sundown, so interested were they in the motion picture work that was presented to their view by the various companies in operation on the stages and on the exterior sets in different parts of the big plant.

"This is the best entertainment I have had in many moons, be assured," said Col. McDonald to President Carl Laemmle on taking his departure, adding, "and you certainly can count on me to boost Universal films most heartily."

Wadsworth	Jack Mulhall
Fay Reynolds	Myrtle Reeves
McNaughton	Harry Griffith
His Wife	Miss Mattox

Fay Reynolds, a young landscape artist, has received an order from the wealthy Wadsworth for a picture, something odd and picturesque, bordering on the primitive. She goes to the mountains to find a subject. There with Rance, a lazy mountain fellow, as guide, she starts off in her search.

Wadsworth, recuperating from a nervous collapse, visits his father's friend of pioneer days. While chopping down a tree, he becomes aware of Fay and Rance. Fay, thinking him a mountaineer, offers him five dollars if he will pose.

Rance has wandered away and finds some whiskey. Fay suddenly looks up to confront a lion, crouched ready to spring upon her. Terrified, she rushes to the camp. Rance attacks her.

Wadsworth sees Fay and Rance struggling on top of a cliff. Rushing to them, he fights with the drunken fellow. Rance falls over the cliff. Fay discovers Wadsworth's identity, and all ends happily.

"THE DESERT GHOST."

Big U Drama.

Story by E. B. Lewis.
Produced by George Marshall.

Ben	Neal Hart
Jacobs	G. Raymond Nye
Smyth	Tom Grimes

The whole country has been terrorized by the depredations of a daring robber, called the "Desert Ghost," because of his illusiveness. Ben is highly respected by his neighbors, who little suspect that he is the Desert Ghost. One day a rancher brings Mr. Jacobs to his hut and explains to Ben that the visitor intends buying a ranch. Ben hospitably offers to share his cabin with the stranger. Jacobs is a secret agent sent by a foreign power to secure maps of the surrounding country. The government has been advised of this mission and Smyth, a Secret Service man, has been sent to frustrate his plans.

One day, as Jacobs is left alone in the cabin, Ben's dog attracts his attention to a trap-door, and Jacobs, investigating, finds loot which Ben had secured after a recent raid. While he is examining it, Ben returns. Jacobs confesses that he is a well-known character of the underworld, and they decide to become pals.

Shortly after, Jacobs receives a telegram warning him of the advent of Smyth. He tells Ben that it is a message from a pal with the information that a rich chap will be on the stage that night. Each decides to hold up the stage for his own purpose. Ben arrives just as Jacobs is about to hang Smyth, with the aid of his spy, who was on the stage. The true mission of Jacobs is discovered and Ben, who is fatally wounded, has the satisfaction of knowing that the map will not fall into the hands of the foreign government.

The cheapest thing in India is man. The average daily wage is five cents. Indian streets swarm with humanity, curious sights and odd vehicles. In the wedding processions everybody is represented but the bride. The barber carries on his trade in the street. And so does the blacksmith. Timely Suggestions for Easter Music

By M. Winkler

EASTER FANTASIA—A descriptive musical narrative by M. L. Lake.

1st Movement "On Calvary."

2nd Movement "And the Sun Was Darkened."

3rd Movement "Dawn of Easter."

4th Movement "Christ is Risen."

The first movement with the wailing of the strings portrays in a remarkable way the conflicting emotions of the multitude assembled on "Calvary" the second preceded by the rumble of the basses and tympani, and alternating between the blatant discordant blare of brass and the subdued consonnance of strings shows the fear and terror of the awe-stricken multitude, the third, a morning scene opens with a tremolo for strings, working up to a powerful agitato in which the horn heralds the resurrection, and then the fourth movement is worked up into a grand triumphal finale.

A really remarkable tonepicture which will make a hit on every program.

Easter Chimes—A descriptive novelty with "Chime" effects. Synopsis—Easter Morning, Chimes in the distance, "Lead Kindly Light," Reverie "On the Way to Church," Arrival at Church, Chimes, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," Grand Organ, "The Palms," Prayer, Chimes, "Rock of Ages," Reverie, "Returning from Church," Chimes in the distance.

SOME REMARKS ON CONDUCTING.

THE conductor's duty is to concentrate the various purposes of individual players into one combined purpose, just as a pianist combines the various mechanisms of his instrument into one organism under his fingers. For this reason a conductor is often said to "play on the orchestra"; indeed the power of a conductor over his players may be even greater than that of a player over his instrument, inasmuch as the mechanical element is entirely absent from the connection between the conductor and his performers.

Richard Wagner divided the duties of an orchestra conductor under two heads—(a) that of giving the true tempo to the orchestra; (b) that of finding where the melody lies. The idea of true tempo covers the technical qualifications necessary to a conductor; the idea of the melody covers the ideal aspects of his art. Very few men possess both these qualifications, but both are necessary to great conducting. Technical accuracy is useless with out an imaginative mind, and the most inspired imagination is powerless unless aided by a clear head and a clear beat.

EFFICIENT MANAGEMENT OF A REHEARSAL.

THE conductor's object must be to employ the time for rehearsal as usefully as possible. A conductor must recognize at once what are the different parts of a composition, what will require much rehearsal and what little orchestral players are very sensitive and naturally resent having their time wasted. The conductor must realize which mistakes may be passed over lightly as mere slips, which are radical and must be insisted on. Economy of time is especially important in England, where a conductor often has to direct a 'scratch" orchestra collected for the purpose, with only one rehearsal to prepare for a long program. In such cases the conductor must be ready to seize on the essential points and let the rest take care of itself.

STUNTS
For "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE"

STUNT No. 7—

Have a small throwaway printed on cheap stock bearing this message: "LOOK OUT FOR THE VOICE ON THE WIRE," and have a hole large enough to cover a door-knob punched into these throwaways. Send a crew of boys around and stick these throwaways on the door-knobs of all the houses, stores and other places in your town. Don't have anything but the mysterious message as given here. Then later when you openly announce your serial you can have another throwaway printed and on this one you can have the wording: "FOR AN EXPLANATION OF THAT MYSTERIOUS MESSAGE 'LOOK OUT FOR THE VOICE ON THE WIRE' go to the .... Theatre every .... night."

STUNT No. 8—

Call on your local telephone company and explain to them that you are going to run the great Universal Surprise serial, "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE." Tell the Manager of the Telephone Company that the Telephone Company is going to come in for a tremendous amount of free advertising because this serial deals with telephones all the way through. Tell him the plans you have in mind for advertising this serial before it opens and after it is running. Ask him if he will co-operate with you in helping you use his telephone system in some novel manner. Tell him that he will derive as much if not more advertising out of whatever he helps you do than you will, but the main point is that this is practically a Telephone Serial and any live, wide-awake manager of any local Phone Company will be more than glad to work with you on any special plans or stunts that you want to pull off. Maybe he can suggest some clever new stunt that is not outlined in this book. By talking things over with him and showing him where his Company will cut in for a tremendous amount of free advertising, he will listen and will eventually CO-OPERATE WITH YOU. All Phone Companies are live advertisers and any manager will quickly see the advantages to be gained by working hand in hand with you.

STUNT No. 9—

Announce in newspaper ads that on a certain night—between the hours of 8 o'clock and 10 o'clock—somebody will be called up over the telephone and they will hear some one say—"IF YOU WILL CALL AT THE .... THEATRE TOMORROW YOU WILL RECEIVE COMPLIMENTARY TICKETS TO THE GREAT UNIVERSAL SURPRISE SERIAL. 'THE VOICE ON THE WIRE.'" This will work everybody up awaiting such a call, and will result in a tremendous lot of publicity and gossip. Now in order that some practical joker doesn't steal your thunder and begin calling up a lot of people and giving out this statement over the wire, you can add to your statement this explanation: "TICKETS WILL ADMIT YOU ONLY IF ACCOMPANIED BY SOME OTHER PERSON WHO PAYS CASH ADMISSION ALONG WITH YOUR FREE TICKET." Thus you practically give two admissions for the price of one, but you only have to call up say about 25 to 50 people to make a great talking fest over this novel stunt.

STILL GOING BIG!!
Liberty

Still going big, because thousands of Exhibitors are reading the enthusiastic letters from thousands of other Exhibitors, stating that "LIBERTY" is getting more money for them than any serial they ever ran.

This serial is big, thrilling, patriotic, timely. Now, when the country is aroused, is the time to book and clean up. Your nearest Universal Exchange, or the home office of the Universal.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

THANK you, one and all—

That is those who have begun to respond to our oft repeated request for letters on the subject of stunts—you know, the stunt suggestions that appear on this page every week.

Yes, we have at last begun to make an impression. We know Exhibitors haven't a lot of time for writing letters, but please remember your letter may help some other Exhibitor and in turn his letter may help you, so—

Won't you please take the time now to write us what you think of the suggestions on this page, and of stunts in particular as a means of "putting it over?" We want your co-operation, and if you read the Weekly you know we are entitled to it, for there is no concern in any line of business in this country that extends more hearty cooperation to those with whom it does business than the (excuse us), MIGHTY UNIVERSAL. So there.

If you haven't time to write more than to say "Stunts are good," or "Stunts are rotten," it makes no difference, we shall be glad to know that you have at least given them a thought. For the good of every one in the business write the thing that is in your mind regarding stunts. Write today and address the EDITOR, Moving Picture Weekly, 1600 Broadway, New York.

THE Red Feather for April 16th is called "The Flower of Doom," and is an exciting melodrama, staged by Rex Ingram, the director who is famous for his artistic pictures. A suggestion for a stunt to draw attention to this offering is the old one of a blind man. But if you have not used it, you might try it for this release. Have a man made up as if he were blind, and led by a dog. Have him wear a large placard which reads, "I would give $500 to see 'The Flower of Doom,' at (name here) Theatre on (date here)." While this stunt is not original, it has not been suggested on this page before, and the reports of several exhibitors from different sections of the country attest the success of this scheme as an effective crowd-getter.

THE Nestor for Monday, April 16th, is called "Follow the Tracks," and is worth special attention, for Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are more than usually funny in it. Many exhibitors run the Red Feather on Sunday, so that suggestions for two pictures which are scheduled for release on the same date are not out of place. In this comedy, Eddie and Lee have all sorts of adventures in a "flivver." in which they try to find their way home after a banquet. They are forced to follow the tracks. Have two young men in evening dress, who seem very "happy" follow the car tracks all over your town in a flivver. There must be a placard on their car which reads that they are following the tracks to your theatre.

THE big series, written and produced by George Bronson Howard, featuring Kingsley Benedict; and called "The Perils of the Secret Service" comes to an end this week, for which you will be sincerely sorry, if you have been running it. The last story is the best of all, and it bears the thrilling and suggestive title, "The International Spy." In these days, when the daily papers are filled with true stories which sound more improbable than fiction, no title that you could announce on the front of your theatre could attract more attention. Have large posters, which can be roughly lettered in by hand and will cost very little, in prominent places in your lobby, or on the front of your theatre, offering a reward as large as you like for information leading to the arrest of the International Spy, who is suspected by the U. S. Government of selling secrets to a foreign power. Make the poster as startling in appearance as you can, and let them know that the place to learn further particulars about the apprehension of the spy is in your theatre.

THE Bison for April 21st is called "The Tell-Tale Clue," and features Molly Malone, the girl with the name like an Irish love song. She is just as sweet as her name, too. Call attention to this release by placing a barrel in a prominent position in the lobby, with a big sign over it, "Do not look in this barrel!" Inside have an old boot, with the heel turned up to show that the lower lift is missing. Lay the lift beside the boot, and label it "The Tell-Tale Clue." Of course, every one will stop to look in the barrel, for curiosity is a quality you can always bank upon.

A Bluebird a Day

TIE TO BLUEBIRDS.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Denver, Colo.

Gentlemen—Enclosed find check for service, also the contracts for "Hell Morgan's Girl." I used "A Stranger from Somewhere" on Sunday, and will say it was the best picture since "Love's Lariat," "The Secret of the Swamp" and "The Girl of Lost Lake." Am playing "The Gay Lord Waring" to-day.

Here's a tip you can give to any exhibitor and especially the brother who is opening a new house. If they will tie onto Bluebird service, and boost and advertise it as they never advertised a service before, then have the Exchange give them "Love's Lariat" with Harry Carey as the first picture for an opening, then run "The Secret of the Swamp" and follow it up with "The Girl of Lost Lake," they will take the town by storm and Bluebirds will be established in their territory on a foundation that will last forever, or as long as Bluebird puts out the pictures they are now giving the exhibitor.

The exhibitor who hasn't a Bluebird contract is like a full rigged ship without sails. Brothers, tie to Bluebird and put the service over as I have outlined in this letter, and it's a thousand to one shot that your Bluebird night will be the banner night of the week.

Oh, yes! In regard to the Bluebird day you advertised. Say, listen, I have been running a special Bluebird day since September. I have a banner which I use on these days with these words on it: "It's Bluebird today." Bluebird pictures have made more money for me than any other programs which I have ever used.

This is a pretty lengthy letter, but I had to let out a little praise for the service which made the Rex Theatre, and also the Gem in this town. I am,

Yours truly,
FRED McCOY,
Rex Theatre.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen—As a general thing circular letters are consigned to the waste basket, but we feel so kindly toward the Bluebird Photoplays, their makers and distributors that we are going to take the trouble to reply to yours received this morning.

The Rosemary Theatre has exhibited many Bluebird Photoplays and although these were not selected from the wide variety offered by your program we consider every one of them to be among the very best pictures we have ever shown. Every program makes a poor picture once in a while, many programs make poor pictures very often, but we have never shown, nor have we ever seen a poor Bluebird nor even one that we would not call a good picture, although we presume you have made such.

Our present contract arrangements do not permit us to run Bluebirds every week, but if there were eight days in the week the first day would be "Bluebird Day."

Trusting events will shape themselves in the near future so that we may be enabled to run your service regularly, and thanking you for your many past courtesies, we remain,

Very respectfully yours,
H. H. RAYMOND,

Gentlemen—Enclosed find my check for Bluebird features next week. Regarding the Bluebird service, wish to say that I am well satisfied with them and their drawing power is equal to any pictures that I show, and I skim the market for the pick of all the programs.

Gentlemen—if the other four features which I booked for the month are as good as "Behind the Lines," I will be more than pleased, as I got more praise on "Behind the Lines" than on any feature I have run for the last two years; and you know I have been bucking the feature business for a long time and have run features from a lot of companies, and some mighty good ones, too. When I get praise from my patrons on a feature you can gamble it was good and will please two-thirds of any man's audience in the city or country town. I will cheerfully recommend "Behind the Lines" as being high-class and a topnotcher in every respect, and one that will please the most critical audience.

Yours truly,

CAN'T RESIST BLUEBIRDS.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen—Wish to say a few words about your photoplays. I have seen a few more of your photoplays, one of them only yesterday. It was called "The Girl of Lost Lake." I certainly enjoyed it very much.

I look forward to the time when I can see another Bluebird. The scenery and beautiful colors of this production were just wonderful, and I consider it a treat when one comes to town. I remain,

FREDERICK L ABBOT.

P. S.—I do not care much for the movies as a rule, as there are some that I do not enjoy, but I cannot resist the Bluebirds. Wishing you the best of luck.

"LOVE'S LARIAT" AGAIN.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Dallas, Tex.

Gentlemen — Yesterday I showed "Love's Lariat," and it affords me much pleasure to say unhesitatingly that it is one of the finest pictures I ever saw. If we could get more of that type of picture we would have little to fear from censors or low box office receipts.

When a producer can make a picture like "Love's Lariat," why will he produce some of the sensational unclean things that he does?

In "Love's Lariat" there is so much of genuine mirth and all in real earnest that it will please anybody any time.

There is really more in it than in any Chaplin.

Thanking you and hoping for more like it, I am,

ON THE BEST DAY.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Denver, Colo.

Gentlemen — We think Bluebird plays are great, and as you know, we play them our best day (Sundays). That is sufficient evidence of our opinion of them.

We also give them good display in three weekly papers which copies are not available at this time. I think, however, the enclosed copies should prove that Bluebirds are about right in this town.

Yours truly,
EDW. ANDERSON,
Mgr. Grand Opera House.
Pueblo, Colo.

SOMETHING DIFFERENT.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—Last night I saw your Mary MacLaren for the first time in the Bluebird play, "Wanted — a Home," and I want to congratulate you on your find. All through the play there was an atmosphere of refreshing newness and a something different from the usual run of photoplays, which undoubtedly was due to the wistful, magnetic personality of Miss MacLaren.

I am awaiting anxiously her next appearance. With due regard, I am

Very truly yours,
(Signed) T. J. CANTWELL,

ONE GRAND PICTURE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen—The Bluebird photoplay, "The Bugler of Algiers," which I put on last Thursday, January 11, was one grand picture, appreciated by all and a success in every way, although the weather was cold and disagreeable. While only mentioning the one above all Bluebirds are in the same class and that is the best.

Yours very truly,
J. H. DALES,
Princess Theatre.
Rochelle, Ill.

IT WAS GREAT.

Bluebird Photoplays,

Gentlemen—I saw and enjoyed with my whole family a few nights ago your play, "The Bugler of Algiers."

It was great.

Now please be good enough to tell me who published that novel, "We Are French." I want it.

Very respectfully,
P. H. NEAL,

HOUSEHOLD WORD.

Bluebird Photoplays,
Dallas, Texas.

Gentlemen—I feel that I should let you know how well Bluebirds are going over. "Love's Lariat" was the best of them all. Never heard so much talk about one picture. "The Girl of Lost Lake" comes next. "The Unattainable" also was extra good. Bluebird is a household word in Silsbee.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) CARR GIBBS,
The Pastime Theatre,
Silsbee, Texas.

P. S.—I have been in the game over four years and feel that I am able to judge a good picture.

VERY GOOD SATISFACTION.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Three Weeks from This Week

"The Flower of Doom." With Wedgwood Nowell, M. K. Wilson and Gypsy Hart. Sixty-fourth Red Feather Production. Directed by Rex Ingram. Released April 16. Get your boosting apparatus oiled up and in repair, gentlemen, and prepared to pull the crowds for a very much out of the ordinary Red Feather. And that goes triple—once for the story, once for the acting and once for the direction—hold on, one more —once for a very lavish production. It is a weird tale of pretty girls and handsome lovers and a stolen necklace and a queer old pawnbroker and a politician and a police reporter—not forgetting lots of other types, all staged in a marvellously faithful manner—one that will make the fans sit up and take notice. This is what you call a "production," and don't you forget it, or let your patrons forget it, either.

"For Lack of Evidence." With Tina Marshall. Three-reel Gold Seal Secret Service Drama. Directed by Edwin Stevens. For two and a half reels this wonderful Gold Seal is so crammed with surprise situations and tense moments; so packed with complications and intrigue, cross purposes and mystery that it simply holds you spellbound. There's a big case, one which is entrusted to Tina Marshall, a woman operative, who is unknown to the gang, and who succeeds in getting their confidence. She plays with a vim that speaks well for Mr. Stevens's direction, and the suspense is kept going until, in the middle of the last reel, comes the big surprise climax that is a wonder. This picture could easily have been made a five-reeler, and in three it leaves no room for "padding."

"Love and Blazes." With Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton. Two-reel L-Ko Fire House Comedy. General Direction of J. G. Blystone. Released April 18. Perhaps it never occurred to you that a fire could be funny. See this raving L-KO and you'll know it for sure. The amount of fun the L-KO comedians get out of their fire company will set your audiences screaming with laughter and send them out of the theatre wildly enthusiastic. Here is a comedy that will popularize your house. Go to it strong.

"The Topsy Turvy Twins." With Carter De Haven. Two-reel Victor Comedy Drama. Directed by Richard Stanton. Released April 19. Carter plays both twins, and to add to the hilarity of the occasion one of them is a sport and the other a mollycoddle. The sport is due to receive a legacy if he can show his guardian that he is a good little man and a friendly lawyer induces the molly to change places with him (the sport). Complications ensue as soon as the sissy twin meets a few chorus girls, learns to smoke and take a glass of wine. The sport in the meantime retires to the country and finds a whole lot of fun with the prettiest girl in the neighborhood. It will get the crowds for you and you ought to book not later than today.

DANGER!

WHILE in a certain theatre the other afternoon I saw something that got me so hot under the collar, that right then and there I got in touch with the exchange manager supplying the house with service and ordered it cancelled.

I saw a two-reel Universal drama, the running time of which should have been about thirty minutes, slammed through the machine in FIFTEEN MINUTES! I saw a five-reel production rammed over in THIRTY-SEVEN MINUTES!, while the Animated Weekly was thrown on and off the screen so fast that NINE-TENTHS of the patrons DID NOT HAVE TIME TO READ THE SUB-TITLES!

To my mind, any man guilty of such practices puts himself in the same class with the chap who killed the goose that laid the golden eggs. Worse still, he deliberately defrauds his patrons of their money's worth; endangers whatever business he has; takes the surest step towards ruining the film manufacturer's reputation and breaking up the patronage of his brother exhibitors who run pictures after him.

A good SHOW is impossible without good PROJECTION. Run the greatest production the world has ever seen at a speed of seven minutes to the reel and your patrons will leave the theatre firmly believing they've seen a rotten picture.

Film stock is made to withstand the shock of being projected at normal speed ONLY—a speed of thirteen to fifteen minutes per thousand feet. Run a film faster than this and the result is weakened sprocket holes and RUINED FILM.

Every Exhibitor prides himself upon being a SHOWMAN. My interpretation of the term is a fair-and-square man who conducts his business along strictly legitimate lines, who gives his patrons and his competitors a square deal. The exhibitor who slams his films through at breakneck speed is NOT a showman. Not by a jugful!

If you have been guilty of this error, open your eyes and see the light! If you ARE an honest-to-goodness showman, stand right up in meeting the next time your local organization gets together and do your share towards correcting this evil.

—The Universal Minute Man—

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS

(No. 172. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

A FEW minutes ago I asked a man who is regarded as one of the country's most successful exhibitors, to tell me the secret of his success. His reply, short and to the point, was this:

"I MIND MY OWN BUSINESS!"

This exhibitor has probably created more original ideas than any other picture theatre owner. Instead of jealously watching his competitors and imitating their every move, he spends his time thinking up new exhibiting wrinkles—new ways of doing the old things—and after careful tests prove them practical, makes full use of them.

Now, a lot of his competitors, envious of his success, have had a good deal to say about his "luck." At the same time, they never fail to grab this showman's ideas the minute they take with the public. But, because of the peculiar fact that NO imitation can hope to equal the original, the copyists have never even approached the originator's record of success.

A lot of you exhibitors are like this man's competitors. Instead of thinking up new ways of improving your business, you spend anxious days watching the other fellow and then doing whatever he does. In short, you allow the showmen you're bucking to dictate the policy of your house, even though this policy means business suicide!

When the good Lord breathed life into you, He also saw to it that you were supplied with a set of brains. He intended for you to USE these brains and one of the very first things impressed upon you as you grew up, was that your success in life absolutely depended on HOW you used them.

Since the other fellow's gray matter may not be as good as yours, why watch him and imitate his style? Why worry about what he is doing when by concentrating your thought and effort upon YOUR OWN business, you could beat him to a standstill!

MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS!

"For Lack Of Evidence"

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Drama. Story by Blair Hall, scenario by John C. Brownell, production by Edwin Stevens, with Tina Marshall in the lead. The tale of a woman secret service operative and her success.

CAST.

The Girl	Tina Marshall
The Reporter	George Marlo
The "Big Fellow"	Ted Burton
The Woman	Adella Barker

EDWIN STEVENS has done fine things with a story by Blair Hall, adapted for the screen by John C. Brownell, which is released as a Gold Seal drama under the title of "For Lack of Evidence." Tina Marshall, for several seasons Mr. Stevens' leading lady while he was still on the stage, is featured in the role of a Secret Service operative on the trail of a notorious old woman and the "man higher up."

Martha Young, on trial for white slavery, is allowed to go free for "lack of evidence." Sitting in the court room is a girl who seems more than ordinarily interested in the trial.

A few days later the girl comes across the same woman leaning against a paling, apparently very ill. The girl offers to take her home. Martha accepts the kindness, and the girl hails a passing taxi.

Philip Harding, a reporter, recognizes Martha. Only a day or two before, he has seen her at the home of Peter Drayton, the "Big Fellow." Harding warns the girl against her. But he is told to mind his own business. Determined to save her from a terrible fate, he hails a second taxi and follows. He is astounded at reaching the home of Martha to see the girl bid her good-bye and leave.

On the night following, he sees the landlady tidying up the room for the next occupant. He learns that the girl has left in order to "be with friends." Tortured by the thought that Martha has trapped her, he loses no time in getting uptown to Martha's home. He sees Drayton getting out of a limousine and tracks him to Martha's door. Here he learns from the janitor that a girl has come to live with the old woman. He climbs the fire-escape and enters through the kitchen window. He listens at the sitting-room door and overhears Drayton and Martha in conversation. He hears Drayton say, "We must get her away from here." At that moment some one opens the hall door and he dives into a bedroom. Peeping out, he sees the girl go into the room where Drayton and Martha are talking, and again listens at the door. He hears the girl accept Drayton's invitation to visit his country house in New Jersey and is preparing to make a get-away when again the hall door is opened and his escape is cut off.

The closet is stuffy, and Harding is unsuccessful in stifling a sneeze. The girl hears it and orders him out. She is amazed at seeing him.

Martha, Sadie and the girl leave for the country on the following morning, and that night Harding, locating the house in Eastwood, looks in through the window and sees the three in the big living room. He manages to climb the back porch and enters the house from a second-story window. He is hardly inside, however, when he is seized, bound and gagged by two men who have been sitting silently in semi-darkness. The girl in the meantime has gone to her room on the first floor. Sadie and Martha hear the scuffle upstairs, and Sadie goes up to investigate.

Descending swiftly to the hall, she meets Drayton, who has arrived with two henchmen, and gives the alarm. The two henchmen run swiftly up the stairs, burst in with guns drawn. The two secret service men, taken by surprise, surrender. Drayton then goes to the girl's bedroom door, forces an entrance, and locks himself and the girl in the room. Upstairs when the lights go on, Harding is discovered and one of Drayton's men removes his gag. He tells them he is with the "big fellow" and commands them to get the keys from the officers and remove the handcuffs from his wrists. He is obeyed. He then commands them to tie the officers up while he keeps them covered. He is handed the guns and the henchmen start to bind the secret service men when Harding swings on them and covers them. Ordering the secret service men to take care of the now bewildered crooks, Harding goes to the rescue of the girl who is battling with Drayton. A few seconds later Drayton and his "gang" are linked together and Harding learns that the girl is the famous Mary Lane of the Secret Service, who has been trying to trap Drayton and Martha for months.

WAR! WAR! WAR!

THE Animated Weekly was shown on Sunday to the crowds at the Rialto Theatre, on Broadway, New York, and cheered for fully five minutes, the applause continuing long after the reel had come to an end. Number 67 is a very special sort of a number, even for the Universal Animated Weekly, composed as it is almost entirely of scenes which record the declaration of the entry of this country into the world war, and the preparations which are being rushed in all parts of the vast continent.

The reel commences with an extract from that historic document, the President's address to Congress, and then the nation's chief executive is shown in the act of signing the Declaration. The Rialto used a new idea in the projection of this subject, which added immensely to its effectiveness. Two machines were employed; the view of the President was projected from one, while the message to Congress was thrown on the screen at the same time from the other. This novel effect acted immediately upon the great audience, and the cheering which lasted almost all through the reel broke out. Directly following this came the cartoon by Hy. Mayer, who is making the most striking and effective patriotic cartoon of the day. This one depicted a huge egg, which broke, liberating the American eagle. One-half of the shell slowly dissolved into a sailor, and the other into a soldier. This aroused the people into a frenzy of applause. The famous Rialto orchestra then struck up the National anthem, and the crowd sprang to its feet, singing like mad. Applause broke out again frequently during the showing of the other subjects, most of which were of patriotic character.

Scenes from "The Flower of Doom."

RED FEATHER Photoplay, written and produced by Rex Ingram, and featuring Wedgwood Nowell, with Gypsy Hart, the recently discovered leading lady.

GYPSY HART makes in "The Flower of Doom" her first appearance as a leading lady in Red Feather photoplays. This one, an exciting, melodramatic story, was written and produced by Rex Ingram, and staged at Universal City with a strong cast, headed by the recently discovered Miss Hart, and Wedgwood Nowell, whom Mr. Ingram has called "the best dramatic leading man on the screen." Others prominent in the cast are M. K. Wilson, Nicholas Dunaew, and Yvette Mitchell, and they carry their work to a successful conclusion. The picture is filled with artistic atmosphere, fine light effects and unusual sets, characteristic of a picture produced by Mr. Ingram, while the story rushes fast to a satisfactory ending. Here is an outline of the events which happen in quick succession:

At a meeting of the Hop Sing Tong, a Chinaman chooses the red bean and is destined to kill one of his countrymen. Some time later this man walks up to the condemned Chinaman and deliberately shoots him. As the man falls to the ground dead, the murderer tosses the revolver to an accomplice who in turn tosses it to another and he hurls it into an alley. When the police arrive upon the scene, the murderer blandly says: "No savvy," and is not suspected. The police think this the work of the Hop Sing Tong and are instructed by the chief to arrest Charley Sing, as one Chinaman is as good as another.

Big Tom Hogan, the Tammany leader, is visited by Buck Mahoney, a gang leader, who is a good friend of Charley Sing's and has come to get Hogan to manage to have the Chinaman released, for he has talked with the prisoner and knows he is innocent. Through his influence, Hogan forces the Governor to pardon Charley Sing, who is so delighted and so grateful to Buck that he promises to do anything for him, even to giving his life.

Savinsky gives up cabaret dancers forever.

Samuel Savinsky, the keeper of a pawnshop, is thought much of by his wife and family, who never suspect his affair with Neva Sacon, a dancer at a popular cafe. He is making her gifts of money and valuable jewels, and becomes insanely jealous of Harvey Wilson, a newspaper reporter.

Paul Rasnov, a sculptor and a dope fiend, pawns some valuable trinkets at Savinsky's store in order to buy opium at the Chinese store of Ah Wong, the leader of the Three Brothers Tong, where he has come to love Tea Rose, Ah Wong's pretty little wife. She finally consents to run away with Paul.

While Buck is trying to get Charley Sing out of prison, he meets Harvey and says he will show him secrets of Chinatown if Harvey will expose the Boss in his paper. Buck guides Harvey into the building of the Hop Sing Tong. Harvey is very enthusiastic over a silver flower, and Buck, seeing no one is looking, tells him to keep it. That evening Harvery goes to the cafe and gives Neva the poppy—the Flower of Doom. They make arrangements to go down to Chinatown the following day.

Harvey and Neva go to Chinatown and stop at Ah Wong's store to get something to eat. There the proprietor sees Neva and makes plans with some of his servants to kidnap her. While Harvey is looking at some silks in another room, a panel opens behind her and she is pulled through the opening. When the reporter returns to the table, he finds only a glove and, asking excitedly for Neva, is told by a servant that the lady has just left. He hurries to tell Buck about the strange disappearance.

The Chinamen leave Neva in a small, damp room. Left alone with a Chinaman at one time, the girl offers him a curious ring which Savinsky has given her, if he will deliver a message to Harvey at the newspaper office. The Chinaman is informed by the editor that the reporter is not in, and, thus satisfied, the Chink goes to Savinsky's pawnshop to get rid of the ring. The pawnbroker immediately recognizes the ring and forces the Chinaman to tell how he got it. Then, with a policeman, Savinsky starts to Ah Wong's, but when the officer threatens to shoot down a door, Savnisky is frightened, and, content with having regained the piece of jewelry, jumps into a taxi and dashes from Chinatown.

Buck appeals to, Charley Sing to find Neva, and following Charley's suggestion, Tea Rose is kidnapped while a letter written in Chinese is sent to Ah Wong telling him of Tea Rose and offering her in exchange for Neva. Ah Wong consents, and that evening Neva is restored to her people and Tea Rose to her husband.

Savinsky happens to pass by the meeting place and seeing Neva again with Harvey, realizes he has lost. He goes to her apartment to demand the jewels he has given her. Harvey returns with Neva, and when Savinsky begins to quarrel about his rights, the reporter throws him out. Harvey proposes to Neva who accepts his offer.

Meanwhile, warned by a spying Chink that Tea Rose and Rasnov are going to run away that evening, Ah Wong plans to spoil their party. He hides in the place where the girl is expecting to meet Rasnov, and springing on her drags her into a room and strangles her.

Rasnov waits for Tea Rose, and Ah Wong, mad with fury, rushes in at him. They fight, and after a terrible struggle the Chinaman lifts Rasnov up to hurl him against the wall when his foot slips and his skull is crushed against the stone steps of the grating. Having lost Tea Rose, Rasnov consoles himself with opium.

OIL MAGNATE SPENDS DAY WATCHING UNIVERSAL FOLK.

A FEW days ago while Director Raymond Wells was filming a number of scenes for a special feature starring Jack Mulhall, and called "The Hero of the Hour, E. L. Doheny, president of the Mexican Petroleum Company, a multimillionaire resident of Los Angeles, was a guest at the extensive Elliott-Brandt Ranch in the San Fernando Valley, where the players were working. The oil magnate spent an entire day with the company and took an unusual interest in the work of making motion pictures.

Doheny requested that he might run the entire film when completed, in the projecting room of his Los Angeles mansion and invited the director and the leading members of the company to be his guests at that time.

The oil man has one of the most remarkable homes in the West, and his conservatory contains the greatest variety of palms ever assembled. When President Wilson broke off diplomatic relations with Germany, Doheny at once wired the chief executive of the nation tendering to the government the fleet of oil vessels owned by his corporation, together with any other use the government might desire to make of the property of the petroleum company.

F. HOPKINSON SMITH'S novel, "A Kentucky Cinderella," has been adapted for production at the Bluebird studios by Director Rupert Julian.

Julian and Harry Carter have the leads, supporting Ruth Clifford, who plays "Nannie.

Song Hits in Photoplay

Irving Berlin, author of "The Road That Leads to Happiness." The first "Song Hit in Photoplay."

THE Universal Program is always searching for a novelty, and a real one has now been discovered, and is hereby announced. Song Hits in Photoplay will be an actual fact, and can be obtained from any Universal exchange the second week in May. A word of explanation about this new phase of the motion picture art will not be amiss, as the term is one coined by the Universal.

It has been the experience of every careful exhibitor who keeps his finger on the pulse of his audience that an admixture of music is productive of a great deal of enjoyment to his audience. In the first place, it is a relief from the picture itself, and due to this slight relief, there is a perceptible heightening of the interest shown in subsequent films. All of the large theatres in New York are for this reason employing soloists, and the best soloists which their money can obtain and have found it pays. It is, of course, possible for any theatre to do the same thing, but how many of them do it? Through the medium of Song Hits in Photoplay, this will be entirely possible, and will be a welcome addition to the film program.

This innovation in the films is nothing more or less than 500-foot pictures illustrating popular songs of the day. Take, for instance, the first one, which will be released as a special on May 8th. It is entitled "The Road That Leads to Happiness," and is Irving Berlin's latest song hit, which in a few weeks will be sung by every man, woman and child in the United States. The moving picture has been filmed from the subject matter of this song, and is intended to be shown on the screen while the song is being sung. Part of the screen version, of course, is the showing of the chorus, and any audience who can keep from singing it and thus taking a part in its own entertainment, must have been born and brought up in Iceland. Two famous stars are featured in the production—Blossom Seeley, the internationally known vaudeville headliner, and Ted Snyder, the best known music publisher in the world.

Before the Universal Film Manufacturing Company agreed to release these Song Hits in Photoplay on its program, it insisted upon having them thoroughly tried out in all kinds of houses in and around New York, and they have so thoroughly satisfied the officers of the Universal that they have not the slightest hesitation in recommending them unhesitatingly to any exhibitor who wishes a first-class novelty. The Harlem Opera House and the Fifth Avenue Theatre in particular have been very keen on these Song Hits in Photoplay, and are billing them like any other headline attraction. They are booked indefinitely. The Universal's Kansas City exchange has also been given this proposition to try out, and the exchange is extremely enthusiastic about it:. All in all, Song Hits in Photoplay seem destined to prove one of the biggest drawing cards yet announced by the Universal.

The second attraction, which will be released during the week of May 27th, will be "Me an' M' Gal," by E. Ray Goetz, Edgar Leslie and George W. Meyer, and will feature Gladys Clark and Henry Bergman, the well-known vaudeville headliners who are playing at the Winter Gardn, New York, at the present time. The third attraction, which will be released during the week of June 17th, will be "Poor Butterfly", by Raymond Hubbel. This is the wonderful hit of the Hippodrome Show which has spread like wildfire over the country, and which is probably the most popular song of the year. The star of this will be announced later.

It is the intention of Watterson, Berlin and Snyder, who are securing these songs, to place in them only the assured successes written by men like Irving Berlin, Earl Carroll, Grant Clark, Ernest R. Ball, Victor Herbert, Gus Edwards, Ballard MacDonald, Harry Carroll, William Jerome, Jean Schwartz, Bert Grant, A. Seymour Brown, Henry Marshall, Theodore Morse and Harry Williams, and only top-notch stars like Belle Baker, Frances White, Charles King, Fannie Brice, Nora Bayes, May Irwin, Fay Templeton and Sophie Tucker will be starred in them.

In order to make this proposition as easy for exhibitors as possible, Watterson Berlin and Snyder will issue orchestrations and copies of the song to all of the exchanges, and they may be obtained with the print. They will also give the exchanges a list of available singers in their territory.

GERARD GETS PRINT.

PRESIDENT LAEMMLE, of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, was one of the first persons to greet Ambassador Gerard when that diplomat returned to this country after his recall from Berlin. Mr. Laemmle has known Mr. Gerard a number of years, and it was by his orders that the Universal Animated Weekly made a complete photographic record of the envoy's voyage from Europe and subsequent arrival in New York City.

This motion picture was presented to Mr. Gerard for his own private library.

A DELIGHTFUL picture is "The Tell-Tale Clue" staged in the great outdoors, from a story written by Helen Jonas, adapted for the screen by Calder Johnstone, and produced by George Cochrane, with one of the prettiest leading ladies in the business, as the heroine. Molly Malone is exactly suited to such roles as that of the little camp doctor, whose presence of mind and courage lead to the conviction of an unscrupulous couple, who nearly succeed in killing the man she loves. Here is the story:

Molly lives with her grandfather, and rules him as well as the lumbermen of the camp, with an iron hand. She roams the woods at her own sweet will, gathering herbs, and very grateful are these same lumbermen, for she makes the herbs into soothing lotions to heal all their ailments.

Richard Foster comes to the mountains for a rest. He makes Molly's acquaintance, and soon they are inseparable companions.

Godfrey Livingston and his pretty wife come for a visit to the mountains and discover that they know Richard slightly, and so renew the acquaintance. The wife, a vampire type, immediately lays siege to Richard's heart, and this causes her husband to become insanely jealous. Molly sees the two together, and thinks that he loves the pretty woman, so she avoids him.

But Richard is missing her companionship and will not succumb to the wiles of Mrs. Livingston, until she, desperate, purposely slips into the water and when he has his arms about her, kisses him. The husband happens to see this, and shoots Richard. The two think he is dead, and, at her suggestion, return to their camp and prepare to leave. Molly comes upon the still form of Richard. She runs to the camp for aid, and some of the men go back and fetch Richard to her

"HER GREAT MISTAKE"

BIG U Two - Reel Animal Drama, featuring Marie Walcamp, with some of the big cats of the Universal zoo in a story full of thrills.

THE Big U drama in two reels, called "Her Great Mistake," gives Marie Walcamp an opportunity to display her reckless courage with some of the wonderfully trained animals of the Universal City zoo, in a story which has an interesting plot as well as many thrills.

Mary Dirke, daughter of John Dirke, a South African hunter, has a great love for wild animals. Her private zoo consists of many wild beasts she has captured.

Paul, who is in love with Mary, asks for her hand. Mary consents, and Paul hastens away to inform his parents of his happiness.

Paul is startled by the appearance of strangers who have come into the country for the purpose of capturing and killing wild animals. John Dirke extends his welcome to Mr. Sellsman, the leader of the party, and puts them up at his home. Sellsman meets Mary, and soon learns of her pets. He becomes so interested in what she Alberforce and his aunts.

Which is it?

William's quiet little party.

CARTER DE HAVEN, given a proper opportunity, has the skill and the personality to make the most of it, and in "The Topsy-Turvy Twins," the Victor comedy which was written by Walter Woods, adapted for the screen by Bess Meredyth and produced by Richard Stanton, he had an opportunity of the very first-class. He plays both twins, the mollycoddle Alberforce, and the sport William, and their adventures make two reels of the purest fun. Here is a synopsis of their many complications:

William Jones, raised by his Uncle Frank in the city, was a rounder, while his twin brother Alberforce, raised in the country by his grandmother and two aunts, was just the opposite. Grandma had picked out Mattie, the little daughter of a neighbor, for Alberforce's wife, so that she could have him always under her eye. But Alberforce, though he was a sissy, had longings for the Great White Way.

So, when a letter arrived from Frank, saying that some legal business required his signature, Alberforce was delighted. With fear and trembling, the three women decided to let him go. He arrived in the city and was met by his uncle, who was rather horrified at the result of feminine training.

Their father's will decreed that if either of the boys gambled, drank, played with chorus girls, or compromised himself in any shady affair, his share of the money was to go to charity. The lawyer had already satisfied himself as to Alberforce, but he insisted upon seeing William for himself. It was the birthday of the twins, and William, in spite of the imminent visit of the lawyer, was determined to have the party he had planned. They were all assembled and making a great noise when Uncle Frank arrived with Alberforce. The two brothers met, and William lent the other a dress suit and told him to comb back his neatly parted hair in city style. Then, when Alberforce appeared in the dining-room, they all took him for his brother. This was fortunate, as the lawyer had arrived and was at that moment with Uncle Frank, who had done all he could to make the party keep quiet. The lawyer insisted upon seeing William, and Frank brought in Alberforce by mistake. Of course he answered all the lawyer's searching questions about chorus girls and cocktails in the negative, and the lawyer was satisfied.

Marianne De Voe, an actress who thought herself engaged to William, now appeared, and also mistook Alberforce for his brother. She declared that if he refused to marry her she would sue him. In the meantime, Grandma and the aunts repented of their rashness in letting Alberforce go to the city alone, and followed him. They arrived and met William, who was much taken with Mattie. His party was sent home, and he sat on the sofa with the four country women. Uncle Frank entered and found them. William begged Grandma to take him back to the country, and as Alberforce was only too delighted to stay with Uncle Frank, the arrangement was made. William rejuvenates the three women, and we see them, at the end, fearfully and wonderfully attired, on their way to a card party.

tells him that he requests to be shown the effects of her training. Mary delights in entertaining so handsome a stranger.

Paul is jealous of Sellsman. One of Mary's leopards escapes, and the party start out to recapture it. The leopard is seen running into a hollow tree. Paul attempts to shoot it, but Mary's father interferes. Nets are set about the hole in different directions to await the return. The party attempts to capture Mary. She jumps astride her horse and dashes for freedom, only to be thrown to the ground by the limb of a tree. She is rendered unconscious. Dirke and the hunters, unable to find the leopard, return to the net to discover that a lion has been there and escaped. This greatly worries Paul, who believes the lion has attacked Mary.

For a time, the English sportsman is accused by Mary's father of having deserted her when she was in danger from the jaguars and tigers, who pursued her into a deserted cabin, but later Mary relieves him from this charge of cowardice.

LOIS WEBER

STARRING

BEN WILSON

By Marjorie Howard

THE speaking stage lost a great actress, the concert world a great pianist, and the world of letters a great author when Lois Weber became a director of motion pictures. But motion pictures gained one of the commanding personalities of the new art, or infant industry, whichever you may elect to call it.

From the very beginning Miss Weber's pictures had that quality of distinction, the impress of a soaring imagination, of an unfailing sense of the dramatic, which mark off the productions of genius from those of mere talent. The man in the street sums it up in his phraseology by saying that her pictures are "different." The spectator of developed intelligence explains the depth and truth of her productions by saying that they are life, seen through the eyes of a poet. That is why Lois Weber can deal successfully with subjects which other directors would not dare to touch for fear of condemnation. Every scene in a Lois Weber picture is there because its belongs in the story, because to remove it would mean mutilation. Her productions stage life as it is, but as it is from the viewpoint of a great poet, whose breadth and clarity of vision see past the ultimate effect to the fundamental cause.

No need to review in the Weekly the list of Lois Weber's performances. The list of her Bluebird Photoplays alone includes some of the most successful of those supremely successful photoplays. In every one of them there was a purpose beyond that of mere entertainment, from "Hop, the Devil's Brew," which was written to expose the opium evil, by Rufus Steele, to the ethereal "Mysterious Mrs. M." with apparently no purpose on earth but to amuse, which yet bore a message more powerful than that of many sermons on that which makes life really worth while. It is probably by her big multiple features that Miss Weber is best known. "Hypocrites," "Scandal," "Where are My Children?" "Idle Wives," to say nothing of "The Dumb Girl of Portici." Of these big productions, the last is the only one which was a "vehicle" for the exploitation of a "star"—Anna Pavlowa. Most people won't remember the names of even the leading players in the others. Yet the pictures themselves are engraved upon their memories. That is because there was a living purpose behind every one of them; because each was the presentation of a phase of life; because each was to the screen what a piece of great literature is to the world of letters—a reflection of human experience, a holding of the mirror up to nature. How far these productions differ from the dreary "propaganda" film, their box office value attests. Lois Weber's photoplays are the work of a poet of the screen—yet they pay!

Apparently she has no "method." Sometimes she works through the extreme of realism, through a fidelity to the last sordid detail which is typical of a modern Russian, as in the Bluebird "Shoes." Sometimes she joins the "open air" school and gets effects with cloud studies, flowers and natural surroundings, like an impressionist painter. Again she frankly employs the resources of allegory, as she did in "Hypocrites," a film which has held the screen triumphantly through several revivals. She has returned to this medium in her latest contribution to motion pictures—"Even as You and I."

This is the story of a young sculptor and his wife, poor in the world's goods, but rich in that which makes life worth the living. They, however, do not value their possession of Youth, Love and Honor sufficiently to protect them from the covetousness of the powers of evil. The Evil Genius of humanity, provoked at their defiance of his might, attacks them, finding that he must first destroy their three supreme gifts. He sends Lust to conquer Honor; Self-Pity to the wife to conquer Love, and Drink to the man. Their Youth wastes away of itself, and at the end, though restored to each other, they are left with nothing but Repentance.

This is a mere outline of the story, in which Miss Weber has employed a cast chosen with the care which she always lavishes upon the casting of a photoplay. It is a common saying in the profession, however, that she inspires players to work of which they themselves did not know themselves capable. She has proved that over and over again, and never more forcibly than in "The People vs. John Doe," in which some of the leading roles were filled by actors who had never seen their names in a cast before. Ben Wilson is the sculptor, and Mignon Anderson is his wife. Harry Carter, a consummate villain of the screen, is the Evil Genius, with a corps of "lesser devils," headed by Hayward Mack and Earl Page. Priscilla Dean is the frivolous, vain, and worthless butterfly, and Bertram Grassby is her husband, who manages to rescue himself by the resource of hard work. The production had a first showing at the Rialto Theatre, on Broadway, last week, and received high praise from the New York critics.

The New York Tribune said:

"Lois Weber is responsible for this photo-allegory, and it is so cleverly done that it makes one quite uncomfortable. Interpolated through the picture are the words 'Even as You and I,' and it needs no sub-titles to point the moral."

The Morning Telegraph said:

"'Even as You and I' is pure phantasy and most of its characters are but symbols for certain mental attributes. Nevertheless the human qualities of the story are kept in view."

"A JEWEL IN PAWN"

Aaron Levovitch.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, adapted for the screen by Maie Havey and produced by Jack Conway, with Ella Hall featured, and Antrim Short and Walter Belasco in her support.

A CHARMING story was written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, adapted for the screen by Maie Havey, and then turned over to Jack Conway to produce, with Ella Hall in a role which fits her like a glove. It is another of the little girl parts which she plays better than any actress on the screen to-day, for she never seems to be acting at all, and her appearance never for a moment suggests that she is more than twelve years old. Even her hands seem to be those of a child. In "A Jewel in Pawn" she is supported for the first time in a photoplay by her own mother, and the marked resemblance between them makes for realism in the picture as nothing else could. Walter Belasco, in the role of the kind-hearted old pawnbroker, and Antrim Short as the newsboy, Jimmie, give their very best to the production, which is delightful all the way through. Director Conway has introduced countless deft touches of humor, contrasting with the pathos of a story which is as wholesome as sunshine. Here is an outline of it:

Nora Martin is the seventeen-year-old sunbeam of the tenements. She teaches the little youngsters how to spell and read, and helps Aaron Levovitch in his pawnshop. Mrs. Martin, determined to remove her daughter from the slums, goes to Levovitch with all her earthly possessions, but there is not enough on which she can raise the money she needs to take her daughter to her grandfather's home in the country.

Mrs. Martin had married against her father's will, and when her husband died she was left impoverished. Determined now to attempt a reconciliation, Mrs. Martin would pawn her possessions for railroad fare. When Aaron suggests that she pawn her daughter, Mrs. Martin reluctantly consents, and goes alone to seek parental forgiveness. Arrving at her father's country estate, Mrs. Martin finds that he is living at his home in the city.

Mr. Martin collapses when informed of the fruitlessness of her sacrifice, and is taken into the house of her father, where she dies. The father, telegraphed for, arrives too late to see his daughter alive. His servants tell him that Mrs. Martin in her final delirium has begged them to "redeem her jewel in pawn."

AND SELL
EVERYTHING

"Can't you make it five dollars?" begged Nora.

Meanwhile, in Aaron Levovitch's pawnshop Nora is daily endearing herself to the kindly old Hebrew, who gives her every care and comfort his lowly quarters afford. Newsboy Jimmy has always been Nora's defender and reliance in her contest with "the Bully" and other children, and when Jimmy is falsely accused of theft, the Judge of the Juvenile Court paroles him in Nora's care. Thus he, also comes to live with Levovitch. The two children look upon Aaron as their father, and the kind-hearted old pawnbroker bears great affection toward them both.

During Jimmy's day in court, Bob Hendricks, a clever newspaper reporter, always on the watch for a good story, senses his opportunity and prints a "heart interest" narrative about "the jewel in pawn." This story comes under the eye of Nora's grandfather, John Dane, and the wealthy old widower goes at once to Aaron's pawnshop and claims the little girl.

Three years in preparatory school turns Nora out a beautiful young lady, a bud of society and so good a "catch" that Percival Van Dyke, a snobbish Englishman, sets his cap for her. On a day when Nora is giving a tea to her schoolmates, Jimmy and Aaron, in response to Nora's invitation, call and are hailed joyously by their little friend. When Nora takes them into the garden for a chat, Jimmy makes bold to tell her of his abiding love, and Nora is quick to prove that she reciprocates.

Percival sees Jimmy and Nora in a most loving embrace, and calls Nora's grandfather to gaze upon the scene. The old man flies into a rage and orders Jimmy and Aaron from the grounds. Nora loses little time in changing her clothes, puts on the dress she had brought from her humble station in life, and is soon back again in Aaron's pawnshop.

Nora's grandfather reads the note she leaves behind and, taking Percival, hurries to Aaron's place, but arrives only in time to be a witness to the Jewish marriage ceremony that unites Jimmy and Nora for life.

FIRE ALARMS FOR ANIMATED.

ALL records for speed in effective procuring of animated news were shattered again by the Cincinnati bureau of the Universal Animated Weekly. Twelve minutes after an explosion had destroyed and set fire to the Ford Motor Company's plant in the suburbs of Cincinnati, the bureau had three cameramen on the job grinding out film for the Animated Weekly.

The system employed to assure such promptness is one in use in virtually every newspaper office in the country, but the Universal's Cincinnati bureau is the first motion picture organization to adopt it. Several days ago, the manager of the bureau asked the Fire Commissioner of his city to install in the bureau an automatic fire alarm. By this method, the manager knew he would get fire alarms and police signals as soon as the firemen and policemen themselves received them, and he was accommodated by the commissioner.

The firemen assigned to the task of installing the signals had just completed their work when the first alarm came from the Ford plant. It was speedily followed by a second alarm, and the manager immediately assigned three cameramen to the event. They commandeered a taxi and were on hand at the height of the story.

All the advantages of this innovation are reflected in the current issue of the Animated Weekly. Seldom has a more vivid subject been shown in a topical reel. Negotiations are now under way looking toward the installation of such a signal service in the New York office.

Ham and Hamlet

Extracts from the story, with special pictures posed by William Franey, which will be published in the Motion Picture Magazine

By H. H. VAN LOAN

Wm. Franey as he really looks.

"I want ter be a movie actor!"

(Damon Ham has arrived at Universal City from the metropolis of Eggzema, to become a picher actor. He meets Beaudine, of the Jokers, just after he has been appointed to sweep the thoroughfares of the city.)

HOW long have you been idle?" Beaudine asked the nondescript.

"I'm workin'," Damon informed him, as he grasped the handle of his broom with grim determination.

"Who for?" continued the director.

"The Kaiser," answered Damon. "He told me to sweep the streets, hang up the flag and lots of other things, and then eat."

"I knew it was empty," remarked Beaudine as he looked at Higgins, who nodded approvingly. "How would you like to be a real movie actor?" he added.

"That's what I come here for," said Damon. His face refused to manifest any interest and remained as vacant as a blank pad.

"Well, you've started wrong," the director informed him. "You've got a wonderful face for pictures. Take my advice and never try to improve it, if you do, you'll spoil it. Let it remain just as it is."

"How can we employ him?" asked Higgins with interest.

"He's going to play Hamlet," said Beaudine. "Go over and see how Parsons and his gang are progressing with those three sets. In the meantime I'll take him over and get him fixed up." As Higgins departed, the director started toward the wardrobe department with Damon, who was still clinging to the broom.

"Now, this is the first time that Hamlet has been made into a picture. It's going to be an elaborate production in eight reels, and the whole success of it depends on you."

"Who is he?" meekly inquired Damon, with no attempt to conceal his ignorance.

"He isn't—he was. You don't mean to tell me that you don't know who Hamlet was!" exclaimed the director. "Why, he was the feller who upset the Scottish throne, married Ophelia and murdered Macduff in the Tower of London. . . . Now plunge in there and get some Hamlet atmosphere and when you emerge ask for Director Beaudine."

"Bovine?" asked Damon, innocently. For it was the only word he really understood.

"Say, don't you ever try to pull anything," the director warned him, "'cause you're always funny." And with that he started for the big open-air stage.

When Damon made his exit from the wardrobe building a little later he was worthy of considerable notice. He was very much undressed, in a very attentive suit of underwear, a semi-ballet skirt and a duet of shoes that resembled two submarines, while across his left shoulder was wrapped innumerable yards of cloth, quite akin to curtains.

Everything within a radius of six miles punctuated activities when Mr. Damon Ham as Hamlet loomed up on the horizon.

"Looks like a revival of the Roman period," remarked Beaudine, who at that moment stepped from his office with John Murphy, his assistant.

"Julius Caesar gone wrong, I should say," added Murphy as they both studied Hamlet, who was stranded out in the middle of the road. . . . . .

Murphy went over and rescued the stranded Hamlet and, taking him by the arm, led Franey as Capt. Nemo in the coming burlesque, "20,000 Legs Under the Sea" him over to where Beaudine was impatiently waiting.

"What's the matter, did yer engine die on yer over there?" he shouted, as the two arrived.

"I wasn't doin' nothin, mister," said Damon, somewhat chagrined.

"Well, hereafter when you've got nothin' to do, go an' weep on yer grandmother's grave," the director warned him.

"I can't; she's dead," said Damon.

"Untouched by hands," said Murphy, as he threw both of his above his head.

"Shows you what drink will do for some men," laughed Beaudine. Then, as he studied the star, he continued: "Where's your make-up?"

"Left it over there," he answered, as he pointed toward the wardrobe building.

"I tell you, Bill, he's original," remarked Murphy. "There's none genuine without his signature."

"Take him around and fresco his label, will yer," said the director, as he turned to his assistant.

Murphy took him to the "extra" room and shoved a stick of grease-paint in one hand and a mirror in the other.

"Now hide it," he ordered him. "Don't even let your ears show, if you can help it."

Damon grasped the stick and began lathering his face with it, while Murphy looked on with interest. It was No. 6, and before he finished his face looked as though it had fallen heir to a wealth of chocolate.

"You can't fix it without being born again," said Murphy. "You've got a big suit against nature. That face of yours is injured for life. Come on." . .

"Here he is," said Dorothy Phillips, as Damon approached with Murphy. She was dressed in the costume of Ophelia and stood chatting with Beaudine.

"Say," began the director as the rural Hamlet arrived, "I wish you'd stop goin' ter lunch every five minutes!"

"When?" asked Damon innocently.

"It's an absolutely unprecedented sale, I tell yer," chimed in Murphy, as he turned away.

"I hope it never comes into vogue," said Dorothy, as Damon stood staring at her.

"Well, fish," said Beaudine, "I want to introduce you to Miss Phillips. She's going to play opposite you, as Ophelia."

"I can't play that," responded Damon. "All I can play is tag."

"If it keeps open much longer, I'll raid it and take its license away," blurted out Murphy.

"What do you call it?" inquired the fascinating little star.

"Call it anything you like," answered the director.

"Bury it! Don't even let your ears show!"

"It's the biggest disaster since the Germans started their ruthless submarine warfare," added Murphy.

(Damon is then told to fetch a bull.)

About an hour later, as Beaudine was superintending the construction of a "set," Murphy, who had been out reconnoitering, rushed up breathlessly.

"Leave-him-ter me, will — yer — boss?" he panted, as he pointed down the road.

Beaudine turned and beheld a sight seldom equalled even in a moving picture town where something new is being flashed every few hours. There was Damon using every ounce of his manly strength to urge the national beast of Ireland up the road. But, the animal seemed to have its own ideas about progress, and though he tugged with it, pleaded with it, pulled it and pushed it, the beast refused to budge.

"That guy is as busy as the South after the Civil War," remarked Jerry.

"Nothin' would ever do anythin' for him," added Beaudine. "He's too rough." And with that the trio started after him.

"Say, empty, if that was a bull when it started, it certainly shrunk on the way," said the director, as he arrived on the scene with his staff.

"It wuzn't," said Damon, as he grabbed the horns of the beast.

"If I sent you for a package of pins you'd come back with the Panama Canal," continued Beaudine. "Now what'n hell are yer tryin' ter do with this Irish ambassador?"

"The feller didn't have a bull, so he said while I wuzn't doin' anythin' I could straighten out this thin's horns," replied Damon, as he placed his knee against the goat and tugged away in an effort to untwist his antlers.

"He's mean enough to go to work with crutches so's ter git a seat on the subway," remarked Murphy.

"Take twenty feet of it," said Beaudine, as he turned to Jerry.

"Say, boss," said the cameraman with an evidence of surprise, "how long yer goin' ter let this guy queer this pitcher?"

"What'er yer talkin' 'bout, yer poor simp," replied Beaudine. "He's given me a good one-reel comedy."

"What's the matter? Did your engine die on your way over there?" said Director Beaudine

MISS MABEL BURKE, the clever young singer who is winning success introducing "The Road That Leads to Love."

Crowds Both See and Hear Song Hit

PEOPLE are crowding the Fifth Avenue Theatre and the Harlem Opera House several times daily to see Irving Berlin's great song, "The Road that Leads to Love."

The word "see" is used advisedly, although also they hear Miss Mabel Burke, a charming soprano, sing the song. But they do see it, because at these two theatres the two greatest amusement enterprises in the world have combined to give the audience a great novelty. The song publisher and the movies are presented together. It is done in this way.

The story of the song, and it is a delightful one, is carried out by actors and while the lines are being sung, the situation is being acted in a motion picture film. The audiences are very much interested in this new departure and it promises to be a big success.

The film starts before the singer and begins very brightly. The title page of the song is shown and then Ted Snyder, the music publisher, is seen speeding up Broadway in his big car. He seems in a great hurry and soon the cause of his haste is seen as he overtakes Blosso Seeley, the well known ballad singer, right ahead in her car. POPULAR SONG HITS ACCOMPANIED BY CLEVEREST MOVING PICTURES. This—has scored an instantaneous and tremendous success in New York City at the Fifth Avenue Theatre and in the Harlem Opera House. Irving Berlin's great hit, "The Road That Leads To Love," with moving pictures, brought forth roars of applause, proving that IT'S WHAT THE PUBLIC WANT AS A NOVELTY, and the beauty of the idea is its great possibilities for all concerned.

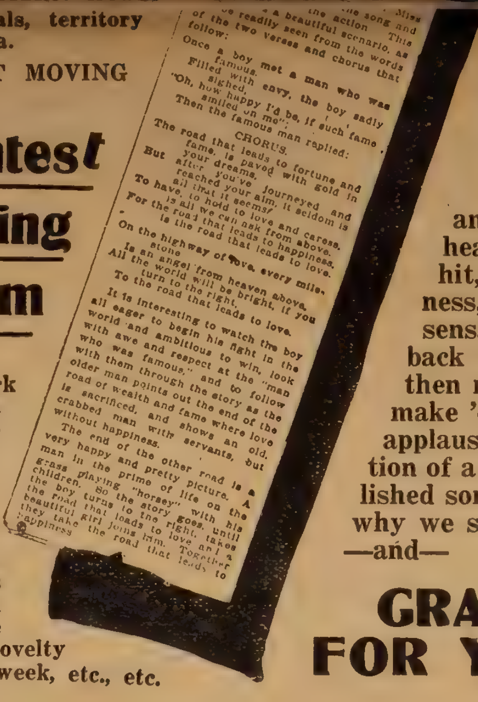
To start with a split reel of perhaps five hundred feet of pictures will be produced every three weeks—then when this idea has taken root and grown to bigger possibilities and when Exhibitors all over the country DEMAND IT—then we will make a larger footage of pictures and produce this novelty oftener—perhaps once every two weeks—then once every week, etc., etc.



...the song and ... Miss ... the action This ... a beautiful scenario, as ... readily seen from the words of the two verses and chorus that follow:

Once a boy met a man who was famous.
Filled with envy, the boy sadly sighed,
"Oh, how happy I'd be, if such fame smiled on me";
Then the famous man replied:

CHORUS.

The road that leads to fortune and fame, is paved with gold in your dreams,
But after you've journeyed and reached your aim, it seldom is all that it seems;
To have, to hold to love and caress,
Is all we can ask from above.
For the road that leads to happiness,
Is the road that leads to love.

On the highway of love, every milestone
Is an angel from heaven above,
All the world will be bright, if you turn to the right,
To the road that leads to love.

It is interesting to watch the boy all eager to begin his fight in the world and ambitious to win, look with awe and respect at the "man who was famous," and to follow with them through the story as the older man points out the end of the road of wealth and fame where love is sacrificed, and shows an old, crabbed man with servants, but without happiness.

The end of the other road is a very happy and pretty picture. A man in the prime of life on the grass playing "horsey" with his children. So the story goes, until the boy turns to the right, takes the road that leads to love and a beautiful girl joins him. Together they take the road that leads to happiness

Ben Wilson, star of "The Voice on the Wire," great Universal serial.

EPISODE NUMBER SIX

BEN WILSON IN

"The Voice on the Wire"

"The Death Warrant"

THE mystery serial, adapted from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball and produced by Stuart Paton, builds steadily toward the climax, with a continuation of the series of utterly inexplicable crimes.

CAST.

Shirley	Ben Wilson
Polly	Neva Gerber
"Red" Warren	Francis McDonald
Dr. Renolds	Jos. Girard
Carns	Frank MacQuarrie
Cronin	Howard Crampton
Short	Lou Short

WE left the serial in the last episode at the point where John Shirley, played by Ben Wilson, was trying to batter down the door, inside which waited Polly Marion, and the threatened victim of the mysterious force, which had already brought several men to their doom. In Episode No. 6, Eustace Hale Ball, the author, ably assisted by the producer, Stuart Paton, shows John Shirley incapable of protecting the latest victim of "The Voice on the Wire." Then Polly, with whom he has fallen in love, is abducted, and the rest of the chapter is occupied with the chase for her and the criminals.

Shirley finally succeeds in breaking down the door and thus getting into the bedroom to Carns and Polly, who is beating the door and screaming. As Shirley enters, a muffled figure jumps through the window and disappears. Wayne and Dorian, two detectives, watch the house, and from another place "Red" Warren also keeps guard, but soon runs to the window, as do the other men. Shirley bends over the body of Carns and tries to restore him, and, while working, Carns shows signs of returning consciousness. "Red" appears at the window and orders him to throw up his hands. As Shirley moves toward the door, Wayne and Dorian step through. "Red" puts out the lights and a fight is begun in the dark. The detective who has been waiting downstairs now hears the noise of the fight and rushes to the bedroom where he joins in the melee. And while thus struggling the mysterious "Hand" is again working over Carns.

Meanwhile a crook waits in the road by an auto. Wayne grabs Polly and with the help of Dorian drags her off, finally getting her into the auto, where Red joins them in great haste.

Cronin and Short have managed to escape from the empty house, where they were confined by Red's" men, and arrive on the scene as Polly is being put into the auto. Short springs onto the running-board, but is hit by "Red" and knocked off. "Red" shouts: "To the docks, quick!"

Shirley and Reynolds discover that they are fighting each other. Then Shirley looks toward Carns but quickly sees that he is dead.

The house is aflame. Cronin and Short run in, and Short, frantically blowing his whistle, brings other officers, all of whom rush into the burning house. Shirley and Reynolds are soon out and are informed that "Red" has taken Polly to the docks. Suddenly Shirley remembers Carns and dashes back into the building only to find that the corpse had disappeared.

Shirley and the others race to the docks to save Polly, but arrives there just as the steamer is pulling out.

"Red" and his men get Polly, who is now unconscious, on the steamer and lock her in her stateroom. Later "Red" insinuatingly remarks to a crook that she might accidentally fall overboard, and just then the wireless operator hands Warren a message which instructs him to "fix" Polly; that Shirley will be "gotten" on the train. The message is signed by Laschlas. The men smile when they have read it.

Shirley and the others board a train and that night when every one is in bed, Shirley being asleep, the mysterious "Hand" appears and starts down the passage toward his berth and attacks Shirley, who manages to save himself. In the morning he sends word to the ship to guard Polly's cabin.

Jack Becomes a Special Attraction Hero

"Here's the only thing you're fit for!" Scene from the "Special Attraction."

"MA didn't raise her boy to be a housemaid," is what Jack Mulhall is saying in ineffectual protest as the inexorable foreman of the ranch hands him a broom as an insignia of the only office which young Billy Brooks, the perfume salesmen, is capable of filling, out in the country inhabited by real men.

Jack Mulhall, in the special attraction, called "The Hero of the Hour," which is scheduled for next week, has the best role which has fallen to the lot of the young star so far. An ornament of New York's smart set, he exasperates his rough and ready father to the point of being cut off without the proverbial shilling. It is true that the old man keeps his son's picture on his desk, but that is because every time he looks at it, it makes him so mad that he cuts loose and makes another million. The last straw is Billy's declaration that he is going to take a certain perfume into the homes of the best people. The idea of the only representative of the Brooks family becoming a perfume salesman is too much for the old man, and he schemes to circumvent the sweet-scented career which his son has planned for himself.

So Brooks, Jr., finds himself hauled bodily from the observation platform of the train upon which he is journeying West, and landed neck and crop in the midst of real life, with never a frill on it. A large group of particularly husky cowpunchers takes charge of him, he turns the tables on them and becomes a "hero" after all.

Dorothy Phillips as "Flash Fan" in the coming Bluebird, "The Girl in the Checkered Coat."

DOROTHY PHILLIPS TRIUMPHS IN DUAL ROLE.

AN example of the minuteness of detail demanded of the producer of motion pictures nowadays is illustrated by the shop scenes in the next Bluebird photoplay, "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," in which Dorothy Phillips does the finest work of her career in a dual role. The sisters, separated in their early youth by strange circumstance, grow up opposites in everything but appearance. One of them, Mary Graham, is a sweet and lovable girl of the highest principle, and the other, known to her shady associates as "Flash" Fan, is a pickpocket and confidant of criminals.

In the early scenes we are introduced to Flash Fan, as her pal is about to buy her a coat. It is the conspicuously checkered garment which catches her fancy, and the "set" in which she buys it, is a complete cloak department in a big store, faithful in every detail to the place itself.

Joseph DeGrasse, a descendant, by the way, of the French commander of the fleet sent to our aid at Yorktown, during the Revolutionary war, directed this picture, from a scenario by his wife, Ida May Park, and produced it with his usual success, and with the prize combination, Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell and Lon Chaney.

"Love and Blazes" with PHIL DUNHAM

THEY won't forget the production of "Love and Blazes" for some time at the L-Ko studios. Everybody was thankful when the iris closed for the last time on the scenes which had been specially prepared for the latest comedy, directed by Vin Moore under the supervision of J. G. Blystone, the director general. Phil Dunham was gladder than any of the others, for he declared that he had eaten enough smoke in the course of the picture to qualify in all seriousness for the fire department. And to this, Lucille Hutton said a fervent "Amen." Things happen very fast, but when the smoke of battle has cleared away, we realize that the story has been something like this:

The Fire Chief and the Chief of Police are rivals for the affections and consideration of the fair Lucille, daughter of the Mayor. They are preparing to deliver a knock-out blow to her, at the annual exhibition of the Fire and Police Departments. Phil is conducting a drill at the fire station, in which his four men exhibit their preparedness. At every available moment he consults his instruction book to be sure that he has made no mistake in the regulation way of doing things.

At the police station the Chief is preparing his men. His men are troubled with insomnia, but the Chief has a neat little way of exploding a bomb under their bench, which cures them eventually. The Mayor's fair daughter is the envy of Merta, his stenographer, who is a real man-eater by disposition, only nobody will let her get away with it. She sees Phil and at once succumbs to his manly charms. She follows him into the station, and even climbs the pole to pursue him, but with the help of his trusty firemen he outwits her.

Fire Chief	Phil Dunham
Chief of Police	Charles Inslee
Mayor's Daughter	Lucille Hutton
His Stenographer	Merta Sterling

The Chief of Police is holding a burglar drill, with the false front of a house, which he is sure will win the commendation of Lucille, while Phil has prepared a demonstration in response to a fire alarm which is sure to take the prize. At last the day comes, and the police and firemen parade. The Mayor makes a speech, and the police are called upon to drill first. They are wildly applauded, and Phil is jealous. The Chief is directing them with blasts on his whistle. Phil blows his own, and upsets the whole drill. Even the cherished burglar drill is put on the blink.

Then comes Phil's turn. Unfortunately, he sets the fireworks going prematurely, and the fake fire turns into a real one. Phil saves the Mayor's daughter and drives off in a wagon with her. The Police Chief follows in a flivver. The horse balks and the Chief gets the girl. Phil then takes the horse's place, and the flivver balking, too, the Chief hitches the horse to the car, while Phil draws Lucille in the wagon. Up and down a steep hill they go, until they reach home. The Chief goes in with the girl, and Phil calls the police and tells them there is a dangerous criminal with Lucille. They throw a bag over his head and arrest him. Then he is recognized, and, returning sets the house on fire in spite. Phil rushes for his trusty fire laddies. He saves Lucille while the house goes up in smoke.

ADMIRAL BLEECKER VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY STUDIO.

THE general manager of Universal City entertained an old friend, Rear Admiral J. Van B. Bleecker, at the film capital recently. Admiral Bleecker retired ten years ago, after forty-three years of service in the U. S. Navy. He was an intimate friend of the late Admiral Dewey, and during his visit to Universal City related many interesting stories of the hero of Manila Bay.

The admiral's home is in New York, where he lives at the Lambs' Club and the Army and Navy Club, dividing his time between the two organizations when he is in New York. Admiral Bleecker crosses the continent frequently during the winter season. He says he loves to revel in the sunshine of Southern California, where he has many friends whose attentions add to his happiness.

While at Universal City Admiral Bleecker renewed his acquaintance with another old friend—Colonel Jasper E. Brady, a veteran of the Spanish-American war, who is now in charge of the scenario department at the Universal Company's Pacific Coast studios.

"THE INTERNATIONAL SPY" -- The Last Adventure

Scenes from "The International Spy."

THE last adventure of the series "Perils of the Secret Service," written and produced by George Bronson Howard, with Kingsley Benedict starred, is really the best story of them all. It concerns itself with international spying—a subject uppermost in the newspapers of the day, in which the most fantastic fiction is less strange than the truth.

Guy Sterner, a weakling taking no risks himself, but selling the secrets of his country to eke out his slender patrimony, proposes to Beth Bohun, debutante daughter of the Senator, a man of the highest reputation, and is accepted. The Senator finds a Government appointment for his unwelcome son-in-law. Confident of the political influence behind him, Sterner uses his position to obtain information, which he then carries to Carl Ehricke, the international spy, who is wanted by half a dozen governments. Sterner needs the money to supply the rapacious needs of Gloria Steinmetz, a tool of Ehricke's, with whom he has long been in love.

The department discovers the leak of information, and the authorities send for Yorke Norroy to unravel the mystery. Norroy says that he will let them know in a few days. He consults with Huntley, who informs him that Sterner is paying attention to Gloria, and that he certainly cannot afford to do so on his income. Norroy sends Huntley to Mrs. Sterner, who tells him that her husband has no resources but his salary. Norroy then directs the attention of the department chiefs to Sterner, but they demand more evidence before accusing the Senator's son-in-law. So Norroy lays plans to trap him red-handed. He invites Sterner to dine with him at his club, but the man says that he has to go to Baltimore. He admires a curious ring which Norroy is wearing.

Norroy follows Sterner to Baltimore, and sees him enter a certain house. He tells Huntley to go there and rent him a room exactly opposite. They watch through the window shades, and see Ehricke, whom Norroy recognizes. The next day the rough notes of a treaty with South America are missing, and the department is much disturbed. Norroy goes to Ehricke's, and crawls up the stairs, revolver in hand. Ehricke hears him, and, coming out on the landing, attacks him. They fight, and the spy is overpowered. Norroy quickly takes from the man's face the false beard and mustache he is wearing and transfers them to his own. He then lowers the lights, and waits for Sterner. When the man appears, Norroy pretends to have a sore throat, to disguise his voice. Sterner, however, recognizes the ring which Yorke has forgotten to remove. He pulls a gun and holds it to Norroy's head. Norroy, who has arranged the light so that it will go out at a blow on the table, strikes the table and grabs Sterner while it is dark. They fight, and Sterner fires. He hits the body of Ehricke. Norroy removes the false beard from his face and calls the police. They arrest Sterner for the murder of Ehricke, but he shoots himself. Later Norroy tells the broken-hearted wife that Sterner died in the prosecution of a dangerous mission for the government.

THE last adventure is the best of all the seven stories, written and produced by George Bronson Howard, which have set a new standard for this form of screen series.

THE WAYS OF THE "HEATHEN CHINESE."

MILLARD K. WILSON, who plays the leading role in the Red Feather, "The Flower of Doom," recently engaged in a game of checkers with Ah Wing, a Chinese actor, who has a part in the production.

Wilson declares, however, that the Chinaman took an unfair advantage of him, as there was a group of other Celestials behind him who continually offered advice in their native language to the original player, and Wilson was unable to understand. Consequently, he was beaten. Hereafter he says he is willing to play against one Chinaman, but not against a crowd.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

FOR

"A Jewel in Pawn"

As the story of the delightful Bluebird production, "A Jewel in Pawn" takes place for the greater part in a pawnshop, some of the loan broker atmosphere may be advantageously woven around the advertising. One way of boosting business on this picture is to fix up your lobby as a pawnshop. Set three large balls at each side of the lobby near the street and between them stretch a banner reading:

ELLA HALL
as
"A JEWEL IN PAWN"
A delightful Bluebird Photoplay
Here on (date)

Another money-maker may be worked up along these lines: Have cards printed to resemble pawn tickets and numbered consecutively. Distribute them around town or send them to the people whose names are on your mailing list. Select two or three numbers on each of the two or three days preceding the showing of the picture. Display them in your box office window and flash photos of them on your screen. Redeem the tickets as they are presented. The cards should read as follows:

If the number on this ticket corresponds to one of the numbers on display at The (name) Theatre, this ticket is
REDEEMABLE FOR TWO ADMISSIONS to the performance of ELLA HALL as
"A JEWEL IN PAWN"
on (date)
Come around now and see if you have the lucky ticket.

If you contemplate raising your admission price, or if you want to build up your attendance at the matinees, distribute tickets that are good for a reduction of five cents from the usual price. The tickets should be printed in the form of pawn tickets. They should read as follows:

THIS TICKET and (xx) cents
REDEEMABLE FOR ONE
ADMISSION to the (matinee or evening) performance of
"A JEWEL IN PAWN"
The latest Bluebird Photoplay at the (name here) Theatre
on (date)

Have your printer multigraph the attached letter and send it with a pawn ticket to the names on your mailing list.

Mr. Exhibitor:

Here's a novelty that will attract considerable attention. Get a blank pawn ticket and where the broker usually inserts his own name, fill in the name and address of your house. Then write "One Girl—Nora Flynn" in the space left blank for the description of the article pledged.

This done, ask your printer to have a line cut made of the pawn ticket. The cost won't be great. If you are located in a big city the chances are that it contains a photo-engraver. By giving him the job direct, you will save the extra cost that the printer will tack on the job. For that matter, your Bluebird exchange manager will glady put the line cut through for you without extra cost. After the line cut has been finished you can have your printer run off as many pawn tickets as desired.

Distribute the pawn tickets as you would any circular. Or you might enclose them with a letter reading as follows:

Dear Friend:

Yes, the attached pawn ticket IS genuine!

In fact, it is the ticket which old Aaron Levovitch made out when Mrs. Martin pledged her daughter for $15.

Heartless transaction?

Well, perhaps it was—but the whys and wherefores will alternately bring tears to your eyes and laughs to your lips when the details are revealed on (day and date here) when the Bluebird production is presented at the (name of theatre and address).

COME! Cordially yours,
(Manager's Signature).
Manager.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

IF ever Exhibitors had a chance to "put over" good pictures, it is now. Such a wealth of good stuff as the Universal is now offering you has never been equalled in the history of films.

Take a look at the program—the Universal Program—the Exhibitor's one best bet. The meal ticket that never fails. You will find not only the strongest and most attractive one, two and three reel dramas, educationals, comedies and novelties, but there are the Universal Animated Weekly, the Universal Screen Magazine, Comic Cartoons, and an endless succession of novelties that need only to be advertised to prove their pulling power.

Then there are the great serials—"Liberty," "The Purple Mask," and "The Voice on the Wire"—any one of which will do for you all that they have done for other Exhibitors.

Book what you think will please your patrons from the material the Universal offers you every week—AND THEN TELL YOUR PATRONS WHAT YOU HAVE TO OFFER. THEY ARE NOT MIND READERS AND IT DOESN'T MATTER HOW GOOD YOUR SHOW IS IF YOU DON'T TELL THEM THEY CERTAINLY WILL NOT COME 'ROUND ASKING YOU.

THE advertisement of the Universal comedies—Nestor, Joker and L-Ko—appears on this page, and suggests stunts for putting over the three laugh-getters of these brands which appear on the program for the week of April 23.

First the Nestor, on Monday. It is called "The Home Wreckers," and in it those ingenious young men, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran open a bureau for the dissolution of domestic partnerships. You can't do better than copy the sign which they put out in front of their office, and which reads: "Home wrecking bureau. Homes wrecked while you wait. Trip to Reno unnecessary. We do everything but the work of the jury. We never fail. Terms easy. Give us a trial. All work guaranteed." Have this carried by an old-fashioned sandwich man up and down the streets, with the address of your theatre prominently displayed on it, and the date.

THE L-Ko for April 25th is called by the sylvan title of "Little Bo Peep," with Dan Russell, sans mustache, in the name part. In one of the scenes, Dan takes his entire family, consisting of six boys, with him when he goes to overtake his wife, who has eloped with the proprietor of the Rushville Hotel. Put a man in country clothes, and a little cap let six boys, dressed in overalls, and ragged straw hats follow him through the town, or line up in front of the theatre, with posters of the picture to draw attention to them. The boys should range in size from a tiny one to a fifteen-year-old, and they should be dressed exactly alike.

THE Joker for April 28th is called "The Leak," and it is a story of a bone dry town, and the search instituted by the marshal for the booze, of which he sees evident effects. When Bill Franey arrives by the side-door Pullman route, he undertakes to trace the stuff to its lair, and he finds it in the barber shop disguised as bay rum and other things essential to the tonsorial trade. Have a pile of broken bottles plainly marked "Bay rum," "Hair tonic," "Shampoo mixture," "Liquid Soap," etc., in your lobby, with a dog tied beside them, and a placard to say that all this was found in the barber shop by this booze hound. Above have the posters of the picture, "The Leak."

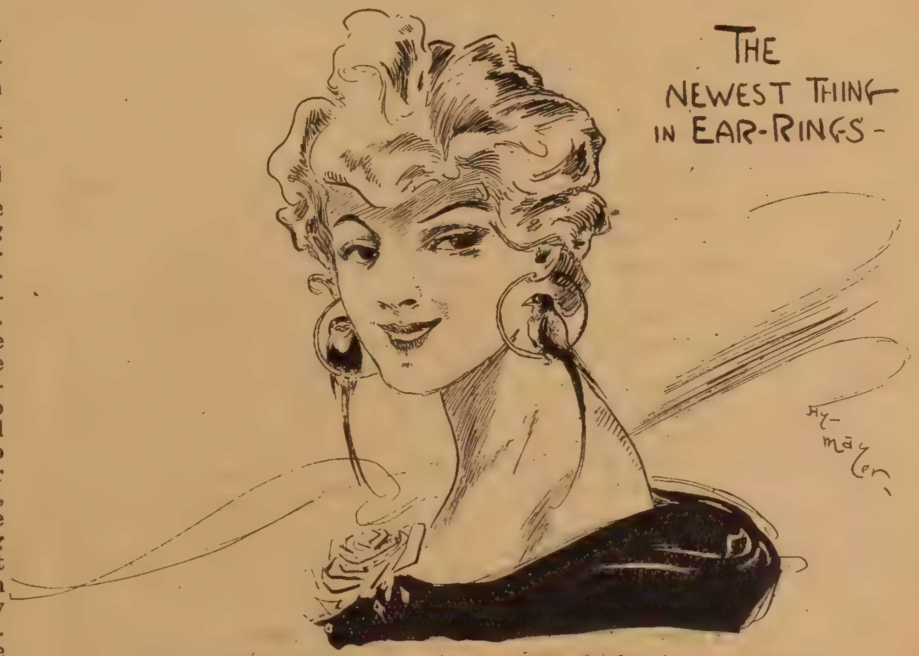
So absorbed are they in each other that they do not notice the return of the husband until after he makes his presence known. Then the two men silently, taking their guns and a shovel, leave the camp. In a sequestered spot they pace off a few feet, and then shoot. The other man is killed, and the husband buries him. Then he returns to the woman for whom he had killed one of God's creatures.



THE NEWEST THING IN EAR-RINGS -
Hy-mayer

Timely Cartoon by Hy. Mayer for Universal Animated Weekly.

THE SCREEN MAGAZINE

No. 15

On the terrapin farm. Making Rockwood pottery. Mrs. Andrea demonstrates kitchen helps.

THE SCREEN MAGAZINE is scoring a great and deserved success. It is taking the place that its sponsors wished. The Animated Weekly must serve up the news as a daily newspaper does, hot from the oven, and as quickly as possible. There are many interesting subjects for the camera which have no place in the news reel, as there are many topics of popular interest which cannot be dealt with in the daily paper. For these, the reader turns to his magazine, and it is encouraging to see how many exhibitors are turning to their "Universal Screen Magazine" for just such material.

Issue No. 15 is as varied and as entertaining as the others, and that is saying a great deal. It begins with a demonstration of the caterpillar tractor, which was invented by a Chicago man, and of which thirty are in use at the present time on the Allied battlefronts. This baby tractor hauls guns and supply wagons over the roughest roads, is balked by no obstacle, and seems to possess an almost human intelligence. It is easily turned in its own length.

When we think of rare and costly foods our minds revert to terrapin, that superior and expensive dish which so many citizens have never tasted. Some of them don't even know that terrapin is a rich relation of the humble mud turtle. So the Screen Magazine shows us a government hatchery of the valuable creatures, which were rapidly nearing extinction on account of the high price brought by their meat. We see a thousand prospective plates of soup taking their daily bath—tiny crawling turtles, as big as the top of a man's thumb, but already with the characteristic marking on the shell. We see them nesting in the sand, and then several sizes together, representing different generations of turtledom, up to five years of age. We see them being fed in their tank, and in their winter quarters, and at the end of the study, we are introduced to Big Ben, the huge daddy of the flock.

How they deliver milk in Tampa, Florida, without a penny of "overhead" expense, is demonstrated amusingly. The cows are led from door to door, and the consumer pays four cents a quart for the strictly fresh product, which is milked on the spot into his own can.

The manufacturing of Rookwood pottery is a fascinating study. We see the older, and far more picturesque method, by which the artist models the vase on a swiftly whirling turn-table, from a simple lump of clay, using only his skilled fingers and a tiny stick. The new method, by which the clay is poured into molds is quicker and requires far less skill, but it lacks the fascination of the older way. The baking ovens are shown to us, with the rows of vases inside, and then the glazing and decorating of the beautiful forms, ready for the adornment of our homes.

Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, the Screen Magazine's cooking expert, then demonstrates for us some of the modern inventions which save time and waste in the up-to-date kitchen. She has a little invention for the coring and slicing of apples in a flash, instead of the lengthy hand way. The same device prepares potatoes for French frying, almost without labor. Then she shows a little scoop for making potato balls, and a patent vent for refilling a tea kettle, without burning one's fingers in the hot steam. A nest for boiling several eggs at once, without danger of cracking, and an egg slicer for the preparation of hard-boiled eggs for salad and garnishes are also shown.

That the humorous side of life may not be forgotten in the importance of the world's work and the world's food, a comedy called "Trench Warfare in the Sahara," by J. R. Williams, is included, with which Issue No. 15 comes to an end.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

TORONTO, Ont.—Mr. George Perkins of the Perkins Electric Company has just announced the consummation of a deal which will have widespread effect on the motion picture business of Canada. He has purchased outright the machine and stock departments of Charles Potter & Co., which was his only opposition in this territory. Mr. Brown, who was in charge of this department, will probably take charge of one of his branch office. Perkins Electric Co. now has offices in Montreal, Toronton and Winnipeg, and is sole agent for practically all the well known standardized motion picture machines and accessories.

Exhibitors in Ontario were somewhat surprised to receive letters from all the exchanges operating in this territory, stating that on and after May 1st all return express charges will have to be paid by the exhibitor. The exchanges claim that this is the outcome of the rapid increase in the cost of maintaining film exchange service and of the addition of the department to look after sales and advertising assistance to the exhibitor. These have greatly increased the overhead expense. They claim that the return charge is a small matter when considered with the viewpoint of each individual exhibitor, but from the exchange's side, it means a matter of hundreds of dollars every week. The Exhibitors' Association has not yet taken any action.

The Exhibitors' Association has also just lately notified the Exchange Association that they have decided to oppose the paying of advance deposits on films. At present the Monarch Film Co., Mutual and the Kleine Edison are about the only exchanges receiving advance deposits of any sort.

Mr. Robson of the Strand Theatre announces that the week of April 16th he is going to run a Bluebird week, in all probability using "The Jewel in Pawn," with Ella Hall and "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," featuring Dorothy Phillips. This idea is copied from the Regent Theatre of Ottawa, which conducted a similar week some time ago with great success.

It is reported that the Ontario Censor Board were considering the perforation of films, instead of using Censor Tags, but the very evident disadvantages of this system were pointed out by several of the exchangemen. For instance, the fact that after a film had been perforated by the Censor Boards of the several provinces, there would not be much room left for the story of the film. Also that the performation spoilt the title or scene where it was put on, and was not at all a permanent affair. Therefore it is believed that the Censor Board are going to abandon the idea and look for something better and more suitable for all parties concerned.

BLUEBIRDS AND COMEDY.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,

Dear Sir—On Junuary 22d I ran your Bluebird "Love's Lariat," and did $22.50 on it. I rebooked it and ran it last Saturday night, February 17th and we took in $75.00. If the producers would give us more good clean comedies like "Love's Lariat," the picture game would soon get back to where the exhibitor in the small town could make some money. This picture has put the words "Bluebird" and "Comedy" in everybody's mouth. A great many of my patrons who saw it in January came back on the repeat date. Did they do any mouth to mouth advertising? Say! They haven't stopped yet. Give us more like this and we will play repeats on all of them.

ADVERTISES BLUEBIRD.

THE Moving Picture Weekly takes pleasure in commending the manager of the Strand Theatre, Rochester, New York, for his advertising in the daily papers. The advertising in question was published in the Rochester Herald on Sunday, March 4th. On Sunday and Monday the Strand advertised Marjorie Rambeau in a feature, on Tuesday and Wednesday and Thursday "The Man Who Took a Chance," Bluebird feature starring Franklyn Farnum was presented, and on Friday and Saturday a Henry B. Walthall subject. In addition to running "The Man Who Took a Chance" three days, whereas the others were only run on two, the owner of the Strand Theatre advertised it as a Bluebird. No credit whatever was given to the organization whch produced either the Rambeau picture or Walthall one. Their titles only were used in the advertising. All of which proves again the theory which Mr. Rothapfel has found to be correct, that the name Bluebird has a definite and well-established drawing power of its own.

PATRIOTIC ADVERTISING DRAWS CROWDS TO THEATRE.

IT is not only in the large cities that enterprising campaigns are put over by wike-awake exhibitors. The Star-Palace, of Patchogue, N. Y.—a small town in upper New York State—owes its popularity and success to its wike-awake manager, who knows where, when, and how to advertise, and the proper films to show at the proper time. Last week he ran "The Eagle's Wings," and in order to attract especial attention, he gave a Red Cross benefit in connection with the picture. This naturally attracted the attention of the newspapers, and together with the patriotic, spacious advertisements which he inserted in the local papers, he had the entire town talking about "The Eagle's Wings," and the Star-Palace. No one missed the show. Any man would have felt like a sinner to have missed it. That's the kind of advertising the Star-Palace did.

PHENOMENAL RUN.

THE California Film Exchange, in order to show "Hell Morgan's Girl," leased the Garrick Theatre in Los Angeles for two weeks, and opened on Sunday, March 11th. The production was well advertised, and the results were almost phenomenal, Sunday's net being over $700, and Monday, the poorest day of the week, well over $500. Quarter and half-page ads in the Los Angeles papers preceded the opening, and prepared the way. "Hell Morgan's Girl" is having a phenomenal run.

Gentlemen—In regard to your plays will say they are pretty good. The last one, "Behind the Lines," was great. I received more comments from my patrons on it than any I ever ran.

ANOTHER THEFT VICTORY FOR UNIVERSAL.

FOR some time past, the Universal, in common with many other producing companies, has been subjected to much annoyance, and thousands of dollars worth of actual damage through theft of its films, particularly its serials. Some little time ago the greatest annoyance was experienced through the fact that no direct prosecution for theft could be entertained, and that the cases had to be fought under the copyright law. Stanchfield and Levy have prosecuted these cases for the Universal, and have just won another substantial victory which will put a terrible crimp into the operations of the gang of sub rosa exchangemen who have been building up a very profitable traffic to themselves in films to which they could prove no title. The difficulty was that the real owners of the film could not prove their own title to it on account of the inadequacy of the law.

The case which has just been won is the action which the Universal instituted through Stanchfield and Levy against one Edward Mortorell whereby the attorneys have obtained from the United States Marshall for the Universal the complete copy of the serial "Graft," which was seized by the marshall from the defendant. In addition to obtaining possession of this serial, which has been in the United States Marshall's office ever since he seized it, a degree has been entered in the action enjoining Edward Mortorell as the defendent from infringing the Universal's right to the motion picture serial "Graft," and granting to the Universal the possession of the seized copy. By following the same legal procedure as that adopted by Stanchfield and Levy in this case, all of the companies, which include the greater number of those now producing, will be enabled to get back their films which are being unlawfully marketed and rented by persons who are not entitled to handle them. The Universal's victory, and the victory of its attorney, is the victory of the entire trade in this respect, and it is expected that following this court action, thousands of dollars worth of motion picture films will be restored to its lawful owners.

Gentlemen:

Shades of Captain Kidd, Admiral Drake, and Robinson Crusoe, and memories of billowy surfs on coral strands, and palm trees stirred by tropic winds -- what a picture you have given us in your "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea!"

Surely Jules Verne never dared imagine anything so wonderful as your great film portrayal of the matchless mysteries of the deep.

It's more than a good picture -- it will giveboys and girls a better idea and a more vivid impression of the sea and its unique beauty and charm than twenty years in the class-room.

You have performed a public service. I congratulate you.

Yours very truly,

Geo A Dorsey

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS" The most unusual picture on the market today. An intense and absorbing story presented in the most dramatic form. It deals with present conditions, and with industrial preparedness. It is as far beyond the jingo pictures with their fake and sham battles and studio atmosphere as it is possible to imagine. It is a real picture for real Americans, and that is why it is playing to repeat bookings and capacity houses everywhere shown. "The Eagle's Wings" is a BLUEBIRD Special, in 5 reels, written by Rufus Steele, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, supported by Vola Smith, Grace Carlisle and Charles Mailles.

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS" Produced by Rupert Julian from the famous novel "We Are French," by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. Five reel BLUEBIRD featuring Rupert Julian, Ella Hall, with Kingsley Benedict. An inspiring picture of patriotism that is particularly acceptable at this time. No living American can see this great production without leaving the theatre a better man than when he entered. Yet it does not preach; it simply grips and convinces. A picture you should book immediately.

"BEHIND THE LINES" Harry Carey in "Behind the Lines," supported by Edith Johnson, directed by Henry McRae, constitutes a fascinating entertainment of war, political intrigue, romance and adventure. It is a thrilling portrayal of present day conditions, and has played to capacity houses wherever shown. A BLUEBIRD with a big punch.

"TREASON" A notable picture is "Treason," written by Lee Weigert, five stirring reels, produced by Allan Holubar, featuring Allan Holubar, Lois Wilson, Joe Girard and Dorothy Davenport. A big production with some tremendous war scenes and the most intense situations. A picture that will crowd your house for more than one showing.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"The Hero of the Hour." With Jack Mulhall, Fritzie Ridgeway and Wadsworth Harris. First Five-Reel Special Attraction. Directed by Raymond Wells. Released April 23. Billy Brooks (Jack Mulhall) was a bally blooming butterfly, and his dad was a millionaire. The old man kept Billy's picture in his office. Said every time he looked at it he got so mad he tore loose and made another million. Billy knew a girl. Her father made perfumery. Billy decided to become a business man. He pestered his society friends to buy perfumery he became a nuisance. Then he was sent on the road. When he got out West at a certain station a bunch of cowboys pulled him from the train and put him "through a course of of sprouts." They made a man of him. Then Billy and the bunch and Fritzie (oh, you bet there was a girl there), put up a job on dad, who was responsible for the doings to Billy. They wired him a message that brought him on a special to the ranch. What they did to him makes one of the most interesting finales you ever saw in a picture, and the climax is fully as satisfying. Here is a distinctly different type of picture—and it is the clean, wholesome kind the public is clamoring for. It is the kind that sends every patron from your theatre pleased with the picture, with your theatre, with himself and with the whole world. Book this and boost it hard. It will stand all you can give it. Go to it.

"The Townsend Divorce Case." With Jean Hersholt, Gretchen Lederer and Roberta Wilson. One-Reel Victor Heart Interest Drama. Directed by H. D'Elba. Released April 26. It isn't often you get a one-reel subject so big that itis worthy of a special review. This one is. Don't get the idea that this is like anything you have ever seen which the title might suggest. It is a distinct novelty. Mrs. Townsend is suing her husband for a divorce. He is placed on the witness stand and his testimony is told in pictures. Roberta is the co-respondent, and the story that is told will keep your audiences on the edge of their seats. Remarkable acting, directing and photography make this a marvelous one-reel subject.

"The Rogue's Nest." With Lee Hill and Edyth Roberts. Two-Reel Imp Crook Drama Directed by Donald McDonald. Released April 27. A crook, his wife and his sister, leading a somewhat mysterious existence in a fashionable apartment house are nearly at the end of their resources, when they receive a letter from a distant cousin of the girls, who wants to come and live with them. She has some money which they take for "safe keeping." They become acquainted with Lee, a wealthy young man with a passion for collecting pearls. They enter his apartments in his absence, and then Edith, the country cousin, discovers their true character. They lock her in her room, and how she escapes from their clutches, and they escape the law, while Lee finds a new variety of pearl for his collection, makes one of the most fascinating pictures you've seen in a long time.

"The Trail of Hate." With Jack Ford and Louise Granville. Two-Reel 101 Bison Western Drama. Directed by Jack Ford. Released April 28. The stirring scenes in this virile picture are laid in the West at an army post. Louise is an orphan, whose parents are killed in an Indian raid. Jack is a favorite with his troops, and he it is who rescues Louise, and is good to her. Captain Holden makes ugly remarks about them, and to protect Louise, Jack marries her. Then she becomes desirable to the captain, and he eventually wins her from Jack. In a tremendous climax, laid in the far away Philippines, we see the outcome of this rivalry and the actions and plot development will make your audiences gasp. A strong picture that your patrons will enjoy.

There's MONEY--BIG MONEY Waiting for Exhibitors Who Advertise BLUEBIRDS Like REAL Showmen

When we say REAL showmen, we mean those exhibitors who have made certain days of each week hold out a DEFINITE PROMISE of a good show to their patrons. Three exhibitors, Gould, of Wayne, Neb.; Caulfield, of Los Angeles, Cal., and O'Keefe of Atlantic City, N. J., winners of the February Bluebird Advertising Contest will tell you the value of this policy. These men started BLUEBIRD DAYS—booked these wonderful features for the same days each week—and the business they have built up is enough to make the average exhibitors turn green with envy.

Bluebird Days Are Permanent Advertisements

Although BLUEBIRDS will bring business on ANY day, they will draw BEST if shown on the SAME day or days each week. Identify these productions with certain days. If you run them every Monday, educate your public to this fact by means of your screen and other advertising mediums. The result will be that your patrons will soon come to know that EVERY Monday is BLUEBIRD DAY.

Show Bluebirds on Your Dullest Day

Run BLUEBIRDS on different days each time you show them and you deliberately pass up the wonderful profits they CAN make for you if shown on the same day each week. Gould, Caulfield and O'Keefe booked the features for the poorest days of the week and have run their receipts on these days up to the point where they equal the Saturday receipts.

You Can Build Up A Bluebird Clientele

YOU can do the same thing! If you decide to make Monday your BLUEBIRD DAY, bombard your patrons with the announcements that EVERY Monday is BLUEBIRD DAY. The public KNOWS that "If it's a BLUEBIRD it's GOT to be good!" We've spent HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS to popularize the slogan. Keep pounding away on your BLUEBIRD DAYS and before long you'll have people coming into your theatre without even stopping to read the titles of the BLUEBIRDS shown!

Don't Wait!

Every week that passes without seeing at least one BLUEBIRD DAY at your theatre, represents another golden opportunity for BIG profits neglected by you. If you ARE a showman—a REAL showman, get in touch with the nearest BLUEBIRD Exchange and arrange for YOUR BLUEBIRD DAY.

THE BIGGEST THIN

Our Victory Save

(No. 173. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

(Written April 10th, 1917.)

YESTERDAY the Supreme Court of the United States put the finishing touch on the most important law-suit in the history of the moving picture business when it decided in favor of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and against the Motion Picture Patents Company in the famous "Latham loop" case.

This is the biggest and best thing that has ever happened to the exhibitors of the United States in all time, and it is a matter of supreme pride for me to announce that THE UNIVERSAL ALONE fought the fight which insures freedom to the exhibitors of this country!

The Universal financed the fight year after year and through court after court without a dollar's worth of help from any other producing company, any other exchange or any exhibitor on earth! At one time we issued a general appeal to all other producers to chip in and help stand the terrific expenses, BUT NOT A DOLLAR WAS FORTHCOMING.

If the Universal had not defended the case with all the power at its command, if we had been caught off our guard at any time, if the Patents company had won, you and every other exhibitor in the country might now BE USING ONLY SUCH PICTURES AS THE PATENTS COMPANY PERMITTED YOU TO USE! You might be the body-and-soul slave of the tightest monopoly that ever monopped in the land of the free and the home of the brave!

At one time during the long court fight it was suggested to us by a trickster that we purposely let the Patents company win the case if we could arrange with that company to let us in on their monoply! While this never interested us for a minute, we might have made dishonest millions by doing it and we could now be telling you where to get off, what kind of pajamas to wear and how to part your hair! We would have NO COMPETITION WHATEVER and you would either take the films we offered you at the price we demanded or you'd have to quit the theatre business!

We had not a dollar to gain by spending our money in fighting the Patents company. All we had to gain was the glory of insuring freedom for the exhibitors and for ourselves.

IN FILM HISTORY

You From Slavery

If we had formed a legal combination with the Patents company, not a single producing company now doing business would be able to market a dollar's worth of film without paying tribute to us!

We had the choice of making millions of dollars in profit with dishonor, or paying thousands upon thousands out of our pockets in court and attorney's fees—with honor! We chose the latter course and now some of our film acquaintances grin at us and say, "Now that you've won, what has it GOT you?"

It has GOT us just this:

First, it has got us the joy that comes from a clean fight, cleanly fought and cleanly won!

Second, it has got us the clear conscience which results from doing the right thing, THE AMERICAN THING, in the right way, REGARDLESS OF COST.

Third, it has not got us a dollar of profit, but has got us into a wad of expense—but thank God, dollars are not the only things that constitute the joy of living or the reward of work!

Fourth, it has got us the fun of telling you what regular humdingers we are; and it has given us this new opportunity to toot the very gizzard out of our own horn!

Do you remember that about two years ago you received notice from the Patents company telling you that you must not use any but licensed films in your projection machines? And do you remember that thousands of you came running to our exchange in a panic and asking what to do? And do you remember that THE UNIVERSAL told you not to worry but to go home and go to sleep and forget it because WE WOULD PROTECT YOU? Well, we've done it—and you can go back to sleep again if you like.

Gentlemen, you are now free to run your own business as you please and if any attempt is made in the future to enslave you in one way or another, you can rest assured that the Universal will still be on the job to fight your fight and win it!

VICTOR two reel comedy drama written by Clover Roscoe and produced by Norval McGregor. A story which proves that you can't teach an old dog new tricks.

Jane	Babe Otto
Father Lennox	Daddy Manley
Mother Lennox	Mother Benson
Lennox Servant	Pearl Cunningham
Billy Harrison	Jay Belasco

JANE, the heroine of this little Victor comedy drama, had apparently never heard the proverb, "You can't teach an old dog new tricks." Otherwise she would never have tried to modernize her parents, with the disastrous results to her own peace of mind, which are unfolded in the story which was written by Clover Roscoe and produced by Norval McGregor. Things happen, when Jane comes home from college, in the following delightful succession:

Father and Mother Lennox are a contented old couple, until daughter Jane comes home from college imbued with a passion for hygiene and an unswerving sense of duty toward them. With a book, "Old People and Their Care," as her guide, she puts them through a course of exercising "sprouts"; orders hygienic meals; throws wide the windows to cold winds, and upsets their well-ordered comfort. After a period of submission they plan to run away, and climb from their window like two eloping lovers. Jane finds a note left by them and is almost distracted. Hoping for their return, she restores the house to its former old-fashioned comfort.

Meanwhile, her parents rent a bungalow on the border of a large estate. Billy Harrison, the owner, hearing of them from his ranch superintendent, drops in to see if he can be of service. In his rough outing clothes he is taken for the hired man by the old couple, who give him a dollar and set him doing the chores. He good-naturedly lets them lord it over him and becomes a great favorite.

Jane, learning of their whereabouts, arrives at the bungalow just as father Lennox, triumphantly returning from a hunting trip with Billy, shows his successful bag. He and mother Lennox are proud as peacocks, but Jane's appearance effectually dampens their spirits. Billy conspires with them to punish Jane by a siege of snubbing . With a maternal heartache, mother Lennox is persuaded to ignore Jane, and both flatly refuse to return home. Billy is resentful of Jane's treatment of her parents, and Jane is jealous of the hired man's influence over them. Later his ire changes to pity when he sees that their snubbing has made her cry. Thought of her begins to fill his own lonely life, and he realizes that he would enjoy her "bossing."

Anxious to atone and longing for her parents' love again, Jane resolves to buy the little bungalow with her small inheritance. To this end she seeks the owner, and is amazed to find that Billy is host at the ranch house, and not merely the hired man.

He listens to her plan, but refuses to sell the bungalow unless Jane will take the job of bossing him. Thinking him sarcastic, she leaves angrily. He follows and pleads his cause. Through binoculars Billy's guests on the terrace see Jane's antagonism to kissing, as unsanitary, vanish with her surrender.

NO DOUBLE FOR "KEWPIE."

HORACE ("Kewpie") Morgan is probably the champion heavyweight at Universal City—he tips the scale at 340 pounds—and recently he was selected to play an important part in Director Henry McRae's production, "Dropped From the Clouds," the story of which required him to ride in an aeroplane and be precipitated through a roof and into the pool of a Turkish harem.

"Kewpie" took a look at the aeroplane and another one at the pool and then he started shouting to McRae: "I want a double—none of this drop stuff for 'Kewpie.' "

"Double for you?" replied the director, "nothing stirring—no such thing ever was born unless I go down to the back ranch and get Charlie, the elephant."

Miss Irene Hunt, Preparedness Apostle

IRENE HUNT, the featured player of the Universal Special Attraction, "The Birth of Patriotism," was delighted with her role in that stirring play, for she is one of the most sincere advocates of preparedness. She is of the opinion that there is fully as much for the women to do in order to make ready for hostilities, as for the men. For a long time she has been particularly interested in the American Red Cross, and has all the necessary diplomas to qualify her for active service, should she be needed. She has been instrumental in collecting a large part of the funds required for the erection and equipment of the proposed Naval Red Cross Hospital at Los Angeles.

"Nurses will be badly needed if we are actively to participate in the war," she said recently; "I believe there are only something like 285,000 members of the Red Cross in the whole country, while in Japan there are over a million. The training is invaluable for peace as well as war time. Accidents may happen at any time, and one never knows when expert help at the right moment may not save life. I am an earnest advocate for the enrollment of all American women in our own Red Cross."

Miss Hunt, who has been on the stage or in pictures, ever since her fourth year, went out to Universal City last year, with the big exodus from the East studios. The first thing she did when she got there, was to marry. Universal City must be the anthesis of heaven in one respect at least, for there is certainly a great deal of marrying and giving in marriage there. The attractive boudoir scene at the bottom of the page, was taken in the little lady's own apartment, and shows the way she spends the rare "morning off" which comes all too seldom to the picture player. The tree at the left, with the strange fruit, grows in her own garden, and she is immensely proud of being able to climb it. That exercise and the equally strenuous one of wood-chopping, she includes in her scheme of "one woman" preparation for active service.

"You have to be 'fit' and strong," she says earnestly, "in order to stand the strain of nursing. If the nurse is knocked out easily she simply adds to the burden instead of lightening it. And your muscles should be in as good a condition as possible. Wounded men are very heavy to lift, you know. I'm preparing in every possible way for it," said Miss Hunt.

EPISODE number seven of the big serial, which was adapted from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball by Stuart Paton and is being produced by him, with Ben Wilson starred, is called "The Marked Room," and intensifies the mystery to an almost unbearable pitch. The one gleam of relief in this chapter is Shirley's declaration of his love for Polly Marion, but as she is immediately afterward spirited away from him, we have scant comfort in that.

At the end of the last episode Polly Marion was in her cabin on board the steamer, where orders had been received to allow no one access to her. Red Warren tries to enter her room and is stopped by the guard. He claims to be her husband, but the man refuses to be intimidated.

On the dock, waiting for the steamer, Shirley is haunted by visions of the night. He cannot make up his mind whether he has dreamed the attack of the "Hand." He realized that his nerves are shot to pieces. Then he sees the steamer approaching in the distance. He is also seen, and the three crooks set out in the launch to signal "Red" that Shirley is waiting for them. The ship's officers see that the guarded men are being warned from the launch and start after them to make the arrest. Red runs to the upper deck, and jumps into the sea, while the two other men follow him. They manage to dodge the shots fired after them by the officers, and are soon picked up by the men in the launch.

When the ship docks, Shirley rushes on board to find Polly, and, entering her stateroom, takes her in his arms and kisses her. The officers are amused by his disregard for them, and when Renolds and the others arrive, Shirley asks for congratulations upon his engagement. Cronin, however, will not shake hands, as he says that he believes Polly warned the crooks. He declares that he will clear up the mystery alone.

Several hours later, as the crooks sit around a table, the Hand appears at the phone. When Warren answers it, he hears that Shirley is at the Imperial Hotel, and the number of his room, also the number of Polly's.

make one day each week A BLUEBIRD DAY in your house

Shirley has led Polly to the door of her room. Later he is startled by the ringing of his phone. The mysterious voice says that James Welsh will be the next victim, but not the last, and that he is to watch for the dawn. He exclaims: "The Voice on the Wire here!" When he asks the girl at the switchboard who called, she says that his phone is out of order.

In a room in a house behind the hotel there is a light. Shirley sees it and watches it. We see a muffled figure in the corridor, which sneaks along and then fades until only the Hand remains. It makes a mark on Shirley's door. Shirley in his room is unable to sleep. He starts up when he hears Polly scream. He goes to her room and finds the bed unrumpled and no sign of the girl. He wonders if he is mistaken in thinking that she was there. Then all the lights go out. He calls on his phone, and when at last he is answered the girl says that all the lights are out there, too. He descends and asks if they have seen anyone leave the hotel. They say that no one has passed out. Polly's name is crossed out in the register. Shirley, bewildered and dazed, goes upstairs again. He hears groans from Dr. Renolds' room. He enters, and finds the doctor clutching his heart and muttering, "The Hand!" He says to him: "Polly is gone, and we were to have been married tomorrow!" The doctor promises to stand by him to the end.

Bartine saves the stranger. Over the cliff. Bartine sees a wood pigeon.

"The Forest Nymph"

GOLD Seal three-reel drama photographed in one of the beauty spots of America, the canyon of Malibu River, and featuring Bartina Burket.

THE canyon of the Malibu River has been chosen for the locale of this Gold Seal, which features a name new on the Universal program—Bartina Burket. Many of the scenes have been tinted and toned to give them almost the color of nature, and the strong story is played with a background of some of the most wonderful scenic shots seen in recent films. The story runs as follows:

Bartine lived in Malibu Canyon, her only friends the wild things and a half-witted mountain boy, called Bennie. They played together. One day she stole his clothes while he was in bathing, leaving him her ragged frock; but his overalls were very dirty, and she promptly went in bathing, too, while he came up and made the exchange. While they were playing, a man was hiding among the trees to escape the Sheriff, and Luke, a bad character of the neighborhood, had seen the girl reflected in the water and desired her. He went to the girl's drunken father, armed with a bottle of mountain whisky, which he had adulterated with water, and asked for Bartine for a wife.

Bartine was playing with the flowers she had gathered, when the sheriff passed, asking her if she had seen a stranger. She shook her head, and he passed on, when to her surprise the stranger crawled out of the undergrowth behind her. She asked him what the sheriff wanted with him, and he told her that he had killed a man who had wronged his sister Jane, so that she had taken her own life. Bartine resolved to save the stranger.

She lead him to a retreat that she alone knew, hidden among the cliffs at the side of the river. He was hungry and she went home to get him food, dodging questions from her father. The next morning she went again with food to the stranger, who plainly showed that he was attracted by her innocent charm.

Luke meanwhile visited her father to ask again for his daughter. As he was armed with a present, the old man was quite willing. Luke overtook Bartine coming from the cliff and pursued her. He chased her to her home, and she hid from him in the breadbox. That night the stranger came to her in her home and she gave up her room to him. The sheriff arrived to search the house, but Bartine hid the stranger under her mattress, and then lay on the mattress in such a way that there appeared to be no one there. In the morning Luke, peering through the window, discovered the girl as she went in to the bedroom to wake the stranger. He stole into the room, found the stranger's gun on the table and removed the cartridges. Then when the man and girl were in the living room together, he entered and offered to show the stranger the trail to Azusa, where he said that he was going.

They set out together. Luke shoots the stranger in the back before they have gone far. He pretends to be more hurt than he is, and when Luke bends over him, the two struggle together on the edge of the cliff.

Bennie has followed them at a distance, and as he sees the stranger hanging over the cliff, with Luke clinging to him, he helps the man to pull himself up, and Luke falls to his death. Then Bennie fetches Bartine, who gladly runs to the stranger.

STEWART BACK AT BIG U.

ROY STEWART, one of the best-known actors of the screen, has returned to Universal City and will appear under the direction of Jack Conway. Stewart, who formerly was with the Universal Company and appeared under the direction of the Smalleys, says upon his return to Universal City he saw the big key hanging outside and he was delighted to turn the lock and walk in again to be welcomed by a host of friends.

THE INDEPENDENCE O

THE great battle for the independence of the motion picture exhibitor has been won. The last redoubt has been taken. The forces of monopoly and of absolute dictation have been routed. The new Fourth of July of the motion picture industry is April 10th. It should be a Red Letter Day in the calendar of every motion picture exhibitor, for on April 10th, 1917, there was handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington a decision of more vital interest than any in which the industry has yet figured in the great national tribunal of this country. It is the final decision, after two years of litigation in the famous Latham Loop case, and it was won by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, fighting not only for itself, but for every independent manufacturer and exchange and every exhibitor in the United States. There is no getting behind a Supreme Court decision, and this decision is final. It means that there is no longer the danger of any man or group of men saying to exhibitors, "You run our films or you don't run any films."

This decision marks primarily the final and glorious victory of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in the famous Latham Loop fight, but it has a far wider and more significant meaning than this. It means the final deliverance of the motion picture exhibitors of America from a despotism as absolute as that of the late Czar. The Declaration of Independence was no more important to the original thirteen States than the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Motion Picture Patents Company versus the Universal Film Manufacturing Company et al, to the exhibitors of the United States; the Emancipation Proclamation was no more necessary to humanity as a whole than this final deliverance of the motion picture industry in the famous case of the Latham Loop monopoly.

On August 31st, 1914, the reissued patent No. 12192 (this was a reissue of part of the original Edison patent No. 589168, one of the basic patents of the art, and covering one of the most universally used parts in motion picture machines) expired, and the entire industry expected that some ingenious plan would be devised whereby the Motion Picture Patents Company could continue to exercise the boasted licensing power over all of the exhibitors, distributors and manufacturers of motion pictures in the United States. In anticipation of the patent running out, they had entered into an agreement with the Precision Machine Company, whereby they licensed it to use in the manufacture of their machine the patents which they owned and controlled, and to sell the machine with certain restrictions as to its use. One of these restrictions was as follows, and it is taken from the plate which showed the letters patent under which the machine was licensed. It read as follows:

"The sale and purchase of this machine gives only the right to use it solely with moving pictures containing the invention of reissued patent No. 12192, leased by a licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Company, the owner of the above patents and reissue patent, while it owns said patents, and upon other terms to be fixed by the Motion Picture Patents Company and complied with by the user, while it is in use and while the Motion Picture Patents Company owns said patents. The removal or defacement of this plate terminates the right to use this machine."

The first intimation which the film world had of this further attempt to perpetuate a monopoly which they had previously enjoyed, and by which they had forced thousands of exhibitors to pay them a royalty on their right to run a moving picture show, came in the shape of a letter to an exhibitor who was using Universal service. This letter read as follows, and was dated January 18th:

January 18th, 1915.

To the 72d St. Amusement Co.,
Mr. L. Bolognino.

Gentlemen—We are informed that you are using without our license at the above address one or more motion picture projecting machines embodying the inventions of United States Letters Patent No. 707,934 (Latham), dated August 26, 1902, owned by us. Such use constitutes an infringement of said patent and makes you liable to a suit for an injunction and an accounting of profits and damages, and we hereby notify you to desist from such infringement."

At the same time a letter was sent to the Universal Film Exchange which had supplied the Seventy-Second Street Amusement Company with the film to which the Motion Picture Patents Company took exception. These two letters and similar ones sent to other exhibitors, caused consternation in the trade. In case the Patents Company had the right to demand that exhibitors run on their machine only the film which met the approval of the Motion Picture Patents Company, their business was founded upon sand, and subject to the whim of an autocrat, the beck and call of a despot, instead of upon their own judgment, and the desire of the patrons of the theatres they ran. Letters poured in by thousands upon the Universal, and the Universal told every one to sit tight, carry on the business as it had previously been carried on, and that it, the Universal, would see that every exhibitor was protected in his rights. The next move was a letter to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company itself, which letter is here quoted:

"March 3, 1915.

"Universal Film Manufacturing Co.,

"Gentlemen—We are informed that at the following places one or more motion picture projecting machines embodying the invention of United States Letters Patent No. 707934 (Latham), dated August 26, 1902, are being used without license from us as owners of said patent:

"72d Street Playhouse, 350 East 72nd Street, New York City.

"We are informed also that motion picture films for use on such machines are being supplied by the Universal Film Exchange of New York, Inc., and that you are supplying to the Universal Film Exchange of New York, Inc., the motion picture films which it is supplying for use on such machines, and you are thereby aiding and contributing to such infringing use of such machines.

"We hereby notify you to cease such supply; otherwise we will be obliged to enforce our rights by a suit asking for an injunction and an accounting of profits and damages."

was filed by the Motion Picture Patents Company against the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the Universal Film Exchange, and the Prague Amusement Company, which leased the Seventy-second Street premises, charging them as defendants jointly with "having made, used and sold, and caused to be made, used and sold, and now continues jointly to make, use and sell, and to cause to be made, used and sold, motion picture apparatus which embodies the invention or discovery described and claimed in the patent in suit." The plaintiff, the Motion Picture Patents Company, charged at the trial that the defendants committed a joint act of infringement in that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company made and supplied film to the Universal Film Exchange, which in turn supplied it to the Prague Amusement Company, which used it "without license" on a machine containing the invention of Claim 7 of the patent in suit.

Judge Hough, before whom the original case was brought, directed that the complaint be dismissed on the ground that the limitation on the use of a patented article sold in the manner above set forth is invalid, and when the plaintiff filed a petition for rehearing, Judge Hough further added to the objections already set forth, the following: that it is "specifically bad in that it attempts not only to confine the use of the machine once sold and delivered, to a particular kind of film, but further seeks to render that use subject to any and every restriction or regulation which the patent owner may from time to time choose to make or vary."

Twice the Universal had been successful in defense of its position, and in its championship of the thousands of exhibitors who were running independent film, and when it was apprised that the Patents Company again intended to appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, a request was sent out broadcast to the various independent film companies for assistance in fighting this case, the failure of which meant the failure of thousands of exhibitors, and the enslavement of all.

There was absolutely no response to this appeal.

No company or person came forward with an offer of assistance, or a dollar in cash, to fight the case through. The Universal came to the conclusion that it was necessary to fight it alone, and it has done so ever since, to a victorious conclusion, but through the expenditure of thousands and thousands of dollars, and in the face of distrust, uncertainty and unwillingness of many in the trade to anticipate the outcome of the litigation.

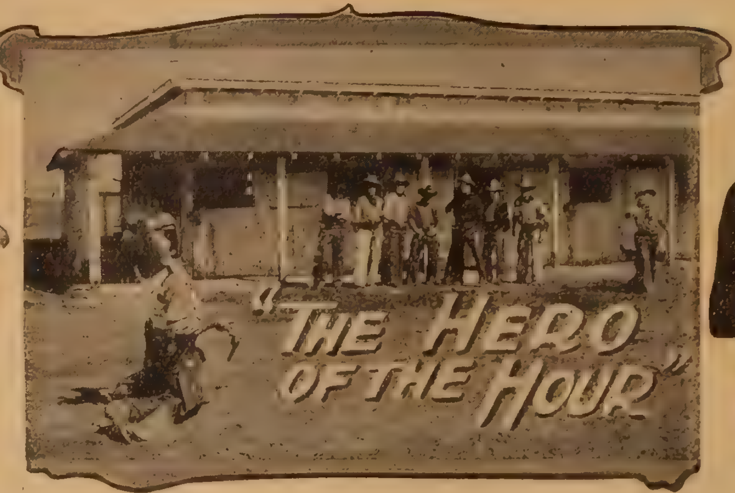
The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the decree of Judge Hough. The petitioner then filed a petition for rehearing in the Court of Appeals, in which it was argued that the Prague Amusement Company had infringed by not complying with the conditions of "other terms to be fixed" contained in the notice. The petition was again denied.

It is worthy of note at this point that prior to the filing of the bill of complaint in the original case at bar, the United States had brought suit against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others for alleged violation of the Sherman Act in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, and that it had won its case, and forced the Patents Company to dissolve as a trust. With this encouragement the Universal undertook the defense of the next move in the case. For, although they had already won in the highest Federal Court of the circuit, and their victory had been hailed by the papers and by legal authority as a convincing one, grounds were found for bringing this case before the Supreme Court on a writ of certiorari to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the second circuit. The arguments were heard at the October term of the Supreme Court, 1916, and the decision of this court was filed and made public on April 10th, 1917.

And now the fight is over. The Supreme Court has made its ruling on a question which has been the subject of several more or less conflicting decisions. This case seems destined to establish a precedent by which a number of other cases not at all concerned with motion pictures will have to be decided. The decision is a momentous one, not only for the Universal, but for the entire motion picture industry as well. The cost has been tremendous, and every penny of it has come from the treasury of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Its attorneys, Stanchfield and Levy, and Wetmore and Jenner, fought the case from the start in the face of the best and most expensive legal talent the Patents Company could employ, and they have been uniformly successful. They have not made a single mistake in the masterly conduct of one of the most famous cases in moving picture annals. And they have secured a decision which cannot be overruled and cannot be appealed. The case is closed.

The other side of the story is interesting, too. Suppose the Universal had lost—what then? Unless its attorneys had found some other way to prevent it, it seems logical to suppose that every moving picture company started since 1914 would either have been forced out of business, or compelled to conduct that business under the dictation, and pay tribute to the Motion Picture Patents Company. Where would have been the Triangle, the Paramount, Goldwyn, Fox, World, International, Art-Dramas, Ince, Metro, Frohman Amusement Company, B. S. Moss, Artcraft, Selznick Pictures, Famous Players, Lasky, Pallas, Morosco, and all of the companies recently started by motion picture stars? Every one of them would have to ask, "Please may I do business? And how much must I pay you for the privilege?" And what of the older companies who were not connected with the Motion Picture Patents Company? How much money would they have had to pay to the monopoly in profits and damages on the basis of half of a cent a foot? Estimate, for instance, the weekly output of the industry to be 140,000 feet of negative a week. The tax on this alone would be $700 a week, or $36,400 a year. This on raw stock alone. Multiply that by the number of prints which go out, and you will find the amount which the Patents Company fondly hoped to tax the industry in commissions alone. The amount of damage which they sought to claim was another gigantic figure. The Universal has saved the industry all this. It is content.

Billy Brooks.



"THE HERO OF THE HOUR"

Westernized Billy becomes a "hero."

An ornament of the smart set.

ONCE in a while a five-reel picture is produced which is a real "feature," in the true sense of that much abused term. The word implies something unusual, out of the ordinary run, something which sticks out and makes itself noticable. "The Hero of the Hour" is a picture of that calibre, and that is why it is issued, not only as a feature, but as a special feature. Eugene B. Lewis wrote the story and made the screen adaptation, and then Raymond Wells took charge of the production, with Jack Mulhall as his principal assistant. Jack will certainly add thousands to the list of his friends when this picture is shown. He not only has the best part in his career, but he gets away with it to the King's taste. Here is a synopsis of the good story:

Billy Brooks, a popular young member of New York's Smart Set, is a super-refined character, æsthetic to the point of effeminacy. His father is a rugged-self-made man, a native of the far West, who cannot reconcile himself to his son's butterfly existence. He has a picture of Billy in the office, because, as he tells his associates, every time he looks at it, it makes him so hot that he tears loose and makes another million.

UNIVERSAL Special Attraction in five reels. Story and scenario by Eugene B. Lewis and produced by Raymond B. Wells with Jack Mulhall starred in the best role he has ever had.

At a party, Billy discovers an exquisite perfume and, learning from the young lady that her uncle manufactures it, though there is no demand for it, Billy conceives the idea of introducing the perfumery into the homes of the best people. His father is so angered by this news that he turns him out. He had offended many society women by breaking in on intimate drawing-room teas to sell the perfume. The father receives complaints of Billy's actions and accordingly calls up Billy's boss and threatens to put him out of business if he doesn't send Billy away from New York.

While waiting on a train which has stopped at a water tank, Billy is unceremoniously pulled off by a company of cowboys. Thrown onto a horse, he is taken to a distant ranch, run apparently by Mildred. That night at the table Billy is disgusted by the table manners of the cowboys. His attitude is so critical that one of the men hits him in the face with some mashed potatoes. A general fight follows.

The next morning Billy is forced to do housework, but seeing the humor of the situation, pitches into it. He accidentally discovers a letter written by his father to John Nebeker, the proprietor of the ranch, an old pal of Brooks, Sr. The letter explains that the old friend is to put Billy through a course of sprouts on the ranch.

Billy sees through the whole scheme, engages the cowboys in a private conversation, and buys himself a handsome cowboy outfit. There follow several events, in which Billy apparently shoots and wounds a number of the cowboys. The cattle are missing, which has never happened before. If any one says "Boo!" to Billy, he shoots him down. Mildred is astounded to discover her mistake in Billy, but is forced to believe her eyes. She wires to his father to come and get his son, who has turned bandit and is shooting up the place. Mildred's father is then in Brooks' office. They are discussing the remarkable success the girl has had in managing Billy. Brooks, being prepared to believe almost anything of his son, decides to leave for the West at once in company with Nebeker.

As Mildred and the foreman start off with Brooks, Sr. and Nebeker in a buckboard, a band of masked cowboys sweeps down on them and carries them to a cave in the hills . A guard is left over them, while the masked men are outside fighting the posse which is supposed to have pursued them. The party in the cave finally makes their escape and sees the ground strewn with the dead. They finally arrive at the ranch house, which they find brilliantly lighted. A dance is in progress, and the hoax is apparent. Billy goes up to the roof with Mildred and succeeds in pacifying her natural resentment at the deception.

Protestations are of no use—Billy becomes a housemaid.

But petticoat governments do collapse sometimes.

"THE ROGUE'S NEST"

Edith Roberts featured in "The Rogue's Nest."

IMP Two-Reel Drama, written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude and produced by Donald McDonald.

CAST.

Janet Barker	Edith Roberts
Harry Cartwright	Lee Hill
James Hovey	Hayward Mack
Lucile Hovey	Nellie Allen
Edith, her sister	Mina Cunard

EDITH ROBERTS is featured in this clever Imp drama, written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude and produced by Donald McDonald.

James Hovey, his wife, and her sister, lead a somewhat mysterious existence in a fashionable apartment house. They receive a letter from a distant cousin, Janet Barker, saying that she is alone in the world, her last near relative having died leaving her only $500. Lucile wires to her to come at once, for they decide that they can easily find a use for the money.

Below them in the same house lives Harry Cartwright, a rich young man, known far and wide as a collector of rare jewels. One pearl of his is especially famous. The Hoveys determine to gain access to his apartment.

Janet proves to be a pretty, unsophisticated girl, and they easily persuade her to give them her money. The three women are passing through the hall outside Cartwright's door when Lucile pretends to faint. Edith calls Cartwright to their aid, and he carries Lucile into his apartment and lays her on the couch. When she recovers, they talk about the jewels, and Harry shows them the pearl. Thus they locate the wall safe where his treasures are kept. Harry does not suspect them, but he does not care for them.

The women tell Hovey of their success, and the next day Lucile again pretends to have a fainting fit. Edith rushes down to ask Harry's aid, and while he is gone, Hovey enters and takes the pearl. As he is showing it to the women, after Harry has left, Janet enters suddenly. She has felt that something was wrong, but she now denounces them, and says she will tell Harry the whole thing unless his property is returned at once. Hovey turns on her, and carries her into her room, where he ties her to the bed. She is left for many hours alone.

The next day Cartwright makes inquiries for her, but is told that she has gone on a visit. Janet manages to free herself, and writes several notes on slips of paper, saying that she is a prisoner, which she forces through the crack of her window. One of them falls into Cartwright's window. He reads it, and immediately goes to her room, breaking in the door. She tells him everything, and he takes her to his apartment.

When the Hoveys return from the theatre, they find the door broken down and a note from Harry which says that he and Janet are married, and that they are welcome to the pearl, an imitation of the real thing which is reposing safely in the vault at the bank. They hastily leave, passing out of Janet's life forever.

"DAVID CRAIG'S LUCK"

REX TWO-REEL DRAMA.

CAST.

David Craig	Matt Moore
Viola Morton	Jane Gail

MORTON is the owner of the iron works, where the men are striking with right upon their side. The man are led by Ben Shoreham, who is stirring them up to violence. David Craig, on the other hand, though sympathizing with the workers, preaches restraint and tolerance to them. Ben challenges him to fight, and after the encounter Craig, who is victorious, leads a delegation of the men to see the iron master, Morton, and talk over their differences.

Morton, unless he can make delivery on a certain contract by a fixed date, is threatened with ruin. It is in his interest to grant the demands of the men, but he cannot bring himself to give in to them. During the heated argument which ensues between him and the delegation, his daughter overhears part of the conversation, and her sympathies are aroused on the side of the men. Craig welcomes her co-operation, and takes her to the homes of her father's laborers, showing her the conditions under which they live, the result of her father's cupidity.

Meanwhile, Morton's troubles increase. The date of the forfeit clause in the contract draws near, and only the ending of the strike can save him. His daughter, unaware of this, has sold her jewels to furnish the men with funds to continue the strike. Craig discovers her sacrifice, and promises to do what he can to save her father. At this time the great teacher, Rossini, passes away, and for the first time, Craig learns of his identity. The teacher was Count di Rossini of Tuscany, and Craig is his son. He inherits a legacy of $250,000.

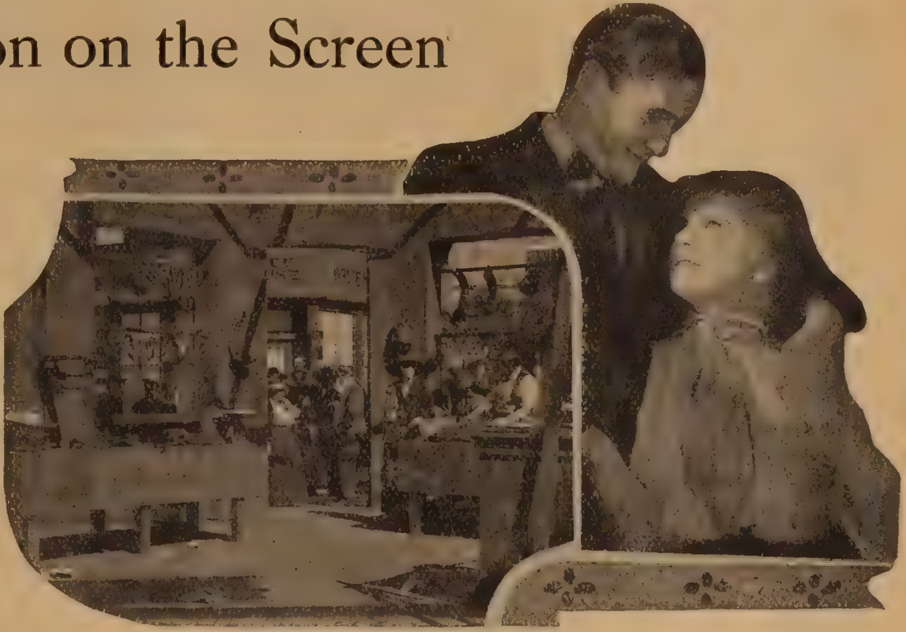
Craig goes to the iron master and asks him if it is true that the continuance of the strike will ruin him financially. Morton grimly admits it. Craig shows him Rossini's letter, offering to buy an interest and settle the strike, if the demands of the men are met. Morton agrees, and later the spirit of Rossini is seen with David and Viola.

THE superintendent of the Universal City zoo reported to the general manager on Friday of this week that he had another baby on his hands.

"Congratulations to you, George, and the madam," said the boss of the big plant, shaking him warmly by the hand.

"Oh, it's not mine, chief, oh, no!" exclaimed the supe. The new baby belongs to Baldy, one of the camels."

Wartime London on the Screen



London butcher shop and two players in "The Birth of Patriotism."

FOR many years London was the favorite Mecca of American tourists, before the war put an end to all pleasure travel across the pond and set them to "seeing America first." Though we may no longer explore the "city," lunch at the Cheshire Cheese, and take a stroll down Regent Street, at least we may have the pleasure of recalling these varied delights when the Special Attraction, "The Birth of Patriotism" is shown on the screen. The scene of the play is London, not the London of the tourist, but that of the Cockneys who, since the outbreak of the great conflict, have been proving their worth on a foreign soil, and dying as cheerfully as they used to live in the heart of their metropolis. The intimate pictures which this splendid picture gives of their life before the war cloud-darkened England, and then of the splendid way in which they responded to the call of their country, make a visit to the theatre which is running this picture almost as good as a real trip to London.

Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton, who adapted and produced the story, which was written by I. A. R. Wylie and published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "In the Wake of the Storm," is an Englishwoman by birth and knows whereof she speaks. She is particularly well qualified to stage a war picture, for she has seen the grim reality in person. She was in South Africa all through the Boer war, nursed wounded men in the field dressing station, such as she reproduced in this picture, and received the commendation of the government for her services.

WEARS PYJAMAS IN PUBLIC; SWIMS IN SWALLOWTAIL

"NO end to the queer things that you are asked to do when you join the ranks of the picture players," said Franklyn Farnum, whose Bluebird Photoplay, "The Clock," had just been completed. "Queer, I mean, from the point of view of the 'legitimate' player. For example, while we were making this picture, I had to spend one whole day in the open air, wearing nothing in the way of clothes but a suit of pyjamas, and as it was a February day, in which, though the sun was very bright, there was a perceptible chill in the air. We traveled out in automobiles to the house which had been selected for the filming of the scenes, in which a burglar tries to steal my precious clock. We had permission to use the veranda and the front door, and that was all; so I had to wear pyjamas out there, with an ulster over them, of course. The usual spectators were lined up to watch the scene, for, though you would think that the inhabitants were used to movie-making by this time, there are always some who seem never to have watched one before. I must confess to a slight sensation of embarrassment, when I had to take off the enveloping ulster, and proceed to do stunts in such very sketchy attire. I shall never forget how cold the stone walk felt to my bare feet when I had jumped from the veranda roof, landed on the burglar, and was conducting him to a telephone in the interior of the house.

"Later in the same picture I had to take a swim in the far from warming water of the Pacific, while wearing full evening dress. First I had to wear too few clothes in public and then too many. Wow! but that water was chilly! After the first plunge it was all right."

Hurrah! HERE ARE Butterfly Pictures

WITH the coming of spring it was possible to launch Butterfly Pictures which had been slumbering in their winter caccoons preparing their beauty and care-free message for the American people. May 7th has been chosen as an auspicious date for their debut, and on that day the first Butterfly Picture will be released under the title, "Eternal Love."

One reason for this is that the same week will also mark another memorable occasion. It will witness the fifth anniversary of the founding of the great Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and the entrance upon its sixth year of life with prospects of a still more wonderful success than that which has already crowned its banner.

In offering Butterfly Pictures, the Universal has a number of objects in view. In the first place, a standard has been set for Butterfly Pictures, and this standard will be religiously adhered to in all of the future productions released under this brand. This standard has been made by three features already set and announced, and by four more which have been selected, but which have not been announced, and the names of which have not as yet been definitely determined. They are, however, fully up to the mark which has been fixed upon as necessary for Butterflies.

For the further productions under this brand, well-known stories are being bought, original scripts from well-known authors are under consideration, and a number of directors and players have been assigned to Butterflies which will assure the excellence of all future productions.

Above all else, however, Butterfly Pictures have determined that never will a weak or uninteresting picture be released under that brand. In case a picture, upon trial showing, does not come up to the required standard it will not be released. Other disposition will be made of it.

In the second place, the brand will strive to secure wide variety of appeal for its pictures. This variety is well illustrated in its first three productions. The release of May 7th, "Eternal Love," is a beautiful story of Springtime in Brittany and Paris; of an artist's love of a simple peasant girl, and the wonderful abiding adoration with which she follows and finally rescues him from the surroundings which engulfed him in Paris. The release of May 14th, "The Phantom's Secret," is a totally different kind of story, and one in which excitement, suspense, thrill, and strong drama, have full play. "The Phantom's Secret" is a story of the daughter of a nobleman who was really a thief, and who had, as a means of protecting himself and his name, promised his daughter's hand in marriage to his first assistant in case he should die. The terrible situation of this girl just out of boarding-school caused her to grasp an opportunity to seize the identity of another; to form a new circle of acquaintances, in which the phantom's terrible secret is finally exposed.

The third release, that of May 21st, is as different from the other two stories as could possibly be imagined. It is entitled "Like Wildfire," and is a rapid fire comedy-drama of the lightest texture and most amusing and entrancing vein. It is all about a brave little country storekeeper, a girl of courage and sufficient resourcefulness to meet the competition of a syndicate of ten-cent stores. It chances that the heir apparent to the ten cent corporation is a youth of impetuosity and effervescent ideas. These qualities did not appeal at all to his father, but made a wonderful impression on the sorely tried little storekeeper, and finally solved the problem of competition in the little town of Winton.

Thirdly, the Butterfly Pictures, while they present an infinity of variety, will always be clean,

NATION-WIDE RESPONSE TO PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

THE Universal Animated Weekly, Number 68, concerns itself mainly with the encouraging response all over the country to the President's proclamation. Manhood and womanhood from all sections of the United States and our island possessions, are reporting for service. The Naval Militia is shown leaving its training ship in New York harbor and departing on a secret mission. We see them marching down Fifth Avenue, while the 47th Infantry of New York, is also seen departing for "Somewhere in New York State." Out in the Middle West, a girl posing as Joan of Arc, the great liberator of France, is winning recruits to the colors, by arousing enthusiasm in the youth of Chicago. Away off in California a great parade held in Los Angeles resulted in hundreds of enlistments, and Governor Stephens was caught by the Animated Weekly camera as he lead the procession. At Lake Bluff, Illinois, outside Chicago, the response to the call for men for the Navy has been so heavy that tents were required to shelter the would-be sailors. All other accommodation was rapidly exhausted. From down in Dixie comes a strip of film showing how the Georgians are responding to the call; while the arrival of a contingent of native born Filipinos, who arrived in California on their way to League Island Navy Yard to be made into U. S. sailors, shows that even our island possessions are aroused. A mimic conflict by Chicago marines, shows how far the recruits have progressed already in their training. And all these are only part of the subjects which make the Animated Weekly No. 68 a record number.

wholesome and free from any suggestion of vice, sex problem, and crime—for-crime's-sake plots. Don't get the impression that Butterfly plots are going to be insipid. They are not. They are just as full of snap, human ambition, and human frailty as they are of the milk of human kindness. The place of the evil-doer is admitted by every story writer, and every good act is inestimably heightened by the contrast of a bad one. But in Butterfly Pictures the bad will not be over-emphasized at the expense of the good.

Here's a little "Dope" on the first three Butterflies released as follows: "Eternal Love," May 7, "The Phantom's Secret," May 14, Herbert Rawlinson in "Like Wildfire," May 21.

"Eternal Love" was written by E. Magnus Ingleton, producer of "The Birth of Patriotism," and features beautiful little Ruth Clifford and Douglas Gerrard, who produced it. "The Phantom's Secret" was written by J. Grubb Alexander, and produced by Charles Swickard, with Mignon Anderson in the role of the phantom's daughter, and Hayward Mack as the first lieutenant whom she is forced to marry. Molly Malone, Marc Fenton, L. C. Shumway, Fred Church and Nanine Wright present a cast which is seldom equalled in one picture.

Herbert Rawlinson is starred in "Like Wildfire," with little Neva Gerber playing the role of the Winton storekeeper. The story is by Louis Writzenkorn, well-known writer of magazine stories. It was produced by Stuart Paton, director of "The Voice On the Wire," and must have served as a very pleasurable antidote from the heavy drama of this wonderful serial, for it is as light, airy and amusing as the other is mysterious and thrilling.

Here's to Butterfly Pictures. May they live long, and prosper.

PORTO RICAN GIRL LIKES EDDIE LYONS.

THE fame of Eddie Lyons has spread to Porto Rico, as a young lady has written him that she and many of her friends enjoy his work on the screen more than that of any other actor. "You are a fine comedian," his admirer writes. The Nestor favorite has sent her a letter of appreciation in reply, and in addition one of his photographs autographed. His latest release is entitled "The Home Wreckers."

Every Exhibitor who has been shrewd enough to show "LIBERTY" has made money on it, wads and bales. That is what they themselves tell us. NOW is the time when these same men should exhibit a little real showmanship and play this tremendous patriotic serial for a RETURN ENGAGEMENT. The Shepherd Boy	Dan Russell
The Vampire	Lou Bolton
The Hotel Keeper	Robt. McKenzie
His Daughter	Gladys Roach

THIS touching tale of the taming of a vampire by a simple shepherd boy was perpetrated by Noel and Dick Smith and by Director-General J. G. Blystone, as accessory after the act, or something like that. Dan, still mustacheless, is a riot as "Little Bo Peep," and here's what happens to him:

Dan was the shepherd at Rushville, in charge of all the peaceful flocks. Gladys was the Rushville beauty, the daughter of the hotel proprietor, whose house, alas! had been guiltless of guests since Washington and his staff stopped there, and charged their account. Every day the hotelkeeper went to meet the guests who never came, and he grew very sad.

At last came a happy day when a guest really did arrive on the four o'clock train. She was a vampire, but the proprietor did not know that. He rushed her into the old wagon and drove at top speed to the Rushville House. Gladys was sent upstairs to dust off the furniture in the guest room, and the lady was ushered into her apartment by the full staff. She was given a cow bell with which to make her wants known, and when she sat in the rocker, which promptly went over backwards with her, she rang it furiously. Then Pa disguised himself as the bellboy and gladly answered her ring. She was registered as La Belle Petroleum, a Heel Dancer, but when Dan saw her practising in the woods in a Ballet Russe costume he thought it would have been more accurate if she had spelled heel with a double ll. Dan had an awful time rescuing his flock from contamination, and the black lamb was determined to attach himself to the dancer.

Pa invited his guest to drive with him, and Dan was very jealous. The horse balked, standing right on the railroad tracks, with an engine coming rapidly nearer. Only Dan's presence of mind in lighting a fire under the carriage prevented a tragedy. Then Dan and Pa had a fight, and Dan, being victorious, went off with the dancer, while the wagon burned slowly to ashes in front of the hotel.

Years went by. La Belle Petroleum had become a family drudge, with six husky boys. The hotel had flourished, and Pa had set up an auto. But he had never forgotten the lovely dancer, and one day he just got into the buss wagon, drove off to her house, and asked her to elope with him for old times sake. This she was delighted to do, and managed to elude Dan and the children. When they found that she was gone, they set out to follow her, the youngest one carrying his lamb. The elopers got stuck in a mud puddle and abandoned the car, which Dan and his husky boys managed to set going again . They rushed after the train, and just succeeded in catching it. Then they threw Pa off with one mighty heave, and the family were reunited at last.

"THE TRAIL OF HATE"

Lieutenant Brewer.

Brewer's wife attracts the Captain.

Captain Holden.

JACK FORD is encroaching rapidly upon the territory of his brother Francis. Ever since July, 1914, Jack has written "Assistant Director" after his name, and has worked to produce the serials of that famous combination, Ford and Cunard. Whenever there was a particularly hazardous stunt, which the hero could not do because he was risking his life at another point at the time, Jack stepped into the breach, and risked his own with so much nonchalance that one might suppose he had a cat's allowance. This is the second time he has been given a company and told to go ahead and do something with it. What he accomplishes in "The Trail of Hate" is quite worth while.

Lieutenant Jack Brewer of the Sixty-Seventh had risen from the ranks, but he was adored by his men. Some of his brother officers, notably the West Pointer, Captain Dana Holden, did not share this opinion. Madge and her father were on their way to the great West, traveling by stage. Road agents held up the stage, and the 67th were called out to get them. In the skirmish which ensued Madge's father was killed, leaving the girl alone in the world. The only one who is good to her is Lieutenant Brewer, and Holden remarks cynically, "I suppose she will reward you by becoming your wife," while Brewer answers, "Perhaps, I'll ask her."

BISON two reel military drama in which Jack Ford, younger brother of Francis, is author, director and star.

Lieut. Jack Brewer	Jack Ford
The Swede	Jack Lawton
Madge	Louise Granville
Captain Dana Holden	Duke Worne

Jack Brewer has a month's furlough, and when he returns he is uproariously welcomed by his troop. He finds that Madge has been made a servant at the fort, and in company with all the others that she has made preparations for his home-coming. He has brought her some civilized clothes, as she is in rags, but he hardly knows how to offer them to her. He finally gives her the boxes, and she gleefully retires to put on the new things. When she enters he looks at her, sighs, and says: "You're all wrong." He then gets an idea, and goes to the general's wife for help. He borrows her curling iron, returns and tries to curl Madge's straggly hair. Holden looks through the window and sees the little domestic scene, putting the worst construction possible on it. He says to one of his brother officers: "Of course Brewer is not buying her clothes for nothing." This is reported to Jack who promptly marries the girl to stop the talk.

Once safely Brewer's wife, Madge begins to behave badly. She cares nothing for Jack, who she thinks has married her only out of pity. She carries on a flirtation with Holden, and sends him a message to say that she will meet him at seven that evening when Jack goes on duty. Now that she has become the well-dressed wife of another man, she suddenly seems attractive to Holden, especially as Jack is the man. Jack leaves for duty at seven, but returning for something forgotten, finds them together. A fight takes place between the two men.

A few years later we see Jack as the captain of a Constabulary in the Philippines. There is trouble with the Moros, and Jack and his troops are sent into the interior. Jack is informed that Holden and his former wife are traveling in the interior. It is true, and Holden has left his wife at the post while he goes on scouting duty. He is cut off from his men, and to save himself abandons his wife and the post and tries to make his way to Manila. The Moros make an attack on Fort Craig, and one of Jack's scouts finds Holden wounded, and takes him to the office of the Constabulary. Jack saves Madge from the Moros, and returns with her. There they find Holden. Madge begs Jack to continue to protect her, but he turns aside in disgust, throwing her off forever.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By W. A. BACH.

MONTREAL, Que.—Mr. Bernstein, formerly one of the representatives of the Universal Film Co., has been reappointed manager of the Globe Theatre in Montreal. Mr. Bernstein resigned from the management of this theatre to work for the Universal Film Co., and it was only upon a demand of the patrons of that theatre that he has resumed his duties there. We can now look forward to the Globe Theatre as being one of the live show houses of Montreal, due to Mr. Bernstein's extraordinary ability and the Universal Service.

TORONTO, Ont.—The Department of the Treasurer for Ontario, Canada, has made the following statements in reference to the collection of war tax tickets:

"The department will be satisfied to accept payment of the amusement tax cash, based upon the certified joint statements of treasurers of releasing companies and managers of leading local theatres as to house recepits," stated Mr. T. J. White, solicitor to the Provincial Treasurer, in discussing the plan to do away with amusement tax tickets at the principal theatres and other important places of amusement.

The Exchangemen's Association of Manitoba has been making plans for some time for the construction and consolidation of the various Exchangemen's Associations throughout Canada, into a Dominion body, the idea being that the exchangemen will be better able to protect the industry and themselves, with the National body, which would deal not only with National questions but also give assistance in local and Provincial troubles. One of the first things in their plans is a National Convention to be held next fall, either in Winnipeg or Toronto. Winnipeg would appear a logical point, as it is about the centre of the Dominion.

Exchange Associations are now organied in St. John, N. B.; Montreal, Que.; Toronto, Ont. and Winnipeg, Man., and Calgary and Vancouver are on the way, and it would not be very difficult to consolidate all these Provincial Associations into one large body.

The Garrick Theatre, College and Bovercourt Road, is Toronto's newest house, or rather one should say one of Toronto's oldest houses made new. As a matter of fact the Garrick has been nameless ever since its construction, it being built but never operated. However, one of the local theatre syndicates has secured it and is remodelling and equipping the house to open very shortly. There is no doubt that it will present a most attractive appearance.

The Motion Picture Bulletin News Service is a new organization working in conjunction with the Motion Picture Bulletin. The Canadian film trade paper is procuring news of the film world in Canada for use in the American trade papers as well as the bulletin. The News Service claims to have representatives in all of the cities of Canada, as well as in the producing centres in the United States for cooperation purposes. W. A. Bach, who is the managing editor of the Motion Picture Bulletin, will also be in charge of the News Service.

Issue No. 16.

A modern health farm is the first subject shown in the Universal Screen Magazine, Issue No. 16. We see the tired business man, and the woman who is run down, at wholesome work and exercise in the great

Then we are shown the making of cigarettes, in which modern machinery has supplanted the slower and more expensive hand methods of Europe. A machine producing three hundred smokes a minute is seen. "Aunt Jinny," a Florida nicotine lover, has been amusing tourists for years by her expert manipulation of a big black cigar.

An interesting new invention is demonstrated by a vaudeville performer, who lost a leg in an accident, and yet is more proficient as a dancer with his artificial limb than most people with two natural ones. The leg is made of compressed paper and weighs only twenty-four ounces.

Nature studies in New York's famous Aquarium, showing many of the fish gathered from the Seven Seas, come next, and the reel is completed by a clay cartoon by Willie Hopkins, the sculptor, who shows us an animated clay picture of the U. S. as a united nation.

"THE WARRIOR'S BRIDE."

Big U Drama.
With Wallace Reid.

Sunbeam, most beautiful of princesses, is sold by her father to Fang, a mighty war chief. Willow, beloved of Sunbeam, steals her from her husband, who goes forth immediately with his fighting men to rescue her. Willow's braves are prevailing when the two armies meet, and it appears as though the young warrior will continue to hold the bride he stole. Fang, however, rather than see his bride in the arms of her lover, kills Sunbeam. Then Willow kills himself, and the Indian haranguers say that the souls of the lovers still wander together through the Valley of Shadows.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

The GREATER Program

IT is not necessary to say the greatest Program on earth, because the Universal Program is GREATER in quantity and quality than all competitive services combined. When you see listed the releases on the regular Universal Program you are seeing the cream of the film world, not only in short subjects but in varied interest, and in that scientific balance that keeps up the interest throughout the week, getting more repeat admissions than any other form of entertainment now available anywhere. For convience in booking an "open" program the regular program is divided into "specials" and "regular" releases. Read below,

Special Releases Week of May, 7th

BECAUSE these specials are the pick of the program's bunch of novelties they lend themselves readily to the needs of every Exhibitor who wants to bolster up a weak program; help out a weak feature performance, or strengthen his entertainment generally. And because they are such "specials" in the truest sense of the word, they cost you a slight advance. They are worth it. With them you can get the crowds, no matter what competition you have.

BUTTERFLY—"ETERNAL LOVE" (Five-Reel Drama) Ruth Clifford, Douglas Gerrard
NESTOR—"THE LOST APPETITE" (One-Reel Comedy) Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts
GOLD SEAL—"THE GRIP OF LOVE" (Three-Reel Drama) Allen Holubar and Louise Lovely.
L-KO—"TOM'S TRAMPING TROUPE" (Two-Reel Comedy) Phil Dunham, Lucille Hutton, Chas. Inslee and Merta Sterling
JOKER—"THE MAN WITH A PACKAGE" (One-Reel Comedy) Gale Henry and Wm. Franey UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY—No. 71.
UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE—Issue No. 18

The two lists above comprise the complete Universal Program Service for an entire week. Constantly growing in popularity, the Universal Program is bringing success to thousands of Exhibitors throughout the country, many of whom it has saved from feature failure.

Regular Releases Week of May, 7th

THE regular releases include those sterling one, two and three-reel dramatic and comedy subjects which constitute the backbone of the mighty Universal Program, and which have given it the reputation of setting the standard for all competitors. Look them over and remember that—like the "specials"—they can be booked separately if desired.

VICTOR—"BASEBALL MADNESS" (One-Reel Comedy) Billy Mason, Gloria Swanson.
VICTOR—"SWEARING OFF" (One-Reel Comedy) Eileen Sedgwick.
IMP—"FLAMES OF TREACHERY" (One-Reel Drama) Lois Wilson and Lee Hill.
IMP—"THE GIRL IN THE GARRET" (Two-Reel Drama) Jack Nelson and Molly Malone.
BISON—"ONE WILD NIGHT" (Two-Reel Drama) Gypsy Hart and Kingsley Benedict
LAEMMLE—"THE DOCTOR'S DECEPTION" (One-Reel Drama)

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

For "The Girl in the Checkered Coat"

THE story of "The Girl in the Checkered Coat" tells of the unjust arrest of a young girl. A detective discovers a notorious pickpocket in the act of taking a woman's handbag. He follows her home and makes the subsequent arrest solely on the fact that the culprit wore a checked coat. This lends itself to advertising of the "teaser" type. For newspaper advertisements use the following copy inserted in the lost and found columns:

> FOUND! Four ladies' handbags recently taken from persons in this community. These and other valuables found on "The Girl in the Checkered Coat" may be had upon identification at the (name here) Theatre on (date).

Use these announcements in the display columns:

WHICH IS YOURS?
Among the articles recently taken from residents of (town) are——
5 ladies' handbags
2 emerald rings
1 brooch
1 necklace
These have been found on "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," and will be returned to the owners at The (name) Theatre on (date).

HAVE YOU LOST
any article of value?
If so, your property may have been found on
"The Girl in the Checkered Coat."
Upon identification it will be returned to you at
The (name here) Theatre
on (date)

Another stunt along these lines is to obtain from a local dealer a number of ladies' handbags. Stretch them across your lobby with a placard below them reading:

WHICH IS YOURS?
These are but a few of the bags found on
"The Girl in the Checkered Coat"
This masterful Bluebird Photoplay shown on (date of showing)

The dealer will gladly let you have the bags if you will place a small sign on the display stating that they are loaned through his courtesy.

A dog plays a part in the photoplay, and this may be brought out by this method: Obtain a large dog (preferably a bloodhound), and by means of two straps thrown across his back have a sign with the following copy hang from each side:

LOOKING FOR
"The Girl in the Checkered Coat"

On the day of showing change the signs to read:

FOLLOW ME AND SEE
"The Girl in the Checkered Coat"
The masterful Bluebird Photoplay
at The (name here) Theatre

TO-DAY

Try to get a local newspaper to hold a contest giving a prize for the best article on the topic, "Does heredity or environment mould a person's character?" Tell the newspaper editor that you will give his paper publicity on your screen by announcing its name in connection with the contest and that you will furnish the prizes. Also get the Woman's Club to co-operate with you.

WE'RE SORRY, TOO.

Gentlemen—Received paper O. Wishing you all the success in the future, and thanking you for past favors and service, I remain,

4 BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS

Here are presented four of the biggest Preparedness Productions and War Subjects ever released. "The Eagle's Wings," for instance is so far beyond the average subject of this class that there positively is no comparison. It was released as BLUEBIRD Extraordinary—it his created a sensation wherever shown. It is timely, patriotic and American through and through. You can put it over big. The other BLUEBIRDS listed here are as great in their way as is "The Eagle's Wings." They are among the most successful of the many tremendous box-office triumphs released under the BLUEBIRD Brand. Book these through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 B'way, New York.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS" The most unusual picture on the market today. An intense and absorbing story presented in the most dramatic form. It deals with present conditions, and with industrial preparedness. It is as far beyond the jingo pictures with their fake and sham battles and studio atmosphere as it is possible to imagine. It is a real picture for real Americans, and that is why it is playing to repeat bookings and capacity houses everywhere shown. "The Eagle's Wings" is a BLUEBIRD Special, in 5 reels, written by Rufus Steele, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, supported by Vola Smith, Grace Carlisle and Charles Mailes.

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS" Produced by Rupert Julian from the famous novel "We Are French," by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. Five-reel BLUEBIRD featuring Rupert Julian, Ella Hall, with Kingsley Benedict. An inspiring picture of patriotism that is particularly acceptable at this time. No living American can see this great production without leaving the theatre a better man than when he entered. Yet it does not preach; it simply grips and convinces. A picture you should book immediately.

"BEHIND THE LINES" Harry Carey in "Behind the Lines," supported by Edith Johnson, directed by Henry McRae, constitutes a fascinating entertainment of war, political intrigue, romance and adventure. It is a thrilling portrayal of present day conditions, and has played to capacity houses wherever shown. A BLUEBIRD with a big punch.

"TREASON" A notable picture is "Treason," written by Lee Weigert, five stirring reels, produced by Allen Holubar, featuring Allen Holubar, Lois Wilson, Joe Girard and Dorothy Davenport. A big production with some tremendous war scenes and the most intense situations. A picture that will crowd your house for more than one showing.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

"THE BIRTH OF PATRIOTISM."

THE Special Attraction of April 30 is exactly the sort of a picture to draw big houses in these stirring times. It is called "The Birth of Patriotism," and is all about the response to the call for soldiers which went out in England at the beginning of the war. With our own country faced with the necessity of raising an army, such a heart-gripping photoplay as this, dealing with the same problem, should appeal to your patrons as nothing else could. That is, if you let them know about it.

Do any of the many possible things to give a martial atmosphere to your theatre. Have men in uniform stationed as sentries in the lobby—perhaps a soldier on one side and a sailor on the other. You know from the papers that one of the best stimulants for recruiting in England was the poster campaign. Use them lavishly for this picture. Two cadets playing the fife and drum outside the theatre would be a splendid stunt if you can get them. Your cashier would attract notice if you put her in khaki cap and uniform coat, or in Red Cross nurse dress.

If you want to be generous you could distribute tiny flag badges with the ticket of admission. And use your mailing list to let the folks know that you have a wonderful patriotic photoplay to show them. The picture will not disappoint them.

THE SCREEN MAGAZINE.

DO your patrons, particularly your women patrons, realize that on the day when the Universal Screen Magazine is released that they have an opportunity for a cooking lesson from an expert who has won gold medals at the biggest expositions in this country?

Not only do they have the unequaled entertainment of a selected program of Universal pictures, but a cooking demonstration, so clear that a child could follow the directions, thrown in for good measure. On May 4, Issue No. 17 of the Screen Magazine will include a demonstration of paper-bag cookery—one of the newest and most original culinary wrinkles—by Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, the expert. Announce this cooking lesson by means of special posters in your lobby, or have some cards printed with the announcement: "Dear Madam—On ——— Mrs. A. Louise Andrea will demonstrate in this theatre one of the most interesting of modern culinary discoveries—paper-bag cookery.

"Do not fail to profit by this lesson in a brand-new, economical and delicious method of preparing food, which will transform the dishes of every day into food fit for an epicure." Pass these out to every woman who buys a ticket and to all the men who are accompanied with ladies, as many days before the showing of the picture as you like. Then confidently await results.

Repeat Bo

On BLUEBIRD P

The Latest and Greates
Thousands of E

FROM every corner of the country come words of praise and approval on the great idea of "REPEAT BOOKINGS," boosted so hard by BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS. The Moving Picture News, as well as the Moving Picture World and other trade publications, have pounded on the tremendous possibilities of "REPEAT BOOKINGS." REPEAT BOOKINGS will soon become the biggest item and the most important item to theatres that are building for permanency and profits. We list here below a few of the powerful reasons and arguments in favor of REPEAT BOOKINGS. READ carefully and think as you read.

Repeat Bookings Mean

—getting full value from every penny you spend for advertising. Hundreds of theatres spend large sums for each feature—a daily change—result, if the picture is good and the title happens to be weak, the value of that advertising money is lost—absolutely and positively lost so far as its full value is concerned. Instead of getting the complete worth of the advertising expenditure, it peters out the first day because the good picture that would have sent back two, three, four and five more full audiences only gets in its work for one day—just gets things started when it is switched to other advertising to another daily change feature.

Repeat Bookings Mean

—a chance for your entire patronage to view the feature you are showing. As it stands today, on the daily change basis, you spend your advertising money for one day, play to one day's run, and thousands who want to see the picture can't see it because "It's here today and gone tomorrow." Thus you disappoint hundreds, perhaps thousands, of people who pass your house for another house where they can see what they want, or what they couldn't see at your house. Thus you are playing to a "hit or miss" audience who are being chased so fast as to be rapidly heading to Feature indigestion.

Repeat Bookings Mean

—that instead of paying top price for a new feature every day, paying full price for advertising, forcing yourself to secure new publicity in each new feature daily—you first—get the benefit of a sliding scale of booking rentals—you pocket the cash difference between the full price of the daily change and the sliding scale on the repeat bookings—your advertising hits with full force, your publicity gets over because of the continuity of its appearance—you play to capacity houses made so by the direct and unpurchaseable mouth to mouth advertising, you purchase fewer posters and other props, now required by the daily change, and you give ALL of your people the opportunity to see the good productions. Thus, you are money ahead, patrons satisfied—and are building for performance.

Hundreds of Theatres
Now playing repeat bookings with huge success . . . .

THE GLOBE THEATRE in Toronto, played "SHOES" to such large repeat audiences as to practically double the profits to the house over the first run. The value and tremendous publicity of "SHOES" on its first run, automatically brought back capacity houses on the mere mention of its reappearance. Hundreds of wide awake theatres are now playing repeat bookings for the reasons outlined on the preceding page but primarily because the profits on the repeat performance double, triple and quadruple the profits of the daily change showing.

NOTICE To All Exhibitors

The Title of that gripping LOIS WEBER production "The People against John Doe" has been changed to

"GOD'S LAW"

THE title, "The People Against John Doe," does not carry the full meaning of the power of this play to the public's mind. Therefore we have changed the title as stated, from "The People Against John Doe" to "GOD'S LAW." Below is reproduced a clipping from a full page ad in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, of Thursday, April 5th. THE PEOPLE VS. JOHN DOE

Perhaps the exhibition of the moving-picture play of "The People Versus John Doe," in the hall of the House of Representatives in Harrisburg, was the first instance in American law-making of the employment of the picture drama as an argument for legislation. But the results fully justified the experiment. The deep impression which this vivid and thrilling story, based as it is upon actual judicial and police procedure in a neighboring State, made upon the minds of Senators and Representatives was patent to every one. It went far deeper than any spoken pleas could possibly have gone, for it was a vivid portrayal of actualities, presented with a realism and an artistry that never have been excelled in this new agency for the instruction and amusement of the people.

This remarkable play — noteworthy both by reason of its timely lesson and because of the masterly skill with which its message is presented by a cast which seems to have been made for the purpose— was not brought into existence to meet any local legislative issue. But its instant application to the pending bill was recognized, and the willingness of the Legislature to permit its presentation under such unusual circumstances is a happy augury of the affirmative action soon to be taken on the measure to abolish capital punishment. But the showing of the play is likely to have another and unforeseen though no less desirable result. It has also awakened the consciences of legislators to the gross wrongs sometimes done by overzealous and unscrupulous detectives in their eagerness and cupidity. If it shall lead, as it should by the enactment of suitable laws, to put an end to the horrors which have come to be known as "the third degree," and which have been practiced in violation of every right principle of justice, Pennsylvania will have made a great step forward in humane penology, removing a double reproach upon its methods of applying the criminal laws.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Four Weeks from This Week

"The Birth of Patriotism." Five-Reel Feature. With Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson. From the Saturday Evening Post Story by I. A. R. Wylie. Directed by E. M. Ingleton. Released April 30. All experienced exhibitors know that the surest way to please the people in dramatic productions is to give them something that will touch their better feelings—reach their hearts' best emotions—in fact, to bring some of the tenderer and truer aspects of life home to their consciousness by portraying real human lives, and the common problems of humanity faithfully on the screen. Now, when the world is torn asunder by an earth wide war there are subjects of such deep import as to have a universal appeal. Such a picture is "The Birth of Patriotism," too big and too much of a story to be told in detail here, but those of you who broke all records with "My Old Dutch" will find the same appealing, though homely, character scenes; the havoc wrought by war; the lives torn asunder and the triumph of love over hate. Read a complete synopsis of this big drama in the Moving Picture Weekly, and you will agree that you ought to book it at once and boost it for all you are worth.

"Bill Brennan's Claim." With Neal Hart and Janet Eastman. Three-Reel Gold Seal Western Mining Drama. Directed by George Marshall. Released May 1. Punch! You know what that means. It describes this picture to a T. Bill (Neal Hart) has struck gold, and without properly recording his location, leaves for town to get financial backing. On the way he meets Janet and her dad, whose outfit is stuck in the mud. Neal helps them out. Joe is a villain and plans to jump Bill's claim. He too, meets Janet and wants her. He tells them Bill's shack is his, and if they will help him hold it against a claim jumper he will make dad a partner. They accept, and when Bill returns they think he is the villain. Then a stage robbery and a chase of the robber—one of the most startling and daring things ever done—when Joe drives a team and wagon over a cliff and also takes the plunge himself. After the hair-raising climax a most satisfactory ending. A marvel of story, acting and direction. A great picture.

"A Midnight Mystery." With Thomas Jefferson and Betty Schade. Two-Reel Gold Seal Mystery Drama. Directed by Wm. V. Mong. Released May 4. There's nothing that makes people like to go to the movies like a good mystery story, and here we have a humdinger. If any of your wise fans can discover how old Dudsbury (Thomas Jefferson), could be sure enough dead and then come to life; or how the murderer could so completely hide his evil deed right up to the last fade-out, then they are brighter than the average. This is a corking story, swiftly developed and wonderfully acted.

"Little Moccasins." With Millard K. Wilson and Edith Roberts. Two-Reel Cave Man Drama. Directed by M. K. Wilson. Released May 5. Edith is a pampered and spoiled young person. She is taken ill and sent west with her aunt, a doctor and Freddie, who loves her. Millard is a red-blooded chap who lives out West, and under an assumed name has written several books about the country. He rescues Edith from danger, but because he is roughly dressed she does not notice him next time they meet. He learns of her sickness, abducts her, takes her to a mountain cabin, where an old Indian woman, fresh air and exercise restore her health. When this is discovered—but I won't spoil the splendid climax by telling it. It is a picture that the fans will enjoy and talk about.

Wake Up, America!

(No. 175. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

At a recent meeting of the New York Film Club, one of the speakers—sales-manager for one of our competitors—paid this tribute to the Universal:—

"Somehow the Universal always seems to have a picture on hand to fit any great piece of news that happens almost anywhere in the world. You've got to hand it our Universal friends for always having timely stuff that gets the money for the exhibitor. I don't know how they do it, but they do it just the same. There's something uncanny about it."

There's really nothing uncanny about it at all.

It's partly LUCK, it's partly our ENORMOUS PRODUCTION and it's partly THINKING AHEAD ALL THE TIME.

But, whatever it is, it proves that it pays the exhibitor to be closely connected ALL THE TIME with the organization that is ALWAYS AND ETERNALLY ON THE JOB.

No matter what happens, anywhere, at any time—the Universal has a picture that is appropriate.

Right this very minute, with war and preparedness the two topics of interest in every household in the land of the free and the home of the brave, we are booking SIX GREAT BIG SMASHING PICTURES which could not be any more timely if we had known a year ago just what President Wilson and Congress intended to do a couple of weeks ago! They are:

"LIBERTY"—the most tremendously successful serial we ever made. Featuring Marie Walcamp, Eddie

And Then Clean Up!

Polo, Jack Holt, G. Raymond Nye and a corking good supporting company.

"UNCLE SAM AT WORK"—showing what Uncle Sam has done to get ready for the big scrap. And he has done things you don't even dream of—things that will make you and your patrons yell for pure patriotism.

"THE WAR WAIF"—an exciting two-reel war picture featuring Allen Holubar, Claire McDowell and little Zoe Rae.

"THE WHITE FEATHER VOLUNTEER"—a Rupert Julian production dealing with the "slacker" in time of war.

"COURT MARTIALED"—a rattling good Stuart Paton production featuring Frances Nelson, Allen Holubar and Hobart Henley.

"IF MY COUNTRY SHOULD CALL"—a five-reeler featuring Dorothy Phillips, produced by Joseph De Grasse and adapted from Virginia Terhune Van De Water's great story.

This is the kind of stuff you ought to be feeding your patrons RIGHT NOW because they will love it! If you don't add this sort of spice to your regular show you are not cashing in on timely events.

Universal exhibitors are setting their people wild with Universal preparedness pictures and there's no reason why you can't join the Universal ranks this very day.

Wake up, American exhibitors, and then—CLEAN UP!

"LITTLE MOCCASINS"

Centre—"Take off those clothes and put on these."

Right—"I'll stay with him!"

BISON Two-Reel Drama, featuring Edith Roberts. Written by Harvey Gates and produced by Millard K. Wilson, in setting of great natural beauty.

CAST.

Dennis Reid	Millard K. Wilson
Portia Justin	Edith Roberts
Freddie Waldo	J. F. Abbot
Mrs. Justin	Louise Hutchinson
The Doctor	Malcolm Blevins

EDITH ROBERTS, leaving the Nestor comedies momentarily behind her, is the featured player of this charming Bison drama, written by Harvey Gates, and produced by Millard K. Wilson, who also plays the role of the "cave man" hero. The story is set among natural scenery of great beauty, and the wonderful photography adds another feature of merit to an unusual picture.

Portia Justin has always been pampered and spoiled by her rich and indulgent mother, and now that the doctors declare that she has a touch of the "white plague," the indulgence is even greater. With the family physician and Portia's admirer, Freddie Waldo, Portia and her mother repair to the Western mountains, thinking to find health for the bored and weary girl.

Living in the vicinity is one Dennis Reid, a red-blooded chap, who knows every inch of the country. Besides his occupation of raising bees, he manages to find time to write novels of the Western country, which are published under a different name.

One day as Portia is lying on her couch reading, a small snake winds its way toward her, and Dennis, seizing the snake, hurls it into the underbrush. Portia is grateful, but neither she nor her party recognize Dennis on their subsequent meetings. Only the doctor, who is concerned at the snobbery of the Justin party, tries to make amends to Dennis, who thus learns of Portia's illness.

Dennis has fallen in love with the girl. One day he swoops down upon her, takes her to a hut presided over by an Indian woman, determined by right living and open air to restore her to health. Her family is greatly worried, but can find no trace of her.

At last Portia is well and strong. Restoring to her the clothes she wore when he abducted her, Dennis, who has now learned to call her "Little Moccasins" because of his compelling her to wear moccasins instead of her high-heeled shoes, places her upon a horse and sends her home. Freddie at last hears that Dennis was Portia's abductor, and with a party he starts out in search of him.

Meantime, Mrs. Justin makes all possible speed to hurry Portia away from the distasteful country. On the road they encounter Freddie and his party, who have injured Dennis. Portia at last realizes her love for him, and insists upon remaining to care for him.

IRENE HUNT IS POISONED.

IRENE HUNT, who is featured in the Universal special attraction, "The Birth of Patriotism," is working at the present time under difficulties. A few days ago Miss Hunt took a drive into the mountains in her automobile and seeing some wild flowers not far from the roadway, alighted and plucked them. She did not know that her hands had touched the dangerous poison-oak, but that night her arms broke out in spots and blotches. Her physician, after diagnosing the case, advised her to remain at home, but Miss Hunt is not the kind to give up and she appeared at the studio as usual for work.

BURRO APPROPRIATES SCRIPT.

FRED A. KELSEY, who is directing the Harry Carey company at Universal City, was held up nearly thirty minutes near the town of Newhall, California, the other day by a burro. The animal, which was being used with another burro in the picture, "According to Appearance," took possession of the script and started away with it. The burro carried the story of the play in its mouth and it was not recovered until one of the cowboy members of the company had given chase, bringing the precious script back a half hour later. Carey's next picture is a Gold Seal called "The Honor of an Outlaw."

THE response of the nation to the preparedness slogan and the opening of the national game in different parts of the country, seem to share the honors of the Animated Weekly No. 69. We see the response to the call for recruits in both the army and navy at Chicago, where 500 men are shown lined up in their citizens' clothes. Universal City is doing its share. A recruiting office was established under the giant pepper trees of the film capital, and we see the recruiting officer in conversation with some of the film stars. An interesting view of the U. S. destroyer "Smith," which dogged a U-boat torpedo is a timely bit. The graduation class at West Point, who received their diplomas two months before the usual time on account of the shortage of officers, with the ceremonies of the occasion is interesting. The great "Wake Up, America!" parade in New York city is shown with the flock of airplanes which flew over the city, scattering appeals for recruits. The response to the urging of the Secretary of Agriculture for food economy is being met by the utilization of back yards all over the country for the growing of vegetables. We see the doctors, nurses and patients of Bellevue Hospital, New York, engaged in turning their lawn into a garden.

In connection with the opening of the national game, we are shown pictures of the beloved Matty and his Cincinnati Reds, who celebrated the occasion with a victory over the St. Louis Cardinals. Flowers were presented to the Old Master, who has endeared himself to thousands of Universal fans in the pictures in which he starred for the company.

THE BIRTH OF PATRIOTISM

The farewell at the station.

FIVE-REEL Special Attraction. Adapted for the screen and produced by Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton, from I. A. R. Wylie's story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, with Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson as the featured players.

THE ranks of the woman directors of motion pictures are augmented every year. There are now at least six at Universal City alone, doing some of the best work which the industry produces. With "The Birth of Patriotism," the special attraction for this week, the name of Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton is added to the list of women producers. She has already shown her skill in a short picture, but this is her first important photoplay. A wonderful story for picture purposes was found in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "In the Track of the Storm," and Mrs. Ingleton made the adaptation as she has done so many times before, but this time, instead of turning it over to some one else, she began to carry it out herself, with a carefully chosen cast, headed by Irene Hunt and Leo Pierson. The story is so good that it may speak for itself, for its message is most timely.

Mary was a music teacher in Miss Wilkens' "Private School for Girls." Her life made her stern and almost forbidding in appearance, subduing all the softer qualities of her nature. Then Johnny Roberts came into Mary's life, and with him came love.

Johnny's salary was small, for he was a banker's clerk, but he earned enough to furnish a flat on the purchase-hire plan. They were young, with all life before them, so one sunny Saturday afternoon they were married.

And, in another part of London, a little public house of the lower class, known as "The White Horse," flourished. In the private bar of the little "pub," Anne, a common little Cockney, presided. She was slight and fair, with a cheap, tawdry prettiness, and Sam adored her. But Anne, while not unkind, was indifferent to his advances.

At first Mary and Johnny were supremely happy in their little flat, but gradually, as the glow wore off, Johnny's habits began to grate on Mary's sensitiveness, as each day brought fresh evidence of his untidiness. Johnny found a pal in a dog he brought home, after bandaging its injured paw, and the two became inseparable. Steadily the breach at home grew wider, and one evening, unable to stand Mary's silent contempt any longer, Johnny went out with his dog, and wandered miserably through the streets, while Mary shed bitter tears at home. The cheering lights of "The White Horse" attracted him, and as if led by Fate, he entered. Here he met Anne, whose sympathy appealed to him and his visits to "The White Horse" became more and more frequent.

The Londoner, phlegmatic in the face of danger, had ignored the first murmur of war, which now became a roar, and one eventful evening, many of the White Horse boys left for the front.

At last the turning point came for Mary. Johnny was weary, sick and feverish. Mary believed him drunk, when he staggered home and, thoroughly angry, she turned him out.

The recruiting sergeant finds an unresponsive audience at first.

The breach begins to widen.

Nightlong, Johnny wandered aimlessly, half delirious. Morning found him at "The White Horse," to which he had come, almost unconsciously. When Anne arrived for her duties, she found him, and had him sent to her lodgings. When he recovered, he enlisted and was at length sent to the front.

Mary, in her abject misery, had followed Johnny from the office one evening. Now, however, with a determined air, she approached Anne's lodgings. Anne, still crying, returned from the station, and the two women met. Mary had come for what belonged to her, the money on which Anne was living. Anne, infuriated by Mary's triumphant manner, and nettled by the truth of Mary's words which predicted that Johnny would tire of her commonness, raised the lamp, about to hurl it at Mary. They were interrupted by a scraping at the door. It was Johnny's pal, the dog, who, seeing Mary, ran out. Perhaps Johnny was at the little flat. Together the two women followed to the flat, which now presented a miserable aspect. Anne discovered Johnny's baby, which Johnny knew nothing about, and she realized why Mary had come for the money—the baby was starving. Anne ignored Mary's protestations and took the baby home, while Mary, sacrificing pride for love, followed with the dog.

Far away in London came the news that Johnny had been killed. Mary suppressed her suffering, and when Anne sank into a fever, Mary saved her by her splendid sacrifice. Anne, delirious, raved of the night of Johnny's departure: " 'E was lookin' fer you—I've lost 'im!" A great understanding surged through Mary's soul.

One night the landlady of Anne's lodgings brought a little orange-colored envelope. The report had been false, and Johnny was coming home. It was then that Anne made her splendid renunciation, as she realized that in Mary lay Johnny's happiness. She prepared supper and, having bought a new dress for the baby, put it on him. Then, on pretense of having forgotten something, she kissed Mary, and with a merry little laugh, went out.

Down in the street came Johnny, walking slowly and carefully, for the war had taken his sight. In the shadow of the doorway, Anne waited, with a shawl thrown over her head, to lead him up the steps, where, unseen by him, she bent and kissed his sleeve. With a brave little smile on her quivering lips, she whispered: "Good luck, and God bless yer, Johnny!" and ran out. Johnny Roberts passed into the room, where he found his long-lost happiness.

Anne understands home-making.

"Yer don't have to go back to her—I'll take care of yer!"

ALICE LAKE JOINS BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS.

ALICE LAKE has joined the Bluebird Photoplays, and will play under the direction of Jack Conway with Herbert Rawlinson in one or more special features. Miss Lake has had experience of four years before the camera, starting first with the Vitagraph in the East, and for a short time was with Thanhouser for a special production. Roscoe Arbuckle saw her work and engaged her to play opposite him in comedies. She remained with him four months, recently resigning her position.

Miss Lake prefers comedy-dramas rather than underworld or Western pictures. She can ride, swim, shoot, and has established a reputation as a classic dancer.

"I am awfully glad to appear in Bluebirds," said Miss Lake. "I think this company's pictures are wonderful and I admit I have long entertained a hope of becoming identified with its organization."

Miss Lake, who is a native of Brooklyn, was educated in that city and in private schools of New York. She never had any experience in the spoken drama, but has appeared as a society dancer at social functions.

Agnes Vernon talks to Brownie.

Why AGNES Becomes Brownie

By MARJORIE HOWARD

MILLIONS of girls change their last names every year, but it has remained for a Bluebird leading lady to take the drastic and much more unusual step of changing her first name, instead. Little Miss Vernon is the girl who disagrees with Juliet in thinking that there is a very great deal in a name. Her godfathers and her godmothers in her baptism decided upon "Agnes," and she has grown to woman's estate under the shadow of that dignified and rather formidable cognomen. But when the baby girl whom they had christened Agnes began to toddle about, and laugh and chuckle, and open her big brown eyes in surprise at everything she saw in the big world, they discovered that her name was much too formal, and she received the appelation of "Brownie."

Even when she outgrew the rolly-polly stage the name stuck, because it just described her eyes, and because she looked so pretty when she was dressed in brown. "Agnes" was never heard in the Vernon family unless the owner of it was very, very bad indeed. So she came to associate it with all sorts of disagreeable experiences, like going to bed by day, and things of that unpleasant description.

"Oh, I know that Agnes is the name of a famous saint, that it is immensely dignified, and all that," says Miss Vernon, "but the trouble is that I am not a saint at all, and not even particularly dignified. I never feel at home with any one who calls me 'Agnes,' and my chief ambition is to increase the number of my friends, both on and off the screen, to a perfectly enormous total. I am thinking of consulting one of those cryptogramic name people—you know what I mean, the ones who add the letters of your name according to a system of their own, and then give you the "digit' of it, as they call it, and tell you whether it corresponds to your cosmic vibrations, or something like that. I am sure that I shall find that 'Agnes' is quite the wrong name for me and will get me into all sorts of trouble, while 'Brownie' will lead me on to fame and fortune. They charge five dollars, I believe, for a consultation, but surely it is cheap at the price, if it regulates your vibrations forever afterwards!"

"Wake up, America!—I mean Brownie Vernon!" (This is spoken from the picture above.)

"Red" grabs the telephone receiver.

Ben Wilson and Howard Crampton in a tense scene.

"HIGH FINANCE"

HIGH FINANCE" is the suggestive title of the eighth episode of the wonderful serial, which was adapted by Stuart Paton from the well-known novel of the same name by Eustace Hale Ball, and is also being produced by the famous director of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," the undersea feature which bids fair to be the most caricatured production ever made for the screen.

In the crook's apartment, the Red Warren's men are gathering and learn that a meeting will be held the following evening. They arrange to be in Washington on the 25th. Polly, locked in the room above them, is trying to glean some information by listening with her ear to the wall. Finally, opening the window, she manages to drop to the floor below and peer in the room where the crooks are assembled.

During this time, Shirley has communicated with Chief Cronin, who begins to think Polly's disappearance is becoming a habit, and is beginning to suspect her.

Receiving a mysterious message over the wire, Shirley begins to analyze the case, and is thoroughly alarmed and puzzled when he finds the murders include not only local politicians, but international ones also.

As one of the crooks steps to the window and throws it open, Polly drops to the sill, hanging on by her finger tips, but is discovered and pulled into the room. Taylor starts to strike her, but "Red" stops him.

On the outside of the building Shirley's men have located Polly, surrounded the building, and are anxiously awaiting the next move of the crooks.

The detectives and police break into the house from all sides, and some of the men are captured, others among them "Red" with Polly, escaping through the secret entrance. The captured men are handcuffed, and the police question them. They sullenly refuse to talk. But at last one man signifies his willingness to tell all he knows about the mysterious voice on the wire.

In the meantime, Polly has been placed in a high-powered automobile. She feigns unconsciousness, and the crooks think it safe to leave her for a moment to see if the others are following them and to close the secret entrance. They run back, and she revives, seizes the steering-wheel of the car and begins to drive as hard as she can. They discover her absence, and plan pursuit.

Wayne and Dorian have been left behind in the house, secretly to watch the detectives. They are hiding, and listening. The crook, who has decided to go back on his own gang and confide in Shirley, is just about to begin his confession, when we see a picture on the wall moved aside; through the hole left visible comes the muzzle of a gun; there is a shot and the man falls dead. The detectives are no nearer the solution of the mystery.

"WHERE ARE MY PARENTS?"

IT is not often that one is blessed with two sets of parents, but occasionally this sort of thing happens at a picture studio. The latest doubly-fathered and mothered child is Brownie Vernon, who enacts the leading feminine role in the Bluebird photoplays, "Bringing Father Home" and "The Car Of Chance," which productions are being made simultaneously by Director William Worthington.

"This quartet of fathers and mothers make my head ache—I am kept busy inquiring 'Where are my parents??' " said Miss Vernon.

A VERY good story, with excellent roles for the two leading characters, played by Neal Hart and Janet Eastman, and a splendid chance for Joe Rickson to risk his neck in his own unique fashion, by rolling down a cliff with a horse and wagon on top of him, is the Gold Seal release for this week. It was written by Shelley Sutton, adapted for the screen by Charles Wilson, Jr., and produced by George Marshall.

In Yellow Dog, claim-jumping is considered a dangerous occupation. Saunders jumps Bill Brennan's claim, while Bill is away trying to get funds to work his mine. The men about the town are afraid of Saunders, and think the law is probably with him, but Pete, a friend of Bill, writes him a note, informing him of the event and urging him to return to Yellow Dog.

"Dad" Weston and his daughter Nina are headed for Crooked Creek when Bill, on his way home, meets them, their wagon stuck in the mud. He helps them out, and is instantly smitten with Nina, who is attracted to him. "Dad" is broke, but Nina encourages him, saying there have been some big strikes in Crooked Creek.

Saunders meets Weston just after they have reached Yellow Dog, and while in the saloon talking and drinking, the former asks Weston to work his claim. Weston dislikes working for any one, but finally consents and accepts the money Saunders hands him. Saunders is immediately interested in Nina, suggesting that he might take Weston as partner. Weston encourages Nina to treat Saunders well, and when the man proposes to her, though she fears and loathes him, she accepts, for her father's sake.

Nina and her father are now living in Bill's shack on the claim. Bill returns and rushes into the shack with drawn gun, but, seeing Nina, thinks he must have made a mistake. They invite him to supper, but Weston manages to send Nina on an errand. Bill catches up with her and, encouraged by the girl, proposes to her. Sadly she tells him she has promised to marry another. People think Bill must be afraid of Saunders, for because of Nina, Bill doesn't try to fight with the claim-jumper.

Saunders makes arrangements to sell the mine to an Easterner; the money is being brought by a Wells Fargo man. When Saunders hears this news, he bribes a Mexican to steal Nina for him. Nancy, a dancer at the Yellow Dog Saloon, tells a friend of hers, and is overheard by Bill, who immediately rides toward the claim, meeting the Mexican, who has Nina gagged and tied on a horse. He rescues her, and they hasten to the shack.

The Easterner and his engineer, with Weston and Saunders, await the coming of the Wells Fargo man. He arrives and becomes suspicious of Saunders. He recognizes Saunders' hands, and accuses him of theft. Saunders suddenly fires at the man, killing him, and then, snatching away the bags of money, rides furiously away.

Bill hears of the shooting and rides after Saunders. After a desperate run, both men firing meantime, Saunders jumps on a moving train, Bill after him. They fight on the caboose and Bill throws Saunders off the train. He is killed. With the money Bill returns to the shack, where he tells his story of his claim being jumped. Bill and Nina smile shyly at one another as the picture fades.

UNIVERSALITES ARE ROBBED.

J. MORRIS FOSTER and his wife, who is professionally known as Mignon Anderson, are mourning the loss of their silverware and some jewelry as the result of a burglary at their Hollywood home. These Universalites estimated their loss as approximately $500.

The actor and actress had been invited out to dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Crittenden, also of Universal City, and it was during their absence that marauders broke open the back door and ransacked the house.

"I never saw such a scene of confusion in any stage of my life," said Miss Anderson. "The robbers had pulled out every drawer, tore the beds to pieces and even upturned the rugs in their search. Fortunately we had taken our money and most of our jewelry with us." Miss Anderson is the heroine of the second Butterfly Photoplay, "The Phantom's Secret."

UNUSUAL SCENE WHEN MEMBERS ASSEMBL

Many Expressions of Support for Movement to Abol Capitol—Enactment of Remedi

WHAT is expected to prove the final and decisive blow in Pennsylvania's movement for the abolition of capital punishment was delivered here to-night when the great motion picture preachment, “The People vs. John Doe,” was exhibited in the hall of the House of Representatives before nearly the entire membership of the Senate and House as well as a thousand or more other Senators.

This remarkable spectacle was presented through a special arrangement made by the Public Ledger, which obtained the rights for the purpose by Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, in order to impress in virile and highly dramatic form a concise summarization of some of the strong arguments which have been arrayed against the continuance of this anachronism of the criminal law and in support of the Wells-Hess and Tompkins bills pending before the Legislature.

Recognizing the extreme importance of the subject, Speaker Baldwin, who is one of the earnest opponents of the death penalty, suggested when approached that formal permission for the exhibition of “The People vs. John Doe” be obtained by resolution of the House. This was done at the House last Monday evening, the chamber formally setting aside to-night for the purpose, and entering the action in its proceedings.

SAVING INNOCENT MAN FROM CHAIR.

The picture, which is a faithful film production of the case of Charles Frederick Stielow, whose death sentence was recently commuted by Governor Whitman, of New York, two hours before he was to be executed for a murder he did not commit, was thrown upon a screen in the hall of the House.

Before the picture was shown, Representative Herman L. Hect introduced to the audience Mr. Miller, the deputy warden of Sing Sing prison, who while in charge of the death-house became convinced of Stielow's innocence and inaugurated the investigation which resulted in the governor's action, which followed a confession by one of the two men who actually did commit the crime.

Mr. Miller detailed briefly the facts concerning the murder and manner in which the police, spurred on by offers of a large reward, built up the case against Stielow.

ONLY 10 PER CENT OF INDICTED CONVICTED.

The speaker also took occasion to state that a recent investigation of criminal statistics in New York State developed the fact that only 10 per cent of the indicted murderers in that State are convicted, chiefly because of the existence of the death penalty. As against this record the statistics in Wisconsin, where capital punishment was abolished thirty years ago, 50 per cent of the number of persons indicted for murder are convicted and removed from contact with society.

The audience was obviously gripped as the story of the ignorant farmhand's progress through the law's channels unfolded itself. There was no question that it had a telling effect upon the minds of those legislators who were undecided as to their attitude upon the bills to abolish the death penalty.

It is a remarkable fact that during the hour and fifteen minutes when the picture was being shown hardly a spectator moved.

LEGISLATORS DEEPLY MOVED.

Following are some expressions made in the lobby of the House when the exhibition ended.

State Senator Clarence J. Buckman, chairman of the Appropriation Committee—“I have never seen a picture more interesting or more convincing in its exposure of third degree methods and the fallibility of human judgment.”

Representative James A. Walker, of Philadelphia—“If that picture truthfully portrays a single case, it alone should lead all men to fight for the abolition of capital punishment.”

Representative Byron A. Milner, of Philadelphia—“The picture is a portrayal of what only too frequently occurs in the administration of law. Miscarriages of justice are not rarities as the result of ‘frame-ups’ by detectives. In my own experience as a lawyer I defended one man who was the victim of a chain of circumstances and absolutely innocent of the crime with which he was charged.”

Chief Clerk Thomas H. Garvin, of the House of Representatives—“The picture was the most wonderful thing of its kind I have ever witnessed. It teaches a lesson we should never forget, and that is that human judgment in this matter of life and death is a doubtful quality.”

State Senator Nason, of Erie County, expressed a similar view—“The picture was tremendously impressive,” he said.

CONDEMNS THE THIRD DEGREE.

Representative Lex N. Mitchell, of Jefferson County, declared that he was very deeply impressed by the film. “I am against capital punishment,” he said, “and this picture only confirms my belief. It also exposes another horrible fault in our system of dealing with persons charged with crimes. That is the third degree. I believe it should by law be abolished and a heavy penalty inflicted upon detectives who practice it.”

Representatives Isadore Stern, of Philadelphia—“I was never more antagonistic to capital punishment than I am since seeing the ‘John Doe’ picture. It is the most wonderful motion picture I have ever looked at.”

Representative Isadore Stern, of Philadelphia—“Since I looked at that picture to-night I say that I would rather that 999 guilty men escape punishment than one innocent man suffer unjustly. The picture was a tremendous argument for the bill to abolish capital punishment.”

Representative Leopold C. Glass, of Philadelphia, said—“It is the most convincing reason I have had advanced to me for the bills to abolish the death penalty. I do not believe I have ever seen a motion picture so terrifically real."

Representative Frederick Beyer, chairman of the House Judiciary General Committee, said—"The motion picture that makes life so real as "The People vs. John Doe' makes words useless. It was an immensely effective display."

Representative S. Ramsey S. Black of Harrisburg, said—"Human judgment is not infallible. This picture brings home that fact and nails the worst error society can commit to the cross, where all can see and be convinced."

WELLS-HESS BILL LIKELY TO PASS.

It now seems certain that the Judiciary General Committee of the House of Representatives will report the Wells-Hess bill to abolish capital punishment with the recommendation that the Legislature pass the measure. The committee may act to-morrow and if it does, the bill will reach the final passage stage next week.

An apparently overwhelming sentiment against the death penalty has taken possession of the Legislature, and little doubt is entertained as to the passage, by a big vote, of the bill to abolish legal executions.

In the Senate a majority of the members are ready to vote the electric chair into the museum of antiquities. The bill undoubtedly will be passed by the upper body. Although it has opposition, it is not of a violent quality. Senator McNichol, for instance, expects to vote to retain capital punishment, but it is doubtful if he will do anything more than merely cast his vote.

Senator Vare is absolutely opposed to capital punishment, and is going to vote for the bill abolishing it.

The fight for and against the measure is neither a party nor a factional one.

Representative Frederick Beyer, chairman of the House Judiciary General Committee, made public to-day a number of letters from Judges and District Attorneys, a great many of whom advocate the abolition of capital punishment. One of these was from Judge J. D. Evans, of the Common Pleas Court of Allegheny County, next in line for President Judge of that county. It is in part as follows:

"I have this day received a letter from you, asking my views in regard to the bill proposing the substitution of life imprisonment for capital punishment as the penalty for first degree murder.

"I have no conscientious scruples against capital punishment, but in view of the difficulty in persuading juries to bring in a verdict of murder in the first degree where the accused is clearly guilty of that crime, I am inclined to the belief that an improvement would be made in that respect if imprisonment for life were substituted for the death penalty.

"I am informed that there is a provision in the bill giving to the jury and also to the court the discretion to say whether the punishment should be imprisonment for life or the death penalty. I am decidedly opposed to either one of those provisions. In the first place, I do not believe the jury ought to have anything to do with the sentencing of a prisoner, and I do not believe that there should be any discretion in the court in passing sentence where a man has been convicted of murder in the first degree. I can see no legal distinction in the punishment to be meted out to a man who is guilty of wilful, deliberate, premeditated murder. The result will be that some juries or some judges who have vigorous ideas on the subject of capital punishment will send the accused to the electric chair, while others, having different views upon that subject, and without regard to punishment which ought to be meted out in the individual case, will let the prisoner off with a life sentence.

"J. A. EVANS."

Judge William H. Ruppel, of Somerset County, also placed himself squarely against the retention of capital punishment in a letter to Mr. Beyer.

In part, his letter reads:

"The subject of capital punishment has been one to which I have given a good deal of thought for several years, and I am opposed to the infliction of the death penalty under any circumstances. I do not believe it a wise policy, to begin with; and in the second place, I do not believe the State has authority to take the life of a human being in punishment for crime committed.

"But I think it would be unwise to pass legislation in advance of public sentiment, because there would be great probability of an early repeal of a law of that kind, and therefore, I think for the present the wise thing to do would be to allow the jury to fix the punishment either at life imprisonment, or death, as the circumstances of each case might require.

"This would enable the jury, in very aggravated cases, or in a case where the offense was the second conviction, to impose the death penalty. I do not believe that the general law imposing the death penalty for murder in the first degree tends to lessen crime in the least. I think statistics prove the contrary and show that in States where the death penalty is inflicted, there are more murders committed in States where the punishment is less severe and, as a rule, also more lynchings. W. H. RUPPEL."

JUDGE EVANS FOR ABOLITION.

Judge Charles C. Evans, of Columbia County, also advocates the abolition of capital punishment.

Following is from a letter he has written to Representative Beyer:

"It is more than doubtful whether capital punishment as a penalty for first degree murder is right from any viewpoint. It is nothing more or less than legalized killing. Because of the fact that the penalty for first degree murder is death by electrocution, jurors are perhaps overcautious about returning first degree verdicts, and as a consequence many wicked murderers are allowed to go free altogether. The law should not require any such failure of justice.

"Life imprisonment, without right of the Board of Pardons to interfere, would, in my opinion, be much more desirable than the death penalty.

"The CLOCK"
BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY
by Aaron Hofman
Featuring Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon

COMEDY - DRAMA, written by Aaron Hoffman and adapted for the screen by Maie Havey. Produced by William Worthington, with Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon starred.

HERE is a Bluebird which lives up in all respects to the traditions of "Bluebirds" — the symbol of happiness. This picture, written originally by Aaron Hoffman, whose name means much in the world of letters and the stage, adapted for the screen by Maie Havey and then produced by William Worthington, with his star team in the leads, ran for a week at the Rialto Theatre, on Broadway, and delighted every audience that saw it for the whole seven days. The story is such a good one that it is best simply to give a synopsis of it here, and let it speak for itself.

Jack Tempest is an engaging young fellow, whose motto in life is "Time was made for slaves." He turns night into day from choice, and he has never managed to keep an appointment on time in his life. Vivian, his fiancee, is willing to look upon this trait as an amiable weakness, but her father regards it almost in the light of a criminal record. Daddy is strong for Bob Barrett, an estimable person who positively lives by the clock.

Vivian has sent an imploring message to Jack, asking him to be sure to be on time for golf in the morning, as dad is growing rabid. Jack, arriving home in the small hours, tumbles into bed and sleeps till noon the next day. Then he rushes to the links hours late, and, though he succeeds in pacifying Vivian, her father declares that things have gone too far.

That night Jack makes heroic resolutions to be at the house on time to take Vivian to a dance. He starts in his racer, but the sight of some big fellows tormenting a little one is too much for him. He restores order, but the boys revenge themselves by throwing mud all over his immaculate white waistcoat and shirt-front. Rather crestfallen, he appears in this guise twenty minutes late, and has the pleasure of seeing Barrett escort Vivian to the dance instead of himself.

Several days later, Graham asks Jack to come to the bank for a little serious conversation. There the young chap is informed that his balance is reduced to a few hundred dollars. Jack is nonplussed, as that sum represents the remains of his inheritance, but eagerly assents when the banker proposes that he go to work.

"Come to the house and meet Mr. Morgan, who may give you an opening as his secretary," says Graham.

Jack makes a favorable impression on the wealthy man, and it is settled that he is to sail on the fifteenth for South America with his new employer. The night of the fourteenth Jack is celebrating his friend's last bachelor supper. Barrett is present and makes up his mind that Jack shall miss the boat in the morning. He suggests a ride to the beach and a swim, to which the whole party readily consents. On the shore, one of the men suggests to Jack that he has missed the steamer. Jack makes a dash for it in his automobile, but sees it just pulling out of the dock. He sends a wireless to Morgan, asking him to accept his non-appearance with resignation and Morgan replies that the resignation holds good. He appears before the Grahams, still in his wet clothes, and the old man loses his temper for good, and tells Jack that he is never to show his face there again. Vivian, however, persuades her father to give Jack one more chance. She writes to Jack to come that night, and sends her ring as a reminder. Jack's dog takes the ring to play with, and Jack is late again. Mr. Graham listens to his explanation and offers him a job in the bank. But that night Jack, stopping at a road-house for water for his machine, sees a tough ill-treating a girl. He interferes; a fight ensues, and Jack spends the night in jail. The next morning the papers are full of the affair, and the Graham house, in consequence is absolutely closed to the delinquent.

Jack is in pretty low water, when an unknown uncle leaves him an income of $5,000 a year. He goes to the lawyers to see about the windfall and finds that he is to receive the money on condition that he take care of his uncle's pet clock, wind it every night at exactly ten o'clock, and set the alarm for six every morning. The clock is to stand not more than two feet from his bed. Jack consents with some amusement, and proceeds to try to live up to the peculiar conditions. Many nights he almost misses the proscribed hour, but each time he just manages to make it, though he usually has to commit the unforgivable crime of "quitting winner." He gradually becomes accustomed to waking at six, and also finds it quite possible to rise at the hour. Mr. Morgan returns and when he finds that Jack can keep an appointment at eight o'clock in the morning, he gives the young fellow another chance, and Jack proceeds to make good. His friends cannot imagine what has caused the change, and when he confesses to one of them that the clock is responsible, Barrett determines to test its efficacy by hiring a man to steal it.

Jack is sleeping with his faithful monitor beside him when he hears a noise. He springs up and follows the burglar out onto the porch roof, jumping after him to the ground. The man begs Jack to let him go, and tells him that he will show him who hired him to steal the clock. They go to a saloon where Jack sees Barrett. He bribes Sam, the burglar, to help him in a scheme. The next day he invites Barrett to come to his office for a business talk. When the unsuspecting man arrives, Jack confronts him with the burglar. He starts to bluff and Jack knocks him down.

In the midst of the fracas Mr. Grahom and Vivian arrive. They have come in response to a letter from Morgan, who now appears, and slyly decoys Daddy Graham from the room. Vivian hands Jack a letter from his lawyers saying that he must consult Miss Graham about the disposition of his clock. He is astonished at her knowing about it, but she smiles at him and says, "Silly goose! I'm your uncle!"

Easy to promise anything!

UNIVERSAL VICE-PRESIDENT SEES FIRST BATTLE OF FILM.

ONE of the most interested spectators on Director Stuart Paton's set at Universal City was R. H. Cochrane, first vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who has just returned from a visit to the Pacific Coast studios. Mr. Cochrane spent considerable time watching the filming of the big Universal serial "The Voice on the Wire," featuring Ben Wilson, with Neva Gerber playing opposite.

"I have been in the picture business for ten years," said Mr. Cochrane to Director Paton, "and in all that time I had never seen fight scenes or battles filmed."

"Wait around here for a few minutes," said Paton, "and you'll see 'some fight.'" He did.

Universal Girl, Dora Rodrigues Starts 3000 mile Recruiting Hike

Brave Little Patriot starts for Universal City, Cal., equipped with two reels of "Uncle Sam at Work" to earn her way and to arouse recruiting sentiment and accompanied by her dog.

Dora Rodrigues, the Universal girl.

AIDED by a national-wide campaign of publicity, Dora Rodrigues, "The Universal Girl," Saturday started on a transcontinental recruiting hike. The start was made in front of Loew's New York Theatre, where she has been for the last week recruiting.

Miss Rodrigues wants 40,000 men for the service of her country, and in her hike will stop long enough to speak to those who look like good material for the army or the navy. She will make addresses at the regular recruiting stations in the various states and in addition she will disseminate information and application blanks in the more remote portions, into which her hike will carry her.

During her week in front of the New York Theatre, Dora recruited the following men for the navy: Frank E. Kenney, Irving Freedman, John Edwards, James V. Burns, Charles A. Moffatt, Abe Herman, Henry Pomerance, Walter Sullivan, Monroe Fischer and Fred Packard.

And the following for the army: T. V. Gleason, H. Edwin Wieys, Leo H. Cohn and S. A. Hiyein.

The itinerary of "The Universal Girl" is: New York to Newark, to Princeton, to Trenton, to Philadelphia, to Wilmington, Del., to Baltimore, and then to Annapolis, where she will be entertained at the Naval Academy. After a short stay there she will proceed to Washington, where she will visit the President and the Army and Navy Departments. From Washington she will take a route that will include Cumberland, Pittsburg, Youngstown, Cleveland, Akron, Columbus and will stop for a few days in her native city of Cincinnati.

Leaving Cincinnati, "The Universal Girl" will visit Dayton, Toledo, Detroit, Kalamazoo, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City and finally will arrive at San Francisco.

The entire trip will take about eight months and Miss Rodrigues is certain that her present figure, 40,000 recruits, will be passed when the men who are away from the great brightly lightly centres learn their Uncle Sam is in real need of them.

Miss Rodrigues is a blonde, with sparkling blue eyes and an inerasible smile. She is 5 feet 1½ inches in height, weighs only 112 pounds and walks with a short snappy step at about a four-mile clip on ordinary roads. She is 23 years old and is the daughter of a Cincinnati diamond merchant. She was educated in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Thirty Hour Stretch for First Butterfly Film

"WHEN my mother was at last induced to consent to my going into the 'movies,'" says Ruth Clifford, the featured player of the first Butterfly photoplay "Eternal Love," "the thing which finally won her over was the fact that I should be able to get my beauty sleep every night. Mother is old-fashioned enough to believe that the hours from ten to midnight are the best hours for sleeping, at least for a girl who is still in her teens. I wonder what she would have done if she had known how we were going to work to produce the first Butterfly picture.

"Some delays occurred, and the director was in a great hurry at the end to finish the picture. So one morning we began work at eight, which meant getting to the studio at seven to make up. I stayed in costume and make-up all day, and we worked straight through into three o'clock the following afternoon. Of course, there were short intervals of rest, but you may imagine how absolutely exhausted I was when the final retake was made, and we were allowed to drag our weary limbs home. I was in bed by four o'clock, was called at six for a bite of dinner, went straight to sleep again and stayed in dreamland until noon the next day. Oh! I made up for it in the end, but it gave me the queerest feeling to reverse the hours of day and night like that, and I did not get over it for some days."

The original title of "Eternal Love" was "A Modern Mona Lisa," and Ruth Clifford was selected because she suggests the early Italian type of beauty. But as the picture developed, it was found that the strongest thing in it was the unshakable love of the little Brittany peasant girl, for the young Parisian artist, who invaded her peaceful village, stole her heart, and took it away with him. She sets out to follow him on foot to Paris, thinking that he is hurt. The scenes of her pilgrimage of love, stopping at the peasant cottages to beg for food, sleeping in hay-stacks and in barns, are charmingly managed, and the locations are so carefully chosen that the illusion of the French country-side is cleverly preserved. The first Butterfly photoplay is a picture to be proud of, which sets a high standard for those to come.

WHEN VIOLET WANTED TO VAMP

"THAT'S the kind of a part I love," said Violet Mersereau, as she came off the set long enough to pin up another rip in the disreputable cotton frock she was wearing as "Bonnie," in the Bluebird photoplay "Little Miss Nobody." "There's lots of comedy in it, but there is pathos and emotion as well. It recalls 'The Great Problem,' which was my favorite of all my roles, until 'Bonnie' appeared to take her place. The wild little hoyden has a chance to develop into a real woman—there is something to 'bite on'—not mere 'cutey' tricks. I have no objection whatever to performing tricks, if they are such as a real, live flesh-and-blood girl would do. But some scripts seem to have been written for a circus monkey more than for a human being. They're just one darned trick after another—if you will excuse my mode of expressing myself.

"You know, when I began my picture career, which was a long time ago (Miss Mersereau is almost twenty years old!) I wanted to play nothing by vampires. I saw myself in slinky black things, squirming all over the set, and enslaving men by scores. They were too kind-hearted to tell me that I could never be a vamp, so they said that they thought I might grow to it in time. I used to measure myself every week to see if the time were come. But it never did, and at length I realized that it never would. Of course, I resigned myself and turned to ingenues with a smothered sigh. But just because nature stopped my growth at the size to play ingenues, is no reason why I should be denied the chance to do real women. So that is why I love a part like this. It begins with laughter and ends with a suspicion of tears, and it's true all the way through."

Mr. Carl Laemmle, Pres.,
Universal Film Mfg. Co., Mecca Bldg., New York.

Philadelphia, March 29, 1917.

Dear Sir:—

In reference to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's production "THE PEOPLE VS. JOHN DOE," permit me to state that it is seldom that I have been given an opportunity to witness screened a story that contains so much dramatic power; so much gripping force and so much of that desirable element, "human heart interest," from first to last.

While it is based on crime, it is filmed in such a manner that there is not one moment repulsiveness which so often attends such pictures. It is a splendid entertainment and immense in its drawing qualities. As an argument against capital punishment, there has never been written, spoken or dramatized anything that equals it.

In this connection I would state that the Philadelphia Public Ledger (one of the most influential newspapers) in its propaganda at Harrisburg for the abolition of the death penalty, exhibited this picture to the members of the Senate and Legislature, and I am firmly convinced that this film, more than anything else, caused the Senate to pass the bill which does away with murder under the approval of the law. Surely that is a most convincing argument in favor of what I before said—that this picture is wonderful as an entertainment; great as a provoker of thought; splendid as an educator; and a good box office attraction, and will surely accomplish much for the uplift of the human race and the abolishment of third degree methods by the police force.

Yours respectfully,
STANLEY V. MASTBAUM.

HELD

Two Hundred Prominent Men Chosen for Public Safety Committee

It's the most colossal money-getter for State Rights men and Exhibitors the trade has seen in years. In Portland, Ore., New York City, Chicago, Detroit, Brooklyn and in scores of other cities, crowds have stood hours in line for blocks and blocks. All the conversation in the world and all the salesmanship in creation doesn't mean one thousandth part so much as—the S. R. O. signs put out by the theatres exhibiting that stupendous spectacular drama "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." That's the answer to all questions of its success.

In some towns where managers advertised 2 p. m. matinees, they were actually forced to start as early as 11 a. m. to accommodate the surging multitudes. At the time of the writing of this advertisement 42 out of 48 states have been sold. Six states remain open—Kentucky, Indiana, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. Direct bookings will also be considered in these six states until the territory is sold.

"20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA"

UNIVERSAL CLUB HOLD FIRST "GET - TOGETHER"

AFTER several starts which prompted Raymond Cavanagh, who made up the eats program at the head of this page, to paraphrase the Universal advertising slogan into "The largest bunch of hard-to-get-togethers in the entire universe," the Universal Club has finally started. The temporary officers arranged for the first get-together banquet at Krug & Zinn's on Saturday night, and out of a possible 110 men, 89 braved a young tempest and had the time of their young lives.

In the first place, the dinner was a huge success of gastronomy and economy. In the second place, a Board of Sensers consisting of Hy Mayer, Nat Rothstein, Alexander Foepel, Franz May, Charles Wallack and Carl Laemmle was appointed to pass upon stories, and the lid was off, but the greatest achievement of the evening was the formation of a real Universal Club, which has for its object the solidifying of the Universal organization through greater social intercourse and acquaintance. It is the purpose of the new organization to have a meeting every month, each meeting to be an entirely different sort of experience. A clambake will be held, a boat-ride, a dance, a banquet, and other social activities will be indulged in purely of a frivolous and recreative nature. So many recent bridegrooms are numbered among the members of the Universal Club who, as usual, are anxious to convert all of the few remaining bachelors, that it was determined to have "ladies invited at as many of the meetings as possible."

In furtherance of the "Get-together" and "become-better-acquainted" object Carl Laemmle requested the privilege of meeting every man in the room. There were a number who had not had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Laemmle personally, and the reception which took place was a very pleasing and enjoyable one both to Mr. Laemmle and his employees.

A permanent organization was effected, with officers as follows: Carl Laemmle, president; R. H. Cochrane, vice-president; P. A. Powers, treasurer. A board of governors of seventeen men, with Jack Cohn as chairman, was elected as follows: Jack Cohn, Morris Pivar, Julius Lewis, Nat Rothstein, Paul Gulick, Hal Hodes, Jos. Brandt, Manny Goldstein, Hy Gainsborg, Sam Zierler, Mike Stolzer, Tom O' Neill, P. D. Cochrane, John Ward, George Kahn, C. MacGowan, and Kurt Linn. Morris Pivar was designated as recording and financial secretary, and Claude MacGowan as treasurer of the board of governors.

A committee on by-laws and initiation was appointed, and its report will be made to the board of governors as soon as possible.

Nestor--L-KO--Joker

Three magic names to conjure the nimble nickel and the dodging dime into your box-office——

Three brands of comedy that are distinctly different from each other, and far away ahead of any other brands of funny film on the market.

In the NESTORS you get parlor comedy that is really funny —not merely amusing, but funny. The kind that gets the laughs and brings the people back to see NESTORS.

In the L-KO'S you get broad comedy with all kinds of stunts—some crazy, some foolish—some dangerous—but all of the screamingly hilarious kind that makes people like L-KO comedies.

In the JOKER Brand you get the fresh humor that is all the funnier for being spontaneous. You get good story plots and weird wild flights of an imagination on a bat. The people are crazy about JOKERS.

Three Types of Comedy

You can show one of each for a big wild, hilarious comedy night and make it the most popular entertainment in your town. The three different types of comedy would give as much relief, one from the other, as if you ran a mixed program.

Strengthen Your Program

On the other hand, if you want to bolster up a weak show, or feature, strengthen your program by booking a Universal Comedy. No matter which brand you choose you can't go wrong.

"POTS AND POEMS"

Three striking scenes from the Imp Feature, "Pots and Poems."

IMP Two-Reel Comedy-Drama. Written by Samuel Greiner and produced by Matt Moore, which reveals the secret of how to make poetry pay.

CAST.

Lucas Rymer	Matt Moore
Jane Doolittle	Jane Gail

THE popular idea of a poet pictures him starving to death picturesquely in an attic. Samuel Greiner, the author of this Imp comedy-drama, introduces his poet in this conventional predicament, and then Jane Gail proceeds to extricate him from it. Matt Moore directed the story, which goes like this:

Lucas is a fine poet, full of inspiration, but alack! empty of food. He lives at Mrs. Spudd's boarding-house, where there is a little drudge, called Jane, who adores him in secret. She even steals food for him which she takes up to his attic, when the landlady denies him the privilege of her table, because he cannot pay his rent. At last, she turns the poet out of the house altogether, and in gratitude to the drudge, he gives her his "masterpiece" as he leaves for good. Jane is nearly broken-hearted.

Jane sees an ad for a prize poem for Bunkum's Potted Meat, for which $1,000 is offered. She finds that with a slight alteration Lucas' masterpiece will just fit the case. She sends it in, with her address. At Bunkum's the poem is acclaimed as prize winner, and Jane is sent for. They offer her the position of ad writer at $100 per week. She is to sit down immediately and write another poem for that day's ad. She wracks her brains, but can think of nothing, and she tells them that she will return the next day.

The next morning, she has not put in an appearance, and the editor is nearly crazy for he is holding the paper for the Bunkum ad. Bunkum's offices are in an uproar, while Jane is furiously studying "How to be a Poet. By A. Barber. For Ten Cents." She finds it impossible to repeat her success, and they are frantic.

In the meantime, Lucas has recognized his masterpiece in the paper as Bunkum's ad. He rushes to their office to complain of the theft of his poem. Jane sees him, and tells him that there is a hundred a week in it for him. She explains, and Lucas sits down and writes another masterpiece as wonderful as the first. Bunkum's entire force is delighted with him. Jane says, "Well, I guess this is no place for me." Jane goes home to Mrs. Spudd, finds the door locked, and sits down on the steps. Lucas comes after her, gives her half the money, and they are both happy.

"TRUE TO THEIR COLORS"

BIG U DRAMA in Two Reels, with Grace Cunard in the lead.

RICHARD HALEY, a little son of the South, fell one day and cut a deep gash on his forehead, which the doctor declared would leave a scar for life. His mother was much upset by the mischance, for she adored her son. Richard loved one of the old slaves, and when he saw him being beaten by the brutal overseer, he resolved to run away to the North, where the black people were not ill-treated. He got into his boat, and drifted all night down the stream. In the morning the boat was pulled ashore by some Northern fisherfolk, who brought up the little boy as their own.

As soon as he reached manhood, Richard enlisted in the Northern army, for the Civil War had broken out. His mother, who had never failed to put a light in the window hoping for the return of her son, sent the boy's father off to war, begging him to look out for the lost boy, whom he would know by the scar on his forehead. Her husband was killed almost at once, and she heard the sad truth from a party of officers who visited her house. Almost crazed by the news, she sat every night with a loaded gun, before the window in which the light was always burning.

Richard is sent to reconnoiter in the neighborhood of his old home. Cautiously approaching the house, he is shot from the window by his mother, who takes him for a spy. His body is recognized by the old slave whom he had loved, but the mother never knew that her watch was ended, and continued, even after the coming of peace, to place a light every night in the window.

Two scenes from the series of surprises.

"A MIDNIGHT MYSTERY"

IMP Two-Reel Drama. Story by Clarissa Mackie. Scenario by A. W. Coldeway. Produced by William V. Mong. The tale of strange happenings in a museum of antiques.

CAST.

Simon Dudsbury	Thomas Jefferson
Elsie Wheaton	Betty Schade
Dickson Fay	Charles Perley
Hatch	Harry Holden
Dr. Adams	E. P. Evers
Mrs. Weed	Mrs. Hernandez

MOTION picture fans enjoy a mystery above all else, and this Imp two-reel drama, written by Clarissa Mackie, adapted for the screen by A. W. Coldeway, and produced by William V. Mong, is a first-class mystery. Simon Dudsbury falls dead on his own garden steps, but his niece suspects foul play and enlists the aid of the reporter sent on the case. Then events take us to a museum of antiquities, the celebrated collection of Dudsbury, and then it is just one surprise after the other.

Simon Dudsbury is found dead on the veranda of his home by his butler, Hatch. Dickson Fay, a newspaper reporter, answers the butler's call for help and together they carry the body into the house. Dr. Adams, Dudsbury's physician, is sent for and attributes the death to heart-failure. When the undertaker arrives, the corpse is taken to Dudsbury's bedroom and Dr. Adams descends to the library.

The reporter is just leaving the room, when he distinctly hears a woman's voice urging him to remain, as she fears that her uncle has been murdered. Fay then asks Adams to give him some facts for the newspaper, and the doctor begins to tell about Dudsbury and his wonderful collection of antiques.

Elsie Wheaton, Dudsbury's niece, has hastened home and arrived that day, the housekeeper, Mrs. Weed, being the only one who knows of her coming. It is she who asks Fay to remain. The doctor thinks she is still in Europe.

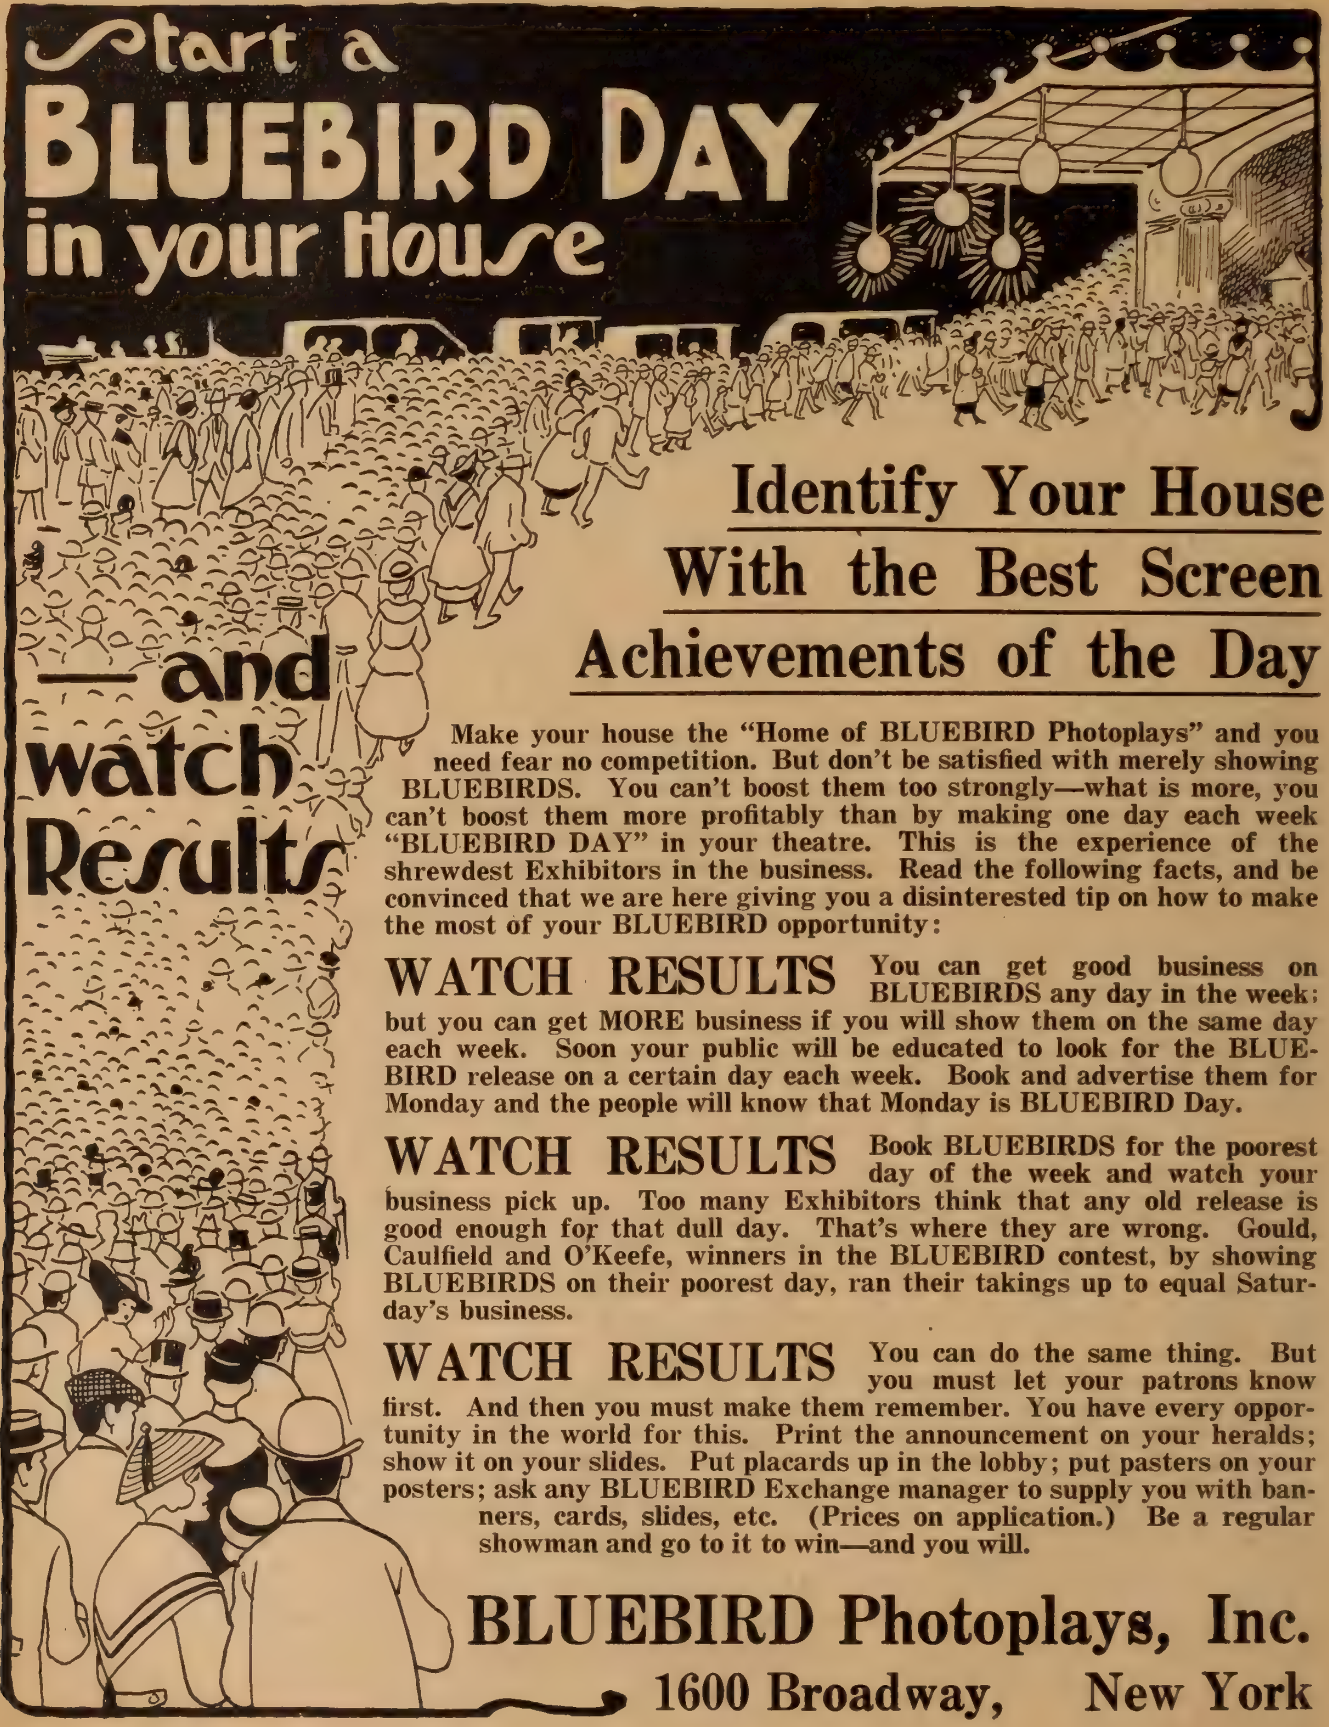
When Hatch goes to the bedroom he is horrified to find neither the undertaker nor the body. They have completely disappeared, and though he, Adams and Fay search the house, there is no sign of them. As Fay and Adams enter the musuem to look about, the doctor quickly goes out and locks the door, thus holding the reporter a prisoner.

Elsie is terrified by the sight of her uncle who passes by her without speaking. There is blood on the side of his head. She thinks she has been the victim of an hallucination. She hears the hammering of Fay against the museum door and hastily opens it, but faints upon seeing Fay.

Adams and Hatch continue to search for Dudsbury and the undertaker but, unsuccessful, they return to the museum. Fay and Elsie hear their approach and hide behind a mummy case. When the two men cannot find the reporter, they begin to look behind the large objects and soon come to the mummy case. They try to pull the door open and as it gives with a jerk, Fay and Elsie are thrown back, causing them to fall through a trap-door and disappear. Adams tells Hatch, the butler, that they will take anything valuable they can carry and make a get-away.

Fay and Elsie land in a room where they confront Dudsbury and the undertaker, who sits in a chair, tied hand and foot. Dudsbury then relates to them his story. Becoming suspicious of Dr. Adams, he began to watch him. Finally he saw the man drop some powders in a glass of wine, and although Dudsbury merely touched the liquor to his lips, he fell as he was entering the house and regained consciousness only to find the undertaker working over him. They grappled, but Dudsbury at last forced him to enter the secret room, and fearing that he was an accomplice of Adams, tied him securely in the chair.

Hearing a noise in the museum, Fay and Dudsbury discover Adams and Hatch as they are loading themselves with priceless antiques. At the sight of Dudsbury, Dr. Adams recoils in horror. Hatch is afraid to look his master in the face. When the policemen arrive, Dudsbury tells them to watch Adams carefully, and pays the undertaker and the police a large amount of money to keep the affair quiet. So the mystery is solved.



Identify Your House With the Best Screen Achievements of the Day

Make your house the "Home of BLUEBIRD Photoplays" and you need fear no competition. But don't be satisfied with merely showing BLUEBIRDS. You can't boost them too strongly—what is more, you can't boost them more profitably than by making one day each week "BLUEBIRD DAY" in your theatre. This is the experience of the shrewdest Exhibitors in the business. Read the following facts, and be convinced that we are here giving you a disinterested tip on how to make the most of your BLUEBIRD opportunity:

WATCH RESULTS You can get good business on BLUEBIRDS any day in the week; but you can get MORE business if you will show them on the same day each week. Soon your public will be educated to look for the BLUEBIRD release on a certain day each week. Book and advertise them for Monday and the people will know that Monday is BLUEBIRD Day.

WATCH RESULTS Book BLUEBIRDS for the poorest day of the week and watch your business pick up. Too many Exhibitors think that any old release is good enough for that dull day. That's where they are wrong. Gould, Caulfield and O'Keefe, winners in the BLUEBIRD contest, by showing BLUEBIRDS on their poorest day, ran their takings up to equal Saturday's business.

WATCH RESULTS You can do the same thing. But you must let your patrons know first. And then you must make them remember. You have every opportunity in the world for this. Print the announcement on your heralds; show it on your slides. Put placards up in the lobby; put pasters on your posters; ask any BLUEBIRD Exchange manager to supply you with banners, cards, slides, etc. (Prices on application.) Be a regular showman and go to it to win—and you will.

By J. W. CAMBRIDGE.

TORONTO, Ont.—W. A. Bach, who originated the Publicity Service Department of the Universal Film Co. in Canada has resigned to take an important position with M. H. Hoffman in a new film enterprise with headquarters at New York. Mr. Bach was the originator and managing editor of the Motion Picture Bulletin, which grew from a single sheet house organ to be the only trade journal for the motion picture business in Canada.

Just before Mr. Bach left for New York his fellow employees at the Universal, presented him with a beautiful gold watch in token of their esteem and regard and wished him the best of luck in his new position. J. W. Cambridge has been appointed to succeed Mr. Bach in the Publicity Service Department of the Canadian Universal Film Co. It started April 16th. The Motion Picture Bulletin will be continued as heretofore under Mr. Cambridge's guidance, and he will also step into Mr. Bach's shoes as Canadian correspondent of the Moving Picture Weekly.

It is rumored that the Temple Theatre, a large vaudeville house, and Savoy Theatre, a large burlesque house at Hamilton, Ont., are going to put in moving pictures for the summer months and will run big features.

Shea's Theatre, one of the largest vaudeville houses in Toronto, reports that serials go big with their patrons, their houses being sold out for the next two weeks.

An announcement which will be of considerable interest to exchangemen is that the Arena, a large skating rink is to be continued open all summer and will have moving pictures and select dancing every night. The idea is to run a picture, then a few dances, another picture and dances, and so on. The dances will be continued all the time the pictures are running. They are going to feature L-Ko Komedies.

The Universal Co. reports that the special feature "Idles Wives," is running at the Columbia Theatre, Winnipeg, and Savoy Theatre, Hamilton, for an entire week.

Then he invites Foley, who is a manager of vaudeville acts, and has no place to rehearse a song and dance number, to use his flat. They dance till the ceiling comes down on the landlord's head, and he tears up the lease. Peter leaves, but the police, summoned by the landlord, arrest Foley as Peter, and the story gets into the papers. Mrs. Duffer reads it, and thinks she now knows why Peter urged her to leave home. BLUEBIRD IDEAS for "THE CLOCK"

THE title of the latest Bluebird production, "The Clock," is in itself sufficient to bring a flood of ideas to the mind of every exhibitor booking it.

Naturally a clock should figure importantly in every bit of advertising gotten out. For instance, you might get in touch with a local furniture man and arrange to present a clock to the person who obtains the lucky number on the day you show this feature. This plan can be worked out as follows:

After purchasing the clock from the furniture dealer, arrange to have it shown in his window for several day before the presentation of the Bluebird production. Announce that every person entering the theatre to see "The Clock" would receive a coupon, a duplicate of which would be retained by the management of the house. A drawing should then be held at a time most convenient and the clock presented to the lucky winner.

Practically every storekeeper owns a Seth Thomas clock, or one of the Western Union timekeepers. Have a card, announcing the showing of "The Clock" at your theatre printed up and then arrange to tack these cards directly under the clocks in the merchants' stores. Free passes will enable you to obtain the consent of the storekeepers.

In arranging a lobby display, see that a gigantic clock figures in it. It is a simple and inexpensive matter to make one, using a soft wire for the outer circle and cardboard for the numerals and hands. The latter might be made out of wood for that matter. The hands should point to whatever hour the next show starts, while the face of the clock should be big enough to permit of a few words of advertising matter.

A novel idea for a float would be to construct a big clock, or you might paint one on a six-sheet board, and place it on a float. Across the face of the clock letters in the words: "Time to see 'The Clock' at the (name of theatre)."

Don't forget that the story of "The Clock," is one that every man, woman and child should see. It is wholesome and uplifting in tone. Therefore bend every effort to appeal to the parents in your community and to all organizations which stands for community welfare.

Mr. Exhibitor—Have the following copy multigraphed on postals and mail to the names on your mailing list. If your community is too small to boast of a multigraphing concern, get in touch with your Bluebird exchange. The publicity man of that office will be delighted to help you out.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, Inc.

Dear Friends — An old-fashioned clock that Jack Tempest's "Uncle" presented to him, revolutionized his mode of living—and made a man out of an idler and spendthrift.

There's a moral that is going to strike home in this story the wonderful Bluebird photoplay to be shown at the (name of house here) on (day and date here).

"THE CLOCK"

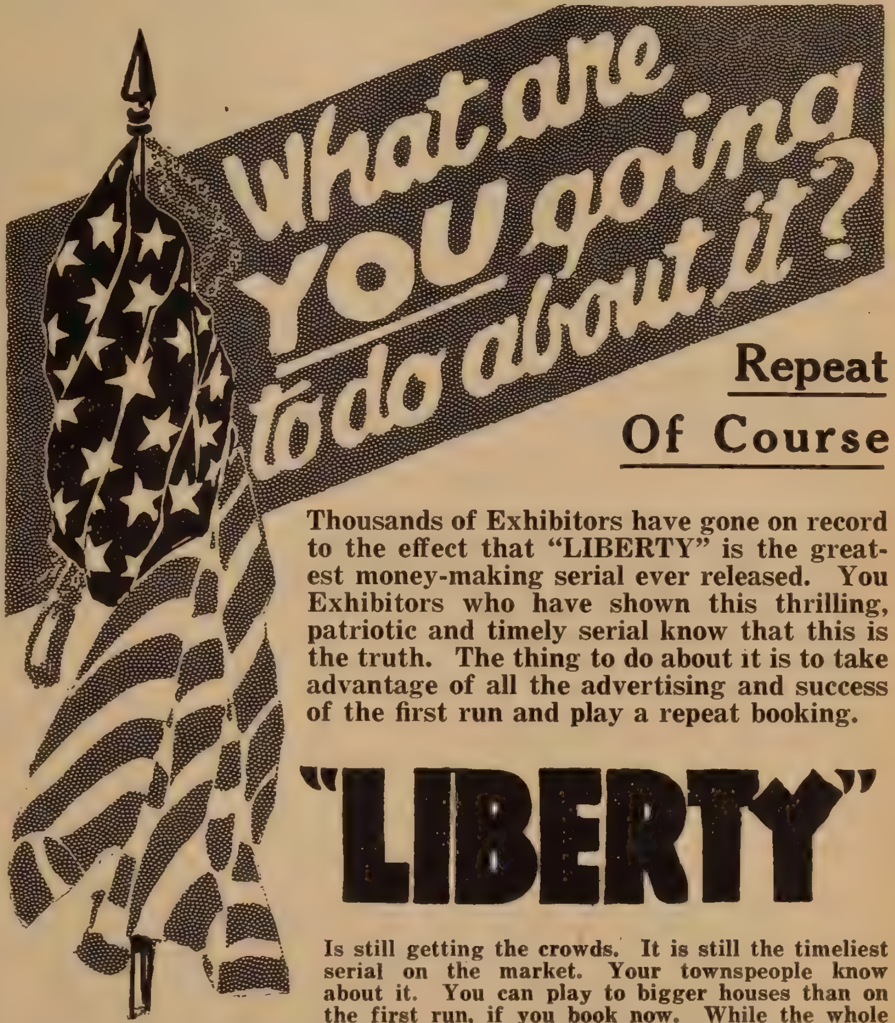
Perhaps you've some one near and dear to you who would be benefitted by the experience Jack Tempest went through. If you have, take him—or her. It's one of the cleanest and most inspiring pictures you've ever seen.

THE MANAGEMENT.



What are YOU going to do about it?

Repeat

Of Course

Thousands of Exhibitors have gone on record to the effect that "LIBERTY" is the greatest money-making serial ever released. You Exhibitors who have shown this thrilling, patriotic and timely serial know that this is the truth. The thing to do about it is to take advantage of all the advertising and success of the first run and play a repeat booking.

"LIBERTY"

Is still getting the crowds. It is still the timeliest serial on the market. Your townspeople know about it. You can play to bigger houses than on the first run, if you book now. While the whole country is aflame with patriotism—jump in and take advantage of the fact that this is the kind of serial the people want to see. Write your nearest Universal Exchange today and get full particulars on a repeat booking. There is good money in this for you.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

MAY seventh marks the inaugurationof a new brand of features called by the alluring name of "Butterfly Pictures." The first release is a charming story of the love of a Brittany peasant girl for a Paris artist, and is called "Eternal Love." The name of the new brand lends itself unusually well to advertising, and to lobby decoration. Anybody who can handle a pencil can draw you a big butterfly, and a flight of paper ones would look charming in your lobby. Put a big, bright-colored one under the glass at the cashier's window, where every one who buys a ticket will see it. Have "Butterfly Pictures" under it. You can have some small ones printed with an announcement of the new brand and its first release "Eternal Love" on the other side and pass them out. Slides with butterflies on them can be run at the beginning and end of the program. You can get up a contest for the best drawn butterfly in the schools, if you get the co-operation of the teachers, with passes as prizes. You might institute a poster competition, for butterfly designs, in the High School, and have an exhibition of the results in the lobby, with a pass good for several months as first prize. This would give you a beautiful lobby decoration, in which the whole town would be interested, and the principal of the school will surely be glad to institute the competition.

"TOM'S TRAMPING TROUPE."

L-Ko Komedy.

PARODIES and burlesques are among the most certain laugh-getters in the business, and on Wednesday, May 9th, the L-Ko Komedians give a very funny parody of the immortal "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in which Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton are the bright particular stars. A parade of the well-known characters, Uncle Tom, Simon Legree, Little Eva, Eliza, Topsy, and last but not least the bloodhounds would be a wonderful ad for the picture. But if the trouble is too great, play that certain bet, a trained dog, as an advance notice and patronage getter. Have a colored man lead through the streets two of the meekest and best behaved dogs you can find. It does not matter of what breed they are, but they should look as little awe-inspiring as possible. Have him lead them in heavy leashes, and on their backs suspended like saddle-bags have announcements which inform the public that these are the dangerous and untamed bloodhounds, used in "Tom's Tramping Troupe," the L-Ko version of the famous play, now showing at your theatre.

"THE LOST APPETITE."

Nestor Comedy.

THE Nestors may be depended upon to put everything of current interest into a comedy, and their latest thousand feet of laughs is a particularly timely affair released on May 7th, called "The Lost Appetite," and based upon the subject of the high cost of living, especially the high cost of the humble tuber. This suggests that you might repeat the stunt that so many exhibitors have found profitable—a potato day—for the benefit of a local charity, when every child who brings a certain stated number of potatoes is admitted either free, or at half price to the show. Have big bushel baskets prominently displayed to hold the contributions, and draw attention to your potato day by means of slides, posters and announcements several days before.

SCREEN MAGAZINE'S SWIMMING LESSON.

THE SCREEN MAGAZINE, Issue No. 18, released May 11, contains a number which should be seen by every parent and child in your town. This is a wonderfully demonstrated swimming lesson for children, posed by Commodore Brown, and giving simple instructions in the art of natation by which even a small child may benefit. If it is warm enough for you to have a little one in swimming costume posing on a pedestal, and going through the motions of swimming and diving, you could not have a more effective lobby display. Let the schools know that this lesson in the art which might save thousands of lives every year, which every child should learn for his own and others' protection, is being given at your theatre.

LOIS WEBER'S

Powerful Production

"EVEN AS YOU AND I"

A Drama of Souls at Bay

State Rights men who understand the financial successes of former LOIS WEBER productions will not need any further sales talk to buy in for State Rights territory on this latest LOIS WEBER Picture—"EVEN AS YOU AND I."

With such huge successes as "WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN?"—"IDLE WIVES"—"SHOES"—HYPOCRITES" and many others—LOIS WEBER has set a mark never equalled for financial rewards to State Rights Buyers and all Exhibitors.

S. L. Rothapfel, the shrewdest exhibitor in America, chose "EVEN AS YOU AND I" for a week's run at the Rialto (New York's finest Picture Theatre), without even having seen the production. After he saw it on the screen he confirmed his judgment by spoken words of appreciation.

S. L. Rothapfel is the kind of a showman who "must be shown." He takes nothing for granted, therefore in his choice of this great production, without even having seen it, he paid it a compliment rarely if ever enjoyed by any other production.

Pictureized in seven masterful reels and lavishly invested—it sets a higher standard of feature photo achievement.

THE MIGHTY
UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

THOUSANDS of Exhibitors testify to the excellence of the Universal Program Service by continuing its use in the face of the fiercest competition the industry has ever known. The Universal Program has rescued hundreds of Exhibitors from financial slavery—due to a mistaken notion that features at any price would get the crowds and the money. The people have registered their dislike of features by patronizing the program where they can enter the theatre at any time and not have to look at the show backwards. You can profit by the experience of these successful Exhibitors by hooking up with the Universal Program Service.

The Ever Successful UNIVERSAL'S Most Popular Mystery Serial

"The VOICE on the WIRE"

with Ben Wilson-Neva Gerber-Joe Girard

THIS latest Universal serial has been called by the public, by Exchange men and by Exhibitors the best serial the Universal has ever released. That is high praise, because the Universal has put out the biggest serial successes in the history of that popular form of entertainment.

"The Voice on the Wire" is founded on the famous novel of the same name, which was written by Eustace Hale Ball, who novelized that great success, "Traffic in Souls," and many others. It has to do with a series of mysterious events, each of which is preceded by a weird warning coming from a ghostly "voice on the wire" over a disconnected telephone. Ben Wilson, the popular Universal star, plays John Shirley, who in opposition to the Chief of Detectives, attempts to solve the mystery. His leading woman is beautiful Neva Gerber, and they are assisted by Joseph Girard and a huge and brilliant company. With each episode the mystery grows under the capable direction of Stuart Paton, who directed that masterly under sea drama, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

Book "The Voice on the Wire" and boost it hard before showing the first episode. After that you will have no difficulty in keeping your house packed on each episode night. Write your nearest Universal Exchange for full particulars, ad props, etc., or address—

“The Perils of the Secret Service”

KINGSLEY BENEDICT

In a Great Series of Seven Powerful Dramas EACH COMPLETE IN ITSELF

ALWAYS first to consider the real needs of every class of Exhibitor, the Universal has prepared a distinct novelty release for those theatre managers who do not care to run a serial, but who realize the desirability of a form of entertainment that will bring continuous business. This consists of seven powerful two-reel dramas, built around a central character, but EACH A COMPLETE STORY IN ITSELF.

The series is founded on the popular “Yorke Norroy” stories by George Bronson Howard, which were published in a popular fiction magazine of tremendous circulation a short time ago. Mr. Howard, who wrote the literary sensation, “God’s Man,” and who is a playwright, novelist and globe trotter of note, directed the entire series, and has shown the inner workings of the Secret Service in these perilous times in a manner to insure your patrons seeing every episode after seeing the first. That’s the idea on which you can cash in. The leading character is played by Kingsley Benedict, supported by a different woman star in each drama. Millions of people have read the stories and now eagerly await this powerful picturization. Get full particulars from your nearest Universal Exchange, or from the Home Office.

Speak Up--Don't Be Afraid

TELL us—so that we can tell every other Exhibitor. You can bet your sweet life that your Brother Exhibitors are "just dying" to know what to do when they get stuck on a rainy day with a costly feature. If you have spent for advertising for the day—spent for posters, cards, secured publicity and have done everything else possible to boost for a capacity house at each performance for the day—and then it rains, how do you pull yourself out of the hole on that costly feature?

Have You Ever Tried to Study Out a Remedy?

Maybe you have. Maybe you haven't. That's why we are driving home to thousands of Exhibitors all over this country the tremendous value of REPEAT BOOKINGS—or two, three, or four days' runs instead of one day runs. If you've been stuck before (and no doubt you have)—if you've lost your advertising money—poster money—if you've lost the value of your publicity on your costly feature—TWO, THREE, FOUR day or——getting every penny's worth of value out of all the advertising you do on your costly features. Means getting full value out of every poster, card, banner, and greatest of all GETTING FULL VALUE OUT OF THE UNPURCHASEABLE MOUTH TO MOUTH ADVERTISING that sends back packed houses. The people who leave your house satisfied and delighted with your feature, do MORE good and send back more people to your house than ALL the advertising you do. GET THAT FACT PLANTED AND LET IT GROW IN YOUR MIND.

Repeat Bookings Mean

—a chance for your entire patronage to view the feature you are showing. As it stands today, on the daily change basis, you spend your advertising money for one day, play to one day's run, and thousands who want to see the picture can't see it because "It's here today and gone tomorrow." Thus you disappoint hundreds, perhaps thousands, of people who pass your house for another house where they can see what they want, or what they couldn't see at your house. Thus you are playing to a "hit or miss" audience who are being chased so fast as to be rapidly heading to Feature indigestion.

Repeat Bookings Mean

—that instead of paying top price for a new feature every day, paying full price for advertising, forcing yourself to secure new publicity in each new feature daily—you first—get the benefit of a sliding scale of booking rentals—you pocket the cash difference between the full price of the daily change and the sliding scale on the repeat bookings—your advertising hits with full force, your publicity gets over because of the continuity of its appearance—you play to capacity houses made so by the direct and unpurchaseable mouth to mouth advertising, you purchase fewer posters and other props, now required by the daily change, and you give ALL of your people the opportunity to see the good productions. Thus, you are money ahead, patrons satisfied—and are building for performance.

IN ONE HOUSE

—for example, in Canada, a BLUEBIRD play—"SHOES" played to bigger houses on its repeat performance than ANY time before, which proved the tremendous value of the play itself as an advertising power to bring crowds. And likewise will every single BLUEBIRD to date, play as big and bigger houses on REPEAT than originally because thousands who have heard BLUEBIRDS spoken of, talked about, boosted and recommended will be eager and anxious to see EVERY BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY. This Canadian House drew capacity houses and made a hit besides—

YOU CAN DO THE SAME

If you doubt it—TRY IT and see. Begin with the first BLUEBIRD released, right back at the very start. Play every BLUEBIRD right down the line from the first to the present release. Your nearest BLUEBIRD xchange will give you full facts and figures. BEGIN NOW—watch your expenses diminish and your profits triple.

4 BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS

The Subjects the Public Demands

Stamped with the success brand of BLUEBIRD—the four patriotic pictures here described are the last word in that peculiar form of military picture which the public is demanding today. Each is a masterpiece of its kind. "The Eagle's Wings" is as far ahead of the average jingo, sham battle and studio "war" picture as it is possible to imagine.

It received the heartiest endorsement of the highest officials in Washington, D. C., when shown them at a private view. It has received through their National President from 1,500 Chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution a pledge to give it their strongest support wherever shown. Here is a ready-made opportunity for you—and strong local co-operation. Write your nearest BLUEBIRD Exchange for particulars.

"The Bugler of Algiers" is one of the most notable pictures ever filmed, regardless of subject. It is from that intensely absorbing story by Robert H. Davis and Perley Poore Sheehan, called "We Are French." It reaches the greatest heights of heroic patriotism, and will thrill and sway any audience that ever attended a theatre. Book this and you will want to play a return date.

"Behind the Lines," featuring Harry Carey and Edith Johnson, is a timely picture of Mexican intrigue, love, adventure and of actual conditions along the Mexican Border. It is thrilling; abounds in the truest atmosphere, faithful in every detail; it will make a hit in any community. It will go over big. Splendid paper and heralds on all these productions to help you put them over.

"Treason" is a tremendous picture that for real heart-interest; for tense scenes that will stir the emotions to their depths; for convincing and faithful pictures of modern warfare—will perhaps never be surpassed. Featuring that brilliant young BLUEBIRD star, Allen Holubar; beautiful Lois Wilson and stalwart Jos. Girard, it presents a story that will get the sympathy of the audience at the very start and hold it to the finish. A true lesson in patriotism and a brilliantly executed production throughout.

Now is the time for you to get in touch with your nearest BLUEBIRD Exchange and get the full particulars regarding these big box-office attractions. NOW—before you competitor beats you to it. With these booked in advance you can get all kinds of co-operation from local military and patriotic organizations, Boy Scouts, etc.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

"Eternal Love." With Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Clifford. From the story by E. M. Ingleton. First Butterfly Picture. Directed by Douglas Gerrard. Released May 7. For months the beautiful Butterfly Pictures—"the newest in the field"—have been hovering over a waiting world, though unannounced, and anticipated only by their producers. Everything that the greatest resources and facilities in the moving picture world could suggest to make Butterfly Pictures perfect moving picture entertainment has been done. Time has been used as lavishly as money. Hundreds upon hundreds of stories have been read in the search for scenario plots worthy of the high standard set for Butterfly Pictures. It is with pride that the first release—"Eternal Love"—is presented. It is one of the most beautiful romantic dramas ever filmed. It will establish the reputation of Butterfly Pictures in your house. Prepare to boost every Butterfly—because they are going to be the talk of your town. You will want to read the story of "Eternal Love." You will find it beautifully illustrated in next week's Moving Picture Weekly. Watch for it and read it. You will enjoy it.

"The Grip of Love." With Allen Holubar and Louise Lovely. Three Reel Gold Seal Heart Interest Mountain Drama. Directed by Allen Holubar. Released May 8. Think of that, you star worshippers. Two of the brightest in the film firmament on the regular Universal Program. There's quality for you. And a big story with the heart punch that gets the crowds. Allen, in the mountains for his health, meets Louise, there to teach school. Both are strangers to the settlers, and while Louise unintentionally attracts the attention of the village bully, Allen is suspected of being a revenue officer. The bully is mysteriously shot, and Allen is not only suspected, but is taken to the woods, where a rope around his neck is about to cut his life story short, when the most startling climax not only serves to save his life, but to bring to a most logical conclusion one of the most powerful three-reelers we have seen in many a long day. Book this and boost hard.

"The Girl in the Garret." With Jack Nelson and Molly Malone. Two Reel Imp Smiles and Tears Drama. Directed by George Cochrane. Released May 11. Molly's father had every reason in the world to think Molly about the sweetest thing on earth, and that she was entitled to the best there is. He was a well-to-do rancher, and sent her to a distant city relative to acquire education and "finish." He sent a check for $3,000 for "expenses," which milady spent for her own and daughter's finery, while Molly was treated as a servant. A warm-hearted Irish housekeeper wrote the old man the facts, but before he could arrive to take Molly away, she had taken a position as companion. Secretly, Molly had fallen in love with the portrait of her cousin's "beau," and when he came home from a journey and discovered the little maid installed as his mothers' companion—well, what would you have done? You bet! That's just what Jack did, too, to the delight of every fan in the country.

"One Wild Night." With Gypsy Hart and Kingsley Benedict. Two Reel 101-Bison Western and Society Drama. Directed by Henry McRae. The cast, gentlemen, also includes five of the world's greatest cowboy actors. Not actor cowboys—because there is a big difference. Reggie (Kingsley) wanted Gypsy's money. Gypsy thought Reggie a joke. She had been used to real men. One day, while driving a spanking team, she saw five forlorn cowboys sitting on a park bench. They had been east with a bunch of horses, had blown their money and were tramping home. Gypsy pretended that her team was running away, and when the bunch "saved" her life she knew they were the real thing. Then for their entertainment she introduces them to her swell friends at a reception. Is it "One Wild Night?" It is. Book it and see.

"The Super Serial"

IMPRESSED by the initial showing of the Universal's latest and greatest serial, "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE," the bookers of the big Marcus Loew Theatre Circuit booked it for every house on the list. This magnificent serial opened in the big Broadway and Brooklyn houses of the circuit to tremendous houses. The deep, mysterious plot captured the first episode audience, and the following episodes showed record attendance. As one of the world's most successful moving picture exhibitors, Marcus Loew's example is eagerly followed. In the Eastern section bookings on this great serial are record-breakers.

"The VOICE on the WIRE"

BEN WILSON and NEVA GERBER

The leads are played by Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, two of the most popular Universal stars. There is great scope for their pleasing personalities of which they make the most. The plot has to do with a series of mysterious events, each of which is preceded by a ghostly warning given by a weird "voice on the wire." A strange muffled figure and a dismembered hand serve to intensify the mystery, and in the character of John Shirley, professional investigator, Ben Wilson attempts to locate the owner of the "voice."

WRITTEN BY EUSTACE HALE BALL—The fascinating story is from the celebrated novel of the same name written by Eustace Hale Ball, photoplaywright and author of note, who novelized among other huge successes, "Traffic in Souls." The lavishly produced picturization is eagerly enjoyed by the multitudes who read the book.

DIRECTED BY STUART PATON—The superb direction of "The Voice on the Wire" comes from the master mind of Stuart Paton, who produced the Universal's stupendous spectacular drama, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." It has the peculiar quality of thrills and punches in each episode, and suspended action at the end which brings the crowds back week after week. Exhibitors who are booking for a sure fire serial photoplay that will insure them capacity houses for fifteen straight weeks, should communicate immediately with their nearest Universal Exchange, or with the Home Office at the address given above.

UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO.,

"The Super Series"

In the matter of providing good moving picture entertainment there is no problem that is not met by the productions of the Universal. This is because the Universal has always realized that its own success depended upon that of the theatre managers and owners throughout the world. Thus, in the powerful dramatic series, "The Perils of the Secret Service," those Exhibitors who do not care to run serials have the opportunity of showing seven subjects, each complete in itself, but with the same central character throughout, thus assuring that continuity of interest that is so profitable.

"The Perils of the Secret Service"

7 Powerful Two Reel Dramas

Each Complete in Itself

Every moving picture patron who sees one of these fascinating dramatic stories on the screen will want to see all the rest that are to follow. There is mystery, suspense, punch, pep and lots of swift action. There is a different leading woman in each story, but the principal male role is in the hands of the same star, playing the same character throughout the series.

The handsome presence, pleasing personality and vigorous acting of Kingsley Benedict are well fitted for the part of "Yorke Norroy, Diplomatic Agent." His surprising adventures serve to show the inner workings of Secret Service methods, and the intrepidity and resourcefulness required of its operatives.

WRITTEN BY GEORGE BRONSON HOWARD The series is based on the stories by the distinguished author, George Bronson Howard, who wrote the literary sensation, "God's Man." They were enthusiastically appreciated by millions who read them in a popular fiction magazine, and these readers will view the picturization with growing interest.

DIRECTED BY MR. HOWARD—Mr. Howard himself directed this remarkable series. It has all the vigor and originality of the published stories, with swift action and rousing climaxes. Wire or write your nearest Home Office.

Give Me Liberty and Do It Quick!

(No. 176. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

ONE of the greatest evils of the picture business is the fact that exhibitors have formed the habit of booking nothing but pictures they have never shown before.

Get away far enough from your business to get a good perspective and you will see that this is the rankest kind of folly.

The word "repeater" is a terrible word in this business, simply because the exhibitor is in the habit of thinking of a "repeater" as something dead and gone.

This is not true of the exhibitor who really THINKS for himself and books his shows according to the times and NOT according to release dates.

Take, for example, the Universal's remarkable serial, "Liberty." It would be simply impossible to book a more timely serial than this. The subject of liberty is hot in the minds of the millions nowadays, because practically the whole world is warring for it! The very word itself means infinitely more today than it did before we declared the United States to be in a state of war with Germany.

If our serial "Liberty" were an unknown quantity, it would be quite a different story—but it is a demonstrated success—a whirlwind success—a corking good serial which never lets up in interest for even a single episode. When you can say this for a serial, you have said volumes.

Now, on top of that comes the fact that it is remarkably TIMELY. Every THINKING exhibitor knows that a timely picture (even a poor one) cleans up money for the man who shows it. If a poor one will do it, what will a rattling good one do?

No matter whether you have ever shown "Liberty" or not, book it. Repeat on it for all you are worth, and you will clean up as sure as fate. Hundreds of exhibitors are repeating it and hundreds more will do so. This is proof that they do some INDEPENDENT THINKING and refuse to let the word "repeater" scare them to death as though it were a wild-eyed bogie.

Go to the nearest Universal exchange man and say: "I want LIBERTY. I demand LIBERTY. I need LIBERTY in my business. I'll pay for LIBERTY and I'll fight for LIBERTY."

Mignon Anderson
Hayward Mack &

"ONE WILD NIGHT"

Rose "rescued" by the cowboys.

The greatest surprise of this Wild Night. "I'm from Arizona, too," said Rose.

BISON Two-Reel Comedy-Drama, written by W. B. Pearson and Produced by Henry McRae, with Gypsy Hart, Kingsley Benedict, and some of the Universal cowboys in the cast.

HENRY McRAE'S name is associated with stunts more than with laughs, but once in a while he puts on a comedy, or a comedy-drama, and shows that he knows where the smiles come in as well as the thrills. Such a picture is the Bison two-reeler "One Wild Night," which certainly lives up to its name. The story was written by W. B. Pearson, and features Gypsy Hart, the discovery of Rex Ingram, who played two leading roles for the Bluebird director, before he left the coast, and Kingsley Benedict, who has just completed the series, "Perils of the Secret Service," with some of the Universal City cowboys. Here is the tale:

Five cowboys—"Happy," "Swifty," "Bogs," "Babe" and "Shorty"—have come to the city with a train load of war horses. Having seen the town, they retire to a park bench, broke and disgusted with the city. A vision of the open range rises before them. They take up a collection in Happy's hat, which proves to be but a collection of junk, not enough for a cheap breakfast.

Rose Seeley is a young woman whose one aim in life is entertaining. One day before a novelty party which she intends giving, Reginald Bleak, a suitor with more money than brains, disappoints her by being unable to secure the entertainers which he had promised. Rose, very much put out, refuses to talk to Reggie over the phone, and goes for a drive in the park. She discovers the five gloomy cowboys on the bench and decides to find out if they are real. She lashes her spirited horses, then throws down the lines and yells for help. Happy lines up his men beside the road, then runs beside the team where the road turns in a circle. As the horses turn, the other four boys rush out and stop them. Happy asks Rose if she is hurt and she tells the boys that she let the horses run just for excitement. She invites them to ride with her, and they all climb in.

CAST.

"Happy"	"Kewpie" Moran
"Swifty"	Ray Hanford
"Shorty"	Sam Appel
"Bogs"	Charles Perley
"Babe"	Billy Human
Rose	Gypsy Hart
Reggie	Kingsley Benedict
Maid	Yvette Mitchell

Reggie is horrified at the sight of the boys, and they in turn are amused at him. He speaks to Rose, who tells him that she intends to have the boys remain to entertain her guests. The cowboys object to staying, but Rose promises them tickets home, and they agree to see the thing through. She takes their guns away from them and has them wait in the library until the guests arrive.

Happy sees two crooks sneaking among the shrubbery on the lawn. He sends Bogs out the back way to see what they are doing. Bogs sees them crawling up a pillar of the porch. He reports to the boys. Bogs goes up the back stairs and sees the crooks taking jewels from the dresser. He starts a fight and the other boys come to his aid. They all come tumbling down the stairs into the midst of the frightened and astonished guests. Happy turns the jewels over to Rose, and tells Bogs to phone for a cop. Rose explains that the incident was a novel entertainment to surprise her friends, because she was a daughter of Arizona and is going back home.

VISITORS APPLAUD FILM FIGHT.

A GOOD-NATURED rivalry exists between Director Fred A. Kelsey at Universal City and his featured actor, Harry Carey, and it was agreed that a test of strength should be made a part of the Kelsey production, "According to Appearances." The particular scene—a combat between the two—happened to be staged directly in front of the big visitor's balcony at Universal City and the director himself played the role of a "bad man." The fight was so realistic that great bursts of applause came from the visitors who had surrounded the set and occupied all the available space on the balcony. Carey declares he was the winner and Kelsey makes a similar response to the inquiry. However, so far as the picture was concerned, Carey merely had his head cut and Kelsey was killed, but he came to life in time to direct the balance of the scene. Carey's current program release is "The Honor of an Outlaw."

FRENCH WAR MISSION ARRIVES

PROBABLY the most interesting number of the Animated Weekly No. 70 is that which shows the arrival of the distinguished envoys from France. The Animated cameraman was as usual very much on the job and nothing escaped him. First we see the liner "La Lorraine" which carried the French mission across the Atlantic. The cruiser "Amiral Aube" which conveyed the liner is also seen. The actual landing-place of the envoys was kept a secret, but the Presidential yacht "Mayflower" brought them to Washington, where they were met by Secretary of State Lansing. We see the Secretary boarding the Mayflower to welcome the country's distinguished guests. Then comes what we all have been waiting for—the debarking of two of the greatest men of our sister republic, Minister Viviani, escorted by Secretary Lansing, and Marshal Joffre—the "Papa" Joffre of his "poilus"—escorted by General Scott. The hero of the Marne, one of the most picturesque figures which our generation has produced, received an ovation second only to the historic reception accorded to Admiral Dewey upon his return from Manila. Finally we see the English Minister, Alfred James Balfour, on his way to visit some of the U. S. officials.

PAUL REVERE'S RIDE REPEATED.

LISTEN, my children, and you shall hear how the Twentieth Century Paul Revere rode again over the same route as the Revolutionary hero, and aroused the present-day citizens to a great pitch of enthusiasm as he went. The Animated Weekly cameraman was on hand to film the reincarnation of the famous rider, and part of his ride, with the cheering multitudes who greeted him, and the pictures form a part of Weekly No. 70.

"LITTLE MISS NOBODY"

BLUEBIRD Photoplay, written by Alfred Solman and Robert F. Rodin, adapted for the screen by John C. Brownell and produced by Harry Millarde, starring Violet Mersereau.

Above—Violet Mersereau as “Bonnie plans to run away.

Centre—The daily drudgery at the road-house.

Below—Bonnie cannot avenge herself.

THIS Bluebird Photoplay, written by two well-known newspaper men and magazine writers, Alfred Solman and Robert F. Rodin, was adapted for the screen by John C. Brownell and produced by Harry Millarde. It gives Violet Mersereau one of the most congenial parts she has ever had, and has been pronounced by the professional critics who have seen the advance showings, a “sure winner.” It tells the story of a little waif, brought up to drudgery in a mountain road-house, of her unexpected and romantic chance, of the plans against her happiness, and of the exciting result of her innocent plot, which nearly ends in tragedy. The incidents follow each other like this:

Bonnie, an orphan, is the ill-treated maid-of-all-work at Joe Gaskell's road-house, a notorious resort in the mountains. A mile or so away George Grenville has his summer home, at which Arthur Wharton, a young playwright, and his sister are visiting. A love affair exists between Wharton and Elinor, who jilted the young playwright in order to marry the Grenville millions.

A motor accident forces Elinor, Wharton and Charlotte to take refuge in Gaskell's road-house. Charlotte meets Bonnie, becomes interested in her and sends her some clothes by her brother.

Bonnie puts on the clothes and goes down to the bar. “Bull” Dorgan sees her and, half-drunk, he catches her in his arms and kisses her. Wharton leaps at Dorgan and knocks him down. Dorgan swears he will get even.

That night Grenville overhears a love scene between his wife and Wharton, and informs Wharton that his presence is no longer desirable, and Wharton and Charlotte leave for the city on the following morning.

A few months later, Elinor reads of Wharton's sudden wealth. His uncle has died and left him a fortune. She learns from Wharton's sister that he has disappeared.

One day, Seth Trombly, owner of a rough shack near the road-house, explains to Gaskell that Wharton, having purchased his shack is living there alone, and apparently very ill.

That night Bonnie, after a quarrel with Gaskell, ties her clothes in a bundle and runs away. She stumbles on Wharton half-buried in the snow, and after heroic efforts succeeds in getting him back to the shack, where she nurses him.

Wharton, under the tender care of Bonnie and old Dr. Morley regains his health. Dorgan and Gaskell have searched in vain for the runaway, until the day arrives upon which Dorgan was to marry her. Dorgan's man rushes in and tells them Bonnie is living in Trombly's shack. Dorgan, Gaskell and the crowd rush off to the shack where they find Bonnie alone. Dorgan commands Carter, a justice of peace, to marry them, and the ceremony is about to begin when Arthur returns. Determined to save her from Dorgan, he marries Bonnie. Dr. Morley arrives as Wharton and Bonnie are leaving. He advises Arthur to place Bonnie in charge of Charlotte, and go away for a year.

Elinor, whose husband has died, learns of the marriage. She goes often to the Wharton home, bringing with her Billy Hamilton, a good-looking rake. Hamilton has accepted money from Elinor and has sworn to compromise Bonnie, but he finds himself falling really in love with her.

Wharton decides it is time to go home. He arrives to find that Charlotte and Bonnie have gone to Grenville lodge for the week-end. A moonlight skating party is being arranged when Arthur appears at the lodge. Elinor, by skillful maneuvering monopolizes his attention. Bonnie, hurt to the quick, slips away to the library. She settles down for a good cry, when Hamilton and Elinor enter. Elinor is in a rage. She has told Arthur that his wife was in love with Billy Hamilton. She now rounds on Hamilton for failing to compromise Bonnie. Bonnie suddenly bobs up and comforts Hamilton. He confesses to his share in the plot and begs for forgiveness. Bonnie then makes a strange request. He is to leave the house immediately and wait at a certain bridge until ten o'clock. Bonnie gives a note to the butler and instructs him to deliver it to Mrs. Grenville in half an hour. Then, with "Billy," her dog, she leaves the house.

Charlotte is interested in the waif.

Arthur has been hunting vainly for Bonnie, and is worried. Elinor reads the note, which contains the startling information that Bonnie has gone away with "Billy." They are to spend the night in Trombly's shack, and go on in the morning. Wild with rage, Wharton rushes from the house.

Bonnie arrives at the shack, lights the lamp and waits. She is terror-stricken when Dorgan enters. She runs to the little room and bars the door. Dorgan starts to batter it down, and succeeds as Arthur enters. Dorgan turns on him and a terrific fight takes place, ending in the vanquishment of Dorgan. Arthur then turns to Bonnie, and demands the whereabouts of "Billy." Bonnie points to the little room, and Arthur, mad with rage rushes in to find a little King Charles spaniel looking up at him.

Arthur finds his little wife transformed.

VISITORS RUN IN FEAR OF TERMS USED BY DIRECTORS.

VISITORS at Universal City frequently misunderstand the terms used by people engaged in the making of motion pictures. One day at the zoo a director used the common term "shoot," meaning the operation of the camera, and when he remarked to his cameraman, "We'll shoot this lion first and the big one next," a woman visitor made a run for the entrance, declaring she would not remain to see anything so cruel.

A few days ago while a woman and two children were looking at the animals in the zoo, Director Henry McRae came in and, calling to his assistant, Rex Hodge, said "Get Dynamite." With an exclamation of fear the woman said, "If there are going to be any explosions here we had better go," and with that she grasped the children and ran. She did not know that "Dynamite" is the Universal name of J. A. Furtelle, who works the wild beasts in the pictures.

ICE-SKATING CRAZE HITS UNIVERSAL CITY.

THE latest fad among the younger actresses at Universal City is ice-skating, and it is easy to distinguish those who are enjoying the Southern California "indoor sport." Many of the girls have never skated in their lives, but they are determined to learn despite bumps and bruises from the falls. A few nights ago Betty Schade, Priscilla Dean and Eileen Sedgwick attended the festivities at a rink in Los Angeles, and only the former had ever worn skates before, the result being that Miss Dean and Miss Sedgwick found themselves entertaining all of the others at the rink by their efforts to keep on their feet. Both girls appeared at the studios the following morning with a decided limp.

FIRST SONG HIT in PHOTOPLAY

Released for the Country This Week

Blossom Seeley, famous vaudeville headliner, who sings "The Road to Happiness."

THE first "Song Hit in Photoplay" groomed for its initial presentation in the theatres in the country is released this coming week. It is entitled "The Road That Leads to Love," was written by Irving Berlin, and has for its stars Ted Snyder the famous music publisher, and Blossom Seeley, the vaudeville headliner. Miss Seeley is shown in the cut on this page in the costume she wears in this unique and novel photoplay.

The other cut on the page is drawn by Nell Brinkley, the famous artist of the Evening Journal, and was a half page drawing in that publication, which illustrated a publicity story about this particular Song Hit in Photoplay. Everywhere this innovation has been tried it has interested newspapers and magazines, and the results which have been obtained by the Proctor circuit, for instance, and other vaudeville and photoplay managers which have used it, have been extremely encouraging.

The Universal issues a Song Hit in Photoplay every three weeks in 500-feet lengths, and has made an arrangement with the music house of Watterson, Berlin & Snyder, of the Strand Theatre Building, New York City, to notify any exhibitor who desires to try this innovation of an acceptable singer in his locality whom he can get for a reasonable price. The picture itself may be obtained from any Universal Exchange by writing direct to them, or to the Home Office, 1600 Broadway, New York City.

The schedule which has been announced for these Song Hits in Photoplay has been somewhat changed in order to permit the second one to be a patriotc selection. There will, therefore, be released the week of May 28th the new popular patriotic air, "Let's All Be Americans Now," by Irving Berlin, Edgar Leslie and George W. Meyers. The star of this photoplay is Truly Shattuck, a well-known light opera singer and vaudevillian. Similar publicity to that which the Evening Journal expended so lavishly on "The Road That Leads to Love" will be used for the new patriotic song. The third one in the series will be "Me an' My Gal," which has been postponed until June 18th.

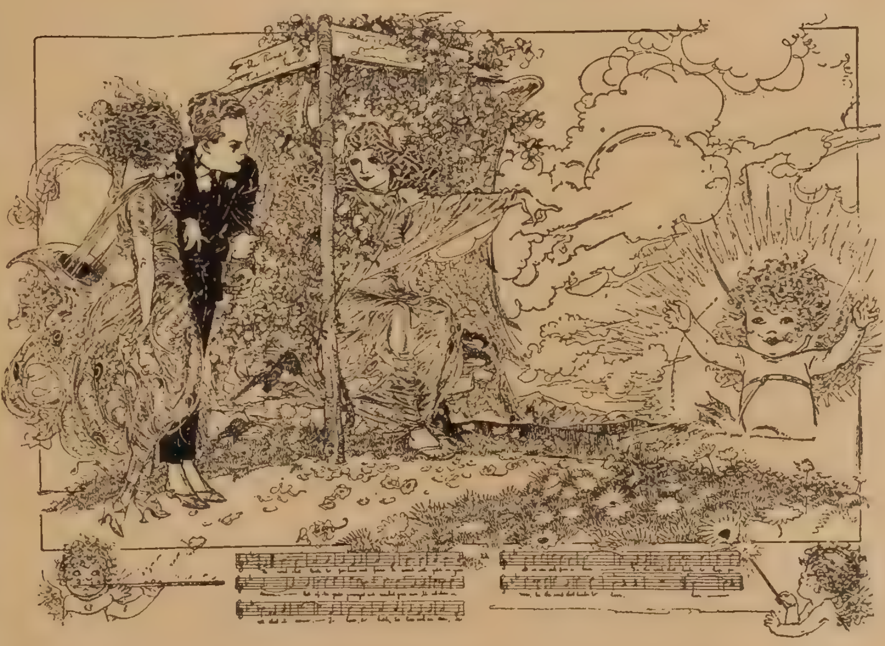
"FLAMES OF TREACHERY."

Imp Drama.

Written by Crawley and Maude.
Produced by Donald McDonald.

James Ford, the Western representative of a big concern, receives word that M. Hatton, a clerk, is coming and that he shall be given a desk. Ford, who has been carrying on some crooked work, treats the new clerk with scant courtesy.

Working in the office is Ruth Chalmers, and Ford makes love to her. One day she notices Ford pouring some liquid over the papers in the waste basket. He then sends them all from the room. Ruth returning, notices smoke coming from the keyhole and sends in an alarm. When the men rush into the place it is found that some of the books have been destroyed. Ruth tells Hatton about the liquid. That night Ford asks Ruth to work; she dares not refuse. Hatton comes back to the office to find Ruth fighting for her honor. Ford is angry, and discharges Ruth, telling Hatton that the head office will take care of him. Taking some marked bills from the safe, he places them in Hatton's desk and then brings the officers to arrest him. Hatton then causes the arrest of Ford, for Hatton is the head of the concern and has found the evidence of fraud that they sought.



Nell Brinkley's drawing in the New York Journal to go with a big publicity story for the first Song Hit in Photoplay, "The Road to Happiness."

"THE GIRL IN THE GARRET"

Three scenes from the Imp picture "The Girl in the Garret."

IMP Two-Reel Drama. Story by Ben Cohn. Scenario by Douglas Bronson. Production by George Cochrane, with Molly Malone in the lead.

CAST.

Cynthia	Molly Malone
Harvey	Jack Nelson
Stephen	George Berrell
Grace	Annette De Foe
Mrs. Dunning	Nanine Wright
Norah	Anna Dodge
Mrs. Loring	Countess Du Cello

MOLLY MALONE has been given a charming part in the Imp two-reeler called "The Girl in the Garret," which was written by Ben Cohn, adapted for the screen by Douglas Bronson and produced by George Cochrane. An excellent cast supports her, as the little country girl who is sent to the city by her indulgent father in order to "get an education," and who has such a hard time of it when she gets there. Here is the story:

Stephen is determined that his daughter Cynthia shall have a good education, and so sends her to the city to a relative of his, Mrs. Loring. The Lorings are in great financial difficulties, and are trying especially hard to make a good showing in the hope that the daughter, Grace, will capture the wealthy Harvey Dunning; but he is by no means in love.

Cynthia takes up her abode with the Lorings, and they engage a broken-down tutor for the girl. Norah, the cook, takes an interest in Cynthia, who is longing for love and friendship.

One day Cynthia takes Harvey's picture from the sitting-room mantel to her room. She admires it and playfully inscribes one of her pictures to Harvey. As he is leaving the house that day, she drops it from the attic window. He is interested, and inquires from Grace who it might be. As gracefully as she can in her anger, Grace tells him. Some little time later she and her mother rush into Cynthia's room, where they find her still looking at Harvey's picture. Here is a new danger, and they determine to bundle her off to a cheap boarding house.

Cynthia receives a letter from her father stating that the wheat crop has been poor but that he has sent her aunt the additional money she demanded. Cynthia realizes that her father is being swindled, and determines to win her own way. She answers an advertisement for a companion to a Mrs. Dunning, who proves to be Harvey's invalid mother.

Norah meantime has written Stephen of the treatment Cynthia is receiving, and he comes on to investigate. Cynthia is gone, and Mrs. Loring and Grace do not know where she is. Norah takes Stephen to Cynthia and Mrs. Dunning persuades him to leave the girl with her for a while.

A few days later Harvey returns from a trip, and the two young people are pleasurably surprised at finding each other. The friendship ripens into love, and they spend their honeymoon at Stephen's farm, where Norah is now installed as housekeeper, with marriage imminent.

"Captain Marjorie's Adventure"

Big U Two-Reel War Drama.

LITTLE MARJORIE is the darling of the regiment, and her playmates are the men of the Fort, who do exactly as she tells them. The Fort is at the outpost of civilization, and the Indians in the neighborhood are restless. The senthies have orders to be more than usually watchful. Indian rustlers are reported to be stealing cattle, and a detachment of cavalry leaves the fort to recover the stolen beasts. In an encounter with the Redmen, the chief's son is slain. He is carried home to the camp by the braves, and the chief, in solemn council, swears vengeance on the men at the Fort. Three braves are chosen for their daring, to avenge the death of the chief's son.

The men at the fort are preparing to entertain the men of Ward's Cavalry who are coming to visit them. Marjorie is excited by the festivities. She begs one of the men to take her for a ride on his horse, and he does so. The waiting Indians attack the man, who is riding with only one comrade, from ambush, and kidnap the child. She is carried off triumphantly to the camp, and the chief orders that she be held for ransom. She determines to try to escape, and while the tribe is celebrating their association for war with another tribe she makes her way to the horse of the dead trooper and tries to climb into the saddle. She cannot manage

"THE GRIP OF LOVE"

The school teacher.

Anna Lou is just in time.

The young man.

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama, written by the famous author, Willard Mack, adapted for the screen by Karl Coolidge and produced by Allen Holubar, with himself and Louise Lovely in the leads.

CAST.

Lester Jordon	Allen Holubar
Ruth Overholt	Louise Lovely
Dad Burbidge	Alfred Allen
Clem Babbit	Ed Brady
Anna Lou	Maud Emery
Asa Larkin	H. B. Edmondson
Bud Larkin	"Buster" Emmons

WILLARD MACK, famous as author and playwright supplied the story for the Gold Seal three-reel drama "The Grip of Love," which was then put into scenario form by Karl Coolidge, and turned over to Allen Holubar to produce. Holubar plays the lead himself and chose the beautiful Louise Lovely for his opposite in the role of a school teacher down in the Tennessee mountains. The story has a decidedly unusual twist, and the photography gives wonderful scenic shots. This is what happens:

Lester Jordon, having lived for pleasure, is now under the care of Dr. Spencer, who insists that he go back to nature for a while and spend a few months in Tennessee, where the doctor has an old shack. Lester decides to go.

The school trustees employ a teacher for the Sumach Cross Roads School. While Ruth Overholt is putting a letter, written by one of the men, in her suitcase, she accidentally spills out some articles, among them being a man's picture. The trustee immediately recognizes the man as Andy Crandall, the most hated man in the whole of Tennessee.

Ruth and Lester arrive together and miss the daily stage; but they hire an auto to take them to the small town.

Dad Burbidge, postmaster, school trustee, and sage of the Cross Roads, is greatly impressed by Ruth and gallantly guides her to her little cabin. The women instinctively hate her, remarking that it doesn't look well for a girl to arrive with a strange man. Among the crowd are Clem Babbit and Anna Lou Dawley, his sweetheart. Clem immediately is smitten with Ruth, and Anna Lou senses coming trouble, while Asa Larkin, infatuated with Anna Lou, secretly rejoices.

The men suspect that Lester is a Revenue Officer and want to get rid of him, but Dad persuades them to investigate before going to any extreme. Two small boys are sent to spy on Lester. They watch him unpack his suitcase and see a badge which he accidentally drops. In reality it is a marksmanship medal. The boys quickly report this fact and the men are convinced. Clem steals the badge and shows it to Ruth; she assents when he asks if Lester might be an officer. The men are gathered together in Dad's store wrangling about the newcomer, when Lester enters for his mail. Clem blocks his way, and a fight is quickly begun, Lester soundly thrashing Clem.

While walking in the woods, Anna Lou and Asa find Clem unconscious and conclude that Lester has shot him. The news spreads, Clem is carried to the town, and Lester, with a rope about his neck, is to be lynched. The evidence to these ignorant folks seems conclusive, for one shot in Lester's gun has been fired. Ruth is frantic, but helpless. The mountain people are now against her, for they have seen the picture of Andy Crandall and have been told by her that it is her grandfather.

Anna Lou tenderly bends over Clem, begging him to speak to her; soon he opens his eyes and, seeing her, murmurs that he must have shot himself while trying to kill a snake. She realizes the mistake that is being made, and rushes to the tree where Lester is about to be hanged. Lester is released, much to Asa's sorrow. With Ruth, he returns to civilization.

it, and is recaptured by the Indians. They condemn her to be scalped.

In the meantime the trooper who was riding with Marjorie and the other soldier, though badly wounded, manages to make his way to the highroad. The visiting cavalry arrives, and the men find him lying in the road. They take him back to the fort, where he tells his story. The preparations for entertaining the visitors are abandoned, and the men are ordered out to rescue the little girl.

A fight between the two Indian tribes and the Americans takes place. The white troops are hard pressed, but are relieved in time by the arrival of reinforcements. Marjorie is restored to her parents, to the joy of the whole regiment.

LATEST WAR NEWS FROM A HUMAN FISH!

THIS is the way in which William Franey received the news that that he is to head his own company of Jokers. The Universal authorities decided that there should be a split in the Joker forces, Franey heading one branch under the direction of W. W. Beaudine, with Milburn Moranti as the most prominent player in his support, while Gale Henry should be at the top of the other branch, under the direction of Allen Curtis, who used to direct the Joker Company before Beaudine took charge. The attenuated comedienne will have Jack Dill as her "leading man," while the name of Franey's leading lady has not as yet been announced.

Franey has a nick-name among his fellow players at Universal City. They call him the "Human Fish." He earns this name by his fondness for swimming. He is in the water at six o'clock in the morning and again as soon as he returns from Universal City. Mrs. Franey is seriously thinking of begging him to shorten his stay in the water, as she can hardly get him to meals.

Phil Dunham, of L-Ko.

UNMASKING PHIL DUNHAM.

THREE guesses—who is it? No, not the scenario editor of Universal, nor one of the honorable fraternity of press agents. This studious-looking personage is Phil Dunham, well and enviable known to fame as a leading comedian for the L-Ko Komedies, and he had this picture taken so that his screen friends could see, for once, what he really looks like.

The genial Phil is an Englishman, a Londoner at that, who started at the age of twenty to become a very serious exponent of the plays of the Bard of Avon. He has played with Sir Herbert Tree at His Majesty's Theatre in "The Tempest!" Can you imagine it?

Mignon Anderson working on her converted tennis court.

A GARDEN PATRIOT.

MIGNON ANDERSON has become a prominent exponent of the doctrine of Flagriculture and Potatriotism.

"No flowers in my garden this year," she says sternly. "Millions for utility but not a cent for decoration. The lawn has been plowed and I've planted potatoes on the tennis court, and beans in the rose-beds. Rows of potato plants will look just as beautiful to you as daffodils and hyacinths, if you remember that the first duty of America is to feed the world. I'm doing my bit. No sweet peas in my garden—only the early June eatable kind, and lots of tomatoes and a patch of beets and rows and rows of onions. Gardening is the most fascinating outdoor sport and splendid exercise!"

RECRUITING STATION AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

WHEN Secretary of the Treasury William McAdoo and his wife, who is the daughter of President Wilson visited the film capital recently, they commented upon the wonderful military material at Universal City. Their words inspired some of the players to form a volunteer corps for drill, and one of the results of this was that the only U. S. Army Recruiting Station to be established in a motion picture studio was set up a week or so ago at Universal City, as a branch of the station at Los Angeles.

Sergeant L. E. Lee and as assistant came to the studios this week with application blanks and established a station under the giant pepper trees adjoining the administration building.

Already a number of the Universalites are members of the Hollywood company of Coast Artillery and a number of the actresses are active Red Cross workers. Not a few of the men already have seen service in either the army or the navy and there are at least two retired army officers actively engaged at the studio. They are Col. J. E. Brady, of the scenario department, and Capt. Sterret Ford, of the employment bureau.

FIRST MOVIE WAR WEDDING.

THE first motion picture "war wedding" was celebrated at Universal City when Betty Schade who has played the lead in many a Universal production, was married to Ernest, or Ernie, Shields, one of the well-known actors. The ceremony was held in the Church of the Angels in Pasadena, in the presence of many of their fellow players from the picture capital. The declaration of war caused the date of the marriage to be advanced, for the bridegroom is a sergeant in the Hollywood Coast Artillery, and expects to be called out at any time.

A romantic feature of the situation besides the fact that it is the first war wedding among picture players, lies in the nationality of the bride, who was born in Berlin, Germany. She thus becomes one of the first captures of the war, but she declares that she finds the fate of "prisoner" an extremely happy one. Whatever her sentiments may have been in the past, she is now a good American, and rabidly pro-Shields. Mr. and Mrs. Jack Blystone attended the young couple. Mr. Blystone is the director general of the L-Ko Kompany.

The bride's many friends at Universal City presented her with a beautiful silver loving cup, with the following inscription: "To Betty, Universal's first war bride, from those who love her at Universal City." Mrs. Shields declares that this will be the greatest treasure of the bungalow.

"ETERNAL LOVE"

Paul gets an inspiration for his picture.

In Paris.

FIRST Butterfly Picture. Story and scenario by Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton. Produced by Douglas Gerrard, with Ruth Clifford as the featured player. The tale of the redeeming love of a peasant girl for an artist.

WITH "Eternal Love" as the first release, Butterfly Pictures make their long-heralded appearance. The first photoplay sets a high standard, and was written and adapted for the screen by Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton, whose own picture, "The Birth of Patriotism," has just been highly commended by the critics. Douglas Gerrard had charge of the production, as well as playing the role of the artist, for whom the heroine, Mignon, shows such undying devotion. The illustrations on these pages give some idea of the beauty of the settings which Mr. Gerrard selected for the idyllic first part of the tale. The contrast is great when the scene changes to the Latin Quarter of Paris, before the war, of course. Here is an outline of the story:

"No, my love is dead!" said Mignon.

Paul has more money than virtue, and with his boon companions of the Latin Quarter he is celebrating the announcement of the subject for the Gautier Art Student Prize Competition. It is to be "A Message of Spring."

Paul goes to Brittany seeking inspiration and finds it in the person of Mignon, an orphan, who finally consents to pose for him. They fall in love, and when he leaves with his picture completed, he gives her a ring, and says that he will always be true to her. She believes him, and wears the little silver ring he gives her.

Paul's picture wins the prize, and all acclaim him, especially Mimi, the prettiest model in the quarter. He forgets all about Mignon. One day, Cou-Cou, who is deeply disappointed at not winning the prize, is knocked over in the street by an auto and injured. A reporter, in the confusion, takes the name of the now famous Paul, and a notice of his accident is published in the papers. Far away in Brittany, Mignon reads it, and determines to make her way to Paris to find her lover. She has not money enough for the journey, but sets out bravely to walk it.

Arriving at last in Paris, she falls from weakness and hunger on the doorstep of Monsieur

"Good-by! Don't forget me!"

Paul and his model.

Blanc, a kind-hearted baker, who has his shop not far from Paul's studio. Monsieur Blanc and his wife are very good to the girl, who tells them her story. They try to discourage her going to Paul, as they have heard of his reputation for wildness, but she insists upon seeking him out.

At his studio a noisy supper party is in progress. Paul is seated with Mimi on one side and Fifi on the other. Mignon knocks repeatedly, but no one hears her. She opens the door and stands transfixed at the sight she sees. She runs from the room and never stops until she faints at the baker shop. Paul has seen her, and not knowing whether it has been a vision or reality, he rushes out to search for her, but in vain. From that moment he never ceases to look for her.

The baker and his wife wish to keep Mignon, but she leaves the ring and a note for Paul in her wooden shoes, and goes out to throw herself in the river. She is standing on the bridge, about to cast herself into the water, when Francois Gautier, the famous painter and donator of the prize, passes. He restrains her, and listens to her sad story. When she has told it, he offers to take her into his house and give her shelter. She accepts, and becomes almost a daughter to him. He dies very suddenly, and she finds herself his heiress. She devotes her life to the saving of outcast women.

Paul hears of her inheritance and goes to the Gautier mansion, begging her to see him. At first she will not receive him, but at last she does so, only to tell him that her love for him is dead. In despair he wanders all night in a blinding rainstorm, and is found the next morning more dead than alive on a park bench. He is very ill, and Cou-Cou, as a last recourse, determines to send for Mignon. She consents, and at his bedside she forgives him and their troth is plighted.

EILEEN SEDGWICK DECLARES ANIMALS GIVE SENSATION.

EILEEN SEDGWICK, who is playing leading roles in Henry McRae's Universal company, is having her first experience working with animals and wild ones at that. In McRae's current production, "In African Wilds," Miss Sedgwick has appeared before the camera with lions, leopards, orang-outangs and Charlie, the big Universal elephant.

The dainty actress declares it is a peculiar sensation to be chased by a live lion, and she admits she feels much better when she is outside of the scene. However, it is necessary for the purposes of the picture that she appear in close proximity to these wild animals of the jungle and African plains, and the young girl has so steeled her nerves that when she is acting she is without the slightest trace of fear. She said her most uncomfortable experiences was when she was followed by Sam, the big African lion, and had to climb a tree to safety. After Sam treed the girl he stood there watching her and finally lay down close to the trunk until keepers roped him and got the beast back to his cage.

Miss Sedgwick says, however, that the strangest sensation was when she was on the elephant's back and it lay down. An elephant lies down with a certain plunge and she hung to his ears.

"I'm sure I was white with fear when I finally got off the big fellow's neck and onto the ground," said Miss Sedgwick.

A BLUEBIRD DAY?

HERNANDEZ LECTURES AT THEATRE OPENING.

THE opening of the Strand Theatre in San Bernardino, California, was made a special event when the management booked "God's Crucible," one of the Bluebird features, and also persuaded one of the stars of the photoplay, George Hernandez, to appear personally before the audience. The theatre was packed to the doors when Hernandez finally arrived after a breakdown on the road between his home and his destination. He was heartily applauded as he appeared before the curtain. Hernandez told his audience of the pleasure it gave him not only to work before the camera in such productions as "God's Crucible," but also that he was permitted to witness the film in San Bernardino's newest playhouse.

PREPAREDNESS

MEN

Dauntless Dora does her bit in front of Loew's before starting on trip to Universal City.

HEADED toward Washington, D. C., where a big reception has been prepared for her, Dora Rodrigues, in the daily reports received by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces encouraging results in the recruiting campaign, and a wonderful patriotic sentiment in every town she has visited. Universal Dora has already reached Philadelphia in her 4,000-mile recruiting hike, which will end at Universal City, California. She hopes to recruit 40,000 men for the army and navy in this unique stunt, and started out with flying banners last Saturday, after a week of recruiting in New York in front of Loew's New York Roof.

For three days she lectured in the New York Theatre with official Government motion pictures and between her stage moments she was on Broadway, with recruiting officers from the various branches of the service, aiding her in her patriotic work. This diminutive Government aid—she is but 5 feet 1½ inches in height—jumped into her work with a zeal that promises much for Uncle Sam.

Within the first hour more than fifteen recruits had been taken for enlistment to the nearby regular stations. But one of them was refused, and he was promised a second consideration. The recruiting service had loaned Private H. A. Ecman from the U. S. Army recruiting office at 729 Sixth Avenue, and he aided "The Universal Film Girl" in her patriotic work. The picture on this page shows them in front of Loew's Theatre.

Leaving Washington her itinerary includes Cumberland, Pittsburgh, Youngstown, Cleveland, Akron, Columbus, Cincinnati, Dayton, Toledo, Detroit, Kalamazoo, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City and San Francisco. Numerous patriotic societies and orders have wired their intentions to aid in "The Universal Film Girl's" work.

Her slogan is "40,000 men for Uncle Sam, that's my bit. What's yours?"

CANADIAN NOTES.

By J. W. CAMBRIDGE.

TORONTO, Ont.—The Savoy Theatre of Hamilton, Ont., has booked the Bluebird feature "Treason," and hopes for big results on account of its stirring war qualities.

George Vaughan has leased the Princess Theatre, London, Ont., for five years and is booking Bluebird features. Mr. Vaughan succeeds Mr. Bill Stewart, who is going to devote all his time to the Patricia Theatre, the newest London theatre.

Dan McKinnon has taken over the North Bay House, previously run by the Griffith Amusement Company, and will use Universal program exclusively.

Campbell, of the Wychwood Theatre, Toronton, has disposed of his interests in that theatre. Mr. Campbell's intentions as yet, are not known.

The National Theatre of Ottawa, Ont., is changing its policy from regular Universal Service, and is now booking two Bluebird features a week.

Mr. W. H. Teeple is a new addition to the sales staff of the Canadian Universal Film Co. at Toronto, for the Ontario territory. Mr. Teeple was formerly with the Mutual Film Co., and for a while will handle Bluebird Photoplays.

The York Theatre, Yonge Street, Toronto, one of the city's largest photoplay houses, announces that commencing with the current week the program will be changed daily instead of every other day, as has been the policy in the past. This practice has never been tried by any of the large theatres in Toronto. Manager Robson is very enthusiastic over the new system, as he point out that he will be able to accommodate his patrons every day. He has found that a good many people go to the pictures two nights in succession, going to his theatre for the first night, and another house the other night. With his new policy in force, his patrons will not have to bother going a long distance to another house, but can go to the York as many times a week as they desire, and they will always be sure of seeing a different show.

In putting this policy into force, Manager Robson has to get forty-eight reels a week for his show. This is made up in the following manner: six features of five reels each, one serial and the rest single reel travel pictures and comedies.

The new policy of the York will be watched with interest by all of the exhibitors and exchangemen in the city, as they realize that Manager Robson is experimenting with an important matter,

AUTHOR! AUTHOR!

EVER since Elaine Stern won the Evening Sun Scenario Contest Prize, she has been promising herself to become an authoress. Now she's gone and done it. The name of the novel, which the Britton Publishing Company announces at $1.35 per volume, is "The Road of Ambition." It is a story of the steel works, and it's a corker; we just got it. Miss Stern admits that the novel was originally written as a scenario, and that it will appear as a photoplay before long is a foregone conclusion. She submitted it to Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, now scenariod editor of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and after he had read it he was so enthusiastic about it that he told her that his honest advice to her was to make a novel of it rather than a photoplay. The photoplay could come later.

Miss Stern will be remembered by Universal fans for a number of excellent photoplays which she wrote for Violet Mersereau and Mary Fuller. They include "The Path of Happiness," "Mary's Duke," "The Witch Girl," "The Heart of a Mermaid" and "Lil' Norwester." And now that she has "The Road of Ambition" on the royalty paying basis, the films may expect some more attention.

"PICTURES GIFT OF THE GODS," SAYS HOLUBAR

Scene from coming Bluebird "Treason," directed by Allen Holubar.

THERE isn't a more ardent devotee of motion pictures in the whole industry than Allen Holubar, the young author-actor-director who has just completed the thrilling war play, "Treason," for Bluebird Photoplays. In season and out of season, this young man preaches the advantages of the picture career. This is what he has to say about it:

"Our forefathers who came to this glorious country brought with them a heritage of health and endurance, but we, the descendants of these well-endowed ancestors, have thrown discretion to the winds in our mad struggle of commercialism and ambition. Instead of living close to nature and in obedience to her immutable laws, we go contrary to them till something breaks. The result is a rapidly increasing race of neurasthenics. In the theatrical profession we find a noteworthy example of the kind of life not to live. Night labor, uncertainty, nerve strain, and mental grind, to say nothing of poor ventilation, are big evils.

"Before entering pictures I spent many years as leading man on the legitimate stage, in stock and in productions, and I know whereof I speak. With a production an actor rehearses for months without salary, only perhaps to have the play fail after a few performances. Even if it is successful, then comes the 'road.' After one has lived through a season of one-night stands in the South and West, with all its delightful features, he begins to realize how truly sweet is Home, Sweet Home. Stock is almost as bad. You have a home of sorts, but you are so busy you can't enjoy it.

"I followed this routine till the grave fairly yawned for me, and I realized that I was playing a losing game against old Dame Nature. Like most people, it took a kick to wake me up, but at last I realized the wonderful possibilities of pictures. In this work I have found peace of mind and health of body. The work is real and you enjoy it. The environment is natural and you can revel in the sunshine. There is less artifice and more truth in pictures than on the stage. The hours are for the most part normal and regular, and a chap has time for social obligations, and for thought and study. Home ties mean something, and friendship have time to ripen. We picture players should hail the new art as a gift of the gods!"

MIGNON ANDERSON'S DEBUT IN BUTTERFLIES

A NEW leading lady is introduced to Butterfly Pictures in the second release, "The Phantom's Secret." This is Mignon Anderson, recently recruited to Universal, who had the distinction of playing the feminine lead in Lois Weber's big production, "Even as You and I." As Jeanne de Beaulieu, heroine of a story which is a compound of thrills and romance, she has a most congenial role and makes much of it.

Mignon Anderson's name is known to many thousands of picture enthusiasts, for she has six years' service on the screen to her credit. She is a Southerner, born in Baltimore, and when you ask her why she took up a picture caeer, she answers "Because"—a truly feminine reason! She had had some stage experience, principally as a child, before the films lured her, and she had posed for some of the best-known of our American artists, for she is the type of a real American girl. Five feet one inch in height, weighing 190 pounds, with blond hair and blue eyes, she is one of the lucky women to whom the screen does something more than justice, tho' the fact that well-known illustrators were delighted to have her pose for them would indicate that she has a great deal more than her share of good looks.

Her hobby is gardening, and that is an added reason why she is so delighted to be working in California, where the mild climate enables her to "make garden" all the year round. Next to making things grow, Miss Anderson loves motoring, and once, when she was only a novice, she drove a car in a race with a train going fifty miles an hour. This was the first time she had driven a machine without assistance, but she proved that she possessed courage and nerve.

ANNOUNCING

UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS
UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS

A Pictorial Record of the World's News that's Making History

The announcement of the launching the Universal's new pictorial news weekly release will be hailed with joy by thousands of Exhibitors through the world; first, because of many Exhibitors' inability to secure the UNIVERSAL ANIMATED WEEKLY owing to the fact that it is already booked in their territory, and second, because it brings a brand new idea—that of a pictorial record and history of the world's events.

In considering the booking on long time contract of "CURRENT EVENTS," get the fact firmly planted in your mind that "CURRENT EVENTS" has absolutely no connection whatsoever, in any way, shape or form with either the UNIVERSAL ANNIMATED WEEKLY or the UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE. Each is entirely separate and independent in its field. The Universal Animated Weekly will continue as ever to bring the world's news first to thousands of theatres, while the Universal Screen Magazine will likewise continue to present in pictures each week the accomplishments and progress of the world in science, art, industry, inventions, etc., etc., exactly as before.

In "CURENT EVENTS" each week will be shown those important doings throughout the world that will be recorded in moving pictures similar in method to the records of the world's events that are written down as history for future generations. Instead of posterity reading about the events at this time of the world's history they will SEE in fascinating pictures all the important occurrences that transpire in our day and date.

"CURRENT EVENTS" will immediately establish itself as the most important release of the day in pictorial releases, because of the plan and versatility of ideas behind it. Just as you read in publications of the important events throughout the world, so will you be able to actually see in moving pictures all the happenings from every civilized country on the globe.

The first issue of "CURRENT EVENTS" will be shipped on May 12th. The handling of bookings on contract basis will be similar to the plan used by Universal Animated Weekly and and the Universal Screen Magazine. Thus Exhibitors who cannot now (because of territorial divisions) secure either the U Animated Weekly or the U Screen Magazine will be able to book "CURRENT EVENTS." Eastern Exhibitors who have seen the first release of "CURRENT EVENTS" pronounce it a long-felt want in the field of news pictorial weeklies. "It's new, novel and unique," says one. To a man they pronounce it a crackerjack release. Book it NOW on a long time contract for your house while you have a chance. Book through any Universal Exchange, or

Butterfly Picture.

FOR the second Butterfly Picture, "The Phantom's Secret," which is released on May 14th, you might have a guessing contest started some days before the showing of the picture. Offer a prize of passes for the best guess as to what the Phantom's secret is. There must be plenty of posters and stills in your lobby to give the people something to work on. The story is that of a girl who is the daughter of a French nobleman. On his deathbed the father confesses to being the celebrated criminal, "The Phantom." That is his secret, and the girl, later on, is forced to change identity with her best friend in order to avoid the confidant of her father, whom she has hade to marry to save his story from reaching the world. The stills and posters on this picture, which featured Mignon Anderson, Molly Malone and Hayward Mack with a big cast in support, are so interesting that you should be able to work up a good deal of excitement about the guessing contest.

"CASEY'S BORDER RAID."

Bison Comedy-Drama.

"CASEY'S BORDER RAID" the Bison comedy-drama for May 19, is the sort of thing that the fans should eat up at this time. If there are any men in your town who were sent to the border with the troops last summer, locate them and offer them a free pass to the show, if they can prove that they were really on the border. Military things are first in the public consciousness just now, and this picture is a funny story about the army, without in the least making game of the boys or of the army. Some chaps in khaki, and flags in the lobby are a sure bet. The picture is worth boosting.

"THE ONION HERO."

Joker Comedy.

THIS comedy, "The Onion Hero," is based upon the timely subject of the high cost of living—or rather, of onions. It is set for May 19, and features Gale Henry as Carlotta Highsee, an opera singer, and William Franey, as a hungry tramp. Onion Tom has a passion for the expensive vegetables set in the form of jewelry, and most of the comedy concerns a necklace of the large and lovely products of Bermuda which he has made for the beautiful Carlotta. Make a necklace of them yourself, and display them on a black velvet cushion as if they were a rare treasure. Over the cushion have an announcement of the picture, of course. You can send some one parading through the town all decked out in bracelets, necklaces and rings made of onions, if you like, with a card on his back to say that he is introducing the new jewelry in your theatre, on such and such a date.

Three of a Kind---All Different

Nestors, L-Ko's and Jokers—are alike in that they get the laughs. They are funny. But each presents a different style of comedy. Any one of them will boost your show, whether it is feature, program, or what not. You can get them on the regular Universal Program or you can book them separately from any Universal Exchange. The fight in the secret room of the gang.

Ben Wilson in "A Stern Chase" With Neva Gerber

ADAPTED by Stuart Paton from the novel of the same name by Eustace Hale Ball and produced by Stuart Paton.

Shirley	Ben Wilson
Polly	Neva Gerber
Cronin	Howard Crampton
Dr. Renolds	Jos. Girard
"Red" Warren	Francis MacDonald
Wayne	Willard Wayne
Dorian	Chas. Dorian

THE ninth episode of the great serial, "The Voice on the Wire" adapted for the screen and produced by Stuart Paton from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball, is called "A Stern Chase," and brings the story to a further point in the development of the plot, but still gives no inkling of the solution of the problem of the identity hidden in the mysterious "Voice."

When Shirley enters the crooks' apartment, he finds no one there, and begins to search around the room. As he approaches the rear of the room, several crooks spring on him and a fight starts.

Meanwhile, Renolds, sneaking through the bushes with his gun in hand, hears Polly scream and runs quickly in the direction from which came the cry. Outside the underground passageway he meets "Red" Warren, Taylor, Polly, four diplomats and Cummings. Polly is struggling and kicking, and as Renolds comes toward them they all attack him and soon are bending over him as he lies on the ground unconscious. Polly has been dragged away and, apparently unconscious, is placed in an auto.

As Shirley fights with the crooks one of the revolvers is accidentally discharged and, hearing the report, a number of his men rush toward the house. A secret panel is swung open and Cummings with four other crooks enters, while Wayne and Dorian make their getaway.

Polly, having been feigning unconsciousness, sees that no one is watching her, and starts slowly to climb toward the driver's seat. As two of the diplomats dash off after Short, whom they have just seen hiding behind a tree, she springs quickly to the seat, and when the Jap valet jumps on the running board, she hits him in the face, knocking him off. She drives down the road at a desperate speed.

The policemen have overcome the crooks and have brought them before Shirley that he may question them. Behind the panel, Wayne and Dorian listen to all that is said. When Cummings is about to tell who "The Voice on the Wire" is, being offered five thousand dollars by Shirley if he will do so, he is suddenly shot dead, and no one can discover from where came the shot. For Wayne, opening the panel slightly, had shot Cummings to prevent his talking. Wayne and Dorian then make their escape through the secret passageway.

Bert Law soon whispers to Shirley that he will take the five thousand. He shows them the secret panel, and, leaving the other crooks under a guard, Shirley and Cronin are led through the underground passageway and arrive back in the upper room in time for Shirley to answer the phone and hear a voice tell him that Renolds knows too much; they have got him. James Welsh will die on the 25th, and they taunt Shirley, asking why doesn't he save Welsh? Law tells Shirley that none of the crooks know who "The Voice on the Wire" is except "Red." Warren and his gang are headed for Washington.

Meantime, the crooks have taken Renolds in an auto and have left the place. Another auto, run by "Red," has followed Polly, and it is pursued by Short and a traffic policeman on a

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" will never die, and its latest manifestation is an L-Ko Komedy, in which Phil Dunham leads the laughs, ably supported by Lucille Hutton, Merta Sterling, Harry Lorraine and Charles Inslee. This temperamental travesty was directed by J. A. Howe, and supervised by the Director General J. G. Blystone. The way they did it was like this:

The tramping troupers arrive at Punkville Centre, and put up at the boarding house, which is run by the strong-minded landlady and her henpecked husband, Phil. He is maid-of-all-work, and she takes the money. He is much attracted by the pretty actress who plays Little Eva, and Merta is jealous.

That night they are to give a performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Phil is head cook and bottle-washer at the theatre too, and has to be property man, curtain man, stage manager, ticket taker, and everything else but actor for the troupe. It is he who brings on the soap boxes which do duty as cakes of ice in the river. It is he who barks like hounds on the trail, and who has to shove on the cardboard dogs which pursue the hapless Eliza. He has to hurry aloft to drop snow on the sad scene, and he goes on absent-mindedly doing so when the picture changes to the cotton fields.

Little Eva appears gowned most fascinatingly in a short fluffy frock and a big hair ribbon. Phil can't resist her, and neglects his manifold duties to talk to her. She begins to play tag with him, and chases him into the midst of Uncle Tom's most touching scene. Merta gets wild. She leaves the audience and is about to jump over the footlights to get after Phil.

It is time for Eva to die, but she is 'way up above the stage, eating candy with Phil. Merta jumps on the stage, and hunts for Phil. She interferes considerably with the action, but when Eva cannot be found, the actor who played Eliza grabs her, puts a night gown over her head, and tells her to go on and die. Legree tries to give her the words, but she is struck with stage fright. She is yanked up into heaven, where she promptly discovers Eva and Phil. In their surprise the men let her fall, and she clutches Phil. They land on the stage together, while Eva laughs at them. This is too much. The audience gives chase and the Tramping Troupe is run out of town.

motorcycle. The remaining machine belonging to the policeman has been fixed by Dorian and Wayne so that it won't run. Polly is caught, and she and Renolds are carried onto a special train.

Short arrives just after the train has pulled out. Wayne and Dorian board the train as it pulls out and the station-master tells Short it was a train for Washington, and hands him a note addressed to Shirley. Short phones Shirley, who tells him to read the note. It is a warning to them not to stop the train or to follow them; that Polly and Renolds are with them on the train. Instructing Short to order a special and to wait for them at the station, Shirley and his men jump into a car held up by a detective and rush to the station. As the train rushes along, Shirley receives a telegram signed by Laschlas which says this is the last warning.

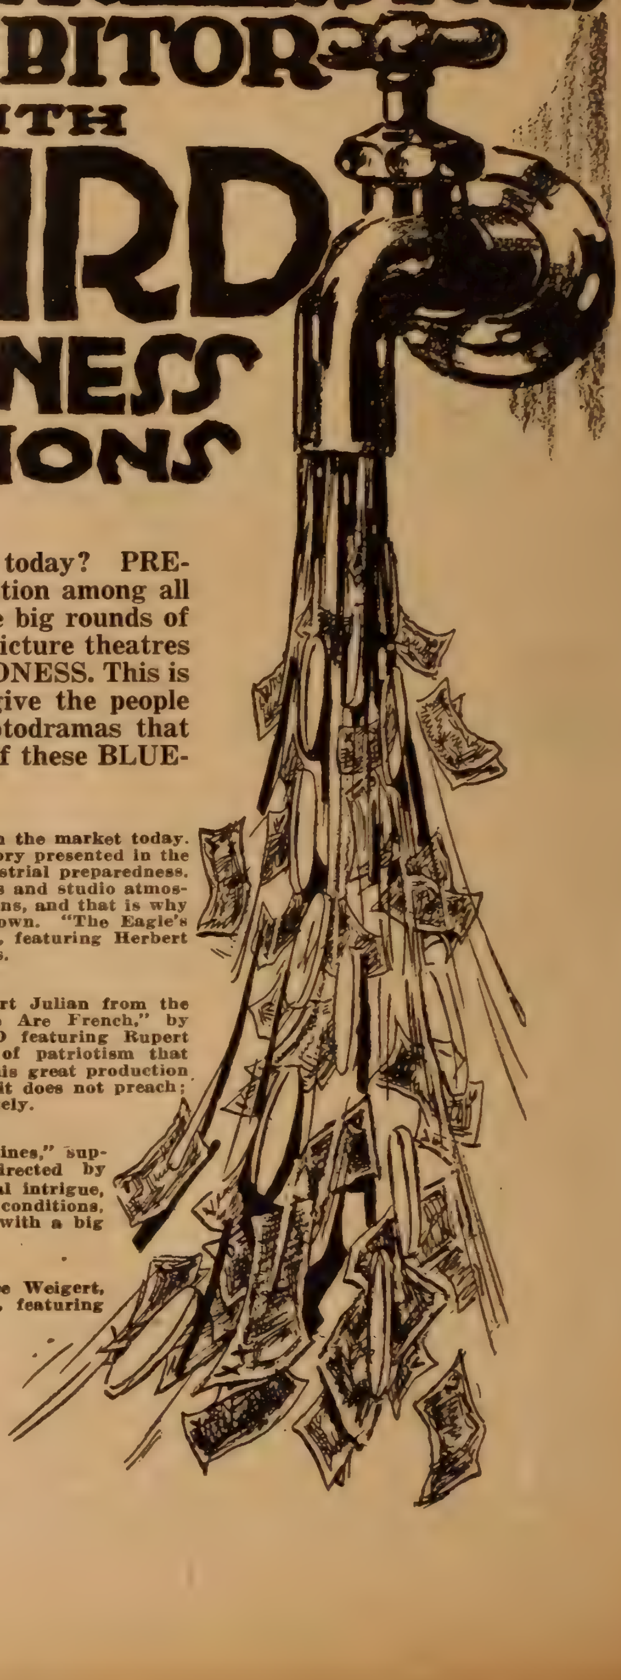
PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS



What is filling nine out of ten newspaper columns today? PREPAREDNESS. What is the daily topic of conversation among all classes? PREPAREDNESS. What is that gets the big rounds of applause in the legitimate theatres—in the moving picture theatres—in mass meetings of patriotic citizens? PREPAREDNESS. This is a ready-made opportunity for every Exhibitor to give the people the most popular subject of the day in superb photodramas that will play to capacity and repeat. Take your choice of these BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS:

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS" The most unusual picture on the market today. An intense and absorbing story presented in the most dramatic form. It deals with present conditions, and with industrial preparedness. It is as far beyond the jingo pictures with their fake and sham battles and studio atmosphere as it is possible to imagine. It is a real picture for real Americans, and that is why it is playing to repeat bookings and capacity houses everywhere shown. "The Eagle's Wings" is a BLUEBIRD Special, in 5 reels, written by Rufus Steele, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, supported by Vola Smith, Grace Carlisle and Charles Mailes.

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS" Produced by Rupert Julian from the famous novel "We Are French," by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. Five-reel BLUEBIRD featuring Rupert Julian, Ella Hall, with Kingsley Benedict. An inspiring picture of patriotism that is particularly acceptable at this time. No living American can see this great production without leaving the theatre a better man than when he entered. Yet it does not preach; it simply grips and convincs. A picture you should book immediately.

"BEHIND THE LINES" Harry Carey in "Behind the Lines," supported by Edith Johnson, directed by Henry McRae, constitutes a fascinating entertainment of war, political intrigue, romance and adventure. It is a thrilling portrayal of present day conditions, and has played to capacity houses wherever shown. A BLUEBIRD with a big punch.

"TREASON" A notable picture is "Treason," written by Lee Weigert, five stirring reels, produced by Allen Holubar, featuring Allen Holubar, Lois Wilson, Joe Girard and Dorothy Davenport. A big production with some tremendous war scenes and the most intense situation. A picture that will crowd your house for more than one showing.

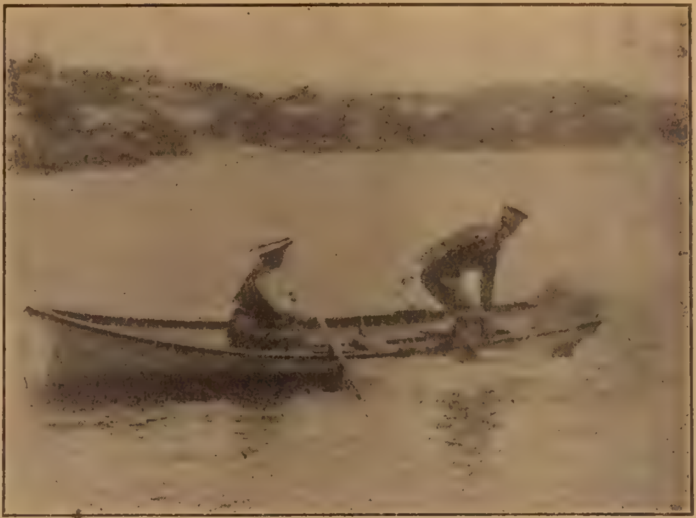
THE SCREEN MAGAZINE

ISSUE No. 18 of the Screen Magazine begins with a remarkable invention which is illustrated on this page. A New Englander has perfected a device with which he can walk and play on top of the water as easily as ordinary mortals on land. In the picture we see him stepping into his boat shoes, an ideal method of fishing and an idea which may be worked out in some way in connection with the plans for coast defense.

Then we have a nature study of the badger, a merciless foe to creatures smaller than himself. By way of contrast, comes a demonstration of the baking of cake on a tremendous scale. Twenty tons a day are turned out by a big New York concern, under the supervision of the Board of Health. We see the flour store-room which has a capacity of 6,000 sacks, all on sanitary movable platforms. A conveyor carries the flour to the mixing rooms, where it is added to the other ingredients. Each day 5,000 pounds of frozen egg-yolk is used, and every can is carefully inspected before it is used. Huge machines are filled with the ingredients and mixed in covered receptacles, to keep out dust and dirt. The batter is then transferred to the weighing tank. We see the cake tins being prepared, but no grease is used. Instead, they are lined with paper. As each pan is filled, the batter is weighed so that each loaf of cake is exactly the same size. Five stories above the street is the battery of sanitary ovens, which have a rotary action. Then the cakes are iced with the use of a pastry bag, and finally cut to standard size and packed in cardboard containers. Another department takes care of the decorating of special orders for weddings, birthdays and other anniversaries. One woman employed by the company has designed thousands of cakes.



Device which enables wearer to walk and play on the water.

An interesting and instructive feature of Issue No. 18, is the swimming lesson for the kiddies, which is posed by Commodore Brown for the Screen Magazine. Many lives are lost each year because parents have neglected to have their children taught the art of natation. These pictures show clearly how swimming is scientifically taught nowadays. Deep water tends to frighten children, so the instructor is cautioned to be very patient. Arm and leg movements are taught before the water is entered at all.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS FOR "LITTLE MISS NOBODY"

YOU can set the entire community a-talking and fill every person with curiosity by working up a campaign on "Little Miss Nobody," along the following lines:

Send a man out armed with a camera. Let him shoot pictures of children and adults living in the neighborhood, or, if yours is a small town, your man can travel all over the community. After taking each picture, let him hand each subject a card reading as follows:

> The pictures of five people in this community will be displayed in front of the (theatre name) on (day and date). If your picture is one of the five, you will be presented with a free pass and an order on the leading photographer for half a dozen fine portraits.
> Pass in front of the (theatre name) on (day and date) and see whether your picture is among the lucky five.
> "Little Miss Nobody," featuring the dainty Bluebird star, Violet Mersereau, will be shown at the (theatre name) on (day and date).

As a matter of fact, this stunt need not be at all expensive. After the five pictures have been shot, the photographer can work with an empty camera so that his other subjects be given the impression that their pictures are also being taken.

If the camera used is a small one, have the pictures enlarged and displayed over the lobby entrance. It would be best to announce a certain hour for the showing of the photos, since this would tease the curiosity of all hands. See to it that the pictures are carefully veiled. When the advertised moment comes, unveil the photos.

There is no doubt but that you can work in co-operation with the local photographer so that the pictures given away need cost you nothing. If the photographer is advertised in the circulars handed out, and on your screen, you are giving him publicity of tremendous value. This fact, strongly impressed upon his mind, will make him glad to work with you.

The chances are that the photographer will be glad to loan you a small camera and the necessary films for the shooting of the five pictures. Handled properly, you can make a killing with this idea.

WALTER BELASCO, brother of David Belasco, was made up at Universal City to play the role of a Turk in a harem scene in "Dropped From the Clouds," being directed by Henry McRae when he was approached by one of the visitors at the Big U studios. The visitor apparently stammered very badly. Belasco, it is well known under certain conditions, also stammers and this affectation of his speech occurs generally when somebody else similarly afflicted talks to him. Consequently the actor was unable to answer him, fearing that if he did so the visitor might suspect he was being imitated and the fact was Belasco was unable to speak. So Belasco said nothing, and as the man turned away he said, "Th-that fel-l-low mus-must be a-a re-al T-t-t-tur-turk."

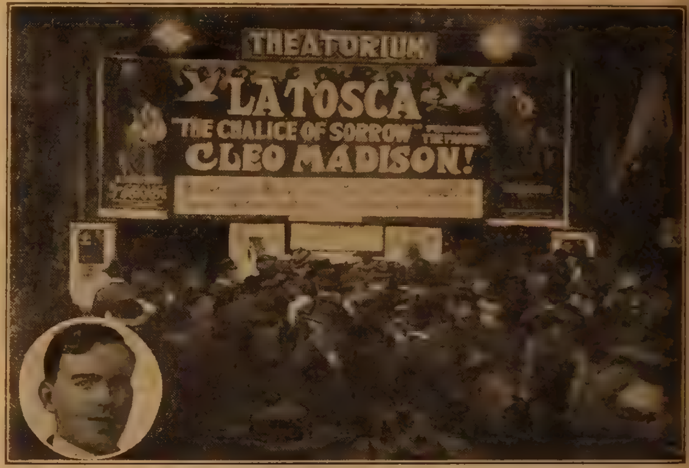
IT'S BLUEBI

Just look at the Cut below and Read Mr. Claiborne's Letter

HEREWITH is our argument for the establishing of BLUEBIRD DAY in your House. We knew the power of BLUEBIRD DAY in neighborhood Theatres, but doubted the possibility of establishing a BLUEBIRD DAY in the famous "LOOP" district in Chicago where 60 per cent. of the trade is transient.

Yet Mr. Claiborne, in spite of competition, has made BLUEBIRD DAY a twice-a-week event with the result that on these BLUEBIRD DAYS he often has an officer out in front to keep the surging crowds in order. Look at the evidence in the cut herewith. That's the only kind of evidence that counts.

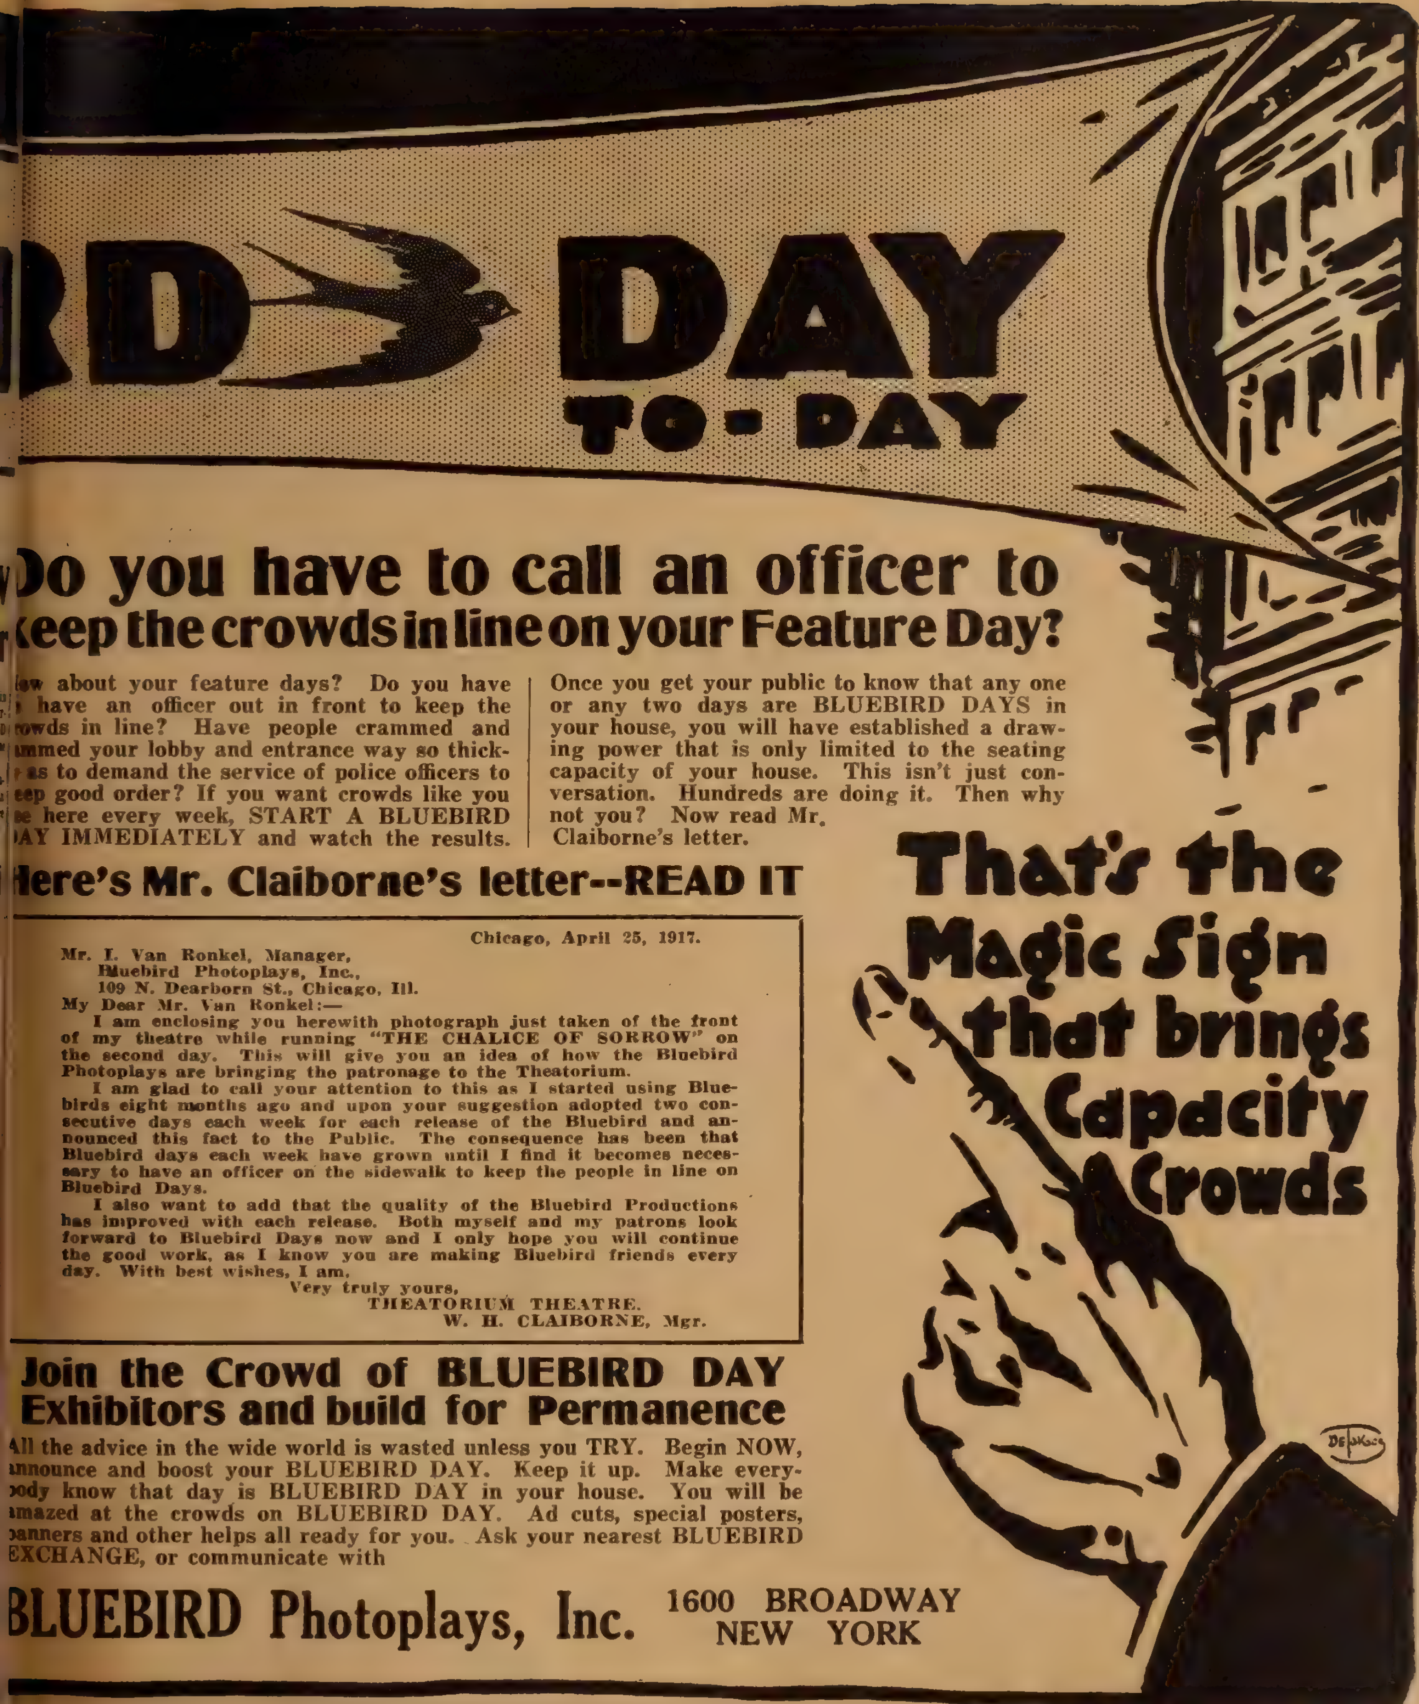


Bluebird Day

—has thus had its severest test. If M. Claiborne can establish BLUEBIRD DAY in territory where transients prevail, ANY LIVING EXHIBITOR IN THE WIDE WORLD CAN IMMEDIATELY ESTABLISH AND SECURE FULL DRAWING POWER OF BLUEBIRD DAY IN ANY NEIGHBORHOOD HOUSE.

Scores of Exhibitors Following Suit

Since we first advocated and boosted BLUEBIRD DAY scores of Exhibitors have taken our tip and started these BLUEBIRD-DAYS with truly handsome results, and with every week bringing a growing crowd of people who have come to realize that there's something to the slogan, "IF IT'S A BLUEBIRD, IT'S GOT TO BE GOOD."



Do you have to call an officer to keep the crowds in line on your Feature Day?

ow about your feature days? Do you have have an officer out in front to keep the rowds in line? Have people crammed and ammed your lobby and entrance way so thick- as to demand the service of police officers to eep good order? If you want crowds like you e here every week, START A BLUEBIRD AY IMMEDIATELY and watch the results.

Once you get your public to know that any one or any two days are BLUEBIRD DAYS in your house, you will have established a drawing power that is only limited to the seating capacity of your house. This isn't just conversation. Hundreds are doing it. Then why not you? Now read Mr. Claiborne's letter.

Here's Mr. Claiborne's letter--READ IT

109 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Mr. Van Ronkel:—

I am enclosing you herewith photograph just taken of the front of my theatre while running "THE CHALICE OF SORROW" on the second day. This will give you an idea of how the Bluebird Photoplays are bringing the patronage to the Theatorium.

I am glad to call your attention to this as I started using Bluebirds eight months ago and upon your suggestion adopted two consecutive days each week for each release of the Bluebird and announced this fact to the Public. The consequence has been that Bluebird days each week have grown until I find it becomes necessary to have an officer on the sidewalk to keep the people in line on Bluebird Days.

I also want to add that the quality of the Bluebird Productions has improved with each release. Both myself and my patrons look forward to Bluebird Days now and I only hope you will continue the good work, as I know you are making Bluebird friends every day. With best wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,

"The Phantom's Secret." With Mignon Anderson, Hayward Mack, Molly Malone and an all-star supporting cast. Second Butterfly Picture. Directed by Charles Swickard. Released May 14. Here is a drama of swift action that develops a real story, full of surprise and suspense. The "Phantom" is a clever crook who has forced Mignon to marry him to protect her dead father's name. Fleeing from the Paris police to America the couple meet Molly, whom Mignon knew in a French convent. The two girls go to visit an aunt of Molly's whom she has never seen. On the way the train is wrecked and Molly is killed. To escape from the "Phantom" Mignon impersonates her dead friend and is welcomed by the latter's aunt. A friend of Molly's knows of the deception, and forcing his attentions, threatens exposure. The "Phantom," too, is on Mignon's trail, and the story develops rapidly. A charming love element is introduced and suspense and truly dramatic situations hold the attention till a most unexpected climax gives the audience a chance to take a long breath. Yes, it's that gripping kind of drama; human, strong and commanding the sympathies of every one who sees it. Well worthy of the magic name of Butterfly.

Harry Carey in "The Honor of An Outlaw." With Claire Du Brey. Three Reel Gold Seal Surprise Western Drama. Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released May 15. There isn't an audience on earth that doesn't thrill and enthuse over Harry Carey and his bunch of hard-riding, hard-fighting, dare-devil cowboys. Harry has been captured and is on his way to the pen. The conductor tells the president's daughter, Claire, that Harry is on the train. She talks with him. Harry's friends flag the train and rescue him, carrying Claire with them. Later in their camp Harry sacrifices his freedom to rescue Claire from the drunken gang. He puts up a fight that will become historic. It is one of the greatest ever staged, and will fascinate all who see it. Every element of gripping drama is shown in this great three-reeler, which will go big wherever shown.

"Her Great Dilemma." With Lee Hill and Louise Lovely. Two Reel Laemmle Heart-Interest Drama. Released May 18. Two reels of the tensest suspense; crammed with situations that compel attention and carry conviction. Louise's husband is a crook and is sent up. Lee, a young doctor, falls in love with her, and they are to be married. The husband escapes, calls on Louise, threatens her, accepts some money, and, on leaving, is run over by the doctor's auto. He is carried to the house, where Louise finds this his worthless life is in her hands, as the slightest jar will kill him. This is her great dilemma, and how she is saved from its terrifying solution makes one of the strongest climaxes ever filmed.

"Casey's Border Raid." With Neal Hart and Janet Eastman. Two Reel 101 Bison Military Drama. Directed by George Marshall. Released May 19. A marvelous picture. Casey (Neal) is a raw Irish recruit, the butt of a small outpost on the Border. Janet is the sergeant's pretty sister, and all the bunch are in love with her. She wants a Mexican serape, and the boys all sneak to the Mex camp to swipe one for her. They meet each other and get to scrapping among themselves. Then each in turn offers Casey money to get the coveted blanket. Casey, not realizing the danger, goes to the Mex camp, and, finding some liquor, proceeds to get soused. In the meantime the Mexicans raid the American camp and capture a machine gun. How Casey recaptures it and rides it triumphantly across the lines makes a tremendously effective situation, and brings a climax that will tickle your fans to death. Here is a picture that you can't boost too strongly. It will palese every one who sees it.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed find check for "THE EAGLE'S WINGS" which played 8 days at Keith's.

The booking of this splendid picture was an experiment with me as it is the first time that a five-reel picture has been placed in a Keith house during the regular season.

Having an All-American week, the picture was very appropriate and I can assure you that our patrons keenly enjoyed the production. It is a great story, wonderfully told, and is the most timely subject we've ever known.

Showing here for 8 days brought the picture before 25,000 people who, as you may know, all became "walking three sheets," and after all, you know that the people themselves are always the best advertisers. Yours very truly, (Signed) JOHN F. ROYAL, Mgr.

-and further-

—When any Keith House will come forward unsolicited, with such an expression as contained in the above letter, we feel that it would be a mistake if we did not let every Exhibitor know of the tremendous crowds, profits and success Keiths obtained with "The Eagle's Wings."

It is the finest of all preparedness productions. It is tremendously swift in action lavishly invested, tells an absorbing story in a matchless manner. Special paper and advertising props all ready on "The Eagle's Wings." Book it NOW and clean up. Book thru your nearest Bluebird Exchange or communicate with BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, inc

"HELL MORGAN'S GIRL"

The Most Talked About Feature of the Year . . . .

IT OUTDREW

The combined power of such stars as Mary Pickford, Clara Kimball Young, William Farnum, Margarite Clark, Blanche Sweet, Annette Kellerman

Read that statement again—then stop a minute and think it over seriously. "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL"—O-U-T-D-R-E-W the combined attractions enumerated above. Do you begin to realize then what this production, "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL," really is?

And this is the absolute truth, too. This occurred at the Garrick Theatre in Los Angeles, the greatest film town in the world—where ANY production has got to be the "real goods" to get even a look-in.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS

And a Wonderful Cast

Dorothy Phillips has proven her drawing power to be as great as any film star in feature pictures. The play "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" has brought home more real money to Exhibitors than ANY feature production of ANY feature producer in the business.

What "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" has done for other houses, it can do for you, if properly handled. This huge story of the famous San Francisco Barbary Coast at the time of the great fire is a tremendeus drama, wonderfully staged, and played by a brilliant cast. BE A PATRIOT!

(No. 177. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

IT is your patriotic duty to make it as easy as possible for any of your unmarried employees to enlist in the army or navy.

If, for example, your operator is holding back because he has some women folks who are dependent upon him, look among those dependents and see if one of them cannot be taught to operate the machine during his absence.

If you fail to find one among his dependents, then find some other woman who can learn the work, so that you will be prepared to let the operator go at a moment's notice.

This applies not only to your operator but to every other young man in your employ.

It is good business sense to be ready for any emergency, but far more important than that, it is PATRIOTISM!

When the war draft took effect in Canada, when thousands of young men rushed to the colors, a great many moving picture theatres had to close because they had no operators left. If you are caught in this sort of a fix, it is your own fault, for you can profit by the mistakes of our allies if you will only do a bit of thinking.

Planting a few potatoes in your back yard is not the only debt you owe to Uncle Samuel.

Buying a few war bonds is not the only thing you can do to help the general cause.

Those of you who cannot shoulder a gun can find more ways of helping than by planting spuds in the ground or planting war bonds in your safe deposit boxes. You can make it easy for the younger fellows to go to the front. You can relieve their minds about the folks they leave behind them.

By letting your employees know that you are ready to turn all of your own resources over to the benefit of the government you will encourage them to offer themselves to that same government.

Do we practice what we preach? You bet we do! Long ago the Universal notified the government that it could have everything we've got for any purpose it sees fit. If we hadn't done it we wouldn't feel fit to live in the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Prepare! Be a prepatriot. Plant! Be a potariot! But above all—be a regular PATRIOT!

"HER GREAT DILEMMA"

LAEMMLE Two-Reel Drama, written by Emily Mae Davis, scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., and production by Donald McDonald. Featuring Louise Lovely and Lee Hill.

The doctor and his family.

Mary confronted by her husband.

A TERRIBLE dilemma indeed is that in which Mary Blanton, played by Louise Lovely, finds herself in the Laemmle drama, which was written by Emily Mae Davis, adapted for the screen by Charles Wilson, Jr., and produced by Donald MacDonald. Thinking her husband dead, she marries, and is happy with Doctor Grayson. Her husband returns from a prison term, threatens her, leaves and is knocked down by the doctor's auto. He is carried in to her, unconscious. The slightest jar will kill him. Shall she ensure her own happiness or refrain and wreck her life?

When Mary Blanton applied at the Mercy Hospital for a position as a student nurse her application was accepted. As time passed she became one of the best nurses in the institution. A young interne of the hospital, Marc Grayson, came into her life. They were much together, and love developed between them. When Doctor Grayson took up private practice and prospered he and Mary were married.

Mary did not tell Grayson of her past life. She had been raised in the slums, and had become the wife of Red Shang, a notorious underworld character. Red had forced her to aid in his many nefarious schemes. When she read of his death in a raid, without further investigation she renounced the old life, and entered the hospital. A child was born to the Graysons and they were very happy.

Red Shang's reported death was incorrect. He had recovered, had been sentenced to prison, and was now free. He had to have money. Walking along the street one day, he was startled to see Mary and her little son. He traced them to their home. Red saw his opportunity.

That evening Red called Dr. Grayson on the telephone and gave the address of a sick person. It was that of a vacant house. The doctor responded hurriedly to the call. Entering the home, Red came upon Mary in the library. He revealed himself to her. She was dumbfounded. He demanded money as the price of his silence. Having no money at hand, Mary gave Red her necklace. In the meantime the doctor had called at the address given, found the house empty and started to return home.

Red warned Mary that he would want more later on. She was anxious only to be rid of him before the arrival of her husband.

Red left the home with visions of a good living from his blackmail scheme. He stepped from the curb to cross the street and was struck and knocked unconscious by an automobile driven by Dr. Grayson. The doctor immediately picked him up and rushed to his home with him. An examination showed that an immediate operation was necessary to save his life. Mary is nearly crazed with fear. The doctor asks her to assist him as a nurse in the emergency operation. While the doctor is preparing, she quietly removes the necklace from Red's pocket. The doctor tells her that the slightest pressure on the spinal cord will result in instant death. Red's death means happiness to Mary. His life only means that she must be continually harrassed. She is tempted to end it. She hears her child calling. She is about to succumb to the temptation when the doctor enters. The operation proceeds, and Mary bends every effort to carry it through successfully.

Mary is sitting in the ante-room, waiting to hear the result. She can hardly wait to hear what her future is to be. She is about to rush to the room to inquire when the doctor comes out. He tells her there is no hope. The man will never recover from the anasthetic. Mary sinks into her husband's arms with a silent thanksgiving for her deliverance.

WORDS of deep sorrow were heard on all sides at Universal City recently when it was found that Fred Donaghy, the postmaster at the film capital, has been found dead in bed at the studios. Donaghy had been a sufferer for many months with an affection of the heart, together with other complications and he had planned on the very day of his death to go to some hot springs in the vicinity of Los Angeles in the hope of securing relief.

Donaghy worked in his office until ten o'clock of the night before getting his official affairs in order that a substitute might take up his work. He had complained during the day of feeling badly and had talked over the phone to his physician.

OUR ALLIES HONOR GEORGE WASHINGTON.

A CEREMONY of deep significance was performed when the French and British commissioners, escorted by some of the most prominent men in Washington, made their pilgrimage from the capital to Mount Vernon, to lay wreaths upon the tomb of the Father of His Country. Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Secretary of State Lansing accompanied the party, which embarked at Washington upon the Presidential yacht "Mayflower." The French envoy, Marshall Joffre, the hero of the Marne, carried with him a bronze palm to place upon the tomb. This was the original reason of his coming to this country. The Animated Weekly representative secured a fine view of the famous soldier, representing the sister republic, whose son, Lafayette, played so prominent a part in the life of the first President of the United States. General Scott and two members of the Cabinet were also caught by the camera. Mr. Balfour, the British commissioner, was also a member of the expedition, with a large party, to pay his respects to the great American, who is as highly esteemed in England as in our own country. The pictures of this historic occasion form an interesting part of Animated Weekly No. 71.

BIRD-GIRLS PREPARE TO SERVE

WOMEN are taking a more and more prominent part in the military and industrial preparation of the country for war. Working girls and society girls are studying side by side to fit themselves for unaccustomed service, in order to free men for duty at the front. Telegraphy and wireless courses have been faithfully followed for weeks, and many women are working to earn their licenses as air-pilots, inspired by the example of Ruth Law. In the Animated Weekly No. 71, we have proof that the Western girl is as eager as her Eastern sister to prove that she is not "too proud to fight." Society girls of Houston, Texas, are taking courses in the art of aviation in order to be of service to their country in case of need. Whn they receive their licenses, many of them intend to offer themselves to the Government for duty as scouts, or to be used in any way which the authorities may decree. We see them trueing a propeller preparatory to a flight, leaving the earth, rising, taking a dare-devil dip, flying straight at the eye of the lens, rising again to a great height, and finally landing —the most difficult accomplishment.

“TREASON”

Three exciting scenes from the Bluebird.

BLUEBIRD Photoplay. Story and scenario by Robert Lee Weigert. Produced by Allen Holubar, with himself in the leading role. A thrilling story of warfare under modern conditions.

CAST.

Pettrus Baariot	Allen Holubar

Rodane Keestelt	George Pearce
Danick Rysson	Edward Hearn
Jossef Natarre	Leo Pierson

WAR stories, with the United States bending every effort to prepare for active assistance to the Allies, are naturally of paramount interest at the present moment. “Treason” is a war story of unusual strength. It combines many elements—thrilling battle scenes, heroic conduct on the part of the hero, love-interest, a great temptation overcome by tremendous effort, one of the most exciting automobile chases ever filmed, with the speedometers of the cars registering sixty miles an hour, and at the end, the re-instating of the hero, and a satisfactory ending to the love story. The battle scenes are particularly remarkable, and one, in which the hero, played of course by Holubar, is sitting in a dug-out, courageously sending out messages, though under the severest bombardment by the enemy's artillery, is so realistic that it might have been filmed “somewhere in France” at the present time. The dug-out is blown up, and Pettrus narrowly escapes death, and we see him staggering out with his officer over his shoulder. Holubar has been highly complimented for the staging of this “war stuff.” He filmed some of it from a tall platform, erected in two stories. On the top one was the cameraman with the machine, and on the lower the director took his stand with his megaphone, directing the firing on the big guns, and the maneuvers of the men in the trenches. Holubar has been a student of things military for a long time, and he has used his special knowledge to great advantage in the staging of this picture.

Keestelt tempts Pettrus.

The story is as follows: The principality of Statiria is at war with its neighbor. Patriotism is running high while heavy engagements are taking place on the frontier. Pettrus Baariot, a telegrapher, is assigned to duty at the field telegraph station. His companions in the home office envy him his good fortune in being selected to go to the front, and his chief, Danick Rysson, is so consumed with envy and with dissappointment at not being sent, that he vows he will be revenged upon Pettrus for what he foolishly considers a personal affront.

Floria is the daughter of Gergus Natarre, the head of the Secret Service. She is in love with Pettrus, and finds it hard to rejoice at his being sent into danger. Her brother, Jossef, is also sent to the firing line. Rysson is much attracted to Floria, who does not care for him. When he sees Pettrus as the accepted suitor his rage against him increases. Luella Brysk, a lady of somewhat uncertain reputation, is the friend of Rysson, and now becomes jealous of his evident preference for Floria. She watches his every move, particularly after Pettrus has left for the front.

At the front Pettrus proceeds to distinguish himself. He is often under fire, but proves perfectly fearless in the face of danger. He is sending important messages concerned with the action from a dug-out which is under heavy fire from the enemy's artillery, when a shell blows up the dug-out, and Pettrus staggers out with his superior officer over his shoulder. He is seriously wounded and sent to the hospital, where he lies for many weeks. Then he is sent home, where he is welcomed as a hero.

Meanwhile Rysson has been making advances to Floria, which have been repulsed. Her joy is great when Pettrus is sent home to recuperate. The government, in recognition of his services, sends a message to his chief saying that he is to be assigned to the lightest possible duty until he is fully recovered. Rysson tampers with the message and changes it so that Pettrus is degraded to the position of messenger. Pettrus feels the disgrace keenly, but Floria's father persuades him to have patience with the government, which will certainly recognize his heroism in the end. In the town is a tobacconist called Rodane Keestelt, who has always been one of Pettrus's best friends. In reality he is a spy in the service of the enemy, though no one has suspected it. As the days go on and promotion does not appear, Pettrus feels still deeper resentment against the government which has forgotten him. One day he tells his troubles to Keestelt, who is very sympathetic. The traitor sees a chance to serve his own country by taking advantage of the undeserved degradation which Pettrus has suffered. He is seeking a copy of the new telegraph code, and after many meetings between the two, finally persuades Pettrus, by working on his resentment, to procure the code for the enemy's use, promising him a rich reward which will be enough for him to take Floria to America, where they can start their lives over again.

A decoration from the Minister of War.

Luella Brysk is jealous.

Pettrus is finally persuaded by Rysson's continual oppression, to yield. He goes in secret to Natarre's house, where he knows the code is concealed. He opens the desk and removes it, returning to turn it over to Keestelt. As soon as he has done so his conscience smites him, and he spurns the reward.

Natarre, whose position as head of the Secret Service makes him peculiarly watchful, sees Keestelt leaving Pettrus' apartment. He enters and finds Pettrus overcome with remorse at having betrayed his country. They determine to get back the code at all costs before the theft is discovered. Keestelt has set out with it toward the border. Pettrus requisitions a fast car and persues the spy. At the very moment he leaves the town, the minister of war calls upon him, to bestow a belated decoration as a reward for his bravery. Luella Brysk, becoming still more jealous of Rysson, has informed the mayor of the alteration of the telegram by Pettrus' chief, and the mayor has notified the minister of war. Apologies and honors are sent to him in profusion.

An exciting automobile chase toward the frontier is in progress. Pettrus drives the machine at sixty miles an hour, but Keestelt manages to keep ahead of him. At last, on a turn in the road, Pettrus manages to run his car opposite the other. He then makes a daring leap from the one into the other, and the two men fight furiously, while the uncontrolled car dashes headlong over a cliff. With his last moment of consciousness Pettrus manages to recover the code. Later he is found, desperately injured, while Keestelt is killed. Natarre, the only man who knows his contemplated treachery, promises never to reveal it.

Pettrus was a telegrapher.

"I am appointed a messenger!" cried Pettrus.

MODEL NURSERY AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

ONE of the most extensive and complete nurseries on the Pacific Coast, born out of the necessity for flowers and plants foreign to the Coast territory, is that at Universal City. The development of this important branch of technical service has proven highly profitable, from the points of view of economy and picture results, in that fresh flowers, ferns and palms, for needed scenes are always available.

The florist item in the manufacture of Universal films became so vast that it was decided to enlarge the nurseries at Universal City, with the result that there are now under cultivation and in bloom 1,200 rose bushes, 1,000 beautiful carnation plants, and thousands of other beautiful miscellaneous, ornamental, blooming plants.

Allen Holubar

Author-Actor-Director

By MARJORIE HOWARD

"I HAVE had a lot of experiences in my checkered career," says Allen Holubar, the young author-actor-director, who has just produced "Treason" for Bluebird Photoplays, "but the most agonizing, nerve-racking, teeth-chattering moment I ever lived through, was that in which I first faced an audience.

"I was only sixteen at the time, and some way or other I had managed to get a speaking part in 'The Lady of Lyons,' with the famous old Alcazar Stock Co. I don't know how I ever hypnotized them into giving me the chance, but the first night was the most important in my life, and you may be sure that I had let every kid in my neighborhood know of the honor which had been conferred upon me. They were all out in force in the gallery, having promised to give me their support. And they certainly kept their word. I was the messenger, who brings 'Pauline' a note from 'Claude.' She answers by ordering the messenger a beating. He then rushes back to 'Claude,' and tells him that he was received with blows. This was the extent of my part, and I was determined to do or die in it. Well, I nearly died. I stood in the wings waiting for my cue, my teeth chattering and my knees feeling as if some one had taken the bones out and put in jelly instead. At last my cue came. I rushed on the stage, prepared to deliver my speech, when a familiar voice in the gallery bawled out, 'There's Al! Hullo, Al!'

"The audience caught on and began to howl with laughter. If I had been able to speak my lines, I should not have been heard. But I was paralyzed. I could not even turn and leave the stage, though simply longing to crawl into a hole and pull it in after me. Finally, 'Claude,' to get me off the scene, I suppose, asked, "Well, what did she do to you?' By this time I was completely rattled. 'Nothing,' I blurted out, and fairly ran for the nearest exit. As long as I live I never expect to get another round of applause like that which greeted my disappearance. Now, there is something that couldn't happen in the movies!"

That was the inauspicious beginning of Holubar's career. Of course, he eventually mastered his stage fright, and played in many notable productions, the chief one of them being Belasco's "Girl of the Golden West," and Savage's "Everywoman." All down the length of the West Coast Holubar is known to the theatre public from his long experience in various stock companies. He has not been in pictures very long, and the whole of his screen experience has been with the Universal Film Co. He played leads for Stuart Paton, when that director was making pictures at the Fort Lee studio, and Paton selected him to create the part of "Prince Daaker," afterward "Captain Nemo" in the splendid production of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which is one of the most successful of all screen productions. Holubar spent months at the Bahama Islands with the company, making exteriors for the picture, and the work in the heat and strong sun, constantly in and out of the water, and spending hours in wet clothes was very nearly too much for him. On his return, he was a good deal of a wreck, but his youth, and the fact that he had never neglected physical training, were points in his favor, and with a short rest he was soon able to resume work.

make one day each week A BLUEBIRD DAY in your house

Allen Holubar at home with his wife, Dorothy Phillips, and their child.

With the rest of the company, including his wife, Dorothy Phillips, he went to Universal City, and was immediately entrusted with his own producing company. Some of the cleverest work which has come from the Coast has been accomplished by this young director, who always plays his own leads. Good as his work has been, he himself declares that it will be much better, as he is just beginning to get into his stride. He and his talented and charming little wife have a pleasant bungalow home in Hollywood, and are thankful, after their years on the legitimate stage, to be able to spend quiet evenings. Both of them are unremitting workers at the studio, and the fact that they are both great favorites with the public, keeps them constantly occupied. They have appeared in only one production together, for both are opposed to husband and wife acting in the same company, as they think that the public loses interest in a married couple. But they discuss all their work together, and each is the other's severest critic. Their friends say that there is no pleasanter home on the Coast than that of the Holubars, and they have an ever growing circle of acquaintances. Holubar is an acknowledged master of make-up, and this is a never-failing topic of discussion between them. It is rarely that an actress has such problems of facial disguise, but Dorothy Phillips proved in "The Girl in the Checkered Coat" that she has profited by her husband's expert coaching in the fascinating art of screen make-up.

"THE HONOR OF AN OUTLAW"

Above—"You'd like to kill me, wouldn't you?" asked the girl.

"The West is calling me," said Harry.

HARRY CAREY is a name to conjure with, as the saying is, in Western pictures, and in Fred Kelsey he has a most sympathetic director. Kelsey assumed a threefold role in the production of this Gold Seal, of which he is the author and producer, and in which he took a minor part. He adapted Carey's character of "Cheyenne" Harry, the outlaw, and around this picturesque figure he wove a tale which is unusual in that the ending shows the separation instead of the union of the "man and the girl." There is a fight in the second reel which beats anything seen in recent pictures, and there is an ending which will give the most hardened fan a lump in his throat. Here is the story:

The railroad president's daughter is bidding her father and mother good-by at the depot, preparatory to a trip westward in her private car. "Cheyenne" Harry, under a sheriff's guard is in the same train on his way to the "pen" to serve a twelve years' sentence for train robbery. A band of outlaws hears of the daughter's trip and plan to hold up the train. As the train is on its way, the conductor is told by the sheriff that his prisoner is "Cheyenne" Harry. In the last car the conductor, while talking to the president's daughter, tells her of "Cheyenne" Harry's presence on the train. She recalls a hold-up at a dance given by her mother in her honor where he was recognized as "Cheyenne" Harry. She asks the conductor if he can have him brought to her car. The conductor persuades the sheriff to do so.

The outlaws flag the train with a red lantern. Wondering at the train's sudden stop, the sheriff handcuffs "Cheyenne" and rushes to the car door to find out the trouble. He is shot dead. Two of the outlaws rush to get the girl and find "Cheyenne." They recognize him, and, getting the keys from the sheriff's coat, return and free "Cheyenne." They take the girl. "Cheyenne" accompanies them. All board an auto which is nearby. Two others of the band, who had been ransacking the mail car, join them and all ride away.

The conductor cuts the engine loose, rides to the nearest station, and gives the alarm. The father gets the message and rushes to the scene in a private baggage car accompanied by a posse and their horses. Arriving at the scene of the hold-up, they unload their horses and give chase.

Meanwhile, the outlaws have been driven to their barn, dismiss the rented auto, mount their horses and make for their shack in the mountains. The father and posse come across the rented auto early next morning and are put on the trail.

The outlaws, upon arrival, place the girl in the adjoining room and write a letter to the father asking for money. They then bring out the sacks of plunder from the train and furnish a surprise for the bunch—six quarts of champagne. They prepare a meal and begin drinking. "Cheyenne" tosses his wine to the floor on the sly; the others get drunk. They cut the cards to see which one goes into the other room where the girl is. The Mexican wins, starts to the door and is shot down by "Cheyenne." A free-for-all fight starts. After "Cheyenne" has about won his fight, the outlaw who left to mail the letter demanding money, returns and the fight is on again.

The posse have ridden fast and hard, and as "Cheyenne" is about to lose his fight, one of the outlaws hears a noise, tears the shade from the window and looks into the barrels of three Winchesters. The father and posse enter and place all the men under arrest. The girl, hearing the father's voice, beats on the door, and as

Three expressive scenes from "Casey's Border Raid."

NEAL HART IN "CASEY'S BORDER RAID"

BISON Two-Reel Comedy-Drama, staged on the Mexican Border, with Neal Hart in the role of a typical Irishman. Written by George Marshall and produced by him from a scenario by C. J. Wilson, Jr.

CAST.

Casey	Neal Hart
Girl	Janet Eastman
Corporal	Bud Osborne
Mexican	Joe Rickson
2nd Mexican	Pedro Leon
Soldiers,	Tommie Grimes, Tommy Kiernan, Bill Gillis.

HERE is the sort of a picture which the movie enthusiasts are always crying for. George Marshall took a good look at Neal Hart, his leading man, and decided that he could play the serio-comic Irishman to the life. Then he wrote a story, got C. J. Wilson to put it into scenario form, and produced the picture with Hart, Janet Eastman and a bunch of the hard-looking Universal cowboys. The Mexican border is the scene of this corking Bison, which begins with pure comedy of the side-splitting sort and turns into drama by imperceptible stages. Just for good measure, there is a love story as well, and any one will acknowledge that that is a pretty good two reel's worth. Here is what happens:

Casey is with the troops on the border. The boys send him to get the key to the flag-pole and he is bawled out by the sergeant. Then they toss him a blanket. Finally he is put on sentry duty, where he imagines a burro is the Mexican army, and alarms the camp. It is then he meets the sergeant's sister. Casey is afraid to fight, so he remains behind. The girl thinks he has stayed to protect her and makes a hero of him. The boys return to take it out on Casey, and find him with the girl. They drive him away.

Casey's popularity does not increase and he is made to do the dirty work around the camp. The girl tells the boys, who are all in love with her, that she will marry the one who secures for her the Mexican blanket worn by the leader of the bandits. They all start out bravely enough, but are licked by the Mexicans and return without the blanket. They all decide to bribe Casey, but keep it a secret from each other. The result is that Casey is deluged with bribes, and decides to attempt to make good. The Mexicans have left the camp to attack the Americans. All the boys, with the exception of the sergeant, wander away with the girl for a picnic. The Mexicans arrive, overpower the sergeant, and make away with the machine gun. Casey arrives at their camp, finds the guard asleep, and puts the Mexican blanket under his coat. He finds some mescal and drinks a bottle of it.

The American captain comes on a visit of inspection and finds the outpost deserted and the gun gone. When the boys return with the girl he orders them put in the guard house. The girl pleads with the Captain to be lenient with them.

Casey, among the bandits, stands the abuse of the Mexicans until they start to trample on the girl's handkerchief, which he has long treasured. He knocks down the lot of them and starts away with Mexicans all after him. He runs to the gun, wheels it around, and turns it loose, capturing the entire Mexican army. He then ties them with a rope to the front of the machine gun and makes them pull it back across the Mexican border. He arrives in the American camp just as the boys are being taken off to the guard house. He turns the Mexicans over to the captain. The girl falls in his arms, when she discovers that he has brought the blanket as well as the gun and all the bandits.

it swings open, falls into his arms; then tells her father of the bravery of "Cheyenne."

The father offers "Cheyenne" a position and he makes good. He often sees the girl and something more than friendship seems to be growing up between them. The father sees this with alarm, as he realizes that his daughter cannot be permanently happy with the reformed outlaw. He tells Harry that he is the sort of man whom a woman either hates or loves, and asks him to make an excuse and go away. Harry pretends to the girl that the West is calling him. She is hurt at his wanting to go, and he can hardly bear to leave her. They say a hasty good-by, and part with the misunderstanding on her side uncleared. We see "Cheyenne" riding back to the wilds, hiding his bitter disappointment in his heart.

Allen Holubar in the Bluebird Photoplay "Treason."

ALLEN HOLUBAR MILITARY EXPERT

WHEN Allen Holubar was a little boy his parents and guardians and his sisters and his cousins and his aunts were quite convinced that they had a budding Napoleon on their hands, for Allen never wanted to play at anything but soldiers. As soon as he was old enough, he astonished them by going on the stage, which was a great surprise. But though he failed to fulfill the destiny that they had marked out for him, he still retained his interest in things military.

There is probably no closer student in this country of the present war, outside of the army itself, than the young director whose Bluebird photoplay, "Treason," has just been released. This is a strong military drama, with a thrilling spy complication, and the battle scenes in the first part of it have been pronounced some of the best ever filmed. The above illustration is from the picture, and shows the hero on his return from the hospital, after he has performed prodigies of valor as a field telegraphist.

In order to direct the battle scenes for "Treason," Holubar had a tall double platform erected. On the top was the camera and its attendant slave.

Molly Malone and her pig.

MOLLY MALONE FINDS NEW PET

MOLLY MALONE, featured with Mignon Anderson in the Butterfly Picture, "The Phantom's Secret," has found a new pet, which she declares to be the "cutest thing in the world." It is nothing less than a small black pig, which appeared with her in a recent picture, and from which she refuses to be separated.

"It is as clever as a dog, and I know it loves me," she said almost with tears in her eyes, when they were trying to take Mr. Piggy from her to return him to the farmer from which he had been borrowed. "I can't bear to part with it, and I'm going to tell the farmer that I'll pay him its weight in silver."

Harry Carey and his director, Fred Kelsey, on his new property.

HARRY CAREY BUYS HIMSELF A HOME

HARRY CAREY, Universal's leading player of Western roles, who is featured in the Gold Seal picture, "The Honor of an Outlaw," has recently become a householder. His company, which is directed by Fred A. Kelsey, works frequently in the neighborhood of Newhall, when they are making Western pictures. He came across a tract of land with a house and stables already built upon it, while on one of these picture expeditions, and decided to make the owner an offer for it. They quickly came to terms, and the actor moved his horses, dogs and household belongings over to the new property, and has set to work ploughing the land and planting everything he could think of.

"The simple life has always attracted me," says the actor, "and I have intended for a long time to buy a place where I could live it. While we were making a Western picture in this neighborhood, I happened to see that this place was for sale, and it did not take long to close the deal. I am getting a car so that I can make the trip to Universal City easily for work, but we shoot so many scenes in this neighborhood that I don't think I shall have to get up so very much earlier after all. Anyway, a farmer has to get up with the chickens, and I am going in for farming on as big a scale as my new property will allow. It is magnificent exercise in the first place, and it brings a substantial reward in produce of which you cannot buy the equal in the markets. Now that we are at war, it is one way of 'doing one's bit,' so I am putting the whole of my land into service for use instead of beauty."

Joker and other cars assembled at Universal City for the day's work.

SENSITIVE JOKERS SEEK SECLUSION.

YOU don't think of the Universal Jokers as temperamental, sensitive-souled, fragile creatures, whose delicate organism cannot endure the slightest jar, do you? Yet they themselves have declared that they are just such frail blossoms of humanity. It is quite impossible for them to patronize the humble, utilitarian street car, to and from their Hollywood homes to Universal City. They cannot submit to the indignity and the discomfort of being jostled by the common herd. Something in their complicated, impressionable temperaments might be disarranged by the crowding and jolting of a public conveyance. Therefore, they have a collection of private automobiles, which is valued at over ten thousand dollars.

The picture shows some of them. Of course, not all these are Joker possessions. Most of the prominent players, directors, and heads of departments at Universal City have their own machines. But it is said that there is no other company in which even the assistant director and the assistant cameraman (to the third and fourth designation) own and operate their own cars. Nearly all the featured players have homes at Ocean Park.

MANY "LITTLE STRANGERS" AT THE ZOO.

THERE are many races represented in the Universal Zoo, but there is not a hint of suicide among any of them. The birthrate among the animals is rising at a rate which would receive the "dee-lighted" approval of the Colonel himself.

One of the visitors asked the Zoo Superintendent what was new that week.

"Three baby lions, one baby leopard, four Alaskan husky puppies, and seven gray wolf cubs," he answered laconically.

The week before the new arrivals had included a baby camel, which is shown in the picture submitting gracefully to the ministrations of Louise Lovely, who is trying to still its hunger with certified milk from a bottle. She is wearing the costume in which she appears in Director Holubar's Civil War drama, "The Field of Honor." Somebody has to take care of the feeding of the small ship of the desert, as his unnatural maternal parent absolutely refuses to have anything to do with him.

"THE PHANTOM'S SECRET"

THE second Butterfly is well up to the standard of the first, but a great contrast to it. The story, adapted for the screen by J. G. Alexander and produced by Charles Swickard with Mignon Anderson, Molly Malone, Hayward Mack and a fine cast, is a blend of adventure, thrills, romance and heart-interest, which have made a most unusual scenario. The stolen identity theme is employed in a new way, and the interest is sustained until the very end of the last reel.

Jeanne de Beaulieu, only child of Count Raoul de Beaulieu, is having a confidential chat with her friend, Jane Elliot, in the garden of the Convent School. Jane is confiding to Jeanne that after she graduates she will leave for America, to make her home with an aunt whom she has never seen. Unconsciously, while conversing, Jeanne picks up a French newspaper, which she carries to their room. Later, on the quiet, the two girls pour over the thrilling account of Paris' greatest criminal, known as "The Phantom," who is terrorizing the whole city with his bold robberies. Suddenly, hearing footsteps, they realize that their light has been seen by one of the nuns and hastily extinguishing it, they cuddle under the bed covers, clinging together with fright, because of the terrible adventure they have just read.

Meanwhile, Count de Beaulieu, in Paris, is battling for his life, having been shot while making his getaway from the scene of his last escapade. His chief assistant, Franz Leroux, also a very clever crook, together with his deformed servant, commonly called "The Rat," hold his life in their hands. Leroux threatens, then insists that he send for his daughter, Jeanne, and the Count feebly assents.

Leroux slips the bracelet on Jeanne's wrist.

At the school a pajama party is in progress, when one of the nuns discovers and interrupts the fun. All expect a rebuke, but are surprised when Jeanne is told that a message from her father orders her to his bedside.

After a tender farewell to Jane, Jeanne hurries to Paris, to find her father dying. He urges that she marry Franz Leroux, but when she indignantly refuses, Leroux appears and sneeringly announces that she is no better than he, being the daughter of a convict. Confessing that he is "The Phantom," and urging her to protect his honor, the Count anxiously awaits her decision. Slowly she conquers her repugnance and bows obedience to his wishes; another moment and he falls back dead.

A year later Jeanne, now a living sacrifice to the honor of de Beaulieu, awaits her husband's return with fear and hate. With his arrival "The Rat" quietly enters and announces that the police are on their trail, and that they must leave for America immediately.

Pulling forth a handful of jewelry, Leroux smilingly selects a gold bracelet from the pile, steps to Jeanne's side, and masterfully clamps it about her wrist, explaining that he hasn't forgotten their wedding anniversary.

After they reach America, Leroux forces Jeanne to assist him in his work. As she enters a beautiful home, and nervously follows his directions, Jeanne makes her way into a strange bedroom, while Leroux goes for the library safe. Gun in hand, turning her searchlight about, it rests on the word "Paris" suddenly illuminated. A flood of memories sweeps upon her—another instant and the room is a blaze of light.

Dazed with astonishment, she gazes into the eyes of her dearest friend, Jane Elliott. Explanations follow, then cautioning Jeanne to be silent, the resourceful Jane grabs up the revolver and confronts the clever crook just as he opens the safe. Hastily summoning the butler, she orders him to get the police, and then commands Leroux to move on. Jane plans to have Jeanne accompany her to the southern home of her aunt, Mrs. Marston. Both laugh at the fact that she will not be able to tell which is her niece. Hiding in the shadows of the house, Leroux learns the girls' destination and plans to follow them.

The train is wrecked and Jane is killed. Jeanne, now almost frantic with fear and grief, decides to impersonate her friend. She removes the tell-tale bracelet, locking it about Jane's arm. Leroux hunts for the girls, spies the bracelet, and returns to his pal, telling "The Rat" that his wife was killed in the wreck, which served her right for double-crossing him.

Meantime, Jeanne has been received with open arms by Mrs. Marston and her son, Henry, who are charmed with their new relative. A house party is given in her honor, and Frank Van Dyk, a wealthy but unscrupulous bachelor, is introduced, who claims to have known Miss Elliot abroad. He is puzzled at her appearance, but keeps the mystery to himself.

As the acquaintance between Henry and Jeanne progresses, it ripens into love, but when he proposes the girl realizes the impossibility of it all. She confesses her love, but declares they never can be married. Van Dyk also proposes to Jeanne, and, on being refused, threatens to expose her, if she doesn't marry him.

Back in the city, the police's search becoming too interesting to suit his fancy, Leroux, after a quarrel with "The Rat," turns to the country for his living, and unsuspectingly picks the Marston home for his next haul. Scaling the veranda at midnight and entering a convenient boudoir, Leroux is astonished to find his former wife in the midst of an exciting conversation with Van Dyk, the latter having forced an entrance into her room. Henry hears them and enters also. He hears Leroux claim Jeanne, when a shot fired through the window kills Leroux. It is "The Rat" who fired.

Henry explains that he loves her for Jeanne alone.

OPENED TO CAPACITY.

Canadian Universal Film Co.,
Montreal, Que., Can.,

Gentlemen — "The Voice on the Wire" opened here with the house capacity, and anybody that I ask about the above serial says that it was going to be the best serial of all serials. The posters and photos are very attractive.

"The Purple Mask" is also a big hit. I am running the above two serials. Ben Wilson, the leading man, and Neva Gerber, are well liked by my audience, but Grace Cunard and Francis Ford have lots of friends in Quebec. Capacity house with both of them.

I want your next serial, "The Perils of the Secret Service," to follow "The Purple Mask." Let me know.

Yours truly,

RESULTS ARE GREAT.

Mr. Carl Laemmle, Pres.,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York.

Dear Sir—I received your very welcome letter of April 18th, congratulating me for being on the Universal Program. I want to say to you that I am very much pleased with the way the Cleveland exchange is treating me, and most of all, with the Universal service. I run a straight Universal house, and the results are great. I have run a house with nothing but features, but I find I am clearing more profit with just the Universal service. There is no mistake that it is the finest program out to-day. The exchange is doing all they can for me, and I am trying to use them right.

Thanking you for your letter, I remain,

PRAISE FOR SCREEN MAGAZINE.

Universal Screen Magazine,

Dear Sir—Allow me to extend you my heartiest congratulations for your Universal Screen Magazine, a wonderful screen production of the most interesting events in the world. It is far more attractive in its clearness and simplicity, than any other screen work on the same line. The people will "take" to your splendid screen innovation and will ask for your Universal Screen Magazine, every day, to enjoy an interesting, instructive and modern means to educate the mind and the heart.

In my enthusiasm for your Screen Magazine and realizing the immense work it can do among the people patronizing our theatres and moving picture houses, I take liberty in sending for your consideration, two suggestions for your Universal Screen Magazine.

Trusting that the Universal Screen Magazine will continue with great success in the splendid work and get the highest appreciation of the crowds I beg to remain with best wishes, WENT WILD.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,

Gentlemen—We ran the "Broken Coin," and our patrons simply went wild over Mr. Polo's work in that serial. At present we are running "Liberty," and it is simply crowding our theatre at each episode, and the people like it even better than "The Broken Coin," as Polo plays such a prominent part.

WELCOMES SPLIT PROGRAM.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,

Gentlemen—I showed your first Double Attraction, and I am of the opinion that if you put the same quality in some more split attractions, that the exhibitors should welcome the novelty of a split program, and I for my part shall certainly welcome them, as I consider same better entertainment than a five-reel story.

"LIBERTY" 100 PER CENT. BETTER THAN ANY OTHER SERIAL.

California Film Exchange, Inc.,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen—We feel that we would like to say a word of commendation for the serial "Liberty," the concluding episode of which we ran some two weeks ago, especially now that we have run two episodes of that serial which Mr. Hearst claims to be the "greatest ever," and are able to make comparisons. We have also run practically all of the big serials which have been on the market and if box-office receipts are any criterion, "Liberty" is 100 per cent. better than any other serial we have used, including the one we are showing at the present time.

"Liberty" played to capacity at our house for twenty weeks. We never hope to get another serial which will equal this record. It played to capacity in our opinion, because, first, it has a timely story and then because it is full of thrills, not one or two in an episode, but dozens of them and because of the wonderful photography and greatest of all because of the splendid work of Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo. If you could offer us another preparedness or war-time serial with them in the cast and with Henry McRae directing we would sign up at once.

We wish to thank you for the efficient service with which we have been favored through the run of this picture. With best wishes, we are,

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir—I have your letter to "Mr. Jack," but evidently for the writer, as to your productions, and am glad to state they are becoming very popular with my audiences and am pleased to be able to offer them, as it seems one can note the improvement in each one over the other. Your topics are well chosen and photography excellent.

CAN'T WAIT FOR IT.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,

New York City.

Gentlemen—As I am a reader of the Moving Picture Weekly and as I find it very interesting, I thought I would drop you a few lines. I like it so very much, I just can't wait until Monday comes, as that is the day it arrives.

Would it be too much if I ask you to print a picture of Mr. Jay Belasco and Mr. Kingsley Benedict on the cover in the near future? I would appreciate same very much. Also, could you send me the Moving Picture Weekly in which they have a chat with Mr. Lyons and Moran, as my father wants to use it for advertising matter.

We run Nestor comedies every week and our patrons like them very much. They also like Mr. Jay Belasco to co-star with Miss Lovely. We have been running most all the Universals in which they appear, and we always have a packed house. We have been running them over a year, and prove to be one of the best drawing cards on the market.

Hoping that I will receive that Moving Picture Weekly and thanking you in advance, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

READY-TO-WEAR SERVICE.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Ia.

Dear Sir—I wish to say after having used Universal Service for four consecutive years that I will probably repeat the dose if permitted to remain here. I may be swallowed up in the maelstrom of special war county and city tax, censorship, Sunday closing, operators' wages, increased rents, high cost of starving, and a million incidentals, too numerous to mention.

Frankly speaking, I believe it to be the only Ready-to-Wear Service; fulfilling all the requirements of a satisfactory diversified program, sending the fan away at all times feeling that he has received his money's worth, and as you know he is the hard one to satisfy.

SCREEN MAGAZINE IMMENSE.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
1600 Broadway, New York.

Gentlemen: We are indeed surprised at the showing the Screen Magazine is commencing to make throughout the Canadian territory. There is rarely a day passes now that inquiries are not received from exhibitors throughout the Province as to dates, prices and so forth on this interesting Weekly.

The idea is immense and all subjects have been good. It hits every class of audience, and is a little thousand feet of film that Universal should be proud of.

The progressive exhibitor is commencing to realize this is a class of one-reel subject that his audience will look for from week to week. It is now being placed in this territory in nearly all houses, and is taking the place of the Mutual release of "Real Life" in this territory so much so that the Mutual have discontinued buying their copy.

I thought this little word of praise could be handed out by you to the staff behind the movement.

With best wishes, we are,

No short series ever turned out by any film company on earth can surpass this 7 Episode series, "The Perils of the Secret Service"

The writer of this advertisement actually witnessed the occurrence of this very incident. A BIG five-reel feature was shown at a 2000-seat house in Harlem, N. Y. It flopped badly. Next was shown an episode of "THE PERILS OF THE SECRET SERVICE" series. Where the feature flopped, the episode of "THE PERILS OF THE SECRET SERVICc" was greeted with applause and received applause at the finish. The BIG feature lost this Exhibitor $85.00. VIOLET MERSEREAU Breaks Broadway Theatre Attendance Record

IN spite of the fact that Violet Mersereau, Bluebird star, played a number of years on legitimate stage, notably in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," before entering the world of the screen, she made her first pernosal appearance as a screen star before an audience last Monday night. Her hesitancy was caused by the number of stars she has seen go on a stage and "flop." Miss Mersereau's personal appearance, however, was one of keenest enjoyment to herself and pleasure to her audience. It took place at Marcus Loew's Broadway Theatre, Brooklyn, on Monday night, and was made in connection with "Little Miss Nobody," the current Bluebird picture which is playing all of the Marcus Loew houses.

"It's an easy thing for any actress," said Miss Mersereau, "to speak lines written for her in character, but it is quite different to get up before an audience which wants to see what you really look like, and hear what you really have to say to them. As a matter of fact, you have very little to say, except, 'Good evening, I am glad I am here, and I am glad you are there. Good night.' I have refused countless times to make appearances with my pictures until Mr. Loew asked me personally to make a tour of his houses in connection with 'Little Miss Nobody.' He said I could make a patriotic speech, and I worked hard on it, because I am proud of my French descent and of my American citizenship, and I want to show it. So I wrote a little speech all my own. It was not very long, but they seemed to like it, and I enjoyed the experience, although it was a tempestuous one. I never had such difficulty getting into and out of a theatre in my life as I did on Monday night at the Broadway, and the other Loew theatres were almost as densely packed as that one."

When Miss Mersereau arrived near the Broadway Theatre it was discovered that all of the approaches to the theatre were so congested with people who were anxious to see the little Bluebird star, that it was absolutely impossible even to approach the entrance. The uniformed attendants of the theatre were helpless, and it was necessary for Mr. Granlund to summon the ushers of another theatre, and it is worthy of note that most of them were ex-pugilists, to form a flying wedge in order to save Miss Mersereau from her admirers, and get her inside the theatre doors. Coming out there was another scramble, and in it Miss Mersereau lost portions of her scarf and chiffon dress to several who wanted souvenirs of her visit. Incidentally, the Broadway Theatre broke its house record all to smithereens for attendance for any day except a holiday.

Violet Mersereau's very latest picture.

BLUEBIRD'S NEW DIRECTOR

FOR the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Flashlight," Dorothy Phillips, whose splendid work in recent releases has won for her a prominent place among the "fixed stars," was under the direction of a new producer. All her recent work has been under Joseph De Grasse, from scenarios prepared for them by his wife, known to the profession as Ida May Park. When "The Flashlight" was under consideration, De Grasse was just about to set out on a well-earned vacation. His wife, who has co-operated with him in all his Bluebird pictures, was given the opportunity of proving her skill as an independent director. She went to work with the company composed of Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell and Lon Chaney, on the story which was written by Albert M. Treynor for the All-Story Magazine, for which she had also prepared the scenario, thus taking her place among the very few women directors of motion pictures.

The company was taken to one of the most picturesque parts of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, where they lived for several weeks, while scenes were taken amid exteriors of unusual beauty. Miss Phillips and Stowell had many scenes in a canoe, and as neither of them had mastered the art of paddling, they had to do a great deal of practising before the order came to "Shoot." A character new to the screen is that of Jack Lane, played by Stowell, who is a photographed of wild animals in their natural haunts. Mr. Stowell in real life is an ardent amateur photographer, and the camera that he carries in the picture was really loaded with plates most of the time. He brought home beautiful views of the woods and streams as a souvenir of the trip.

Realism Extraordinary in "Like Wildfire"

VISITORS to Universal City have to see that their capacity for wonder is in good working order, or they are in danger of its suffering a severe strain. Scenes from every period of history, and from all the four quarters of the globe are being enacted all around them, while the sets in which the action is taking place are so realistic that it seems as if one were taking a ride on the magic carpet of the fairy story. Some of the stage settings are so exactly like the real thing that the visitors are deceived. There was a case in point during the making of the Butterfly Picture, "Like Wildfire," in which Herbert Rawlinson is starred. Many of the scenes are laid in a village five- and ten-cent store, and a perfect representation of one was constructed with counters, piled with goods, signs, posters, a mechanical piano playing the latest ragtime, salesgirls, cashgirls, and all the hundred and one details which go to make up a nickel and dime emporium. Two women visitors were overheard discussing the set. One of them said:

"I wonder what this place is for?"

And the other replied:

"Oh, that's a place for the actors and actresses to buy things they need, I suppose. They certainly do have everything out here, don't they?"

Rawlinson, who overheard the remark, said to his leading lady, Neva Gerber:

"Well, there's realism for you, when visitors take our set for the real thing."

"Like Wildfire" is one of the modern sort of pictures, in which a love story is interwoven with business, so that it is like a real chapter from life.

It affords a delightful opportunity for the display of the talent for light comedy which is the distinguishing characteristic of Herbert Rawlinson.

"A GOOD LITTLE BAD BOY"—L-KO

The bad little boy is exiled.

His chance to earn forgiveness.

VIN MOORE and J. G. Blystone co-operated to give Phil Dunham one of the best chances he has ever had in the two-reel L-Ko, "The Good Little Bad Boy." Whether he is stealing pie from his little sister, or rescuing his station-master father from being smashed to death by an express train, Phil is funny. When he is converted by Salvation Liz and her accordion, he is a scream. Something like this takes place, and a perfectly good railroad station was destroyed to give the final punch.

Phil is the black sheep of the family. He steals pie from his little sister, and breaks her Teddy Bear. When he makes her cry, her parents try to pacify her by putting money in her bank, and then Phil schemes to steal her bank. For this pa kicks him out, and he wanders into the cruel world.

Claude Worcestershire and Tobasco Lil have read in the paper that the station master is to receive a consignment of $2,000,000. This determines them to stop at Beetville. Phil is in the billiard parlor when the villain and villainess arrive. The sheriff throws Bill out. and falls a victim to the charms of Lil. Phil enters a saloon, where he vainly tries to take some free lunch from the counter. But the proprietor has a sliding cover for it which works by a push button and Phil is foiled. Salvation Liz appears with her concertina, and starts right in to convert Phil. She is successful, and he joins in the singing. She leads him to his home and begs forgiveness for him. Unfortunately he meets Tobasco Lil, who decoys him into going for a walk.

L—KO KOMEDY, featuring Phil Dunham, who does all those things he ought not to do and leaves undone the rest. Directed by Vin Moore and supervised by J. G. Blystone.

CAST.

The Black Sheep	Phil Dunham
Salvation Liz	Merta Sterling
Claude Worcestershire	Charles Inslee
Tobasco Lil	Lucille Hutton

She gets him to climb a tree for her, and goes off and leaves him there. Then she tries the same tactics on his father, the station master, so that Claude can get to the safe. Phil manages to get down by sawing off the bough and falling with it.

In the meantime Claude has opened the safe, and is waiting for Lil to make a getaway. Phil, however, has converted Lil, and she leads him to the station to fight Claude. While they fight she gets into the safe with their guns. Claude ties a rope to the safe, after knocking out Phil, and tying him to the track. He jumps on a passing train, and the safe pulls the whole station after the train, while Claude holds the rope. Salvation Liz saves Phil, and on a hand car they pursue the flying station. Phil climbs on the roof and cuts the rope. He drags Lil out of the safe just as a train comes and crashes through station and all.

L-KOMIUMS

J. G. BLYSTONE, the director general of the L-Ko Komedies, has completed three original stories which he has turned over to the directors of the company for production.

Dan Russell, under the direction of Noel Smith, is working on a picture called "Beach Nuts." He assumes the role of a life-saver, and there were so many thrilling scenes incorporated in the action that he had to live up to his title in earnest.

Vin Moore, directing the English comedian, Phil Dunham, has just completed a department store L-Ko called "Dry Goods and Damp Doings." One of the largest department store owners in Los Angeles visited the set in the course of the picture's making, and declared that if it were not for the banks of lights, he would think himself in his own store.

Dick Smith is working on a two-reel comedy, the title of which has not been decided upon. He is now directing Robert McKenzie.

EPISODE 10

Two scenes from "The Guarded Heart."

"The VOICE on the WIRE"

"THE GUARDED HEART" is the title of the tenth installment of the Mystery Serial adapted from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball by J. G. Alexander and produced by Stuart Paton, with Ben Wilson starred.

CAST.

Shirley	Ben Wilson
Polly	Neva Gerber
"Red" Warren	Francis MacDonald
Renolds	Jos. Girard
Cronin	Howard Crampton
"Pale" Ida	Evelyn Selby
James Welsh	Wadsworth Harris

"THE GUARDED HEART" is the suggestive title of the tenth chapter of "The Voice on the Wire" which is still an impenetrable mystery with no hint of solution. Stuart Paton continues to hide the secret so that the author himself, Eustace Hale Ball, would find it difficult to find it. Ben Wilson proves himself more and more at home in the character of Shirley, the baffled investigator.

"Red" is warned that the second special is following them and he quickly instructs his men to unhook the rear coach and leave it on the track while the other coaches go on; the second special will collide with the deserted coach. When Cronin orders the train stopped, it is just in time to prevent the collision and this the engineer reports to them immediately. There is no way to go on, so Cronin and his men hurry on foot to the next station and there force a chauffeur to drive them to the city.

Polly is put in an auto with Renolds and the crooks and they hasten to "Frisco" Ida's gambling house, where Polly is locked in a room and Renolds is kept bound. Polly is now hopeless and lies on the bed in utter dejection. "Red" and Ida sneer at her misery. Finally they force Polly to speak through the phone to James Welsh, a man of about fifty, who shows the marks of a von-vivant. She has to tell him she will keep her engagement and that she will call for him at his place. But she is determined she will not concede to "Red's" orders further. She is again put in the room. Warren and Ida are afraid that she may give away their game. Then "The Voice" informs them that Polly will be there.

Shirley at last arrives at Welsh's apartment, and with his cloak wrapped well around his figure and face hurries in. Welsh greets him and laughs as he looks at the cloak. Shirley tells him "The Voice" has threatened to get him if he leaves his apartment that night, but Welsh merely laughs. Then the phone rings and Welsh hears Renold's voice telling him not to go out without Polly in person; that he fears Shirley is delayed. When Shirley snatches the phone and tries to find out more details, he can get no connection.

Renolds, sitting near the phone in Ida's apartment, has succeeded in knocking it over and then rolling onto the floor, and has been able to send the message. Now he finds that he cannot loosen himself and lies on the floor in an exhausted condition.

"The Voice" now tells Shirley that "It" was on the wire; to remember eight o'clock. Getting a promise from Welsh that he won't leave without Polly herself, Shirley hurriedly leaves the apartment and is attacked by Cronin and his men, who have also come to the apartment, for they do not recognize him. Questioning the double-crossing crook, Shirley learns that "Red" has taken Polly to "Frisco" Ida's gambling house and they all start for that place, Cronin's machine following Shirley's.

It is now eight o'clock. Polly lies on the bed, her eyes closed; she is exhausted. Slowly the mysterious hand appears and starts toward her throat. She stirs restlessly while the fingers of the hand extend toward her.

MAKING "THE VOICE."

"THERE'S a man overboard—stop the boat!" excitedly cried a passenger on the steamer President while that vessel was plowing its course through the waters of the Pacific from San Pedro to San Diego a few days ago.

"There goes another man overboard!" exclaimed another passenger. "Look," he continued, "my God! still another!" as two men leaped from the rail into the ocean.

Word was conveyed immediately to the captain, who was about to give orders to reverse the engines and have a boat lowered over the side, when suddenly he recalled that the Universal Film Manufacturing Company had one of its little bands of players aboard and these people under the direction of Stuart Paton were making the scenes for a picture.

Bluebird Ideas

"TREASON" contains a powerful story of the consequences that come as the result of a weak man's folly and selfishness. It contains a moral that will strike home to every individual who seeks immediate reward for doing that which is nothing more than his plain duty.

Since the production is of a military nature, imbue your advertising with a military atmosphere. If you can borrow a machine gun from your local militia organization, place it in your lobby. Rifles and similar apparatus should also be displayed.

A novel idea for a teaser newspaper campaign consists in using the following copy in your ad about four days before the picture is presented:

"There is treason in this city. All faithful, loyal citizens beware!" Three days before the picture is shown, insert the following copy in your ad: "It is your duty and the duty of every red-blooded American to be on the lookout for treason!" Then, two days before the showing, come out with this announcement: "To-morrow we will prove that treason does exist. To-morrow we will specifically state where it can be found. Citizens, wait and watch—watch and wait!" On the day prior to the presentation, come out with a smashing ad running something like this: "Here is 'Treason'—the greatest war story ever filmed." Then go on and describe the production, using the copy already prepared for you by the Bluebird advertising department.

You might dress a man up in the uniform of a foreign soldier and have him parade through the streets, carrying the following sign: "See 'Treason' at the (name of theatre here), the greatest war story ever filmed. Shown on (day and date here) performances at (hours of showing here)."

Another attention-attracting stunt is to have a man dressed as a foreign soldier parade up and down in front of your house as though he were doing sentry duty. Or, he might walk the length of the entire block. This would attract the attention of the people walking up and down the cross streets. Red fire burned in front of your house at intervals during the evening will bring people to see what is going on.

Mr. Exhibitor—The following copy, multigraphed or printed on a postal and mailed to the people in your community will bring you business that otherwise might go to your opposition. If you are a busy man and haven't the time to work up a mail campaign, ask the publicity man at the nearest Bluebird Exchange to lay out a direct advertising campaign for you. He will be glad to help you. This assistance is free.

CHAIRMAN OF NAVAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE DISCOVERS NEW NAVAL ASSET.

"EVERYTHING under the sun," remarked Congressman L. P. Padgett, Chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, as he and the other members of the Committee were taking a trip through the vast property rooms at Universal City. "But," he added, "there is one thing lacking and that is a submarine. Of course, though, a submarine would be the last thing on earth one would expect to find here."

"Really?" questioned his conductor with a suspicion of a twinkle in his eye, as the little party moved out of the property rooms and visited one of the nearby stages. Drawing aside the backings, was disclosed to the view of the party an under-the-sea set, and there, resting on the ocean's bottom was a submarine used in a Joker burlesque.

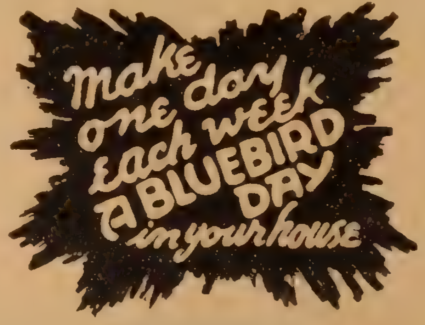
A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

"LIKE WILDFIRE."

THE action of this Butterfly Picture is mainly laid in a ten-cent store, but this angle has not been brought out in the title for the very reason that it does not lend itself to advertising as some other title might. Herbert Rawlinson, who plays the lead in this picture, is a young man who does things like Wildfire, and he has an automobile which is geared up to ninety miles an hour. This might be taken as a symbol for the photoplay if you can find a racy looking little speedster which you can hire, put a sign "Like Wildfire" on it, and get a young man in the latest sporting togs, and tells him to drive as fast as the laws permit.

"BEACH NUTS."

BEACH NUTS," as the title suggests, is a picture taken at the seashore. It is an L-Ko. At this particular time of the year it will make a very good lobby display for any theatre. You might get in touch with a dry-goods department store, and let them put some of their bathing-suit manikins in your window, and if you make an arrangement for doing a little co-operative advertising with them, you ought to get very good results.



EXHIBITORS!
When you put over one of these stunts, take a picture of it and sends us the details.—EDITOR.

"DROPPED FROM THE CLOUDS."

THE Bison feature for this week, "Dropped from the Clouds," has a great deal to do with an aeroplane, and if you can find an aeroplane model in your town or city, or construct something that looks like one, it will illustrate the title of this picture as well as anything else. This bunch of cowboys goes to sleep on an aeroplane after taking a couple of drinks of what the salesman told them was Turkish Opal, and they have a wonderful adventure in a Turkish city, wafted there from the aeroplane from which they are dropped into the scene after their dream.

"A 44-CALIBRE MYSTERY."

THE Gold Seal is entitled, "A 44-Calibre Mystery," and if you have an extra large Colt revolver, or several of them, you could make a lobby display of this which would be effective.

Screen Magazine No. 19

Scenes from U. S. Gov. Aviation School.

THE great skill required to make cut glass is demonstrated in Number 19 of the Screen Magazine. The design is painted on the crystal and then cut in with steel grinders. Then the raw edges are buffed on a wheel to remove roughness, and the glass is coated with a film of wax, to protect it when it is dipped into an acid bath to remove all surface impurities. After this it is polished, and is then ready for sale.

One of the Government Aviation Schools gave permission to the Screen Magazine cameraman to set up his tripod and make a record of what is being done to prepare airmen for our army. Compared to the European flying corps, our aviation department is almost negligible, but this deplorable condition is being remedied. Hundreds of young men have volunteered to fly for Uncle Sam, and the process of their instruction is interestingly revealed in the Screen Magazine. First the students must familiarize themselves with the construction of the machine in the most minute detail. The mechanism is most intricate and the would-be aviator must be absolute master of it. We are shown some of the details of the construction, including the 125-h. p. engine which has a speed of 120 miles an hour. Actual work on the airplane follows the study of construction. At first the student merely rides in the observer's seat, watching the instructor as he controlls the machine.

A modern Paul Revere is the man who takes his place on horseback on "Death Avenue," the most dangerous thoroughfare in Greater New York, where the trains run right through the street, and the pedestrians are warned of their approach by the man with his red flag.

Life's simplest children are shown as the inhabitants of a drop of pond water, magnified thousands of times by a powerful microscope lens. The tiny beings which then become visible have a tremendously long name. They are called "Paramoecia Caudata," and belong to one of the first forms of animal life. We see them as minute organisms only when they have been magnified 60,000 times! They are the invisible scavengers of our lakes and ponds, for they have voracious appetites, and are always eating. Their life is beset with terrors, for there is a worm, not as big as the point of a pin which preys upon them. After one of its enemies dies, the tiny beings collect to devour its carcass. The 19th Issue ends with a "Miracle in Mud," by Willie Hopkins, who makes the modeled cartoons in clay for the screen magazine; one of its unique features.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE

The One Reel Feature That Is Demanded by Patrons Every Week

After the movie fans have seen one release of the Universal Screen Magazine YOU WILL HAVE TO SHOW IT EVERY WEEK. It was intended to be released every two weeks. It made such an instantaneous hit that we were forced to release it every week to meet the demand of Fans, Exhibitors and Exchange Managers. That is proof of its pulling quality.

On the Regular Universal
Program or Booked Separately

Book it now and BOOK IT FOR THE DULLEST DAY OF THE WEEK. It will draw the people into your theatre when all else fails. It appeals to men, women and children. You ought to know all about it. Send for FREE booklet which tells you what you need to know. Write any Universal Exchange, or UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE, 1600 Broadway, New York.

THEY DEMAND IT

Will You Answer Questions, Mr. E

What do you do when you have a costly feature that's a fine production, but with a weak title that doesn't pull the crowds ?

What do you do after you have spent a barrel of money advertising a big feature and then it rains all day ?

What do you do when only half the crowds you may attract to a big feature are unable to get in to see it ?

What answer comes to your mind when, on losing out on your costly feature, you are repacking the films for reshipment ?

When you have a good feature with a weak title and you fail to get the money with it, you often resolve to book pictures that only have strong titles irrespective of whether the picture is good, bad or indifferent. Isn't that often so? And what is the result? Your patrons get to know your house as the "hit or miss" house—the "Take a chance" house, and they come only once in a while, instead of regularly, and you lose.

What do you do with your costly feature when it rains? You lose out, don't you? Sure you do, for people figure: "Well, it's raining tonight, let's not go out tonight; we'll see that picture advertised tonight in Smith's Theatre tomorrow night at Jones' Theatre." and Jones gets the crowds and the benefit of your advertising. And what do you do when a big feature attracts such big crowds that you can only accommodate half the people? You lose the money of the people who can't get in, don't you? And what's your answer to these problems.

—as listed and briefly described here below. If you can arrange to see these productions at your local BLUEBIRD exchange—DO SO—if not, book either or all on our recommendation. Book them for MORE than one day. Play them for several days. Here's the climax of opportunity NOW. Join the throng of Exhibitors who are GETTING THE MONEY with these 4 tremendous BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS.

"EAGLE'S WINGS"

is as far ahead of the average jingo, sham battle and studio "war" picture as it is possible to imagine.

It received the heartiest endorsement of the highest officials in Washington, D. C., when shown them at a private view. It has received the same through their National President from 1,500 Chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

"The BUGLER of ALGIERS" is one of the most notable pictures ever filmed, regardless of subject. It is from that intensely absorbing story by Robert H. Davis and Perley Poore Sheehan, called "We Are French." It reaches the greatest heights of heroic patriotism, and will thrill and sway any audience that ever attended a theatre.

"TREASON"

is a tremendous picture that for real heart-interest; for tense scenes that will stir the emotions to their depths; for convincing and faithful pictures of modern warfare—will perhaps never be surpassed. Featuring that brilliant young BLUEBIRD star Allen Holubar; beautiful Lois Wilson and stalwart Jos. Girard, it presents a story that will get the sympathy of the audience at the very start and hold it.

"BEHIND THE LINES"

featuring Harry Carey and Edith Johnson, is a timely picture of Mexican intrigue, love, adventure and of actual conditions along the Mexican Border. It is thrilling; abounds in the truest atmosphere, faithful in every detail; it will make a hit in any community.

Every Exhibitor Should Read Every Word Every Week

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

"Money Madness." With Mary MacLaren and Eddie Polo. A Picturization of one of the famous Whispering Smith Stories by Frank H. Spearman. Fourth Butterfly Release. Directed by Henry McRae. Released May 28. Maybe the Butterfly pictures aren't showing some class, what? If there are two more popular or more able players than the featured stars in this big picture you'll have to think hard and long to name them. And the story has been read by several millions of fans. It is all about certain supposedly clever tricks in the financial game—and it holds the interest at the tensest point for five full reels. Mary is the daughter of a bank president who is opposed by all the bank's directors, and when in the beginning of the story there is a run on the bank, there are some of the biggest scenes ever filmed. And right up to the climax there are punches that get over big. This is a picture that you can boost till the cows come home. It will please every patron in your neighborhood and make them ask for more Butterfly Pictures.

"The Gunman's Gospel." With Jack Mulhall. One Reel Victor East and West Drama. Directed by Raymond Wells. Released May 29. Can you show me any other program on earth that gives you one-reel subjects that are so big and strong that they can be featured like a five-reeler? Absolutely not. Think of it. Here on the regular Universal Program Service you get a big popular star; a strong and original dramatic plot and a supporting cast such as you usually see in the biggest productions. Jack is an Eastern "gunman," who finds it wise to go West. He lands in a frontier town on the stage with a preacher and his daughter. The roughnecks tell the preacher to get out. Jack takes the town marshall's badge away from him and covers the crowd in the dance hall while the preacher delivers a sermon. For sheer novelty and for swift dramatic action this one-reeler is stronger than the average feature. It will please your patrons. Book it.

"By Speshul Delivery." Featuring Little Zoe Rae, with Gertrude Aster and Val Paul. One Reel Victor Heart-Interest Drama. Directed by Geo. Sargent. Released June 1. There is no cleverer child actor living than little Zoe Rae. In this pretty story she is given ample opportunity to display her powers, and she rises to the occasion in a manner that will delight your patrons. Briefly, she is "little Miss Fixit," and brings two estranged hearts together in a most unusual manner. Everybody that comes to your theatre will like this picture, and you can boost it as strong as you would a long subject.

"No. 10 Westbound." With Kingsley Benedict, Eileen Sedgwick and an all-star cast. Two Reel 101-Bison Railroad Drama. Directed by Henry McRae. Released June 2. Here is a typical Henry McRae picture and that means, punch, punch. It means that there are thrills galore and swift action plus. It tells the story of a series of railroad holds-ups, and how the chief of the railroad secret service, disguised as a hobo, runs down the gang. There is a pretty love story woven into the tale, and the production is lavish. This is the kind of picture that your patrons enjoy. Book this and boost it hard.

"20,000 Leagues Under the Sea"

"20,000 LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA" is bringing home more money to State Rights Buyers and Exhibitors than any feature in a decade. In several big Eastern Houses it was necessary to start the matinees advertised at 2.00 P.M. at 11:00 A. M. to accommodate the crowds that strung out for over two city blocks waiting to get in. This is happening in scores and scores of theatres. If that interests you, Mr. Exhibitor, write or wire for direct bookings in the following unsold States—Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Indiana, Kentucky, Oklahoma.

These unsold states as advertised above will be sold within the next few days. Quick action is absolutely necessary on the part of State Rights men who want to get in on this "gold mine." No feature you ever handled ever presented such tremendous present and repeat bookings as "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," which will be as good for bookings, 2, 3, 4, or 5 years from today as it is right now. Consider that carefully and wire for terms on the territory still open. Exhibitors—write or wire collect to the Universal Film Mfg. Co., 1600 Broadway, New York City, for bookings on

Gentlemen:

The BLUEBIRD Pictures that we have used seem to have more than pleased our patrons. We just finished running "The Clock" four days, and will say that such entertaining stories of this kind ought to go over in any class of theatre. The tendency seems to be that the public wants lively stories of human appeal, devoid of "smut," mystery and murders.

Very truly yours, (Signed) L. H. BECHT, Mgr.

The success of BLUEBIRD Photoplays is proven by the hundreds and hundreds of Exhibitors who have similarly expressed themselves. BLUEBIRD Photoplays ARE clean and wholesome and devoid of "smut." They are the kind that make people like to go to the movies. The most successful Exhibitors in the country are those who are not only showing BLUEBIRDS, but who show them regularly on a certain day each week. "START A BLUEBIRD DAY IN YOUR HOUSE."

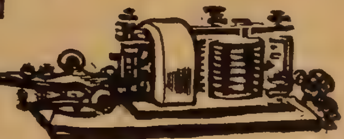
of A Great Serial or a Great Series

Either One Will Bring You Capacity

"The VOICE on the WIRE"

The tremendous Universal Surprise Mystery Serial that has captured the country with its novel plot; the muffled figure; the ghostly "voice" over a disconnected telephone; the rivalry between the chief of detectives and the scientific investigator, John Shirley—and the fascinating love affair between Shirley (BEN WILSON) and Polly Marion (beautiful Neva Gerber). Founded on the famous novel of the same name by Eustace Hale Ball, "THE VOICE ON THE WIRE" found an eager public awaiting its first episode. Everywhere Exhibitors report "capacity." Book it through any Universal Exchange, or from the Home Office, and clean up.

"The PERILS of the SECRET SERVICE"



The thrilling series, which depicts the inner workings of the Secret Service, and the dangers to its intrepid operatives. Founded on the "Yorke Norroy" series, already popular with millions in story form as written by George Bronson Howard, directed by Mr. Howard and featuring Kingsley Benedict, "The Perils" offers a rare opportunity to Exhibitors who do not care to book a serial, but who do welcome continued capacity business. Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—I have your letter asking what I think about your Bluebird pictures. The best answer to it is the fact that WE ARE USING BLUEBIRDS IN ALL OF OUR 14 CHICAGO THEATRES. These theatres represent too much of an investment for us to take any gamble on what kind of pictures we show, so you can see that we must think highly of Bluebirds.

But what we consider even more important than what we think of your photoplays is what the people think. And it is a pleasure to assure you that our patrons are delighted with Bluebirds, especially since you have hit your stride and are showing a constant improvement week after week, instead of going up and down in quality the way so many producers have done in the past.

Your stories are always good, your photographic and lighting effects are unequalled, your casts are exceedingly well chosen, your settings, acting and directing are above criticism. But, best of all, the people like Bluebirds and always have a good word to say for them. Keep them as clean in the future as you have in the past and accept the congratulations of, yours sincerely, ASCHER BROTHERS.

TUM - TE - TUM - TUM!

(No. 178. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

THE other night I attended a theatre where a five-reel war picture was being shown. It was a fairly good picture, but it was almost entirely ruined by the namby-pamby-wishy-washy music that the orchestra ground out.

One of the scenes showed a drummer boy, calling the villagers of a little French town to arms by marching up the street and banging on his drum. With half way decent music it was the kind of scene that would send cold shivers of ecstatic patriotism scooting up and down the spinal column.

But the orchestra never changed its tune. It went right on with a monotonous tum-te-tum-tum. Never a change of tempo. Never a bit of phrasing. Never a drum beat or a smash on the piano to fit the scene.

The best brains in the world of art and literature and play-writing are given nowadays to the preparation of great moving pictures. Young fortunes are spent to produce every scene properly. Masterpieces are turned out one after another. And then—

They are projected in a theatre where the orchestra doesn't give a Tinker's dam, where the piano player is gumming a mouthful of Wrigley's and the drummer and violin players are dreaming away the hours.

Rothapfel of the Rialto owes the major part of his phenomenal success to the fact that he has always used his brains in staging his shows. He pays more attention to proper music than any showman in America. And his theatre is an amazing success, as a result.

Don't you know that these are stirring times? Don't you know that you can give your audiences a real thrill if you will only put some guts or some brains or some pep into your music? Listen to the music in your theatre today and see if it emphasizes the picture or spoils it.

The people of America WANT to be stirred up. They are eagerly expecting a thrill. They want you to WAKE THEM UP. If your music is asleep, it's a sure sign that YOU'RE ASLEEP yourself. Get out the old ginger bottle and give yourself a shot of it. Then give your orchestra a poke in the nose and wake it up!

And then take every dollar you make and buy Liberty bonds!

Sleeping on an airplane brings queer dreams.

SOMETHING new in dream stories is this Bison comedy-drama, with a mixture of Western-Oriental-comedy-melodrama flavors, which make it a unique release. It was written by W. B. Pearson and produced by the famous Henry McRae, who never misses a chance for a laugh or a thrill in the whole two thousand feet. Here is the story:

A western saloon sells more liquor than a distillery can make, and a salesman, to fill the heavy demand, tries to introduce a new drink (Turkish Opal) into the town. The saloonkeeper agrees to take one thousand cases if the boys like it and the two await the arrival of customers.

The boys from the Bar U, five in number, are towing to town an aeroplane which has broken down. They arrive in town in time to have the salesman try his "Turkish Opal" on them. The drink wins favor at once and they then return to resume the towing. The drink is potent and is all the salesman claims it to be.

Returning to the plane, one of the boys points to the ground where a turkish rug appears. They decide to see how it feels to sit in an aeroplane; and the machine gently rises with them. They approach a town, and on close view it proves to be a typical Turkish City. The streets are crowded with Turks who all stop and look up at the machine. Then the boys crash through the roof into a palace room, where a beautiful woman is discovered.

They win her favor and she becomes their guide as they leave to inspect the city. They meet the King who asks them to step into the anteroom. They bow, and back into the room into an opening in the floor, and come shooting down into a wild-beast arena. The sides are lined with cages full of lions; one boy says "Daniel ain't goin' to have nothin' on us, very soon," and they realize they are in a tight fix. Their fair guide aids them to escape.

While going up the street, a big auto swings around the corner with an American girl in it, evidently a captive. Their guide suddenly stops, and shows them a train approaching. One of the boys grabs her and they then watch an express tear down the main street. A note flutters to their feet from a high window. It is from the American girl asking for help. They determine to rescue her, and a fight ensues. They are just escaping with her when their dream comes to an abrupt end. They accuse the new drink and return furiously to the saloon resolved to run the salesman out of town.

BARNEY'S MILK DIET.

BARNEY is the name of the baby camel at the Universal City zoo. The little animal is now six weeks old and is still taking the bottle, Mother Baldy steadfastly refusing to pay any attention to her long-necked, long-legged child. Barney's daily diet consists of eight pint bottles of milk.

The next morning Lane learns that Brixton has been murdered and the sheriff, John Peterson, arrests him because his footprints coincide with the prints near the cabin of the recluse. These prints are Lane's, but they were made when he came to the cabin and was turned away by Brixton. Lane continues to protect the picture.

That night they stop at Barclay's cabin in the mountains and while Peterson is sleeping, Barclay guarding Lane, the latter pretends to take a picture of the old man and instead, causes an explosion which fills the room with smoke. Lane escapes from Ferguson, and his followers, typical crude mountaineers, determined to lynch the murderer, rush to the cabin just after Lane has left.

Lane jumps into a canoe and paddles furiously down the river pursued by the two groups of men. Approaching some rocks, the canoe capsizes. Clutching a paddle, Lane flounders about on the rocks, finally crawling out of the water. When morning comes, Lane is awakened by the heat of the sun and sees the girl of the picture standing over him. She still carries the rifle. They start down the river but later discover that they are in a trap, for men are coming from both directions of the river. So they beach their canoe and start through the forest. They are lost and soon suffering from lack of food. Lane goes to hunt for food and finds that they have unconsciously returned to the scene of the murder. When he returns to her, he relates how he happens to be accused of murdering Brixton and she begins to sob.

Looking at the camera plate, Lane has discovered that the girl could not have fired the shots as she was going in the opposite direction to Brixton's cabin. Now on further study, he finds that in developing the picture, he has reversed the plate, thus reversing the direction in which she was going. He destroys the plate, but keeps the picture.

COLONEL BRADY HEADS SCENARIO DEPARTMENT.

COL. JASPER EWING BRADY, magazine writer and playwright, has become head of Universal's scenario department and has left for the coast to take complete charge. "Cleanliness and a departure from war-time pictures is what we need, no sex stuff, no religious stuff, pictures that any mother's sixteen-year-old daughter could see," said Colonel Brady. "There should enter now a combination of commercial efficiency and artistic economy. Either element alone is deadly. The combination will see the biggest factor for good that pictures have yet known. Another thing, army

[illegible] Eltinge Theatre, will produce Colonel Brady's play, "It Is the Law" in September, and he has just signed a contract with a producing company to present "The Philanthropist."

A little story of Colonel Brady's answer to a prominent woman writer who asked him what type of scenario he would consider for production by the Universal Film Company, illustrates the aim and purpose of the Universal Scenario Department under his management.

"What kind of stories do you want?" she asked.

"Have you children?" asked Colonel Brady, in return.

"Yes, a daughter of fourteen and a son of sixteen," answered the author.

"There's your answer," said the colonel. "Give the Universal stories which you would be willing to have these children see, and there will be no trouble with censorship. Let the authors be their own censors.

"The Universal," continued Colonel Brady, "has a diversified program, and therefore our scenario needs are many. We want comedies, dramas, and comedy-dramas of one, two, three and five reels. Good stories of any length, with wholesome atmosphere about them, will always be welcome."

"THE FLASHLIGHT," the Bluebird Photoplay in which Dorothy Phillips is starred, with William Stowell and Lon Chaney as usual in her support, is the first picture to be directed by Mrs. De Grasse, known to the screen as Ida May Park, who has written most of the scenarios which her husband has produced for Bluebird. The story in this cast was not her own, being adapted from a tale by Albert M. Treynor which appeared in the All Story Weekly. De Grasse was just starting on a vacation as this story was prepared for the screen, and his wife, who has co-operated with him in many releases, was given an opportunity to prove her qualifications for the slim ranks of women picture-producers. She has won a place for herself with this single release, and the plan is now for her to alternate with De Grasse in the production of five-reel features with Miss Phillips' company. This story was produced in the mountains among some of the loveliest of Californian scenery, and received high praise from the advance showings in New York and Chicago. Here is a synopsis of the story:

Jack Lane, a wealthy sportsman, with a love of adventure, takes a trip through the Northern forest to photograph wild animals. He stops at the cabin of Porter Brixton, the recluse of Crayportage, but the hermit unceremoniously tells him to move on. That night, sitting by his campfire, his camera adjusted so that the moving of a certain twig will snap the picture, he is startled by a weird, smothered cry which is immediately followed by the exploding of the flashlight. He sees something white pass by, but upon searching, finds nothing to substantiate the scream. He closes the shutter of the camera and hastily packs his knapsack. While thus engaged, he is again shocked by the twice repeated report of a gun.

Returning to the lodge, Lane begins to develop the plate and is astonished to see the picture of a beautiful girl, in an attitude suggesting flight, and on her face an expression of anxiety and fear. She clutches desperately at a rifle. He has an instinctive feeling to let no one see the plate and hides it carefully in his pocket.

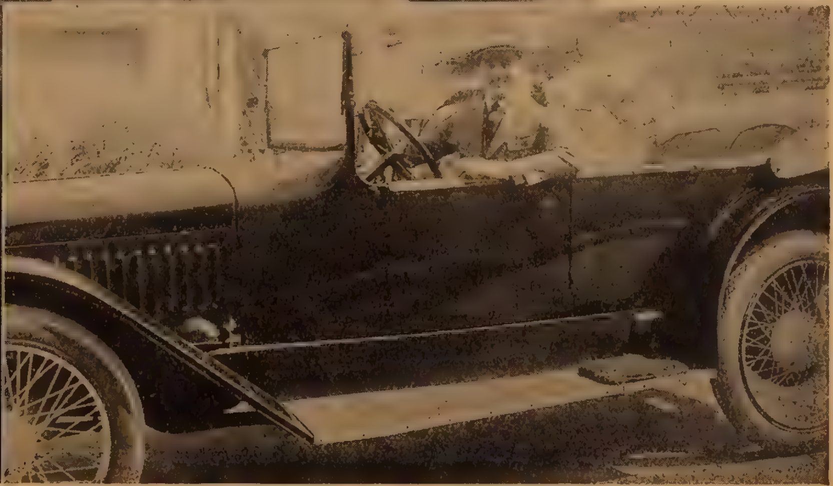
Rawlinson's Ambition

By MARJORIE HOWARD

SCREEN stars' ambitions, as revealed by the biographical blanks they are asked at the studio to fill out, are many and various, ranging all the way from a modest desire to be the most popular player in the world, to such materialism as a longing for an income of $100,000 a year. Herbert Rawlinson's is rather different from the others. "As long as you are wishing for something," he seems to think, "you might as well pick out an objective to which there is some possibility of attaining." So he gives as his "ambition" the desire to be considered the best-dressed man on the screen. And he has a lot of reasons for it, too. Here are some of them:

"A very respectable old person, who lived several hundred years ago, made the remark that 'Manners Maketh Man.' What he meant, of course, was 'Clothes Maketh Man,' because they have the greatest effect upon manners. Dressing well is always worth while, but for the screen it is an imperative requirement. In the first place, it is certainly the duty of any person constantly before the public to make himself as easy to look at as possible. For a screen player whose only appeal is to the eye, it is much more important. His own self-respect demands minute attention to his personal appearance, but when he realizes that twenty million persons attend motion picture theatres in this country alone every day, and that many of them have in this way their sole opportunity to see what a properly dressed man looks like, it becomes a positive duty to put before them a proper conception of what a well-dressed man is. No one in his senses attempts to deny the influence of clothes upon the individual. It is much easier to behave like a gentleman when you are dressed like one, and to be rude and inconsiderate to the public when you are wearing the clothes of a tramp. Every man who has ever found himself on the downward path, in danger of slipping out of sight of his class altogether, knows that as his personal appearance degenerated through the depreciation of his outer garments, a subtle degeneration took place in his moral attitude as well. That is another reason why the picture actor should take advantage of his opportunity to improve the outward appearance of his public, by putting a high ideal before them; because the way a man looks does affect the way he feels inside."

The cuts on this page show "Rawley" recovering from the accident which kept him out of pictures for several weeks. The cut below shows him in his automobile, for motoring is his favorite recreation after his film work.



L-KO KOMEDY

"BEACH NUTS"

Elaborate set built for L-Ko Komedy.

L—KO Komical Komedy of keen kompetition between a knight and a knave. Directed by Noel Smith, under supervision of J. G. Blystone, with Dan Russell and a lot of other nuts.

SOMETHING new for slapstick comedy to erect elaborate sets. Yet for this L-Ko, directed by Noel Smith under the supervision of J. G. Blystone, one of the most elaborate bathing pools imaginable was constructed. Dan Russell, as the handsome life-saver of the beach, has a role which gives him a chance to be screamingly funny, and he is splendidly supported by Gladys Varden and Bert Roach.

Ima Knutt was the life saver on the beach and the idol of all the girls. Every new one who came to the beach was given the O.O. by the dashing Ima, and thought herself lucky to find favor in his eyes. He liked girls to be small and slim, and was much disconcerted when the biggest nut on the beach, an enormous lady in a black bathing suit, insisted upon having his services to teach her to swim.

Into the bathhouse comes Krazy Knutt, with "nutting" on his mind. He decides to go in swimming. So does Hazel. Ima brings water wings for her and is delighted with the chance to teach her. He invites her to go for a ride in a beach chair. It runs away with them and Knutt Sunday gives chase. At last they return to the bathhouse. Krazy is pushed into the water, and Ima and the girl sit on the edge making eyes at each other. Krazy ties their shoelaces together, and they both fall in when they try to get up. Ima then seizes Krazy and makes him his assistant life saver. He then goes off with the girl to get some ice-cream. Knutt ties a weight to his leg as he is eating it and the weight drags him into the pool. Ima pulls Knutt in with him.

They rush out onto the beach. Ima and the girl hide behind a beach umbrella. Knutt removes the umbrella and puts it over a hideous girl. Ima returns to her and is disgusted. Ima and the girl go for a ride in the flying boats and Knutt follows and spills Ima into the sea. A crab grabs him, and he rushes to the shore. He puts the crab on Sunday. Sunday determines to be revenged. He decoys Ima and the girl into a bathhouse, and then chloroforms them with a bicycle pump through the key hole. He hires two confederates to push the machine into the sea and drown Ima and the girl. The police see the suspicious characters and arrive in time to rescue Ima and Hazel.

THE Eleventh Episode of the serial, adapted by J. G. Alexander from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball and produced by Stuart Paton, with Ben Wilson starred.

THE THOUGHT MACHINE" is the alluring title of the eleventh episode of the record-breaking serial, "The Voice On the Wire" which Stuart Paton has produced from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball. A strange invention, a development of wireless telegraphy along the lines of thought transferrence, gives its name to this chapter, which concerns itself mainly with the efforts of Shirley to prevent the death of the fifth victim of the "Voice."

Dr. Renolds still is bound and lies on the floor helpless. When Polly, her expression slightly dazed, passes by him without so much as looking at him, he can only gaze after her in wonderment. She is put in a limousine with Taylor, a crook, at the wheel. "Red" stands at the side of the machine and talks with her, then gives instructions to the driver. Meanwhile James Welsh in evening clothes awaits Polly.

Shirley with the double-crossing crook speeds toward "Pale" Ida's house and is followed by Cronin and his men in another car. They are seen by some crooks as they draw near the place and "Red" is quickly warned. Shirley dashes into the and with the help of his men, forces the door of the sitting room. The crooks carry Renolds upstairs and the other men follow them. A terrific struggle takes place. One crook and a policeman are dead, while several on both sides are wounded and when Shirley regains consciousness, he finds that Warren and all of his crooks have disappeared. Cronin is disgusted and while talking with Shirley hears "The Voice" saying that "It" would meet them at the "Poisson d' or," a cafe. They discover Renolds who tells them that Polly has gone to meet Welsh and immmediately Cronin asserts that he knew she was double-crossing them. He and Renolds drive to Welsh's home.

Meantime, Welsh has been summoned by Polly, who waits for him in the limousine and while they chat gayly they are driven to the cafe.

When Shirley inquires for Welsh the butler informs him that his master has just left with Miss Polly Marion and Shirley bows his head, hurt at the conviction of his suspicions. Telling Renolds to warn Cronin that Welsh has gone to the Cafe, Shirley remains in the apartment while Renolds hurries way. And again "The Voice" speaks to Shirley telling him that though he is very clever, Welsh will die in the Cafe at twelve o'clock that night.

At fifteen minutes before the hour of twelve, Cronin and Renolds stand

EXTRA! EXTRA!

EILEEN SEDGWICK RIDES "CHARLIE."

CAN you imagine being delighted with an assignment to play leading lady with a troup of lions, tigers, elephants, and leopards? Most of us would consider it very little of a privilege. But Eileen Sedgwick is differently constituted. She has been given the lead in the company of Universal Director Henry McRae, who has produced a picture with the working title of "In African Wilds," and most of the inhabitants of the Universal City zoo are with her in the cast. Yet she declared that she is tickled to death, as she has always wanted to work with wild animals, and that the ambition of her life is now realized! Truly there is no accounting for tastes.

She admits that the sensation of being treed by a lion, who then lay down at the foot of the trunk and waited for the chance of her descending, was a peculiar one, and that she was rather relieved when Mr. Leo was induced by the persuasive power of a rope to return to his cage. But she declares that the thrill was really not so great as that which she experienced when Charlie, the big Universal elephant, decided to take a nap while she was mounted upon his massive head.

"An elephant lies down with a certain suddenness," she explains, "and you feel rather as if you were going down on the crest of a mountain avalanche. I hung on by his ears, which are not quite as conveniently placed as the straps in the subway cars."

Intrepid Eileen on her mount.

JACK FORD'S COMPANY.

THERE are so many dare-devils in pictures, that it seems a difficult matter to award the palm for courage to any particular company of screen players. But certainly Jack Ford's would give the others a run for their money. This is the way they looked when they began work on Jack's picture, called "The Trail of Hate," but no one could induce them to pose after the picture was completed. When Jack has finished a picture his players are not fit for publication. He has directed the destinies of three films for Universal. The first "The Tornado" set a hot pace, but the last, "The Scrapper," beats it. Picture fans never saw such a fight as that which takes place in the last reel of this Bison.

Fritz Kreisler with U City Orchestra.

FRITZ KREISLER'S PICTURE DEBUT.

FRITZ KREISLER, the great violinist, made his debut in the movies recently under the auspices of the Universal Film Company. He was paying a visit to the film capital, accompanied by the well-known impresario, L. E. Behymer, Madame Eleanor Gerhardt, the famous lieder singer, and several other people of note. They spent the day at the studios, and were particularly interested in the filming of an episode in the great mystery serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which was being directed by Stuart Paton.

A cafe scene was being filmed, and Mr. Kreisler was asked if he would make use of the violin of a member of the orchestra, and play while the actors went through the tense scene. He graciously consented, and his music soon attracted every one in the neighborhood who could possibly get away to join the spell-bound audience. Pictures of the great musician were secured, and it is the intention of the company to use them in the Animated Weekly. If the consent of Kreisler's manager can be obtained, the incident will be incorporated in the serial itself, so that the famous violinist will become a member of the cast of "The Voice on the Wire."

MOVIEGRAMS

JOSEPH DE GRASSE AT WORK.

DO you see the gentleman without a collar who is pointing with his hat into the direct foreground? That is the Bluebird director, Joseph De Grasse, director of the company in which Dorothy Phillips is starred with William Stowell and Lon Chaney as her supporting actors. This picture was snapped while he was directing some of the scenes in "Vengeance of the West," the play upon which the company is engaged at the present time. The seated personage with the white pompadour is our old friend Lon Chaney, who has donned one of his inimitable make-ups for this picture. The girl at the side is Claire Du Brey, borrowed from Harry Carey's company for the occasion.

Some of the best of the Bluebird releases have been the work of this director, who came to motion pictures from the painter's studio. His photoplays proclaim the artist in their arrangement and lighting. He was responsible for a whole series with Louise Lovely before Miss Phillips arrived at the Coast. His "Gilded Spider," "Grasp of Greed," "Bobbie of the Ballet," are some of the plays that are not forgotten. With Dorothy Phillips he has put on "The Price of Silence," "The Piper's Price," "The Girl in the Checkered Coat," "A Doll's House" for Bluebird; not to mention "The Place Beyond the Winds," in which he played in person, "The Mark of Cain" and "If My Country Should Call," Red Feather releases.

Edith wears this in "Jilted in Jail."

EDITH SAYS SHE'S GROWN UP.

THIS picture of Edith Roberts, the little ingenue of the Nestor Company, came in the other day, with a group of others in very sophisticated attire. Edith sent a letter with them to ye Ed, in which she declared that she was "grown up" now. She has played Mrs. Newlywed to Eddie Lyons' blushing bridegroom so often, since she was appointed to the Nestor Company, that it has naturally made her feel somewhat mature.

PICTURE PLAYERS IDEAL SOLDIERS.

HERE is a picture of the only U. S. Recruiting Station ever established in a motion picture studio, about which we told you last week. Fred Church is "at bat," and one of the other actors is "thinking it over." The station was a branch of that at Los Angeles, and was set up inside the gates of the picture city, under the giant pepper trees which give a grateful shade to some of its streets. A flag with the legend "Men Wanted for the United States Army" was hung from a branch of the tree, and the Stars and Stripes were suspended in the background. The sergeant in charge was able to report the enlistment of several men, and declared that the picture players were some of the finest military material he had ever seen.

"They are a husky, fearless lot," he said, "used to an outdoor life and to exposure and risks. They are most of them athletes and fine horsemen, and would certainly make ideal soldiers. And surely men who are used to the excitement and confusion incidental to the filming of a big production would stand the nerve strain of modern war better than those who come to it fresh from the sedentary life of an office or a store. I am afraid if I had my way, I'd round up the whole Universal force!"

"LIKE WILDFIRE"

BUTTERFLY PICTURE, STARRING HERBERT RAWLINSON. WRITEN BY LOUIS WRITZENKORN, ADAPTED FOR THE SCREEN BY KARL COOLIDGE AND PRODUCED BY STUART PATON. A CHARMING ROMANCE OF LOVE AND BUSINESS.

THE five- and ten-cent store has come into its own, and been immortalized in the movies as the background of a Butterfly Picture. The story "Like Wildfire" was written by Louis Writzenkorn, adapted for the screen by Karl Coolidge, and produced by Stuart Paton, who has some very big achievements to his credit, including "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," and the present serial "The Voice on the Wire." Herbert Rawlinson is starred in the production, which gives him a splendid opportunity for the display of his talents for light comedy, and Neva Gerber found time besides her arduous work in the support of Ben Wilson in the serial, to play the feminine lead opposite Rawlinson. Here is an outline of the story:

CAST.

Tommie Buckman	Herbert Rawlinson
Nina Potter	Neva Gerber
Mr. Buckman	L. M. Wells
Mr. Potter	Johnnie Cook
Tobias	Howard Crampton
Brown	Burton Law
Phil	Willard Wayne

"I'll buy all the ribbon in Winton if I like!" said Tommie.

In the small town of Winton, Phillip Potter keeps the only Five- and Ten-Cent Store. He is a typical small-town merchant who shows no progression in either action or attire. He is a semi-invalid.

Nina, his daughter, possesses a fine brand of American courage. She is a complete antithesis to her father. When the town doctor urges Potter to take a vacation, Nina forces him to follow this advice and determines to run the store herself. She immediately begins to advertise and to clean up the whole store.

William Tobias, the real estate dealer, threatens to raise the lease of the store for the coming year, because Nina will not consent to marry him. He writes to John Buckman, the founder of the Buckman chain of Five- and Ten-Cent Stores, that he can offer him a store in the heart of the city, directly opposite the only Five- and Ten-Cent Store and that he will hold the option for thirty days.

Upon receiving Tobias' letter, Buckman sends for his son Tommie, a gilded youth whose one big problem is escaping work, and orders him to go to Winton and report on the advisability of placing a store there. It is Tommie's chance to make good. Buckman then sends Brown to Winton so that he can check his son's report.

Tommie arives in the small town, visits the Five and Ten Cent Store, and to cover his tracks, buys a dollar's worth of ribbon. When Tobias taunts him for his purchase, a fight is begun and Tommie lands in jail. He sends a telegram to his father, saying that he is innocent, but the answer is that God takes care of the innocent and that Mr. Buckman is through with him. Tommie then appeals to Nina who arranges to have him released from prison.

In order to pay the lawyer, Tommie accepts a position in the store as delivery boy, as he still has his racing car. But soon he becomes the manager of the place and a general favorite with Nina and all the clerks.

Meanwhile, on Brown's enthusiastic report, Buckman has opened a store in competition to Nina's. But Tommie watches closely and eventually outdoes Brown in every way. Brown becomes very discouraged and finally wires Buckman to come to Winton to give him advice.

Nina invents a "sad iron" and Tommie goes to the city to sell the patent. His friend Phil manages the business end of the deal and sells the iron to Buckman for five thousand, the money necessary to pay the new lease on the store. But, celebrating with his club-fellows, Tommie is put on a train going in the wrong direction so that he does not arrive in Winton when Nina expects him.

Tommie has gone by the name of John Jones in Winton, but Tobias discovers that he is really Buckman's son, and informs Nina of this fact, telling her that Tommie is only a spy, working for his father's interests. She also sees a large advertisement of the "sad iron" in the opposite store and conludes that Tommie has betrayed her trust in him. Stumbling to the office, she begins to weep and Tobias, taking advantage of his opportunity put his strong arms about her.

Tommie, meantime, arrives in Winton and rushes to the store with his good news. He pushes open the door of the office and nearly falls over as he sees Nina in the arms of Tobias. He then writes a note to her, confessing to being Buckman's son, but denying being a traitor or spy, enclosing the check for five thousand and congratulating her upon her coming marriage.

A clerk hands the note to Nina and she runs from the office and catches Tommie as he and Phil are just getting ready to leave in the racer. She explains her side of the trouble and he adds his explanation. Tommie grabs Nina and impulsively embraces her.

Buckman comes to Winton, and he and Brown walk into the store across the way, and are shown to the office where they find Tommie and Nina sitting on top of a desk, their arms about each other.

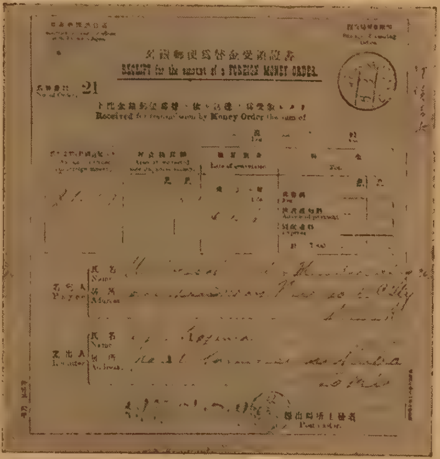
JAPANESE SUBSCRIBER FOR THE WEEKLY.

DID you ever see a Japanese money order? When the editor of the Weekly received the document, of which the cut on this page is a reproduction, in his mail one morning, together with a letter in Japanese, he was entirely at a loss to understand what it meant until he consulted his Japanese correspondent, when he found it was a money order covering a six months' subscription to the Moving Picture Weekly.

He very politely acknowledged it, and in order that there should be no possible mistake, photographed it before turning it over to the post-office.

It is therefore presented for the eduification and information of those who have never seen a Japanese money order.



This is a regular money order and has now been cashed.

RAWLINSON FULL OF GINGER.

IT was a real treat for the visitors at Universal City to watch Herbert Rawlinson acting before the camera in "Like Wildfire," in which he is featured with Neva Gerber. His dialogue is very laughable and he constantly is joking with other members of the company. However, the joke was turned on him a few days ago when his director called for the cameraman to begin cranking. After about ten feet of film had been finished the director called, "Cut, where is my leading man?" Rawlinson had not heard, from a door on the set, the order for action and he was calmly awaiting instructions to enter. All the others on the set joked him about it, so he requested the director in the future to use the megaphone.

UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS IS DEDICATED TO PATRIOTISM

Marshal Joffre.

A NEW pictorial review makes its appearance this week on the Universal program. It is called Universal Current Events, and will be released as a special without release date each week, being shipped on Saturday. The spirit that inspired this news weekly is a very patriotic one on the part of the Universal, and in furtherance of this idea the subject matter of the first number is entirely patriotic. It has to do with events which have shaped themselves about the entrance of the United States into the World War.

It is the intention to make this weekly deal largely with events of national and world importance, although any event of sufficient importance to warrant it, will be incorporated in this film. A large corps of cameramen in different cities of the United States and Canada has been engaged, and the new weekly has representatives in every foreign country as well.

In conformity with the importance and character of the reel, the main titles and sub-titles have been made in the form of newspaper headings, an innovation in pictorial reviews, and one which will be particularly agreeable. There is scarcely any one in the United States who is not accustomed to reading newspapers, and we are so busy that it is said we are a nation of "newspaper head readers." Thousands of people have time in reading the paper to read the headlines only, and the eye naturally falls into the form which newspaperdom prescribes for the heading of its stories. In the first issue of the Universal Current Events, the following items which principally concern Woodrow Wilson and Marshal Joffre, whose pictures adorn this page, are listed in the following order:

GREETING.

"The UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS, coming to you for the first time in this issue, offers itself respectfully and patriotically to your and the nation's service. Timely, inspiring news gathered by expert cameramen in all parts of the globe, will be served in record time. A living newspaper, clean, readable and aggressive. THE UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS greets you!"

Mary MacLaren A Speed-Demon

MARY MACLAREN, featured in the fourth Butterfly Picture, "Money Madness," is rapidly earning the reputation of being one of the most reckless auto drivers in California. It is only recently that she has been a car-owner, for a short year ago, Miss Mary was only an "extra" girl, and extra girls don't earn salaries which allow them to support automobiles in the luxury to which they have been accustomed. However, Miss Mary's rise has been of the meteoric character, and she has been the proud possessor of a car for some time. As soon as she had acquired it, she fell a victim to a bad case of speed mania, which has grown steadily worse.

So the role of "Ethel Fuller" in "Money Madness" which calls for some speedy driving on the part of the heroine, suited her down to the ground, and she did not have to be urged to take any of the risks which Frank H. Spearman, who wrote the story, and Henry McRae who directed it, had arranged for in the script. If you have sensitive nerves you had better not try for the position of leading lady in a McRae company, but the veteran director had no fault to find with his heroine in this picture.

When she drove the car after the fleeing villains, she came very near having a serious accident. Nothing but the fact that she had that week taken out an accident policy saved her, in her own opinion. She was required to back the car away from the camera and around a curve, on the edge of a steep railroad embankment. She started her machine at a fast clip, and it struck the curb opposite the embankment, throwing the car across the street against the rail. Fortunately the machine struck one of the iron posts of the fence and was saved from going over the bank.

Background of Blossoms for Bluebird Photoplay

THE Bluebird Photoplay, "Southern Justice," is the work of Lynn Reynolds, who has earned the title of "Nature director" because all his Bluebird pictures are photographed with some phase of nature as a background. "The End of the Rainbow" was taken amid the glorious forests of the redwoods; "The Girl of Lost Lake" at the side of one of the most beautiful lakes in the Sierra Mountains; "Mutiny" at sea; "God's Crucible" in the Grand Canyon of Arizona; "The Code of the Klondyke," which is being held for summer release, in the snowfields. His latest, "Southern Justice," written, like most of the others, by himself, shows nature in her springtime mood, and places many of its most important scenes in blossoming orchards.

The story was called originally "The Three Guardians," and concerns the efforts of the three most important men in a little Kentucky mountain village, to provide for a boy who comes to them from 'way back in the country, with a burning ambition to achieve an education at all costs. The three guardians, are the judge, played by George Hernandez, the printer, Jack Curtis, and the shoemaker, Jean Hersholt, and never were three types put upon the screen with greater faithfulness to life. The boy whose future they make their aim in life, becomes the means of straightening out the tangled love story in which Myrtle Gonzalez plays the feminine part. Miss Gonzalez is shown to us as the embodiment of the spirit of spring, photographed with a background of apple-blossoms.

FROM A CLERGYMAN.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
708 Hennepin Ave.,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Sirs—As preachers are so often made ridiculous in movies, I wish to thank you for the manly and wholesome way in which one was presented at the Met recently.

It represented a young minister who had lost out at college ("The Measure of a Man"), but made good among the sons of nature, in the big woods. It was in every way helpful and uplifting, and sent every one home feeling good. It was one of those plays that shows the possibilities of the movie in way of interest and moral improvement at the same time.

It is not necessary to be vulgar, as many plays frequently are, in order to be popular. I am quite sure people would flock to see such plays as the one mentioned, and I wish to encourage you in their production. Sincerely,

Pastor First Methodist Church.

BEGGING FOR MORE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Portland, Ore.

Gentlemen—On March 8th we received a letter from you, asking us to tell you how we liked Bluebirds. "Bluebirds" are the thing. We like them, our patrons like them. Anything that we could say would fall way short in doing justice to the merits of the pictures. We think they are the cleanest and most wholesome pictures put on the screen.

They are the best drawing program that we have and we are always sure of a full house Bluebird night. Our patrons are not backward in complimenting us on the quality of Bluebirds, and are begging for more. Our only fault with Bluebirds is, we can't get more of them. We would run two Bluebirds per week if we could get them.

Yours for more BLUEBIRDS,

Gentlemen—It was my pleasure the other evening to see your Bluebird photoplay, "Polly Redhead," and it pleased me and those with me so highly that I thought I would not be doing my duty if I failed to write our appreciation.

The story is a lovable one, the cast acts their part in a perfect manner and all in all, I honestly believe it is the best feature I have seen in months, and one that will win friends for the theatre and for better movies wherever shown.

Gentlemen—I am very much pleased with the result I am obtaining with Bluebirds. I wish it will always continue the same. As a matter of fact, the Bluebird Photoplays are the best pictures in photograph line—they can't be beat.

Your features are unquestionably clean, and they certainly are a drawing card. Every time I run them on Sunday the theatre is packed to the doors. Your pictures coin in money like rain. I will always recommend Bluebirds as best in filmdom.

Wishing you continued success, I am, Yours respectfully,

READ THESE TWO LETTERS FROM HILLMAN TOGETHER

Bluebird Photoplays,
Sioux City, Ia.

Gentlemen—I cannot speak too highly of "Eagle's Wings" as a picture and also as a drawing card, but made a mistake in not raising the price of admission.

I did some very heavy advertising to put it over, but the results certainly show that it paid me to do it.

I had some photographs taken of my lobby display, and also street ad, and would advise that you get a copy of them to show to any Exhibitor who is thinking of booking the film.

Tell them if they are any way dubious about it to write me and I will certainly advise them to book it as it is some film and a winner.

Gentlemen—Replying to your letter of the 16th requesting the privilege of using my former letter to you in regard to "Eagle's Wings."

I did not write you with the intention of having the letter published, but just to give you an honest opinion as to the merits of "Eagle's Wings" and the money-making possibilities of it, as demonstrated by the two days run here.

Believing that the showing of this picture at this time will greatly assist the Government in preparing for a Defense Program, and that every true blue America should see it, I gladly consent to the use of my letter.

Gentlemen—I feel it is my duty to compliment you on the Bluebird Photoplay, "The End of the Rainbow," which was the feature shown here last night.

I cannot speak too highly of Bluebird Photoplays in general.

In photography, colorings and characters they easily take front rank and even the most critical audience is forced to admit the superiority of Bluebird service.

Moving Pictures Are Now New Zealand's Solace

By ROSE SCHULSINGER.

Mme. Jenkinson and Alfredo, the "Vagabond Violinist."

IF you had a hard day's travel before you and a very good story in a very good magazine brought about a meeting that made it very easy on the nerves you'd feel forever grateful to it, wouldn't you?

The traveler had shamefacedly removed it from the seat of a man press agent when he sought the solace of the smoker as men press agents have a habit of doing and the other traveler straightway began to enjoy it shamefacedly over the original swiper's shoulder. Ordinarily, that thing gets your goat. But, when you've been there yourself, you're not a beast. And when you feel that some one, beside yourself, is crazy about pictures and just can't help reading a perfectly good movie story, even over your left shoulder, then you're not exactly a beast either, especially if it's Sunday on a New York-bound train.

"What the movies need is imagination, yes, pure, liquid, golden imagination," thundered Creel, the invincible director, to the grand old man president of the story, when they're both fishing for reasons why the other guy's grabbing their number.

Retrospectively, the first swiper laid the printed philosophy down, thereby making it impossible for the second tresspasser to pursue the interesting theory, and then deliberately turned for contradiction or acquiesence.

"That's just perfectly, ex—actly what I think," returned the second sympathetic swiper, without an instant's hesitation, and in a voice that made the first swiper inquire, without an instant's hesitation, where it hailed from.

"Auckland, New Zealand, where we're just crazy about pictures," came back the foreign accents triumphantly.

"We've 150,000 persons in Auckland, one hundred very smart picture theatres, two caustic critics on two good newspapers—the Star and the Herald—and a craving for serials that only Universal's 'Trey o' Hearts' ever fully satisfied. We depend for recreation almost wholly on the movies now that the cloud of war hangs so heavily over our country, which has sent more men for its size than any other one of England's colonies. We like the movie that leaves a rent in the heart and a tear in the eye. We think Lois Weber the biggest woman in pictures and Dorothy Phillips a very wonderful actress. We are very proud of Louise Lovely, who hails straight from our country, you know, and we never miss a single number of the Moving Picture Weekly."

Was there ever such luck and for a press agent—on Sunday!

The inspired angel, in her foreign lingo, continued: "American pictures appeal more to the heart of our people than any other because they are not only clever and smart and modern, but because they are sincere. We take them more seriously than you do because now we do no dancing, no entertaining and cannot fully enjoy our grand opera and drama, because of the aching void caused by the world conflict to which New Zealand, with her million population, has already sent 100,000 men. Pictures to us now prove at once a recreation and a solace that the spoken word could not accomplish today. That would irritate us. We would argue with it. At King's, a modern picture house as fine as any on Broadway and located on Queen's Street, Auckland, we see a big sign every day saying: 'Universal Pictures Here,' and I'm jolly well sure that we know the middle names and number of curls of your actresses better than you do yourself. Pictures mean a great, a very great deal to us, tucked away in our corner in the South Seas. Lois Weber's 'Hypocrites' created a sensation never equalled by any other one attraction, not excepting the concerts of Madame Melba, and we're hoping some day to wake up and find a Universal Company perched atop one of our splendid mountains, taking advantage of the hospitality we should offer it."

One didn't have the heart then to catalogue that country's volcanic mounts!

And still I haven't told the name of the follower of Universal pictures 9,000 miles from 1600 Broadway. She is Miss Grace Jenkinson, founder of the only Paris shop in her part of the world, who arrived here several Sunday nights ago on her annual purchasing trip. And, if she talks gowns as well as she talks pictures and war, then you'd better not send wifie to her when you aviate out there.

MYRTLE GONZALEZ ORGANIZES ACTRESSES FOR RED CROSS.

IMMEDIATELY after the announcement was made that the United States had declared that a state of war exists with Germany, Myrtle Gonzalez, who is featured in Lynn F. Reynolds' Bluebird Company, commenced the organization of a Red Cross group among the leading actresses of the Pacific Coast studios at Universal City.

A number of the leading women had been taking an interest in nursing for some time, and it was not long before Miss Gonzalez had a formidable list of names for the organization.

During the hours when not employed on the sets the actresses are taking instructions in first aid work and learning the use of bandages and antiseptic solutions. It is planned to have an instructor from the Red Cross service hold regular classes at Universal City. Miss Gonzalez is the star of the coming Bluebird "Southern Justice."

PROBABLY KIDNAPPED.

AMONG a number of unique communications received by the Scenario Department at Universal City this week was the following:

"Strayed from Washington, D. C., on the 8th day of January, one young scenario, named 'The Stroke of Genius,' dressed in a bright blue wrapper. Last heard of cavorting on Broadway, and supposed to have headed West. Keep a lookout, and if found kindly return to its guardian, as below."

Scenario Editor Cunningham reports that the youngster has not yet arrived at the picture city.

Troubles of A Film Distributor

WORLD MAN SPENDS AN HOUR IN THE OFFICE OF THE UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE, NEW YORK CITY BRANCH, AND LISTENS.

By Hanford C. Judson.

(Reprinted from the Moving Picture World)

THE manager of a film exchange needs decision and good judgment, for his path is not all roses. The writer might have guessed that the manager's job was no snap, but as he sat near the desk of Mr. Rubinstein of the Twenty-third Street Exchange of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, the morning's batch of cases and problems turned out to be astonishing.

To begin with, a case of five reels containing all that was left of a print, "The Gates of Doom," was brought in. Mr. Rubinstein remarked, "Look, they haven't even sent back the paper bands." The case looked like a nest of rubbish; but we found the bands when we took out the reels. They had been put in the case first. What remained of the five reels was put in on top, and last of all the rubbish, parts of the film, three inches, or three feet long, tossed in on top of all.

"Where did that case come from?" I asked. "That has just come in from the Paradise Theatre, 472 Ralph Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.," was the answer. The house is owned by H. Goettinger. I asked the name of the operator, but it wasn't known. I wanted to know why the film was returned in so outrageous a condition, and was told that it might have been any one of several reasons. The operator might have disliked some recent picture furnished by the exchange; he might have been in a hurry to get away and took his impatience out on the picture. A good guesser can get a number of reasons, but none of them will condone the sending of film back in such a manner. If it had been merely the first time the thing had happened, it might have been passed as a regrettable accident. But I was told that other films had come back from that same theatre in almost as bad a condition even weeks ago when Mr. Barbash was the manager. Letters about it have not been of any avail. "How much has this case cost you?" I asked him. Mr. Rubinstein replied that he didn't yet know the condition of the film, but that at a minimum it would cost $7.50. This is not the only theatre that misuses film.

There have been complaints on this same score from many points across the country. It is happening too often. It is dead waste and it is unnecessary. Probably no one can make an estimate of the yearly damage to the trade, which means to manufacturer, exhibitor and patron. As an added handicap: The exhibitor who expected to run" The Gates of Doom" in his show to-night and has advertised it, has lost his advertisement and may displease his patrons. The exchange has no print of it for him now.

All this goes to prove that there are two sides to the complaint often received from exhibitors and noticed by F. H. Richardson in the Projection Department, that exchanges fail at times to examine film sent out. A poor and careless operator may do a lot of damage to a film, and the same man is often just the one who will be slack in returning the show to the distributing office, leaving it till so late it cannot be examined and sent out for use the same day. The exchange may be careless at times, but the operator who is tearing film without need and the exhibitor who won't take the necessary care to get the show to the exchange in time hasn't much right to kick. Mr. Richardson is coming in contact with one part of the difficulty; here is a glimpse of the same problem from the other side.

There was plenty of talk about delayed film over at the Universal branch this morning, April 25. The best example was pointed out in a courteously written letter from exhibitor William Brown of the Royal Theatre, N. J., who complained of delay caused by his messenger having to wait for the shows he had booked and closed with a request to Mr. Rubinstein to book shows to him that could be counted on to get back to the exchange the night before, so he could be sure to get them in the early morning.

Sixteen shows came back late this morning. Some of these prints will have to lie idle till to-morrow. Half-past nine in the morning is not unreasonably early for the return of film. One man was complaining bitterly because he had to wait for his show. The manager asked him when he had brought his reels in to-day. He replied that he had come in at half-past ten. "That's too late; you'll get your show for to-day at half-past twelve." "That is too late for my show," said the exhibitor. "But why didn't you bring the last show back in time for us to examine the reels?" said the exchangeman. The exhibitor had no answer and doubtless felt abused. He seemed not to consider that others had been badly inconvenienced. So it goes on day by day.

before the cafe waiting for Shirley, who does not arrive, and Cronin curses to himself. Shirley has already entered the cafe disguised so well as an old farmer that no one recognizes him. He pretends to be a hired entertainer.

The lights go out several different times during the dances, but finally they fail to come on again. In the darkness, Shirley hurries over to Welsh's table. The dismembered hand approaches Welsh, who screams with fright. Cronin blows his whistle and runs into the cafe, while "Red" and the other crooks run out. Detectives rush in and confusion reigns throughout the place.

Welsh manages to make his escape when Shirley grasps the hand which is threatening him. Cronin interrupts, and Shirley lets go the hand which disappears.

Polly is seized by Red and taken to his home with Pale Ida. He tells her that she must kill Shirley, that he is at the house of a friend of his, an investigator who has invented a wonderful thought machine. Polly, still in a trance, takes the revolver he gives her and goes out to the car with Ida.

Shirley and Renolds have gone to the home of the inventor. He tells them that his machine told him that they would come. Shirley is incredulous. His friend goes to bed, and Shirley sits down before the machine to think. The mirror in it shows him Polly's face. He looks up. She is standing in the doorway with a gun in her hand, which is pointed full at him. She walks forward, still covering him. The picture fades as she presses the gun to his body. He tells her that she cannot fire as she draws back the trigger.

"A 44-CALIBRE MYSTERY"

Three scenes from this strong Gold Seal.

HARRY CAREY, directed by Fred A. Kelsey in a Gold Seal, written by T. Shelly Sutton and adapted for the screen by C. J. Wilson, Junior.

THE picture public loves mysteries and it loves Harry Carey in Western melodrama. In "A 44-Calibre Mystery" it gets both, and a big success with any sort of an audience may safely be predicted for this Gold Seal, written by T. Shelly Sutton, adapted for the screen by C. J. Wilson, Jr., and produced by Fred A. Kelsey. The action is fast and tells this story:

"Bow-Legged" Billy Jenson, Sheriff of Driftwood, declares for law and order. Kitty Flanders, daughter of a pioneer prospector whose wife is dead, admires the Sheriff's bravery and falls in love with him. The Sheriff, fearless in all things else, is timid when its comes to love-making.

A masked bandit, believed to be "Lone Jack," for whom the officers have long been searching, holds up the stage-coach near Flap-jack. A cowboy, riding in the distance, sees the robbery, and reports it to Deputy Sheriff Horton, who immediately starts out on a "still hunt" for the bandit. The bandit, in a secluded spot, is revealed as Pete McGuire.

Kitty becomes uneasy about her father, who is prospecting in a ravine known as "Echo Canyon," on account of the wonderful echo, and goes in quest of him. Bob Flanders has discovered a rich gold mine. Kitty, delighted at their good fortune, returns home to prepare supper for him. She goes to the store for groceries, where Pete McGuire watches her admiringly. Sheriff Billy Jenson is watching Pete suspiciously. Pete surmises that Kitty and the Sheriff are sweethearts. A rough-neck prospector, drunk, approaches Kitty and insults her. Pete McGuire interferes, and plays the "hero" by knocking the rough-neck down.

That night the Sheriff and his deputy, Horton, compare notes and become convinced Pete is the bandit. Horton insists on the right to capture Pete unaided. One of the saloon habitues overhears their plan, and "tips" Pete. The latter hides in a deserted outhouse, but is loath to leave camp, as he wants to obtain Flanders' mine. The following morning Pete sees Flanders on his way to the mine and follows him. Deputy Horton sees Pete and follows him. Flanders discovers that he is being followed. Flanders hides behind a rock, gun drawn. Pete also hides, knowing that it is Horton who is after him. Both Flanders and Pete are taking aim at Horton when the latter comes upon Flanders. Before Flanders or Horton can realize their mutual mistake, Flanders and Horton have both fired. Flanders believes the second shot (the one fired by Pete) is the echo of his own. Horror-stricken, he believes he has unintentionally killed the deputy. Pete confronts him and encourages the mistake.

Meanwhile, Kitty has heard the two shots, and runs to the scene. Pete agrees to seal his lips if Flanders will deed Pete one-half of the mine and "fix it" for him to marry Kitty.

Pete woos Kitty and her father pleads with her to look with favor on his courtship. Billy, the sheriff, has no evidence on Pete. He is therefore compelled to step aside and allow the man he believes is a bandit to woo his sweetheart. Kitty and Pete are to be married, and she is forced to tell Billy she loves Pete.

Flanders learns that Kitty is heart-broken over her prospective marriage. He decides to save her, and to make clean breast of everything to the Sheriff. He does so. Billy is amazed and says: "You're crazy! The bullet that killed Horton was a .44 steel-jacket. Your gun shoots a .38 soft-nose." Flanders is amazed and recalls the "echo." The Sheriff tells Flanders it was the "echo" that killed Horton. He decides to take Pete's gun away from him and examine it. Kitty has admitted that she hates Pete and loves Billy, so Billy now has a clear road to kill or capture Pete. Everyone in camp believes that he is afraid of Pete. Billy enters the saloon, walks up to Pete, and quietly lifts the gun from Pete's holster, confirming his suspicions that Pete's is a .44 hard-nose. A gun battle ensues and Pete is slain.

"Money's Mockery"

LAEMMLE Two-Reel Society Drama, written by E. M. Ingleton and produced from her scenario by Douglas Gerrard. The story of the winning over of an old grouch by a young wife.

Right—Jabez and Billy make up.

MRS. E. M. INGLETON supplied the story and scenario for this two-reel Laemmle drama, which was then given to Douglas Gerrard to produce. Gerrard plays the role of the old grouch, Jabez, who is finally won over by the sweetness and hospitality of his young daughter-in-law, played by pretty Francelia Billington.

Alone in his elegant dining room, old Jabez Peterson sits at a princely dinner. He has little appetite however, and even the efforts of Daws, the faithful butler, meet with little response. Jabez's mind wanders to the past. Home was a happy place then with a wife and little Billy, and Billy's birthday was always an event of much note. The old man has been absently staring at a calendar on the wall and realizes that it is Billy's birthday.

Billy has met and loved a young girl, Nancy, while studying art, and against his father's wishes continued his love making. Angry at being balked, the father threatened that unless he breaks off with the girl he would disinherit him. Billy's love was true, however, and he had written his father that he had taken the only course for an honorable man and married the girl. They would seek out a place and try to abide by the old man's decree never to come to him for anything.

Times were hard for Billy and his girl wife. Business was poor and there was little market for Billy's work. They had established themselves in a poor tenement. Here their finances reach the lowest ebb and on the day of days, (Billy's birthday) their lights are turned off, the landlord is coming for the overdue rent and the larder is empty. Billy sets out determined to get work of any kind.

Nancy realizes with a start it is Billy's birthday and there is no present for him. It is a hard struggle but she decides to pawn her wedding ring and have a big dinner. She does so, and returning home, loaded down, meets Jabez. He is wearing old clothes and she, thinking he is an old friend in need of help, invites him to share the dinner. The old man is surprised and amazed at the cordial invitation given him, an entire stranger, and he is made to help in preparing the meal. His old heart is touched when he learns the sacrifice the girl has made to celebrate Billy's birthday. He hurries home, making an excuse.

Billy has been unable to find a thing to do. He returns home rejected. He is welcomed by the smiling Nancy and eyes the steaming dinner hungrily. Before leaving, old Jabez has insisted the girl put on a wedding ring he has to hide the absence of her own and Billy sees the ring and recognizes it as his mother's. Nancy then tells of having to pawn her ring and while she is crying on his shoulder old Jabez returns, hustles the bewildered couple out to his waiting car and tells them that Billy's birthday celebration will be on him.

"THE FLASHLIGHT."

little later, Lane is taken prisoner, the sheriff informing him that the girl had betrayed him.

At the trial, Lane is practically a condemned man, when the girl takes the witness stand and gives evidence that leads her to be held as an accomplice. Lane produces the camera picture to prove her innocence, but the sheriff displays her scarf belonging to her which was found in Brixton's cabin. The scarf is around her neck in the picture. There is no help for her or Lane. But when Lane, to save her, determines to make a false confession, she stops him, crying out: "He didn't do it! Nobody murdered Porter Brixton, because he isn't dead."

Brixton soon appears, frightening the credulous mountain people who think it is his spirit. He tells them that the murdered man was Henry Norton, his half-brother, whom he killed, and tells how the grim shadow of Henry's hatred clouded his life from the beginning. As the pet of their mother, he gained control of the estate and then later fastened a crime upon Brixton, the shock of which killed his invalid wife. Delice, Brixton's daughter, while trying to clear her father, aroused her uncle's ire. He managed to have himself appointed her guardian, hoping thus to get her under his control. But accidentally the girl found papers which proved Henry guilty of the crime for which her father was accused and she mailed them to Brixton at the cabin to which he had fled. Henry discovered the loss of the papers and induced her to lead him to her father's hiding-place, promising to make amends. When he entered the cabin and tried to shoot Brixton, the latter was the quicker and Henry was killed. Delice suggested that they garb the dead man in Brixton's clothes and because of their remarkable resemblance, it was thought the recluse had been murdered.

Miss Emma Carus For 2nd Song Hit

THE second "Song Hit in Photoplay" will be a patriotic one, and it is for this reason that the one announced for release on May 29th will be held over until June 19th. In place, then, of "Me an' My Gal," there will be released on May 29th a stirring patriotic song, entitled "Let's All Be Americans Now." This was written by Irving Berlin, Edgar Leslie and George W. Meyers. The song itself has the swing and spirit that will put it over of itself. But in order that it shall get the full benefit of a voice and personality known from coast to coast, Emma Carus has been secured to exemplify the spirit and the main character of the picture. Emma Carus is one of the very best known vaudeville and musical comedy singers in the United States, and has an international reputation as well. She will appear in the principal role of the photoplay, and will be photographed singing the song itself. Miss Carus is at present engaged in a vaudeville tour, and last week played the Palace Theatre, New York, and it was while she was there that "Let's All Be Americans Now" was filmed.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

FORTUNATELY or unfortunately, the title of a photoplay is almost the only angle that exhibitors can work on in making these "Putting It Over" suggestions effective. We have for the last six months been making these suggestions, and we trust they have been helpful. We know a great many exhibitors have used them. We respectfully suggest, however, that it would be a very interesting thing for other exhibitors if those who do use them would take photographs of the stunts that they use for lobby display or bally hoo, and send them in to the Putting It Over Department of the Moving Picture Weekly. It would add greatly to the interest of this page, and the avidity with which it is read, to have a number of actual examples of their use to show other exhibitors how they are being used. We would like to incorporate an illustration of this kind in every issue of the Weekly.

"MONEY MADNESS."

THE title of the Butterfly picture for May 26th is "Money Madness." It is a story of the misuse of banking funds by an intriguing official who wished to discredit the president of the bank, and force him to give him his reluctant daughter in marriage. The sight of money is always a drawing card. Have an artist draw a poster representing a huge pile of money, or better still, get from a theatrical dealer a bag of such money, or a pile of such bills. They cost very little, and will look sufficiently like the real thing for your purpose.

NOVEL BALLY HOO.

AN EIGHT-CYLINDER ROMANCE" the two-reel Victor comedy-drama for Thursday, is an easy feature to bally hoo. Any eight cylinder car with a great big sign, "An Eight-Cylinder Romance," on both sides of it, could be used, but be sure to have in it a girl dressed in a chauffeur's uniform, with great big goggles on. A man should be sitting in the back seat.

A ZOE RAE STUNT.

BY SPESHUL DELIVERY" is another Victor which can be easily put over by a stunt. It is all about a little girl who arrives by special delivery on a train. It would be effective to have a little girl dressed as Zoe Rae usually dresses, with her style of curls, carrying a tremendous special delivery letter. That is, have a board painted with the caption, "Special Delivery," in red, and as large type as possible, an imitation of a stamp, and the name and address of your theatre painted on it. This should make a corking good stunt.

Screen Magazine No. 20

NO one knows very much about the making of bronze statues, but all the secrets of the process are revealed in the Screen Magazine No. 20. All the stages, from modeling in clay to the completed bronze, of the making of the famous statue of "The Hiker" are shown in clearest detail, and the result is one of the most interesting numbers which even the Screen Magazine, famous for its interesting numbers, has turned out. Allen C. Newman is the sculptor who conceived "The Hiker" monument, and the cameraman takes us into his studio and shows him at work upon the clay model with which the work begins. He makes drawings first, then he poses the model in the nude and works on a small clay figure with all the detail which is to be in the finished work.

The cut above shows the model posing in uniform, and the nearly completed clay figure. The figure from which the bronze is cast is larger than life. A plaster cast is made first and taken to the foundry. We see the furnace pits, the crucibles for lifting the molten bronze, and the skilled workmen pouring the metal into the molds. Then the bronze is seen being dug out of the sand mold, and the sculptor himself carefully inspects it for imperfections. The rough sand and the edges of the mold are then removed from the cast. It is now ready for the coloring process. This may take a long time, if an effect of old bronze, with the characteristic greenish tinge, is desired. At last we see the unveiling of the statue, with the crowds waiting for the first view of another monument to American courage.

Another interesting section of Issue No. 20 is the reproduction of the famous Virginia Dare caverns, which were made for the American Museum of Natural History. Experts set up the rock formations caused by years of dripping of the lime-impregnated water in the cave.

New York views show the Harbor Police at work, patroling the waters of Manhattan Harbor in their swift craft. Then we see studies made in New York's great aquarium, of the fish gathered from the Seven Seas. The silver moon fish, the angel fish of the tropics, the porcupine fish found in New York Bay, and many other unfamiliar inhabitants of the deep pass before us. The reel ends with a miracle in mud by the Screen Magazine's famous sculptor, who makes the unique animated cartoons in clay.

CANADIAN NOTES

By J. W. CAMBRIDGE.

Claire Hague, general manager of the Universal Company in Canada, is on a trip to Montreal to make important changes in the Montreal branch.

T. O. Byerle, who has been manager of the Montreal office of the Canadian Universal Film Company for some time, has resigned.

Mr. Gronan has been appointed in place of Mr. Byerley, and S. H. Decker will be his assistant manager. Chandoes Brenon will have charge of the Bluebirds.

The Ottawa Evening Citizen has started a moving picture page in the Saturday edition.

Canadian exhibitors are laying up moving picture carbons in the expectation of a war embargo from the United States.

F. Coulton, for the past two years manager of the Photodrome Theatre, Queen Street East, has designed to become manager of the Globe Theatre, taking the place of Arthur Cohen.

Mr. L. Myer of New York has purchased the Strand Theatre, Toronto, which has been in the hands of the assignee for two months.

Mr. H. Patte, who has been in the Toronto office of the Canadian Universal Film Co., has resigned, and leaves for Northern Canada this week. He expects to conduct a summer camp.

The Strand Theatre, Wellington Street, Ottawa, closed for some time, opened last week under the management of Mr. Murray of the Empire.

MONTREAL, Que.—"The Voice on the Wire" has been hailed as the greatest serial ever shown in Montreal. Every theatre running it cleams a 25 to 50 per cent. increase of business for the days when same is showing.

The Gayety Burlesque House, which regularly closes its season in May, is going to run pictures through the summer. This will crowd the picture houses in this locality.

The Casino Theatre, Montreal, is again closed, and the old "To Let" sign is hanging out. This house is in the midst of many competitors.

TRENTON, N. S.—Work has already begun on the New Trenton, a motion picture house being erected for Messrs. N. W. Mason and W. Woods. The new theatre will open in July, seating 600.

KENTVILLE, N. S.—Clarke & Hiltz are building a new $25,000 picture house, which will be ready some time this summer.

A SCREAMING BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTION
"the EAGLE'S WINGS"

3 TREMENDOUS OPPORTUNITIES

"The Eagle's Wings" is a whale of a production. It has it all over every preparedness or patriotic picture ever released. It does not base its appeal on sham battles, smoke balls, jingo titles or any other form of fakery. It presents a theme of National Defense that has received the greatest commendation from high Washington officials—and the pledge of the hearty support of 1,500 Daughters of the American Revolution. These facts suggest the following:

1 If you have played this superb drama—NOW is the time to repeat your booking. The country is eager for just this sort of feature, and those who did not see it have been told how good it is. Book it again.

2 Make use of the patriotic sentiment among the women's clubs—Home Defense Leagues and Daughters of the American Revolution—and present this stirring picture under their auspices.

3 Remember "The Eagle's Wings" is a Special BLUEBIRD production. If you are showing BLUEBIRDS—START A BLUEBIRD DAY EACH WEEK IN YOUR THEATRE BY PRESENTING THIS PICTURE AS THE FIRST ONE. Pick out the proposition that suits you best and book NOW. BLUEBIRD Exchanges or

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

In "The Flashlight"

A FLASHLIGHT picture figures importantly in "THE FLASHLIGHT," the Bluebird Photoplay featuring Dorothy Phillips. This enables you to make use of the following idea in connection with this production:

Arm one of your attaches with a kodak and plenty of films. Have him stroll through the town and snap pictures of the various people he comes across. If yours is a neighborhood theatre, have your attache confine his efforts to the neighborhood. In the event that he is asked as to the use to which the pictures are to be put, have him hand the inquirer a card reading: "ASK THE MANAGER OF THE (theatre name here)."

Announce via your screen, program and all other advertising mediums that all persons identifying their pictures on a certain day would be presented with a pass good for the next performance. Announce that the pictures are to be displayed in the lobby. This could be done by mounting the snapshots on one-sheet boards.

You could also attract considerable attention by placing copies of these pictures on the one-sheet boards and then fastening these boards triangle-fashion on a handcart. This could be wheeled all over the neighborhood.

A novel stunt can be worked by means of a trick camera. This particular idea has been worked with great success by a number of exhibitors. Have a carpenter make a box for you, fashioning it to resemble a camera. By means of a simple spring arrangement he can so fix this "camera" as to allow the front part of it to drop down when the bulb cord is jerked. The dropping of the camera front will expose a painted sign, reading: "SEE THE FLASHLIGHT AT THE (NAME OR THEATRE)." For that matter, the box can be so made as to cause the sign to pop up when the bulb cord is jerked.

In advertising this production do not forget that Dorothy Phillips has a tremendous following and that she was the leading character in "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL," "THE GIRL IN THE CHECKERED COAT," "THE PIPER'S PRICE," etc. Remembrance of these productions will bring the crowds to see "THE FLASHLIGHT."

MR. EXHIBITOR:—

Should you decide to put the kodak idea described above to work, the copy below will help you advertise it. Have it multigraphed on an ordinary postal and mail to the names on your mailing list. The manager of the BLUEBIRD exchange supplying you with service will be glad to help you.

The two men get into a fight. Jack interferes to stop them, and Randall says, "I'll get even with you, Mr. Robert, and don't you forget it!" Helen Langdon is Robert's sweetheart, and rides over to their plantation. War is about to break out, and Robert and Jack are discussing it. Robert says that he loves the South, but he hates slavery and that it must come to an end. He declares that he will enlist in the Northern army. Jack will enlist with the Confederates. Helen declares that she will break with Robert if he joins the Unionists. The boys have to leave. They say good-by to their mother and their baby sister. Helen will not say good-bye to Robert till he changes his mind about the South. The boys ride off together and then separate, wishing each other well.

A year later, Jack is a secret agent in the Confederate army. They are in the neighborhood of their own plantation. Robert is detailed to supervise the destruction of the bridge to cut off the Confederate supplies. Jack goes to his home and is greeted by his mother and Helen, and the baby. He is called to action, the bridge is blown up and Jack is captured. Randall, who is a spy of the Confederates, though in the Northern army, determines to aid Jack to escape and put the blame on Robert. He sends word to the plantation that Jack is a prisoner. Helen and the baby come over to the camp to beg permission to see him. Robert allows it. He goes into the tent where Jack is confined with Helen and the baby. Randall slips a Union cap and coat with a note to Jack in the pocket under the tent flap. Jack finds it. While Robert is engrossed with Helen, he puts on the clothes and makes his escape. He returns to his mother. The escape of the prisoner is reported and Randall tells the captain that he is Robert's brother. Robert is accused of aiding him and is put under arrest. Randall is sent with an important message. He sends word to Jack by a farmer that the Union army is scheduled to leave for the shore, and that a train wreck is planned. The farmer brings the note to Jack. Randall is accidentally shot. He manages to reach the plantation, and falls off his horse. Dying, he writes a note to sav that Robert is innocent as he alone aided the prisoner to escape. Helen rides with the note to the Union camp.

Robert is about to be shot. Helen comes just in time with Randall's confession. Robert is freed.. He superintends the blowing up of the railroad track as planned. The Confederates, warned by Randall, attack the Unionists. There is a fierce encounter. Jack is killed, and Robert and Helen meet over his body and renew their vows.

The Feature That is Meteor-Like in its Flashing Brilliance

People literally flock in droves to see this attention-absorbing play. It packed the Garrick Theatre in Los Angeles on the same nights that others were showing such stars as Mary Pickford, Clara Young, William Farnum, Marguerite Clark, Blanche Sweet, Annette Kellerman. The combined drawing power of these stars wasn't anywhere nearly strong enough to hold out the crowds swarming through the doors of the Garrick.

Dorothy Phillips and a radiant cast

Dorothy Phillips puts this story over with a power that no other picture has ever had before. She takes her part in the notorious "Barbary Coast" at San Francisco with a minute fidelity that puts her work over in a big way. This story, taking place the time of the great San Francisco fire, is wonderfully staged and brilliantly played.

Don't overlook the opportunity to book this gold-winning picture. Play it for three or more nights. Get every cent there is in it for you. It will prove itself the biggest event of your history. Wire your nearest BLUEBIRD Exchange — or

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

"The Circus of Life." With Little Zoe Rae, Mignon Anderson, Emory Johnson and an All-Star Cast. Fifth Butterfly Picture. Directed by Rupert Julian. Released June 4. Do you believe that we are all mere puppets or clowns in the three-ring circus of life? Do you believe that what happens, happens, and that the best we can do is to give our daily performances and collect our bit for it at the end? That was the strange philosophy which the artist taught to Mamie, who was engaged to marry Danny, the brewery driver. Before the marriage came Mamie's disgrace which the villainous artist said was merely the fulfillment of her destiny. Here is the groundwork of a plot that opens and fulfills tremendous possibilities. The weaving of the warp and woof of humanity; as well as those silver threads of a child's beauty and love as presented by the fascinating child actress, Little Zoe Rae, makes an absorbing photodrama that will prove an instantaneous hit in your house. A beautiful Butterfly.

Harry Carey in "The Almost Good Man." With Claire Du Brey and a strong cast. Three Reel Gold Seal Unusual Western Drama. Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released June 5. Darn that director! He simply won't let Harry be more than 99 and 44/100ths pure. Of course, he does the square thing and all that, but all it gets him is the undying sympathy of the audience, and that's where you come in. Harry is an unwilling witness to the robbing of a safe by the father of the girl he loves, and it is only his previous record that is against him when he is charged with the death of the poor old guy who actually had committed suicide. And there you are. It's no wonder the fans love Harry Carey. He'd rather give 'em the honest-to-goodness heart drama than to win the girl. You can't blame 'em for thinking Harry is about the best that ever came out of the West. Cash in on it.

"Dry Goods and Damp Deeds." With Phil Dunham and Lucille Hutton. Two Reel L-Ko Comedy Funny Business. Produced under the supervision of General Director J. G. Blystone. Released June 6. You've seen a lot of funny L-Ko'S—based on a lot of funny ideas. But you've never seen anything funnier than Phil Dunham let loose with a water pipe in a dry goods store. If it doesn't start screaming laffter in your house when you show it, close up and move out of your town. Such people don't deserve moving picture entertainment.

"The Scrapper." With Jack Ford and Yvette Mitchell. Two Reel 101-Bison East and West Fighting Drama. Directed by Jack Ford. The biggest fight scene in films is the very least you can say about this humdinger. Jack, trying to rescue his sweetheart from a gang of human demons, successfully fights off more than a score of them until his four cowboy pals come to the rescue. In all the history of films there has never been staged such a fight as this. A half dozen times two, three and four men, locked in each other's arms, are thrown down a long stairway. Throwing a man over the banisters is the easiest thing Jack does. Hardened film reviewers who saw this sat there giving gasp after gasp as the fight raged faster and more furious. There is no possibility of adequately describing the supreme punch in this picture in this space. But whatever you do arrange to see it and book it. When you do book it be sure to show it for more than one day, and advertise it to the limit. It will make a lot of money for you.

New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I have your letter asking what I think about your Bluebird pictures. The best answer to it is the fact that WE ARE USING BLUEBIRDS IN ALL OF OUR 14 CHICAGO THEATRES. These theatres represent too much of an investment for us to take any gamble on what kind of pictures we show, so you can see that we must think highly of Bluebirds.

But what I consider even more important than what we think of your photoplays is what the people think. And it is a pleasure to assure you that our patrons are delighted with Bluebirds, especially since you have hit your stride and are showing a constant improvement week after week, instead of going up and down in quality the way so many producers have done in the past.

Your stories are always good, your photographic and lighting effects are unequalled, your casts are exceedingly well chosen, your settings, acting and directing are above criticism. But, best of all, the people like Bluebirds and always have a good word to say for them. Keep them as clean in the future as you have in the past and accept the congratulations of

Yours sincerely,
Nathan Ascher

BLUEBIRD
FILMS BRING BIG RETURNS

Show the people what they want to see and you'll play to capacity. The big, successful Exhibitors have built on this foundation, and that is why they are successful. The people are clamoring for PREPAREDNESS pictures. They are absorbed in them with a more intense interest than they ever have been in any other productions. They realize that PREPAREDNESS is to their own self-interest. These four big PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS fill the need. They are timely, patriotic and full of power and punch. Book them through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or BLUEBIRD Photoplays (Inc.), 1600 Broadway, New York.

"The Eagle's Wings" The most unusual picture on the market to-day. An intense and absorbing story presented in the most dramatic form. It deals with present conditions, and with industrial preparedness. It is as far beyond the jingo pictures with their fake and sham battles and studio atmosphere as it is possible to imagine. It is a real picture for real Americans, and that is why it is playing to repeat bookings and capacity houses everywhere shown. "The Eagle's Wings" is a BLUEBIRD Special, in 5 reels, written by Rufus Steele, featuring Herbert Rawlinson, supported by Vola Smith, Grace Carlisle and Charles Mailes.

"The Bugler of Algiers" Produced by Rupert Julian from the famous novel "We Are French," by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. Five-reel BLUEBIRD featuring Rupert Julian, Ella Hall, with Kingsley Benedict. An inspiring picture of patriotism that is particularly acceptable at this time. No living American can see this great production without leaving the theatre a better man than when he entered. Yet it does not preach; it simply grips and convinces. A picture you should book immediately.

"Behind the Lines" Harry Carey in "Behind the Lines" supported by Edith Johnson, directed by Henry McRae, constitutes a fascinating entertainment of war, political intrigue, romance and adventure. It is a thrilling portrayal of present-day conditions, and has played to capacity houses whereever shown. A BLUEBIRD with a big punch.

"Treason" A notable picture is "Treason," written by Lee Weigert, five stirring reels, produced by Allen Holubar, featuring Allen Holubar, Lois Wilson, Joe Girard and Dorothy Davenport. A big production with some tremendous war scenes and the most intense situation. A picture that will crowd your house for more than one showing.

"Hop-the Devil's Brew" is a genuinely typical Smalleys Production which means that it has a strong story and that the direction is perfect. Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley play the leads and the whole is a feature that you can boost as hard as you want to. It will make good.

"John Needham's Double" featuring that powerful American actor Tyrone Power, is one of the greatest screen dramas ever filmed. In it this celebrated star plays a dual role in a manner that has brought only the highest commendation from the most important of film critics. Book it again.

Sam Says: Swat the Film Hog!

THE other night I heard the world's most famous evangelist tell 20,000 people of the fate in store for the man who cusses. What he had to say was mighty interesting—but it would have been a blame sight more so had he let slip an earful concerning the things that were going to happen to the guy primarily responsible for the conditions that result in the cuss words. You conscientious exhibitors know what I mean. You've seen your performances go to smash and your reputation walloped to a fare-ye-well, because of the treatment accorded to the films by the ex-boilermakers who ran them just before you. Being plain human, you promptly and naturally cussed everything and everybody responsible in any way, shape or form for the condition of your films.

Now, a lot of you are inclined to place the blame upon the exchanges supplying you with service. But you can take it from me that no exchange man is crazy enough to want to ship you damaged goods. He knows only too well that poor condition and cancellation go hand-in-hand.

As a general rule, all films are examined as soon as they are brought into the exchange. The only time they are not examined is when they come in late and therefore must be rushed out to the next exhibitor to whom they are booked.

Then it is that pin patches, busted sprocket holes, scratches that run from one end of the reel to the other, to say nothing of defective patches, punch marks and oil spots cause the exhibitor to imperil his immortal soul by cussing loud and long!

We've been trying to remedy this condition. You can help us by immediately notifying our exchange managers whenever you get damaged film, so that the blame can be traced to the guilty parties.

And remember this. We want business—all of it we can get. But we DON'T want it badly enough to put up with the film hog who takes a fiendish delight in destroying our property and, of greater importance, your reputation!

Ruth Stonehouse in "The Stolen Actress"

Pap Olden had decided to destroy his mill, but was too late.

"Say, they want you on for a curtain Call." (The End.)

GOLD SEAL Three Reel Drama Written by Fred Jackson and Produced by Ruth Stonehouse with herself in the title role. A story of the stage and the Kentucky Mountains.

THE title role in this Gold Seal comedy drama, which was written by Fred Jackson, provides Miss Stonehouse with a delightful opportunity, of which she takes full advantage. She directed herself in this story of the New York stage, and the Kentucky mountains, and made a mighty good job of it. She had the assistance of a strong cast, most of the members of which have seen their names featured as leading players, in other productions.

Robert Carleton from Kentucky, just about whipped in the battle with the big city, spends his last money to see Margery Manning, a famous actress. He is inspired by her acting and hastens home, where he begins to write a play for her called "Little Miss Moonshine." Jimmy Walker, also from Kentucky, and a reporter on the "News," comes often to see Robert, and finally warns him against working so hard. At last the play is finished.

Margery Manning has ended her season and her manager, Leonard, is anxiously searching for a new play for her. He wants a society drama. When Robert takes his play to Leonard, the office boy doesn't even deign to present the script to the manager, but the stenographer takes pity on the writer, because of his worn, haggard appearance. But when she says it isn't a society drama, Leonard refuses to read it. Robert is desperate and is about to tear it to bits, when Jimmy stops him. He says he will make them read it. Robert receives a letter from his mother, urging him to return home and accept a job in the Revenue Service, which the chief has just offered. So he packs his clothes and leaves for Kentucky that day.

Jimmy kidnaps Margery Manning and takes her to a deserted restaurant. He refuses to allow her to leave or to eat until she has read Robert's play. She finally becomes enthusiastic and soon she and Jimmy are the best of friends. Leonard takes the drama and Miss Manning goes to Kentucky to absorb the necessary atmosphere. Jimmy gives her a letter to the Olden family, and there she spends some time. She takes Jinny, the daughter, for her model, and dresses in rough clothes.

Robert is sent to work the Tamarack Ridge district, in search for moonshiners. There in the mountains he meets Margery, but doesn't recognize her. They become great friends and he gives her lessons in reading, as she pretends she is uneducated.

Jed Skaggs, Jinny's lover, a shiftless fellow, has fallen in love with Margery. One day, when she wanders to the moonshine still where he is working he grabs her and kisses her. She escapes when Pap Olden arrives. Margery persuades the Oldens to give up their still, and Jed, being threatened by Pap Olden, immediately informs the revenue officers of the still. With Robert they start out to scour the country.

Margery meets the revenue men and quickly getting an old gun, points it at Robert. He continues to approach, and she fires at him. Then she breaks down and weeps. She knows that Jed betrayed the Oldens and tells them so. When Jed returns to the house, Pap Olden thrashes him severely and kicks him out.

Margery returns to the city for rehearsal and Robert remains in Kentucky recuperating from his wound. Jimmy often sees Margery. She doesn't know who the author of her play is, but is anxious to meet him. Jimmy sends for Robert to be present at the first performance. Jimmy ushers him into Miss Manning's dressing-room and begins to introduce them; but before he can speak, they are shaking hands and soon have forgotten all about him. Robert is about to take Margery into his arms when she is called on the stage. But at the end of the play she finishes her dance in his arms, as he stands waiting in the wings.

REALISM.

THREE women tourists walked past the five-and-ten-cent store set used in the Universal City production, "Like Wildfire," featuring Herbert Rawlinson with Neva Gerber, and one of them said: "I wonder what this place is for?" One of the other women replied as she walked along: "Oh, just a place where people here can buy things when they want 'em."

"That's realism for you," said Rawlinson to Miss Gerber, "when the people consider it a real store."

News from the Weeklies

First Camerawoman with News Weekly

Miss Dorothy Dunn of the U. A. W. Staff.

THE Universal Animated Weekly is distinguished by many unique features. A short time ago a new one was added, when Miss Dorothy Dunn joined its staff of expert and daring photographers, as the first woman attached in this capacity to a news weekly. Miss Dunn is seen in the cut shaking hands with Kohlemainen, the great Finn who won the Mail marathon, thirteen miles through the streets of Manhattan to the City Hall. Miss Dunn covered this event, and obtained fine pictures of the runners, the winner and the immense crowds which lined the streets to watch the race. She has met with unvarying success since she became a member of the staff of the Universal Animated Weekly, and she declares that she finds the profession of camerawoman perfectly delightful. She is received everywhere with a consideration quite out of the ordinary, and every opportunity is given her to get difficult "shots." Even her rivals in other weeklies treat her with a consideration which argues that the days of chivalry are anything but over among the camera fraternity, at any rate.

Miss Dunn visited one of our super-dreadnaughts, recently, to obtain pictures of the big guns, while the ship was in harbor; "Somewhere in America." She was royally received by both officers and crew. The former invited her to luncheon in their mess, and the members of the crew presented her with a tiny billygoat, son of Nanny Nuisance, the prize nannygoat mascot of the Atlantic Fleet.

Three scenes from the Bluebird Photoplay.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, the Nature director, and starring Myrtle Gonzalez, with George Hernandez and a powerful cast.

CAST.

Judge Morgan	George Hernandez
Cabel Talbot	Jean Hersholt
Roger Appleby	Jack Curtis
Carolyn Dillon	Myrtle Gonzalez
Uncle Zeke	George Marsh
Daws	Elwood Bredell
Wallace Turner	Maxfield Stanley
Ray Preston	Fred Church
Major Dillon	Chas. H. Mailes

THIS charming Bluebird Photoplay, written and produced by Lynn Reynolds, Bluebird's nature director, was originally called "The Three Guardians," from the three characters, played by George Hernandez, Jean Hersholt and Jack Curtis, who direct the destinies of the little Kentucky village where the scene of the story is laid. When the picture opens, we are introduced to the three old chaps, who are preparing for spring, each in his own way. The printer, Roger, has written some poetry, which he is reading to the judge and the cobbler. He tells them that what they need is an aim in life. When Daws, a country orphan, comes to the village with the earnest intention of getting an education, by fair means or foul, the three old cronies declare that they have found their aim, and adopt Daws between them.

Major Dillon is superintending his spring planting, and Carolyn, his daughter, is out riding in Wallace Turner's auto. He is her sweetheart, and the accepted applicant for her hand. Meantime, Ray Preston, a real estate broker, is on his way to wake up the town. He sets up an office and hires Daws to sweep it out. Daws is the devoted friend of Carolyn and Wallace.

Within a short time Preston makes himself known and liked throughout the community, where his purchases of real estate continue to add to his popularity. He meets Judge Morgan and offers to buy his swamp lands. The two go to the major's, where Preston is invited to remain. He refuses; but, catching sight of Carolyn on the veranda, quickly accepts the invitation. Wally arrives during Preston's visit. After Preston has left, the major remarks that the town needs folks like him to wake it up, while the judge explain that it is possible that he may do some business with him on the swamp land proposition.

In a few days the judge has transferred the swamp land to Preston in the major's presence. The major invites Preston to Carolyn's birthday dance on the following evening. Wally is also present and takes Preston over to introduce him to Clayton, the surveyor, whom Preston engages to make a survey of his new property. Wally meets Carolyn outside the bank and is talking with her when Preston comes and engages her attention, much to Wally's chagrin.

The night of the party, Daws, on his promise to keep out of sight, has accompanied the judge. Preston is the "lion" of the evening and dances continually with Carolyn. Wally is slightly angered by this, and remains in the garden. He is seen by Daws, who is outside in the judge's carriage.

Clayton, the surveyor, discovers a small pool of crude oil in the swamps. They take a sample in their water canteen to show to Preston. Meanwhile, Wally has called up Carolyn, who informs him that she is going riding with Mr. Preston. This makes Wally determine to have an understanding that afternoon. On reporting the oil find to Preston, the broker suggests that he sends the sample to Lexington for analysis. In the meantime, Wally insists to Carolyn that she must not see Preston again. Angered, Carolyn returns his ring, throwing it into the machine. Wally is almost heart-broken.

Carolyn welcomes the Judge to her party.

Within the week Clayton receives a reply from Lexington, stating that the sample is a crude oil of high test, and that under the conditions in which it was found there probably is a large quantity in the near vicinity. The news soon spreads through the town and Preston is visited by the major and judge. Daws finds the ring in the machine and takes it to Wally, who tells him to keep it. Realizing the trouble, Daws carefully keeps it for future use.

The judge, major, Roger and Talbot call on Preston to find out what his intentions are in regard to his new find. He remarks that since they are his friends and neighbors, he will sell them a half-interest for forty thousand dollars. This is eagerly accepted by all. Wally remarks to Daws that if there is oil in the swamp it has come there since he is a youngster.

With confidence in the judge, the townspeople choose him to take charge of their investments, while the major becomes a large shareholder. That afternoon Carolyn tells her father that Preston has asked her to marry him. She refuses to give any explanation and he insists that she must not marry Preston, as people will imagine she is after his money.

The following day Preston shows Carolyn a telegram from his attorney requesting his immediate presence in New York. He suggests that they make the trip their honeymoon, and she agrees. Daws has enlisted Zeke's aid and gone down to the swamps. They come upon a number of burnt barrels, and Daws finds a half-burned piece of wood in the fire, with the label, "Crude Oil" on it.

The three old rebels together.

That evening Carolyn changes her mind and sends a note to Preston by a servant. Meanwhile, in the shoemaker's shop the three old men are gathered about a strange negro, whom Zeke and Daws have brought in. The piece of board and barrel hoops are on the floor. Roger buckles on his revolver and, accompanied by Talbot, the two set out for Preston's office. In the office Preston is reading the note from Carolyn, stating that she cannot keep her promise that night, as she has never really cared for him. He stuffs the note in his pocket and starts out of the door, where he is met by Roger and Talbot, who inform him that the judge wishes to see him. Roger backs up his request with the revolver. The judge shows that they have traced evidence to prove that the negro present had delivered the crude oil to Preston at the swamp. Preston smiles and says that as the townspeople had insisted on buying the land he defies the judge to prove that he is not within the law. The judge agrees with Preston on the legal question, but still requests that he return the investments. Preston refuses, and the judge takes him to the window, where looking out, he sees a number of men preparing a tar-and-feather party. Preston turns pale and agrees to return the investments. He accidentally drops the note from Carolyn, which Daws finds. It gives him an idea and hastily scribbling a note of his own he places the ring in it and hastens to Wally, who is working late at the bank. He hands the note to Wally, telling him that Miss Carolyn wishes to see him immediately. Wally goes to the house and finds Carolyn in the garden. He delivers the note to her and she shows it to Wally. Daws has written "I lied to Mr. Turner; she didn't want to see him." Both see the humor of the situation and laugh. Carolyn replaces the ring on her finger and tells Wally that she doesn't believe that Daws lied.

AT THE FRONT

ROBERT S. DOMAN, formerly assistant editor of the Weekly and now European correspondent, sends in his first story. He is on the Paris edition of the Herald and has made three trips to the Somme front.

By

ROBERT S. DOMAN

I MAY have told you some of this, but here's what I have been doing since the first of the year: Early in January I presented my credentials as correspondent of the St. Louis Republic to the French Foreign Office and about two weeks later I got a letter inviting me on a trip to Verdun, starting January 31. I was the only undistinguished member of the party which was really shown extraordinary consideration.

It was some trip. We not only took in the terrible sights at Verdun but made a visit to the Champagne front, the Argonne, the outlying forts of Verdun and wound up with a 3 A. M. visit to the famous Fort Vaux which sustained the brunt of the German attack and which held out for three months after Fort Douaumont fell. Our entire trip lasted four days.

The visit to Fort Vaux was a corker. I saw sights I never will forget. It would fill a book to tell you all. We made our way to the fort under heavy fire and, believe me, I wanted to back out time and time again, but there was no help for it, once we had started. I had the honor of being the first American correspondent to enter the fort after its recapture from the Germans.

How I did hate to leave the shelter of that old fort on the return trip! We stayed in the fort from about 4 A. M. until 6 A. M., when we started back. The sun was up and we made fine targets. We not only had to go through the German barage fire, but had to take the chance of being seen and of getting a few "special courtesy" shells as well. Dead bodies of couriers and corvee carriers lined the road to the fort and, to tell the truth, I thought my last thoughts and said mental good-byes to everybody.

> WE threw them out a bit by dawdling, and while one of the twenty-one shrapnel and percussion shells which were meant for us landed near enough to plaster one of our party with chunks of clay, we got through all right. The nearest shell to me landed about 70 to 90 feet away. The concussion was something tremendous, for it was a big Austrian howitzer shell. My nose started bleeding, and as I lay on the snow my whole body moved from the rush of wind. The screeching of the shell splinters sounded like heavy sail canvas being ripped in two. I couldn't hear a blasted thing except a shout for twelve or fourteen hours, and my nerves were all shot to pieces for two weeks afterward.

The German crumps were falling at haphazard around us—nasty black 5.9's they were, each one of which sent up a geyser of black choking smoke about fifty to seventy-five feet high. The shell splinters sounded like a thousand droning bees. Our captain called us together behind a knoll marking the remains of the Petit Depot on the return trip and said to us:

"There's no doubt but what we have been seen. In about eight minutes we can expect a shower." He told us right when and where we would get it—and sure enough we did—almost to the second. You see, after they spotted us, they waited until we had arrived at a point where two paths crossed and then they let us have it. The German artillerymen of course know every foot of the ground, for they have been fighting there now for nearly two years.

You would have laughed to see me standing there, after I finally got to my feet, with a handkerchief to my nose and not knowing whether to go forward, walk sideways like a crab or curl up on my ear. There was no use dodging. It was a case of standing there and hoping that the German gunpointers would have an epileptic fit and shoot wild. The shells fell behind, in front and on each side of us. I'll never forget their whistle and crack if I live a couple of more lives. (Continued on p. 34)

"NO. 10 WESTBOUND"

RUSH To David McRae
Hedgeville Cal.

ANOTHER of Henry McRae's railroad thrillers. Written by T. Shelley Sutton and adapted for the screen by George Hively, with Eileen Sedgwick and Kingsley Benedict in the leads.

CAST.

Edith	Eileen Sedgwick
Jim	Marc Fenton
Pete	Fred Church
Jack	Babe Lawrence
Harry	Kingsley Benedict
Mason	T. D. Crittenden

A RAILROAD thriller, up to the high standard set by the veteran director, Henry McRae, in these things, is his latest, "No. 10 Westbound," which was written by T. Shelley Sutton, and adapted for McRae's use by George Hively. There is a surprise finish which adds an interest after the big fight in the second reel is over. Eileen Sedgwick has the role of the persecuted heroine, Fred Church is the villain, and Kingsley Benedict is the surprising hero, "Handsome" Harry, a hobo, who turns out to be something quite different in the end.

Jim McLaren, the oldest and most trusted engineer on the White Rock Division, with his fireman, Pete Devins, arrives in White Rock, the end of their run. He is met by his daughter, Edith, and Jack Shannon, her sweetheart. Jim favors Pete and does not like Jack. The Superintendent of the road is being harrassed by hold-up men. The situation has become very annoying as train hold-ups have been frequent. A stranger enters the Superintendent's office and presents a letter, the contents of which are not shown. The next day, Pete calls to see Edith, after having had several drinks in the saloon. He tries to make love to her, but she is not responsive. He becomes angry. She runs from him back to her father. Jack arrives in time to hear of the trouble and tries to fight with Pete, but Edith and her father prevent it. Pete returns to the saloon, where he meets some of his friends, who are the train robbers.

Meantime, "Handsome" Harry, a hobo, has arrived in White Rock and makes his way to the saloon. Pete drinks heavily and forgets to report for duty. The result is that the Superintendent goes to the saloon, finds Pete and discharges him. While doing so, the Superintendent drops a letter, which is found by Harry. After the Superintendent has left, Pete forces Harry to give up this letter, which contains information concerning a shipment of gold. Pete and the bandits plan to rob this train and are forced to let Harry in on the job as he has previously read the letter.

Before executing the robbery, Pete asks the assistance of the gang to help him in getting away with Edith. They kidnap her and take her to a mountain cabin, where they leave her in charge of one of the gang known as "Red," while they go to rob the train. Harry and Sam leave town on a freight train to catch No. 10 at the next town. They are loaded into the express car in boxes and, at a certain point, release themselves and force the messenger to open the safe.

In the meantime, Pete and the others have placed torpedoes on the track to stop the train. The robbery works out as planned and everything looks rosy for the gang until, after the work has been completed, they find themselves covered by Harry's gun and under arrest.

In the meantime, Jack has discovered that Edith is missing and follows her trail to the cabin. A struggle takes place in which Jack comes out victor and "Red" is made a prisoner. Jack and Edith arrive at the station just as "No. 10" comes in "on time" and "Red" is turned over to the authorities. "Handsome" Harry is unmasked as the Chief Special Agent of the road, the man who was in conference with the Superintendent at the beginning of the story.

"AN 8 CYLINDER ROMANCE"

Produced by Henry McRae. Bison Two-Reel R. R. Drama—Re-

VICTOR Two Reel Comedy Drama Written by James Douglass and Produced by I. N. Heffron. The story of a girl disguised as a chauffeur.

CAST.

Jack Gleason	J. Morris Foster
Jim Whann	Billy Human
Ethel Whann	Rena Rogers
Mr. Whann	Perry Banks

THIS story of a girl, who in order to test her brother's sincerity, disguises herself as a chauffeur and proceeds to have a night of wild adventure, was written by James Douglass and produced by I. N. Heffron, with J. Morris Foster and Rena Rogers in the leads.

Jack Gleason, a graduate of Harvard, is visited by a chum of college days, Jim Whann, who lives with his father and his young sister, Ethel. Jim invites Jack to his home to meet them but Jack begs to be excused. Ethel thinks that this chum about whom Jim talks so much is really the pretty girl, whose picture is in her brother's room. She decides to find out the facts. When Jim goes out that night she wears the chauffeur's clothes and drives the machine.

Mr. Whann has told Jim what Ethel was going to do, and he treats her as if she were the chauffeur, on the way to the bachelor apartment of his friend.

When Jack has heard Jim's story of Ethel's deception, he joins the plot. They have read of the many auto burglaries and plan to scare Ethel. Jim remains at the apartment and Jack, with a handkerchief tied over his mouth, and an unloaded pistol in his hand, commands Ethel to hold up her hands. She drives the car according to directions, but pretends to have engine trouble and stops in front of a garage. The garage man tells her that there is nothing wrong with the car. He suggests that they get a drink. Jack goes with them. Ethel cannot get away with her drink, so the fellow calls her "Mama's baby boy," and slaps her on the back. Jack fights him. Ethel phones her father telling him she has been held up by a highwayman, and is now at a saloon where the burglar and another are fighting. Her father rushes for the police.

Jack and Ethel escape from the saloon and start down the road. Jack looks back and seeing a machine pursuing them, takes the wheel and starts to race. He slips into an alleyway and the other car passes on down the road. But a tire has gone flat and he orders Ethel to fix it. Frightened for fear he might discover her to be a girl, she begins to work. Jack is sorry for his harshness and is just going to help her, when two masked men suddenly appear and force them to hold up their hands.

Meanwhile Mr. Whann and the policeman, trying to find the other machine, meet Jim, who has just descended from a street car. He tells his father that Jack is the highwayman. Passing the alleyway they see the hold-up in progress. The robbers forcing Jack to drive the car, start away, threatening to kill him if he stops. While they are looking back at the pursuing auto, Jack puts on the breaks very suddenly, throwing the men forward. Before they can regain their poise, he thrusts his empty revolver in their faces. The policemen draw near and take the two men prisoners, but Jim tells them to let Jack go. Ethel is impressed by Jack's looks and courage. She hands him a bill and asks him to try to go straight. Jim and his father are scarcely able to control their laughter. They leave Jack and return to their home.

That evening Jack comes to the Whann home, and Ethel, unsuspecting, enters. He is holding a framed picture of her behind him and is very embarrassed. She takes him for a sneak-thief. Jim enters greatly amused, and tells his sister that Jack is his chum. He and Mr. Whann then leave the room. Jack tells her that he stole a picture similar to the one he now has in his hand, and that he has been in love with the girl for two years.

NOTED SINGER AN EDUCATIONAL FILM FAN.

WARLICH REINHOLD, one of the most noted baritone singers of Europe and whose father was director of the imperial court orchestra at Petrograd, was a visitor this week at Universal City. Reinhold said: "I spend nearly all my leisure time in the theatres where motion pictures are shown, and while I enjoy greatly the dramas and the comedies I find most of my pleasure in the educational films. The most of these educational films are made the stronger becomes the motion picture industry—at least, that is my opinion. I look for the time when the major part of the instruction in institutions of learning will be given by means of the screen."

The Little Frien

By MARJORI

Producing tears to order.

LETTERS! Oh, let's see what they say!" That is the cry of little Zoe Rae, Universal's wonder-baby, when she comes downstairs for breakfast at the beginning of her strenuous day. The mail of a six-year-old is not particularly interesting, as a rule, but Zoe's is an exception. She is the little friend of all the world. Every morning she finds a pile of envelopes beside her plate, some of them with queer stamps on them from some far-off country, which she has to look up in the atlas. Zoe has learned what she knows of the geography of the globe by the study of the stamps and postmarks on her own letters. From all over the big United States they come, and it is fun to look up the distant cities on the map and trace the long route that some of them have had to travel to reach the Hollywood home, where the little lady lives with her father and mother. Sometimes there are very funny ones among them. The other day she had a communication from Tokyo, in far Japan, which addressed her as "Ladies," and told her, "you are a light of artistman in the world!" Zoe laughed till she cried over the quaint phrasing. One morning, there was a note from Georgia from a youth of the mature age of ten years, who told her that he was going to win her love, even if he had to go to Universal City to do it.

This started Zoe on a train of matrimonial thought, during which she became so serious that she almost forgot to eat her breakfast.

"What are you studying over, Zoe?" asked her father.

"I was wondering how I'm going to know about the man I marry," declared the baby earnestly. "You know, I'd never want to marry a man that drinks or swears. But how am I going to know whether he does or not when he is away from me?" She knit her downy brows in perplexity.

"Oh, you'll understand about all those things better when you are older," said her father.

But Zoe was persistent, and drove him into a corner, until he finally admitted that she might smell the man's breath.

Then her eyes opened as round as saucers. "Why, daddy," she exclaimed, "how do you suppose I could smell swear-words?"

Zoe is such a real baby, for all her serious screen work and her stardom, that she is still in the golden age of make-believe, and all the dramatic things which she sees and does at the studio are reflected in her play with her dolls. The other evening Zoe was giving herself her bath—this is a dignity to which she has but recently attained, and her mother, even now, is never very far away while the ceremony is in progress. Zoe had been playing some very dramatic scenes for the Butterfly Picture, "The Circus of Life," of which she is the diminutive star, and presently her mother heard exclamations in a high-pitched voice, coming from the bathroom.

"I'll teach you to treat my child this way, you villain! You would try to drown my child, you brute, would you? Take that, and that!"

Mother entered, to find Zoe striking vigorously at the water in the bat, and she asked what it was all about.

"You see, mamma, I was playing the lady with the child and the bad-man, too—the villain, you know. He took my child away from me, and tried to drown her, and when you came in I was playing that I'd put him in the water and was drowning him. You see, I'd saved my child. Here she is, but she's awfully wet, and we'll have to hang her up to dry."

Time to get up!

Zoe's mother says that the little girl never stops acting. The first thing in the morning she improvises a scene, and at dinner in the evening, after her day's work at the studio, she amuses them with her imitations of the actors and actresses with whom she has been playing that day. Yet Zoe is a real child, enjoying all the things that please others of her age, and her tremendous popularity and success have not turned her head in the least. One reason for this is the immensely high standard which the kiddie has set for herself. She is a real artist in that she never satisfies herself.

"Zoe," said her mother the other day, when the fatigue and excitement of a long scene had, for once, made the little lady fractious, "if you don't behave this instant, I'll knock out a rung!"

Zoe immediately became the picture of an obedient child, and one of the bystanders asked Mrs. Rae the meaning of the cryptic phrase.

"Oh, that is an allusion to the ladder of fame which Zoe has made up her mind to climb," said her mother, smiling. "Whenever I tell her that if she is not good, a round will be missing when she comes to it, she behaves at once."

After all, the career of an emotional actress is rather an exacting one for a six-year-old, though Zoe's sunny temper and perfect health is the best proof that she is being handled as wisely as possible. She seldom shows any sign of strain, and is as fond of mud-pies and hide-and-go-seek as any baby of her age in the country. Still, to go through a scene of heartfelt weeping over nothing at all uses up a good deal of emotional force and is not the best thing in the world for baby nerves. Zoe gets through an ordeal of this kind by feeling sorry for herself. When her director wants her to cry to order, she asks for a mirror, and, making as pitiful a face as she can, she stares at it, thinking how sad the little girl in the glass is, until the round tears come rolling from her eyes and hop down her cheeks. But some days she "feels so good," as she expresses it, that she just can't persuade herself to be sorry for anybody—not even herself. One of these days occurred during the making of the Butterfly Picture, "The Circus of Life." Director Julian, who is one of Zoe's staunchest friends, wanted a close-up of her, bathed in tears. Zoe tried her best to be accommodating, but she couldn't squeeze out a single tear to save her life. She declared that the waterworks had run dry and that there wasn't a tear in her whole body. As it was just luncheon-time, Julian said:

"Well, Zoe, perhaps you will be able to cry when you've had something to eat," and he dismissed the company and went off to the restaurant.

"Mamma, you go, too, and leave me here. I don't want anything to eat," said Zoe, much depressed at her failure. She was so insistent that her mother finally left her.

About half an hour later, when Julian and Zoe's mother returned, they found the six-year-old kneeling by a bed in the set, and saying over and over:

"Oh, God, do please make me cry!"

Her prayers were effective, for when Julian called "Camera," Zoe was able to shed tears as copiously as ever.

One of the best means of soothing nerves tired out from the noise and confusion of the studio, is motoring. Zoe is one of the youngest auto-owners in the world, and what is more, she operates her own car. Not long ago she had a vacation of several days, and, with her parents, she left Universal City for a little tour in her own machine. She was not satisfied with the speed at which she was allowed to go, and her father finally told her that if a policeman saw them, he would pinch them all.

Zoe's eyes grew very round. "Goodness, daddy, then we'd be all black and blue, wouldn't we?" she exclaimed in horror, and after that she

THE fourth Butterfly Picture was written by the well-known author Frank H. Spearman, adapted for the screen by William Parker and directed by Henry McRae, the veteran thrill producer. The original tale was one of the famous "Whispering Smith" stories, and this celebrated character of fiction was played by Charles Hill Mailes. Mary MacLaren has a sympathetic role as the daughter of the bank president, which enables her to show her remarkable daring at the wheel of a racing car. Eddie Polo is given plenty of opportunity to perform feats of strength, climb up the side of houses, and play around on rushing locomotives. The unusually excellent story may be allowed to speak for itself.

"I'm in on that job, Doctor."

Failure of two financial institutions starts a run on the Grand National Bank, of which George Fuller is president. There is a clamoring crowd of depositors outside the building, and inside, the directors with the president and Vice-president Simmons, are holding an anxious meeting. Fuller sends for the cashier, Tom Williams, for a report on how much available cash there is in the vault. Williams tells him that there is $700,000, and that $500,000 will stop the run. Fuller urges his fellow directors to pay the people, saying that pennies mean bread to many of them, but Simmons declares that that is not business, and insists upon the customary thirty days' notice. Most of the other directors agree with him. Fuller asks them to go with him to the window, and points out the poor circumstances of the people who would be paupers without their savings. As he does so, the crowd catches sight of the directors, a stone is thrown through the window, and strikes Simmons on the head.

The president's daughter, Ethel, has called for their family physician, Dr. Mercer, to take him to the home of the night watchman, an old employee of the bank, whose daughter is very ill. The doctor examines her, and says that she must have a change of climate if she is to get well. Jerry and his wife decide to draw the $300 that they have in the bank with which to send her away. Then Ethel takes the doctor in her car to the bank. They arrive just after Simmons has been hurt. Ethel is much upset by seeing the crowd in front of the bank and hurries into the president's room. There she hears him declare that all his available cash, amounting to $75,000, is to be paid out as far as it will go to the depositors. She urges the other directors to follow his example, but they do not heed her. Fuller asks Tom, the cashier, to escort Ethel to her home. The two young people have been interested in each other for a long time. Tom goes to get his hat, and Ethel is accosted by Simmons, who tells her that her father's action will mean his ruin, and that his fate is in her hands. If she will marry Simmons, he will undertake that all the depositors shall be paid and that the run on the bank shall come to an end. Ethel repulses Simmons, and goes home with Tom.

Simmons has other banking interests besides those of the Grand National. Behind tightly closed doors he carries on a gambling establishment, the existence of which has long been suspected by the police. Dr. Mercer also is not quite the reputable physician he appears to be. His office has a back entrance, through which come wretched wrecks of humanity in search of forbidden drugs. Among them is one "Hartford Red," once one of the best engineers who ever ran a locomotive, but now a drug-ridden creature of the doctor's.

When President Fuller returns to his home that evening, he is carrying a bundle. He opens it, disclosing currency, which he places in the wall safe of his sitting room. Doctor Mercer arrives to inquire for Ethel, whom he has seen so upset by the crowds at the bank. Hartford, unknown to him, has followed him, clinging to the back of his automobile. The former engineer declares that the doctor has cheated him, giving him short weight in his drug purchases, and he is determined to have revenge. He drops off the back of the car, and runs around the house, looking in at the sitting-room window. He sees the president placing currency in the wall safe. As he does so, he is overcome with faintness, and the doctor and Ethel rush in to his assistance. While Ethel supports her father, the doctor sees the money in the open safe. Hartford observes all this. The doctor leaves, after seeing Mr. Fuller into bed, but on the way out in his car he is held up by Hartford, who demands that he be given his share of the night's job. He knows that the doctor is planning to rob the safe. Mercer decides to let him in on the job.

"That man followed me!"

Ethel has an engagement for the theatre and supper with Tom. She does not wish to leave her father, but he declares that he is all right, so she goes. After the play they go together to the Follies Cafe, and there Tom sees his uncle, the famous railroad detective, "Whispering" Smith, and asks permission to introduce him to Ethel. It is arranged that Smith shall take the room next to Tom's at his hotel.

In the meantime, Mercer and Hartford, knowing that Fuller is in bed and Ethel at the theatre with Tom, break into the president's house and, opening the wall-safe, remove the bills, with which they return to the doctor's secret office. Then Mercer goes off to the gambling place to indulge his passion for play, while Hartford sinks into a drugged sleep with his head resting on the stolen bills.

"I won't go and leave you!"

While Mercer is gambling with some of the stolen money, the police raid the place, and the doctor and Simmons just manage to escape over the roof. They re-enter the doctor's place, and Simmons discovers the bills on the table. He tells them that they are Grand National bills unstamped by the cashier, and the doctor confesses that he is as crooked as the vice-president. Simmons then tells him to make Hartford place some bills in Tom Williams' room, as he wishes to get Tom out of the way so that he may have a free hand with Ethel. Hartford climbs up the fire-escape, and has just hidden the bills in Tom's bed, when the cashier and Smith return. Hartford has just time to escape without being seen.

"Good-night!" said Ethel.

In the morning at the bank, while the crowds are still clamoring for the money due them, as Fuller's cash has given out, though many are still unpaid, the president tells the directors that the funds are in his possession and that he will restore them when they agree to pay the depositors. Tom is sent to fetch the money from the safe. Of course, he finds it empty. He returns with Ethel in her car. Simmons then accuses Tom, and insists upon his room at the hotel being searched. He also insists that the president be held until investigation is made. While the officers are gone to search Tom's room, word is brought in that the night watchman has not rung out that morning. An officer goes to the basement to search for him, and Jerry is found, lying desperately wounded behind some boxes. Tom's revolver, with two shots fired, is found beside him. In the meantime the officers have found the money concealed in Tom's bed, and he is arrested. He asks Ethel to let his uncle know, and she sets out to do so. She finds Smith in his hotel, and draws his attention to the fact that Simmons has followed her there. She says that it is he who accused Tom, and that he told her that her father's fate was in his own hands. Smith says that in that case they will follow him. Simmons has bribed a bellboy to listen to their conversation, and the boy reports what Ethel has said. He rushes out and jumps into his car, driving to the secret entrance to Dr. Mercer's office. He finds the doctor and Hartford, and tells that Whispering Smith is after them, that he has the cashier's stamp and that they must beat it with the money at once. They prepare to do so and,

"The Purple Scar"

TWO Reel Rex Drama of the remembrance of a service which prevents a crime. Written by Dudley Burrows and produced by A. E. Garcia.

TERESA and "Grip," her brother, are invited to go for a picnic to the beach. At the same time Thornton Van Sant invites Miriam, his sweetheart, and a party of friends to spend the day cruising in his yacht. The humble party have a lovely time and go in swimming. Teresa lags behind the others, and is at last in danger of sinking. Van Sant plunges over the side of the yacht and rescues her. They struggle, and she scratches his face so deeply that it leaves a permanent scar. Grip and the others are much impressed at Van Sant's bravery in saving Teresa, and at his skill in restoring her to consciousness.

Years later, Van Sant has become the head of the Vice Commission, and is relentlessly on the track of the men higher up in the "Dope Trust." Unknown to him, the head is Jeffrey Deane, the father of his sweetheart, Miriam. Grip has become a paid gunman, and lives with his sister in constant fear of the police. Deane carries on his trade in drugs by means of a Chinaman, Chin Loo, who is also the medium through which Deane's orders reach the gunmen. Deane goes to see Chin Loo, to tell him that Van Sant must be disposed of, as he is on their trail. The Chink says that Grip will do the job. He sends for him, and gives him his orders and money. Grip returns to Teresa with the address of Van Sant on a piece of paper. He goes to put the money in a safe place, leaving his gun on the table, and Teresa, who hates his mode of life, bites the bullets out of the cartridges and returns them to the gun. Grip drops the piece of paper and Teresa finds it. She follows him secretly to the address.

Van Sant is working at his desk, and Grip peers through the window at him. He fires once, of course without effect as there is no bullet. Then he sees the scar which was made by Teresa when Van Sant saved her from drowning. Van Sant starts at the sound of the shot, and overpowers Grip. He calls the police. Teresa arrives and begs him to spare Grip as he has never had a chance. She recalls her rescue to Van Sant, who asks why Grip did not fire a second time. He says that he recognized the scar and could not. He shows them the way to Chin Loo's. Deane is there, with a list of the men against whose names he has made a mark. Van Sant's has just been scored off the list. The police break in, and there is a struggle. Chin Loo pulls a cord. A heavy ball falls from the ceiling and kills Deane. Later we see Miriam, still the happy wife of Van Sant in ignorance of her father's life, and Teresa and Grip as their near neighbors in the country.

Sweet Co-operation

Combination window display for Bluebird Films and Bluebird Chocolates.

CO-OPERATION—that wonderful business boosting method that always spells success—has been put into operation by Bluebird Photoplays in a way that is bound to obtain big results and make friends for Bluebird exhibitors.

Next to good features, photoplay patrons love good candy. So Bluebird Photoplays have joined hands with Bluebird Chocolates. This was done only after a thorough investigation proved that Bluebird candies had the quality to be associated with Bluebird Photoplays.

The real live exhibitors are taking advantage of the plan and are reaping a rich harvest. The one unfortunate feature of the plan is that it cannot be operated throughout the nation. It must, necessarily, be confined to a comparatively few states. This is due to the fact that Repetti, maker of Bluebird Chocolates, operates in only the Atlantic Coast states. Exhibitors in the following states are the lucky ones: New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Delaware and Virginia.

The plan simply calls for co-operation between candy dealers and Bluebird exhibitors. Repetti is supplying his dealers with window display material, lobby displays and candy which is furnished to the exhibitor for prizes on his Bluebird Nights. The candy dealer sets up a window display of Bluebird candies, also announcing the fact that they are the prizes for a contest to be conducted at the theatre. The lobby display is furnished the exhibitor to further advertise Bluebird Night. In other words, the candy dealer advertises the exhibitor and furnishes prizes free for the exhibitor's contest. In return, patrons of the theatre are subtly informed as to the excellence of Bluebird Chocolates.

It is, without a doubt, one of the best boosting plans ever conceived and is meeting with the hearty approval of Bluebird exhibitors who are fortunate enough to be included in the territory covered.

In addition, exhibitors who have not been using Bluebirds are contracting for them so as to take advantage of the co-operative plan. They realize that Bluebird is doing for them what other feature producers are not.

Co-operation is one of the conspicuous features of any Bluebird exchange. To assist the exhibitor in every possible way is considered a duty by exchange managers. And the best part of it is that scores of exhibitors are taking advantage of this and, as a result, are increasing their incomes and patronage steadily and permanently.

FARNUM PARADES FOR TEMPERANCE.

Scene from coming Bluebird "Bringing "Home Father," with Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon.

"I NEVER thought that they would persuade me to take part in a temperance parade," said Franklyn Farnum when the big scene in the Bluebird photoplay, "Bringing Home Father," had been completed and he was again safely ensconced in a big chair in the Athletic Club where he lives. "We went down to Long Beach to stage the thing," he continued to an appreciative audience, "and Worthington put on a parade which was so exactly like the real thing that we were cheered en route, and ever so many people asked us where the temperance meeting was to be held. We all wore banners with 'Eliza Swazey for Alderman' on them, and I am sure that the Long Beachites all thought that Miss Mayon, who was playing the part, was a real candidate, and wondered that they had not heard of her in local politics before. Arthur Hoyt, playing the henpecked 'Pa Swazey,' was the object of some good-natured joshing on the part of the crowds, who really thought that he was unable to control the immense white fire-horse on which he rode at the head of our parade. Altogether, we had a hectic time, and I think we earned a little liquid refreshment if any one ever did."

The incident of the fire horse is one of the most amusing which has appeared in recent pictures. "Peter" played by Farnum, has little sympathy with Ma Swazey's reform tactics, but he is in love with her daughter. Pa is forced to join the procession, much against his will, but the resourceful Peter provides him with a fire horse, and then arranges to have the bell rung, as they pass the fire station. The horse responds, and Pa is able to seek the seclusion for which his soul yearns.

A REAL ALL-STAR CAST FOR "THE CIRCUS OF LIFE."

THAT much abused term, "All star cast," may really be applied with justice to the Butterfly picture, "The Circus of Life," which will be released next week. Little Zoe Rae is the featured player, and this six-year-old star has a part which is after her own heart. She is the sunny-tempered little optimist, whose unconscious philosophy was the means of restoring all the inhabitants of a rooming-house to happiness. The leading "grown up" role is taken by Elsie Jane Wilson, an actress of the first rank, who has been the star of many photoplays, including "The Evil Women Do," a Bluebird photoplay. In private life, she is Mrs. Rupert Julian, and co-operated with her husband in the production of this play. She was well known on the legitimate stage before the screen called her, and supported Geraldine Farrar in the photoplay, "Temptation." Mignon Anderson, the star of the recent Butterfly, "The Phantom's Secret," and one of the best known screen actresses, has the appealing role of the seamstress who tries her best to induce the boy she loves to go straight. The boy is played by Emory Johnson, who has had the lead in several Red Feathers and Bluebirds, and who will play the hero in the next Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," now under production. The "villain" in this case, an artist with an unfortunate philosophy of life with which he tries to imbue all those with whom he comes in contact, is played by that "super villain" of Universal, Harry Carter, who will have the title role in the new serial, and who is famous wherever pictures are shown for his consummate ruffianism on the screen.

WILSON ELECTED!

AS a result of a vote for the most popular screen actor, taken by the high school girls of Taylorville, Ill., Ben Wilson, Universal's popular star, was selected and received a letter of notification from his admirers in the Illinois town.

"I think more of what these high school girls have done than anything that has happened to me for many moons," said Wilson, as he showed the letter he had received. "True, they are a long way off, but that adds to the tribute. I consider it a great compliment, and I thank them for it."

The letter, in part, read as follows:

"Some of the girl were undecided which actor they liked best, so we voted your name with a few others, the winner.

Ben Wilson's work in "The Voice on the Wire" has added new laurels to the many he has already gathered. and his popularity has grown apace with the popularity of Universal's big serial the latter episode of which he is directing in conjunction with Stuart Paton, who is now more concerned with "The Gray Ghost," which is to follow, and particularly pertinent at this time.

INJURED WOMAN TENDERLY CARED FOR BY GALE HENRY.

A FEW days ago an elderly woman was walking with her husband in the road in front of Universay City and slipped, spraining her ankle. The first one to see the accident was Gale Henry, comedienne of the Universal Joker Company, who rushed to her side. Miss Henry took the woman to her dressing-room and tenderly bathed the injured member. Then she procured an automobile and sent her to her hotel in Los Angeles, and all the time Allen Curtis, her director, was looking for his "Simple Sapho." No wonder he could not find her.

MODEL NURSERY AT U CITY.

ONE of the most extensive and complete nurseries on the Pacific Coast, born out of the necessity for flowers and plants foreign to the Coast territory, is that at Universal City. The development of this important branch of technical service has proven highly profitable, from the points of view of economy and picture results, in that fresh flowers, ferns and palms, for needed scenes are always available.

The florist item in the manufacture of Universal films became so vast that it was decided to enlarge the nurseries at Universal City, with the result that there are now under cultivation and in bloom 1,200 rose bushes, 1,000 carnation plants, and thousands of other miscellaneous, ornamental, blooming plants.

Thousands of palm, boxwoods, and other picturesque tubbed plants, such as are used for interior decorations are now available for the directorial forces and the elimination of rentals and purchases of necessary flowers and plants has been eliminated.

The technical director at Universal City has added to his staff several of the finest scenic, landscape and decorative gardeners on the Coast and the results of their art are evident all about the plant.

Eva Novak appearing in the L-Ko "Roped Into Scandal."

A PRETTY L-KOMEDIENNE.

IN "Roped Into Scandal" the L-Ko Komedy for this week, we see a new face. It is very agreeable to look at and belongs to Miss Eva Novak, the sister of Jane who was the heroine of the Universal serial "Graft." Eva plays the daughter of a flirtatious father, and having such a high standard at home, it is no wonder that he was a connoisseur of feminine beauty. Miss Novak can do more than look pretty, for she is a clever little player, and willing to do anything which her director may demand of her, in the way of risks. She is an excellent "chauffeuse" and a good swimmer.

LET'S ALL BE AMERICANS NOW!

HERE are two Universal actresses who have heard the call. They are Gretchen Lederer, and Betty Schade, and both have renounced their German nationality and become loyal citizenesses of the United States. Miss Lederer, born in the historic city of Cologne on the Rhine, took out her "first papers" some time ago, and was awarded the final ones some time before the declaration of war with Germany. "If I could have become a citizen of the country in which I have made a success, and intend to make my home, any sooner, I should have done so," says this beautiful woman, who had appeared in so many pictures on the Universal program, and is the leading woman of "Bartered Youth," a strong Laemmle drama, soon to be released.

Betty Schade did not go through the same process of naturalization. She becomes a citizen by marriage with Ernest Shields, well known to Universal patrons, who is an officer in good standing of the California Coast Artillery. The ceremony was hurried because the bridegroom expected to be called to duty any day, and he has in fact now joined his regiment. She, also, is well known for her work on the screen, having appeared in leading roles in many recent releases.

"LET'S ALL BE AMERICANS NOW"

Emma Carus Singing the latest song hit "Let's All Be Americans Now!"

FAST work was required to get out the second Song Hit In Photoplay on time, as it was decided at the last moment to put in a patriotic number entitled "Let's All Be Americans Now." This song was written by George W. Meyers and Edgar Leslie, and the star of the picture is Emma Carus. In producing it, Harry Cohn opens the action in this way: Mr. Meyers and Mr. Leslie are seated in their office discussing the compulsory draft, and each one decides that he has some disability which will prevent the government from utilizing his services. They decide to write a song, and the process is shown in the film. After many changes, due to the necessity of more martial vigor and "pep," they finish the song, and then the question is, "Who shall sing it?" At that moment in walks Emma Carus, looking for a patriotic song. "We have it," said Leslie. "Just wrote it this minute. Sit down and sing it." Miss Carus, who looks as though she had been preparing for the draft herself complies, and in a jiffy the whole office is buzzing with "Let's All Be Americans Now."

DORA RODRIGUES IN CUMBERLAND, MD.

HAS Universal Dora come to your town yet? If not, watch out for her, for she'll surely be there, all dressed up like a soldier boy. You know, she's hiking all the way from New York to Universal City, California. That sounds like a tremendous undertaking to you and me, but to Dora Rodrigues, who has performed hair-raising feats of various kinds, this is nothing unusual. Dora's aim in taking this hiking trip is a purely patriotic one. She has given her promise to the Government to obtain forty thousand recruits between New York City and California, and Dora's word is as good as her bond. Her success so far has been overwhelming. While in New York City she obtained more recruits than any of the official recruiting stations.

Therefore, if you see all of the young men in your town at Dora's heels, don't be shocked, but just remember that it is perfectly permissable, inasmuch as these young men are all heeding the call to the colors. Miss Rodrigues is now in Cumberland, Md., and is pushing on fast toward California.

SCREEN MAGAZINE NO. 21.

ISSUE Number 21 of the Screen Magazine begins with pictures of modern methods in the care of those unfortunates, the insane. These were taken at the State Hospital at Kingston, N. Y. Gentle suasion and kind treatment have superseded the primitive devices which increased rather than helped the malady. Hundreds of violent patients have seen cured by such treatment as baths, showers and rub-downs.

Leaving this subject, which arouses our pity, we then enjoy a review of the "Laces of the World" as posed by some of the most beautiful girls in "The Century Girl," the review which delighted all New York for months. Italian Lace, posed by a lovely brunette, makes her appearance from between heavy curtains, and turns slowly before us. Spanish Lace folows her, worn by a beauty of the true Castilian type. A blonde Belgian, wearing some of the most lovely of the threadlike product for which the unfortunate country was famous before the war, comes next. Then we have English Lace, posed by a typical English girl. An Irish colleen exhibits the patterns which were originated in the Emerald Isle; and a real French demoiselle comes after her, with exquisite draperies of French product. At the end of the number, appears a group of Harlequin and Pierrette, dressed in black lace of a cobweb fineness.

Next comes a practical subject—the inspection of the food we eat. This was obtained by following the officials of the New York Health Department, on their tour of inspection to detect the attempted sale of any produce unfit for food. Tons of condemned food are seized yearly, and the offenders fined for offering it to the public. We see the inspectors confiscating a whole shipload of worm-eaten macaroni. A powerful acid pored over it, renders it impossible for the food to be offered for sale. We see the destruction of 1500 tons of spoiled pork, and many barrels of sauerkraut. Then the inspectors pass judgment upon a consignment of chicken which have been frozen in transport. It is agonizing to watch the destruction of so much food at the present prices of commodities, but it is necessary for the pre-

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

The Butterfly Picture for next week is "The Circus of Life" and here is some dope to help Put It Over

A FEATURE that gives the exhibitor considerable scope for publicity. The child-appeal is strong and is an excellent lead to work from.

In your lobby set a table as though for a birthday party, and on the birthday cake have five candles. This should be placed well in advance of play date. The cake, of course, is a hollow paste-board affair.

In a conspicuous spot on the table place a neat placard reading:

> —(DATE)——is Daisy May's Birthday! COME and help us celebrate her surprise party. It will be "THE CIRCUS OF LIFE!"

Then, shortly before the show date, have a little girl, apparently five years old, pass out cards reading:

> I AM DAISY MAY!
> I WANT YOU TO ATTEND MY SURPRISE PARTY AT THE (NAME OF THATRE) ON—(DATE)——YOU WILL BE SURPRISED AT "THE CIRCUS OF LIFE!"

Naturally, the grown-ups will bring the little ones. You may add to this card, if you so desire, the invitation to every five-year-old child, to be admitted free, at matinees, on that date, if accompanied by an adult. Playing for the friendship of the kiddies is always advisable.

Get the biggest and most powerful appearing man that you can find and have a frail appearing woman accompany him. Have them walk along the street in the vicinity of your theatre, carrying a suit case. When a crowd gathers have suit case fall open, disclosing a sign as follows:

> WE ARE DAISY MAY'S PARENTS! HER BIRTHDAY IS TODAY—THE CELEBRATION IS BEING HELD AT THE (NAME THEATRE). FOLLOW US AND SEE 'THE CIRCUS OF LIFE!"

In the meantime use the attached copy on your mailing list.: IT WILL BRING RESULTS!

Mr. Exhibitor:

Have the following copy written by a child, in the round scrawly hand characteristic of a child, then have a zinc etching made of it and printed on post cards for your mailing list. If you are all at loss how to do this, get in touch with the UNIVERSAL exchange that supplies your service, and you will find them anxious to aid you in every possible way.

> Mr. (name of manager) of the (name) Theatre is giving a party to the kiddies on—date—and I want you to come and join us. You will see "THE CIRCUS OF LIFE."
> DAISY MAY.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By J. W. Cambridge.

TORONTO, Ont.—A new law has been put into force in regard to operators' licenses in Ontario. Each form, or license card, must have a picture on it of the owner, a duplicate of this photo is kept on file at the City Hall, along with the duplicate license. This is to avoid any one getting a license who should not have one.

Mr. Osborne of the Star Theatre, Kitchener, Ont., and Mr. Wilkinson of the Princess Theatre, Stratford, Ont., have been visiting in Toronto recently and stopped long enough at the Universal offices to book several good attractions.

Mr. J. Travis, secretary of the Toronto Exchangemen's Association, reports that the exhibitors have nobly responded to their recent decree that all return express charges must be paid by the exhibitors, excepting a very few who are proverbial kickers.

Some of the outlying Toronto moving picture theatres are now charging 15c admission, instead of 10c, which has been the rule heretofore. Exhibitors attribute the raise to the increased cost of putting on their shows.

The Toronto branch of the Canadian Universal Film Co. is going to such lengths in introducing their new Butterfly Pictures as to erect a special sales office in the lobby of the general office and they are having large banners painted.

HALIFAX, N. S.—The Province of Nova Scotia has put into effect a one-cent war tax for theatre admission. The exhibitors succeeded in getting more concession in regards to this tax.

Nova Scotia exhibitors have succeeded in putting one over on the city of Halifax, by getting their license reduced from 50c to 25c per seat. This clause in the By-Law was not noticed until after it had been passed, and therefore caused considerable consternation among the officials. However, it is a good thing, as there are heavy enough taxes being carried by the exhibitors now.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Mr. A. H. Stevens, acting on behalf of Okanagan Fruit Co., has a new picture house under construction in the West Summerland, Okanagan District, B. C., which is to be opened for business very shortly.

Mr. Trafton of the O-Row-Nay interest in the Crows Nest Section of B. C., was a recent visitor at the Vancouver office of the Canadian Universal Film Company.

Mr. Thomas Tyler, formerly of the Lyceum Theatre, Gull Lake, Sask., has recently opened a house at Sandon, B. C. Mr. Tyler is running Universal Service.

Mr. E. Huttlemeyer, formerly operator of the Colonial Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., has returned to town after a lengthy visit East. At the time of writing Mr. Huttlemeyer has been delegated to purchase a brand new outfit for a new picture house to be opened in Trail, B. C., very shortly.

Mr. Bob Scanlon, of Powell River, was a recent visitor to Vancouver Canadian Universal Exchange.

"Roped into Scandal"

L-KO TWO REEL SYMPOSIUM OF SENSATIONAL SCINTILLATION DIRECTED BY CRAIG HUTCHINSON UNDER SUPERVISION OF J. G. BLYSTONE.

CAST.

Mr. Wildcherry	Harry Lorraine
His Daughter Eva	Eva Novak
Mr. Samson Hercules	Bert Roach

Mr. Wildcherry begs mercy.

The maid has a fit.

AN awful predicament, to find that a thread from your trouser-leg is threaded into your daughter's sewing-machine, and that your B. V. D.'s are all that remain between you and the chilly air, isn't it? This is the leit motif, as it were, of the two-reel L-Ko direct by Craig Hutchinson, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone, the director-general. Plenty of other things happen, including a new kind of elopement in an automobile.

Mr. Wildcherry was a menace to society and a trouble to his daughter Eva. Right across the hall lived Mr. Samson Hercules and his blushing bride. Hercules detested flirts. When he goes out Wildcherry goes across the hall and makes a low bow to Mrs. Hercules, taking off his hat. She sees "I love you" painted on his bald head. But she is adamant. Then Wildcherry ties a string to a purse and pulls it across the hall to get her into his flat. She crawls after it and gets wedged in under the sewing machine and can't get out. Daughter Eva comes to her aid, and she goes home raging. Eva has two suitors, Mr. Beer and Mr. Buller. Both come to call at once, and while they are there Papa goes over to Mrs. Hercules. Eva has been sewing on the machine and a thread from his trousers is caught in the needle. As he sits talking, his trouser-leg begins to unravel, and runs right up to the knee. He hears Mr. Hercules coming and hides. Hercules however finds his hat, and he is thrown out.

In the meantime, Eva's suitors are getting into a fight, when Wildcherry arrives and separates them. Mr. Hercules goes out to take his annual bath to sooth his feelings. Beer sends Eva a message asking her to elope, and Buller reads it, and makes a plan with Wildcherry to circumvent them. They take their places with a gun at the rope which is hanging out of the window, but unfortunately in a second fight between Beer and Buller, the latter is caught in the rope and seesaws up and down the side of the house, finally landing in the water tank on the roof. The end of the rope coils around the auto in which the lovers sit and they can't start the car.

The watertank is upset and Mr. Wildcherry, pulling on the other end of the rope is dragged into the Hercules' bathroom. He makes fast to the bath tub. Mrs. Hercules comes in to take a bath and is dragged out and drawn along the street by the auto of the lovers. En route Mr. Wildcherry falls into the same tub, and the whole outfit crashes through the wall of the bath establishment where Mr. Hercules is bathing. The couples are reunited in the midst of the debris.

HAWAIIAN MOVIE MAGNATE VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY.

JOHN HENRY MAGOON, Hawaiian theatrical magnate, recorded his name recently among those of the Universal City visitors, being escorted to the popular picture-making plant by David Bershon, Manager of the California Film Exchange of Los Angeles. Mr. Magoon is the manager of the Consolidated Amusement Company of Honolulu, which owns four of the leading theatres in the "Paradise of the Pacific."

"The photodrama is just as popular in the Hawaiies as it is in this country," said the head of the Consolidated Amusement Co. to the general manager of Universal City, "and the people are willing to pay good prices for good films, this being especially true of the natives who show even a keener enjoyment of the motion pictures than their white brothers and sisters."

Manager Bershon acted as Mr. Magoon's guide and showed him everything that was worth seeing at the big plant. When the visitor from Hawaii took his departure he remarked, "Well, all I can say is that it is wonderful. I am going to tell all my friends in Honolulu and elsewhere in that region about this wonderful place and"—this to the general manager—"better prepare for a great influx of visitors from the islands in the near future."

"The Voice on the Wire"

TWELFTH EPISODE, ENTITLED "THE SIGN OF THS THUMB."

BEN WILSON himself assumed direction with this episode of the serial, which is adapted from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball by Stuart Paton, the director of the former chapters.

BEN WILSON, who has been starred in the previous chapters of the biggest serial success yet, "The Voice on the Wire," adapted from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball, assumed its direction as well, in the twelfth episode, which is called "The Sign of the Thumb." That he is keeping the serial up to the high standard set by the previous episodes is obvious from this installment.

Red Warren and Pale Ida suspect Polly.

CAST.

Shirley	Ben Wilson
Wetsh	Wadsworth Harris
Cronin	Howard Crampton
Polly	Neva Gerber
"Red" Warren	Francis MacDonald
Renolds	Joseph Girard
Prof. Duval	Nagel de Buillier

As Polly stands behind Shirley with the revolver aimed at his head, he sees her in the crystal and, suddenly switching off the main lights, places himself so that he can look directly into her eyes. He tells her she can't shoot, that his will is her will; her gaze wavers, and after great mental struggle, she drops the revolver, as his will overcomes hers. She awakes from the hypnotic spell, laughing in reactive hysteria. Shirley grasps her in wild relief, and she yields to his arms in the realization of their protection. He tells her to act as if she were still hypnotized, and in that way they may be able to trace the "Voice."

Polly returns to Red Warren's gang, pretending that she is still hypnotized, and informs them that she was unable to kill Shirley, as there were too many people in the room. She is sent back into the bedroom, and is left in the charge of Pale Ida.

While in the bedroom, Polly overhears the gang talking of a secret meeting, which is to take place that night. All are to come masked and knock three times at the door, give the sign of the "thumb" to gain admittance.

Prof. Duval's "Thought Machine."

When everybody has left, Polly escapes from the house by way of the fire-escape and rushes to Professor Duval's home, where Shirley is staying, and divulges what she knows about the secret meeting, which is to take place that night. Shirley decided to go to the secret meeting, and masks himself.

At the meeting the telephone rings and Red Warren answers. It was "The Voice on the Wire," informing Red Warren that there is a traitor amongst them. Red Warren, upon hearing this, orders everybody to unmask. At this instant Shirley fires a revolver shot, and the policemen (whom Shirley has already instructed to surround the house) come rushing in and capture all the gang with the exception of Red Warren.

Shirley and Polly return to Professor Duval's home. The same night Shirley receives a message from the "Voice" telling him that Welch has already been killed, which Shirley confirms by phoning Welch's home, and that his doom was sealed, and he is to die that night.

The episode ends with Shirley seated beside Polly as she is sleeping. Shirley is armed with a gun, expecting any minute to see the disembodied hand.

ST. VITUS'S WEEKLY WIGGLE

AND, behold! it came to pass that two showmen—known by courtesy as MOVIE men, lived in a certain town of moderate size. And they were wroth at one another—likewise sore at each other—also tried to place the indian sign on each other. For, verily, each tried to cop all of the town's business without splitting fify-fifty.

And it further came to pass that whenever they did pass on the highways and the byways they did murmur various and sundry remarks about each other, touching on and appertaining to their ideas of the lives, families and ancestors of 'tother fellow.

Yea, they did even make various and strange high signs as they passed, such as placing a thumb at the nose, spreading out the fingers fan-like and wiggling said fingers or placing a tongue out of the mouth as far as possible and screwing up the face.

Then did they overlook the commandment to "love thy neighbor"—for love with them was as sweet as a cat's love for water or as tender as a bum's devotion to work.

So it came to pass that one morning a red-headed, bright-eyed young man drifted into town whistling, "I'm coming." He had a few talents of silver in his pockets and a few other talents in his koko. And, it is sad to relate, that as he was passing the first movie house, lo! the boss of the shack said unto him, "Go not upon the next block, fair stranger, for there is a shark of an Exhibitor who will take thee in and squeeze thee as tho thou were a lemon. While I am an honest guy who giveth a fine show for a price." So the young man went down the side street and up the back way until he came unto he, against whom he had been warned—such is the cussedness of human nature. And as he was passing the place yea, and behold! he was caught into the arms of the other Picture Man who said unto him, "Harken, dark-eyed one, go not down to the other show in this town, for be it known unto you that there shalt thou be given granite to bite upon, for verily, 'tis a rotten show the geeza offers and he taketh the dimes without shame for a show that was first exhibited in the ark. O, sinful man that he is. Stick to my house, kid, and it shall be that thou wilt always be happy."

Then did the young red-head look thoughtful and he did hasten himself to another block where stood a vacant movie house and did remark through PRINTERS' INK that he would open a real show for the benighted inhabitants. Then was he given the merry ha-ha. A few natives called his attention to the brothers at arms. But he was a stubborn cuss and went his own way in his own way. So set was he to play his own hand that a few high priests in the "busybodies order of-first-to-knock" dubbed him an "upstart-jackass who thinks that he knows more'n we who have lived here all our lives."

But brick-top did much telephoning and telegraphing to that city of sin known as New York. And he was as busy as a man who has been caught holding five aces at a poker game. Then in a few days appeared certain signs which, unless the old eyes deceive, read: Monday, BLUEBIRD DAY—Tuesday, BUTTERFLY and CURRENT EVENTS—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday REPEAT BOOKINGS on Big Features with ANIMATED WEEKLY, UNIVERSAL PREPAREDNESS FEATURES, AND OTHER GOOD ONES FROM THE UNIVERSAL, Saturday, THE BIG NIGHT FURNISHED BY THE UNIVERSAL.

And it came to pass that he of the rosey top did use all the banners, all the ads, all the stunts, and all of the everythings that the Universal folks daily put out to help the Exhibitor. And it further came to pass that the "brothers-at-arms" were soon in his house—the one as ticket-taker and the other as usher. For, verily, the inhabitants soon put their o-k on the show that strawberry was putting over and did flock in "standingroomonly" crowds.

Here endeth the reading of a lesson that every Exhibitor could "go and do likewise."

"Yea Verily"

Richardson faces lioness.

RICHARDSON OF WORLD VISITS UNIVERSAL CITY

"WELL, I never thought I was so popular," said F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World, as Joe Martin, the famous orang-outang actor at Universal City attempted to kiss him.

Richardson, who is the acknowledged authority on projection, was visiting the big picture-making plant at the invitation of Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, in the company of George P. Von Harleman, Pacific Coast representative of the Moving-Picture World; David Bershon, manager of the California Film Exchange; C. L. Theuerkauf, Bluebird manager at Los Angeles, and a delegation from the Los Angeles union of motion picture operators. He and the members of his party after spending some time with John M. Nickolaus, Superintendent of Photography, and Hugh Hoffman, the film critic, who formerly was associated with the World, visited the various stages after which they proceeded to the zoo. Here the projection expert made the acquaintance of the affectionate orang-outang.

While at the zoo, Richardson had his first experience as a cinema actor, being persuaded by Henry McRae to take part in a scene in the jungle arena where the director was making a wild animal picture. In this scene a lioness was used and Richardson took his first "course of sprouts" without a tremor.

A film was taken of Editor Richardson while he was at Universal City and this was shown at the Superba Theatre, the home of Bluebird Photoplays in Los Angeles, the following night, where the World's expert delivered a highly interesting and instructive lecture on motion picture projection to a large audience composed of exhibitors, operators, directors and players of the Los Angeles film colony.

The cut at the top of this page was taken by Henry McRae's cameraman and shows Mr. McRae in the centre, Mr. Richardson and "Dynamite" the animal trainer on the right and left respectively. One of the Universal lionesses who was working in "In African Wilds," which Mr. McRae was directing, is the recipient of a half-hearted caress from the intrepid Mr. Richardson while "Dynamite" holds her securely by the head. Needless to say, Mr. Richardson was much more popular with Joe Martin than with Mrs. Leo Lion.

Just a Few Letters from Unive

David Schaefer, Evergreen Theatre, Brooklyn.

A SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITOR.

DAVID SCHAEFER, whose face appears in the oval above, is not only manager of the Evergreen Theatre, situated at Myrtle and Seneca Avenues, Brooklyn, but is also manager of the Van Cortlandt Arms Corporation, which owns and operates that theatre as well as several others. The seating capacity of the Evergreen Theatre is 1,200, although it opened in 1911 with 600 seats. Mr. Schaefer was the first manager, and in 1913 he decided that a 600-seat house was not anywhere near large enough to accommodate that section of Brooklyn, and it was enlarged to twice its former capacity.

Mr. Schaefer has been a consistent user of the Universal program and features. He has had a varied career in the amusement field, having started when twelve years old with Bostock's animal arena, and was advertised as the youngest animal trainer in the world at that time. He appeared with twelve lions before President McKinley at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, and later with the Great Lafayette Show in Henry Miller's Company.

About ten years ago he went into moving pictures and became manager of Whitney's Theatre. Six years ago he entered the employ of the Van Cortlandt Arms Corporation.

Mr. Schaefer is a leader in all public affairs of his section, and has been Grand Marshal of the Mardi Gras Celebration for four years. He is also prominent in Fourth of July and Memorial Day exercises.

MIXED PROGRAM COMING BACK.

Mr. Carl Laemmle,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Laemmle—I firmly believe that if exhibitors would only wake up to the advantage of using your service in preference to any feature program, they could soon turn their losing proposition into money makers.

Instead of advertising every feature producer's output only to have them advance the price as fast as the exhibitor creates a demand for their players and which in turn places the leverage in the hands of the actors, to demand the exorbitant salaries that many of them are receiving, the exhibitor should advertise the players that are shown at their theatre week after week and derive some of the benefit that naturally results from judicious and consistant advertising.

That the mixed program is gradually coming back into its own is proven by the fact that nearly all producers are releasing short subjects with a vim that is noticeable—then why not Mr. Brother Exhibitor tie up to the Pioneer producer of the varied program, the one that is equipped and ripened with experience—that can and does turn out the average best comedies, dramas, Westerns, news and domestic subjects at a price that is within reach of the exhibitor—the one that has endured the heat of the day and remained faithful—in a word, the Universal.

Yours very truly,

FEATURE DAYS POOREST.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen—We ran the Double Attraction Red Feather to a marked increase in business over the regular Red Feather numbers and wish you would get out more on the same order. In fact, we would not run any five-reelers if the Minneapolis exchange could supply us otherwise, as we have boosted the mixed program through feature craze and all and notice right along that our feature days are our poorest ones.

Was highly pleased to read of Mr. Laemmle's denial of the statement that the Universal was going to discontinue the making of one- and two-reel dramatic subjects. The service as it is suits us fine and we aim to popularize the new actors among our patrons as fast as they come, and hope you will not be led to pay outrageous salaries like some companies which of course necessitates a higher film rental price, which in turn is bound to put the small exhibitor out of business if it is continued.

With best wishes, I am

NONE THAT BEATS UNIVERSAL.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,

Gentlemen—I have been using Universal service in both the Rex and Strand theatres for a number of years, and I consider it a good, high-class, substantial program. There is none that beats the Universal. It is a program that makes money for me, and that's all I care about. I am very frank to state that no exhibitor could go wrong in using the Universal program. Once used, they will always use the program, and I cannot speak too highly for the service.

SURE, HE'S RIGHT.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City.

Gentlemen—Your letter of the 2nd inst. duly received and contents noted. I admit that I also received yours of December 18th, 1916, as well as yours of January 4th, 1917, also I admit that I read them all very carefully and fully intended to answer them some day, but three times is out, and when a man is such a stickler as you are, he's bound to get an answer some time, especially when he keeps everlastingly whacking at the same old tune.

My reason, in the first place for cancelling Universal service, was because I felt that a change was necessary in order to increase my business—no fault whatever with your service, as I never was used better in my whole life than by your exchange. Therefore, I cannot make my reply "sizzling hot," but I have been more or less afflicted with that common malady, which affects all exhibitors, more or less, and is commonly known as "featuritis," and when taken in large doses is analyzed (as Mr. Laemmle says) as "Tummy-ache in the Box Office." This also answers your letter of January 4th, as to why I decided to go over to another service.

I could say a whole lot more, if my vocabulary would permit of it, but my early education was somewhat limited and it handicaps my power of speech, or rather letter writing abilities.

I'm going to answer your third letter now, and tell you that I have signed up for the whole blooming Universal program from your Rex Exchange at Albany, N. Y.—thirty-one reels each week, including one of your Butterfly Pictures and a serial each week, and being as that is all that you are releasing, I can't go you any better than that, can I?

I believe that the program is the show, and now that I have been convinced in a financial way, I'm going back to where I started several years ago, and make an effort to make what I lost, as I have despaired of maki it where I lost it. I'm going to try and make it where I first found it. A few more of the wise guys will be doing the same thing too, soon, I'm thinking.

The fillum peddlers give me the laugh when I hand that dope, then they go to the next town and say, "Well, I guess he's right about it," and they know he is, too.

Yours for Universal success,

Indianapolis, Ind.

Gentlemen—We are very much pleased with the Universal Animated Weekly, which we are running in the Lyric Theatre. We find our patrons interested in it and we believe that it has drawing power equal to that of any vaudeville act. We have many comments on events that are mirrored in the Universal Weekly from lawyers, doctors and other professional men, a very good proof that the weekly fills in a unique way such a position on our vaudeville bill that it could not be replaced by any other picture.

Yours very truly,

Twenty-five Dollars Reward

WITH its wide distribution the Moving Picture Weekly has promised to assist the New England Universal Exchange to deliver to the right party a reward of twenty-five dollars. The following letter will tell you what you must do to earn the reward.

Twenty-five dollars reward will be paid for information leading to the return of property of the New England Universal Film Exchange as listed below:

On or about April 17, 1917, Jerry A. Brown of Shirley and Townsend, Mass., entered into a contract with our company for the rental of a certain number of motion picture films for exclusive use at Shirley and Townsend, and on April 26 we made shipment to him of a case containing seven reels of motion picture films for use on April 27 and 28. The titles of the subjects are as follows:

Chapter I of "LIBERTY" (serial) in 3 reels.
"THE BUBBLE OF LOVE" (Rex Drama) in 1 reel.
"A MAN'S HARDEST FIGHT" (Big U Drama) in 1 reel.
"IT'S ALL WRONG" (Nestor Comedy) in 1 reel.

To date these films have not been returned. Neither have we been in a position to get into communication with said Brown. Therefore, any assistance that you are able to give us in locating Brown or the film in question will be rewarded as above.

We have gone to a great deal of expense in trying to locate said Brown. Upon sending a man to the towns mentioned above we were informed by the police that he has left for parts unknown, having taken with him a moving picture machine, booth, screen, etc., together with our films. We understand that he is conveying the same over the country with a Ford automobile.

We will thank any one to advise us by phone or wire at our expense of any information concerning the Brown in question or the whereabouts of the property mentioned above.

Yours very truly,

gazed apprehensively about for a policeman, if they went faster than twenty miles an hour.

Many of the children at Universal City have enjoyed a ride with Zoe in her car, for she is a generous little soul, and very thoughtful of the comfort of others. Last Christmas it was she who suggested that the "regulars"—these are the children who are under contract with the Universal—should give a party for the "extras," or those who are only occasionally employed. With Lena Baskette and several of the others, she arranged an entertainment for them which included a tree, presents for everybody, and a theatrical performance, which was devised and carried out by the children themselves, with no help from their elders. Zoe, of course, was the moving spirit of it, and her imitations kept the older part of the audience in fits of laughter.

"The Circus of Life" is the second five-reel feature of which Zoe has been the star. Her first ambitious effort was "Glorianna," a Bluebird Photoplay, written especially for her. But the short pictures featuring her are some of the most popular releases on the program.

servation of the health of the community, and the Health Department takes no chances.

A hospital for disabled ships makes a timely and intensely interesting subject. Hundreds of freight carriers have been damaged or disabled during the war, and we watch their repair in the latest type of dry-dock. Hundreds of "patients" are treated here each year. We see a crippled liner being towed to its berth. A pontoon platform below the water in the dock is raised by powerful electrical machinery, and carries the ship with it. This is an improvement upon the old method, in which the water was pumped out of the dock. After the repairs are made, we see the patient leaving the hospital cured and ready for further service.

rushing out, get into their car. Ethel and Smith have followed, and are hidden behind a doorway.

After a long chase the three men overhaul an engine which is standing on the track. Mercer tells Hartford to take possession of it, and, holding up the engineer and fireman, whom they force to leave the locomotive, the three men set off in the engine. Ethel and Smith drive after them, and at last overtake them. The doctor jumps, and Hartford, trying to do so, is caught by his coat and hangs helpless. Simmons has emptied his revolver at the car, and Smith easily subdues him. The engine crew returns to take possession of their engine, and Ethel and Smith, with Hartford and Simmons, set off in her car to return to the bank.

In the director's room, Simmons breaks down and confesses. He says that he overheard the plan of the president to take the bank's funds to his own house. Jerry had entered to ask for his money in order to take his daughter away, and the president, who could not bear to refuse his old employee, had told him to go into the basement and fire two shots to attract the clerks. When they rushed down he was to say that he had seen a burglar. He carried out the plan, and the president removed the bills while all the clerks were in the basement. Simmons has seen that this would ruin his plans, and had deliberately shot Jerry, hidden him in the basement, and then carried out his plans to bring ruin to Tom by firing the cashier's revolver twice, and placing it beside the body. Jerry, however, was not dead; the ambulance surgeon revives him in time for his corroboration of the story. Williams is freed.

AT THE FRONT.

That Austrian howitzer shell sounded like a New York subway train taking the curve at Forty-second street. There's no use of my attempting to describe the whole experience. I could write from now till Christmas and then you wouldn't "get it."

That was my first experience with shell fire. Since then I have made two other trips to the front—one at the beginning of the German retreat in the Oise valley. Last week I made my third trip, this time through the zone devastated by the Huns. We got to the front at Coucy-la-Ville on April 12 when the big fighting was going on there. The French were creeping steadily forward behind their barrage—a curtain of fire which ate into the German lines like a monster street-sprinkling cart backing up—a wonderful spectacle. The din was tremendous. We didn't mind our own danger for the German shells were falling haphazardly around us and as long as they didn't pick us out for a target we felt comparatively safe.

Two hours before we came to Coucy we went to the Butte Prinz Eitel Friedrich, an old German observation post beyond Ham, where we saw St. Quentin burning. The French and British artillery was raising merry

Bill Tait	Harry Griffith
Parson Brown	Edwin W. Power
Betty Brown	Ann Kromann
The Mayor	Jean Hersholt

Larry Donovan is on trial for murder but the evidence is only circumstantial. The case is dismissed, but his reputation as a gunman causes him to be made to leave the state. He sets out for Tombstone Flat, a small and notorious Western town. Parson Brown and his daughter Betty are in the same stage. They become friends. Tombstone Flat does not intend to be reformed. As the Marshall, Bill Tait, who owns the only saloon in town, persuades the boys to send the Parson back on the same stage he came in. Larry, however, thinks otherwise.

He goes to the Mayor who is playing poker, tells him his Marshall is no good, and gets him to give him a note to Bill, saying that he is appointed in Bill's place. They all expect the instant dissolution of Larry, but he is quicker on the draw, wounds the Deputy in the arm with one of his guns, and holds up Bill with the other, forcing him to give him his badge. Larry locks the two up in jail, and when the Mayor and his friends go to the saloon to rejoice with Bill, they find a prayer meeting in full progress, with Larry leading the singing with his gun for a baton.

Zoe	Zoe Rae
Muriel	Gertrude Aster
John Watkins	Val Paul
Tom	Frankie Lee

Zoe is visiting her aunt, and is much disappointed when she hears that the horse which she particularly wanted to see, has been sold. She finds some letters in an old trunk, and takes them out to Tom, a little boy, and the two children play post office with them. Zoe sees a man on horseback, and writes a note asking God to send her a horse like the one she has just seen. She tells Tom to send it by "Speshul Delivery." John Watkins was the rider of the horse. Years before he had left town on account of a quarrel with Muriel, and he has just returned. He stops to speak to an old friend, leaving his horse outside. Tom takes the horse by the bridle and leads it to Zoe, who takes it to her aunt. John comes out and misses it, and Tom tells him that he has taken it to Zoe. He follows her, and on the way picks up the letters which are strewn over the grass. He recognizes them as his own. John enters the house with the letters, and confronts Muriel. Zoe is absorbed in the horse, which she has brought right into the sitting room. Reading Muriel's face, John tells the child that he thinks they can arrange to keep the house.

BABY WOLVES AT UNIVERSAL ZOO.

THIRTEEN baby wolves made their appearance at the Universal City zoo this week. They are of the species known as Siberian grays. Superintendent Hoover says the little ones are all "doing nicely," and that next winter they will make a splendid Alaskan team for the snow pictures that are being planned for the latter part of the year.

EAGLE THEATRE IS DOING GOOD BUSINESS

Last night the Eagle theatre was packed to the doors by an enthusiastic audience, who witnessed the great patriotic photodrama, "The Eagle's Wings." The judgment of the audience upon this great picture was that it was the most thrilling in subject, the most authentic in detail and the most magnificent in setting of any war picture which has ever been seen in Manchester

The picture brings home to the American people what they are facing today—industrial preparedness. "It takes five men at home to keep one man at the front fed and equipped."

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Gentlemen—When I booked "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" I was a little dubious about raising the price of admissions and now I am glad that you urged me to do so. I PLAYED "HELL MORGAN'S GIRL" TO A RECORD HOUSE and many of my patrons pronounced it the best picture they had ever seen in Madison. FROM A FINANCIAL STANDPOINT IT WAS A DECIDED SUCCESS and as to the merits of the picture, "Great"—"Fine" and similar expressions were heard from my patrons on leaving the theatre.

"HELL MORGAN'S GIRL"

Has been picked by the biggest and best houses throughout America. They call it "the greatest winner shown in years." At the Garrick Theatre in Los Angeles it jammed the theatre while Young, Pickford, Farnum, Clark, Sweet and Kellermann, running on the same nights, played to empty theatres. Think of it; it had a stronger pulling power than the combined abilities of the greatest stars in filmdom.

Hades on both sides of the town, while the Germans were blowing up all the houses of the non-combatants. I have discounted some of the tales of dirty German work hitherto, but in the zone they have evacuated I saw sights and heard stories that wouldn't bear repetition. I saw a photograph the other night of a Canadian soldier who had been crucified on a wagon tongue and whiffle tree. He had otherwise been horribly mutilated. Now, I am willing to believe anything. It's a deliberate policy of their General Staff—to frighten the world—but I don't believe the German soldier approves of it.

It certainly is thrilling at the front. The Foreign Office sets aside two or three limousines for the correspondents and officers. Going down the bunch is a gay outfit—half hysterical with anticipation. But, believe me, when those old Black Marias and Jack Johnsons commence kicking up craters in the ground, now two hundred yards away, now half a mile off and now a hundred feet up the road, expressions change mighty quickly and the bunch becomes strangely silent and thoughtful. The spice of danger affects each one differently. To some it gives a hilarious feeling, like looping the loop at Coney Island. The sound of those guns is the greatest experience on earth.

We have had several Zep alarms in Paris since I have been here, but the only one that got near the capital, the L 39, was brought down at Compiegne about 30 miles away. A motor fire engine roared through the streets on the morning of March 17, about 4 a. m., just after I had finished work on the Herald. The engine had a siren on it which made a piercing howl as it sounded the "alerte." As I came home to the hotel I noticed seven or eight little balls of fire in the sky which I thought at first were exceedingly bright stars, then some sort of atrial trap. Watching intently for a few minutes, however, I discovered that they were the searchlights of aeroplanes guarding the city.

At 7 o'clock I get a telephone call from the Maison de la Presse asking me if I would like to go down to Compiegne to see the Zep that had just been brought down. An hour later we were speeding along through Senlis on our way to where the wreckage lay. The firemen were still pouring water on the white hot mass of aluminum and fabric. The bodies, or rather bits of bodies, which were taken out were charred beyond all recognition. Wythe Williams of the New York Times went down with me.

I certainly was glad to hear that we had declared war. Now an American over here can hold his head up once more. Believe me, the French certainly appreciate our coming in. Paris is bedecked with flags from one end to the other. This afternoon there were celebrations at the Lafayette and Washington statues. It really is touching—their appreciation of our step. I saw poor little shopgirls who could hardly afford it, I am sure, buying American flags this afternoon. Even the kids sailing their boats in the park ponds have put American flags at the mastheads of their tiny craft. The day war was declared the proprietor of my hotel rushed into my room and put up no less than five flags, four feet by eight feet square, outside my window.

AT THE FRONT.

The American aviation squadron has been saddened by three deaths lately—Jim McConnell, Genet and Dugan. The squadrilla has done wonderful work and one of the boys, Raoul Lufbery, is an "ace," having brought down five machines. Bennett Maulter, a Wausau, Wisconsin, boy whom I knew in New York and who is still in training outside Paris on a Bebe machine, dropped in to see me yesterday. He is crazy to get to the front and told me a long tale of woe.

It looks now as if the war will be over by the time the American troops get over here. Fro mall accounts Turkey, Bulgaria and Austria are on the verge of blowing up. Let us hope they do. This awful slaughter is getting on everybody's nerves.

As for myself, I am running around in circles just like I did in New York. Hotel, New York Herald office translating French into worse English, meals and sleep. The trips to the front serve to break the monotony. On the side, of course, I am busy with my Graflex camera photographing the odd corners of Paris and taking advantage of the beautiful spring days.

I haven't any plans in particular for the future. One thing is certain, however: I am here until after the war. I haven't decided yet what branch oft he service I shall enter if I am called up under the Universal Service plan, but the artillery appeals to me. If my old regiment, the Seventh of New York, comes over I would like to join up with them. Seeing everybody in the army over here makes a fellow feel like an embusque—a shirker. If I do go up till the finish of the war I certainly will know what I am going up against, for I have been in enough military hospitals and have been under fire enough times to know what war means. But it's much better to get one's head blown off fighting for the old Stars and Stripes than it would be to wait twenty or thirty years for liver trouble or hardening of the arteries to give one the coup de grace.

"DEFIANCE."

Big U Drama.

With Margarita Fischer.

The scenes of this picture were taken at the famous San Gabriel mission, built in 1771. Don Enrique Carillo has a pretty daughter Rosa, who falls in love with George Curdy, when the latter is sent from the recording office to examine his property deed. Carillo does not wish his daughter to marry an American, and opposes the match. Rosa and George decide to elope. They ride to the mission and ask the monk in charge to marry them. Don Enrique angrily follows them, and arrives just as the ceremony is completed. He attacks George and the two men fight. The monk rescues Rosa and George, who ride away.

"PERILS OF THE YANGTZE."

Powers Dorsey Educational Split Reel

The Yangtze courses through a great plain of material deposited by floods, therefore its perils consist largely of shifting channels. The approach to the gorges is not difficult, but the current becomes very swift and treacherous. In some parts the river is quite safe, while in others there are dangerous whirlpools and currents which engulf the unwary captain. At the end of the gorges we see the river town of Wanshien.

He gets it, but his music is awful, and he is about to meet his fate when "Two-Step" Sadie, who likes his looks, stops Bill, the bouncer, and Clarence is given another chance. Bill cannot stand the limping tempo and drags Clarence to the bar. A drink will fire him with pep. The effect wears off and the ragtime lags again. After a second drink, he plays wonderful ragtime. After a few more, he "cleans out" the place, compelling the toughest of them to drink buttermilk with him.

"WHEN NOAH'S ARK EMBARKED."

Powers Comedy Cartoon Split Reel.

Noah has completed the ark, and calls the animals to go on board. The monkey gives him lots of trouble, but the other beasts respond to the call and embark two by two. The skipper chases them all below, but the monkey won't go. They chase each other around the decks. Finally the monkey leaps ashore and Noah goes after him. Then the animal jumps back, undoes the rope which secures the ark, and it runs down the ways and into the sea. Noah realizes that it has set sail without him, and he plunges into the water and swims after it.

"THE PUZZLE WOMAN."

Imp Drama.

Written by Grace Cunard.
Produced by Francis Ford.

CAST.

Cliff Jordan	Francis Ford
Slim	Irving Lipner
Shorty	Harry Mann
The Girl	Grace Cunard

Cliff Jordan is down and out. He meets two crooks who live in his hotel, Shorty and Slim. He goes to their room, and on the way they flirt with a girl, whom they persuade to come with them. The crooks plan to pull off a safe-robbing scheme, and use Cliff and the girl as unconscious confederates. They hide the money in a box of candy, which they pass to the girl. She gives it to Cliff to hold for her. Detectives are chasing the crooks. Cliff, in his room, opens the box and finds money instead of candy. He goes with his find to the crooks. They tell him that he has been used as a tool. The detectives overhear this. They enter and arrest the crooks. They are about to arrest Cliff too, when he pulls out a card, with "Phil Kelly Detective" on it, and asks them to meet his wife, who is responsible for a large part of their joint success.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE.

Issue No. 21.

The first subject of the Screen Magazine, Issue Number 21, is taken in the State Hospital for the Insane at Kingston, N. Y., and shows modern methods in the care of the patients. That they are quite happy is evident from the pictures.

Laces of the world, is the title of the next subject, which was photographed in the Century Theatre, and forms a part of the famous "Century Girl," which is now closed for the summer. Pretty girls are costumed in the laces characteristic of Italy, Spain, Belgium, Ireland, France and other countries.

The next subject shows the diligence of the New York Department of Health in confiscating and destroying any food which is unfit for consumption. A hospital for disabled ships, photographed in one of the drydocks of the latest type, is a timely and interesting bit. The reel closes with a study of "Bobby" the Universal lion, who poses for his portrait modeled by Willie Hopkins, the the sculptor. Then the statue comes alive before our eyes.

Every Exhibitor Should Read Every Word Every Week

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

"The Field of Honor." With Allen Holubar, Louise Lovely and M. K. Wilson. Powerful War Drama. Written by Brand Whitlock, U. S. Minister to Belgium. Sixth Butterfly Picture. Directed by Allen Holubar. Released June 11. Every American knows Brand Whitlock, our heroic minister to the stricken country of Belgium. There are many perhaps who do not know that before his appointment he was the fighting mayor of Toledo, Ohio, or that he is the author of several successful novels, of photoplays and is a sociologist of note. All of which leads up to the fact that he is a good story teller and has presented you with one in this BUTTERFLY Picture that your patrons will enjoy. Allen loves Louise. Influenced by her mother she marries George Baring and Allen is heart-broken. The Civil War breaks out and there comes a call for volunteers. Allen is captain of a company and later becomes a colonel. Baring goes, too, becomes a captain and, frightened in a charge, is shot by one of his men while attempting to run away. Allen tells Louise and her son that George died a hero. Then comes the big punch that makes the most unusual story that has appeared in a long time. It will grip your audiences, thrill them and send them from your theatre glad to have seen this remarkable BUTTERFLY.

"The Black Mantilla." With Claire McDowell, Richard Ryan and Gypsy Hart. Written and Produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin. Three Reel Gold Seal Romantic Drama. Released June 12. A wise Exhibitor once told the writer, "If you want to put a strong drama over, cram it with atmosphere." This Black Mantilla Picture has atmosphere plus. The scene is laid down in old Mexico, where they are supposed to love more passionately and hate more fiercely than in more northerly regions. Claire had a shrewdish tongue. She was feared and not very much respected by the villagers. But she was passionately adored by Juan. Cuella's mother made famous tortillas. Juan gave the old lady a cheap mantilla in appreciation of her skill and she in turn gave it to Cuella, who loved Juan. Claire was jealous as the shrewd old lady intended, and Juan's explanation counted not a bit. Claire told Juan to get her a fine silk mantilla and she would be his sweetheart. How he got it and the consequences make one of the most interesting three-reelers we have recorded in many a day.

"Heart of Gold." With Little Zoe Rae and Gertrude Aster. Two Reel Gold Seal Heart-Interest Drama. Directed by Geo. L. Sargent. Released June 14. Book this and boost it hard. Little Zoe gives a performance that will win any one who sees this beautiful picture. It is not only sweet and wholesome, but it is truly strongly dramatic. When her mother dies Zoe goes to live with a childless old pawnbroker, and the story that follows her removal to a beautiful home is full of the sort of situations that make people love the movies. A winning picture.

"A Blissful Calamity." With Fred Church and Fritzi Ridgeway. Two Reel Victor Comedy Drama. Directed by T. G. Heffron. Released June 15. Fred had money and good looks and all the girls were after him. But—Fred was the most bashful chap that ever happened. His friends ask him to a week-end party, supposed to be a stag, but the place was running over with girls. Fred said he was engaged (for protection), and they demanded that he produce the girl. How a regular girl came along; how she and Fred planned a fake marriage to fool the bunch, and how the calamity turned out blissfully, makes a remarkably enjoyable play, with pep and action from start to finish.

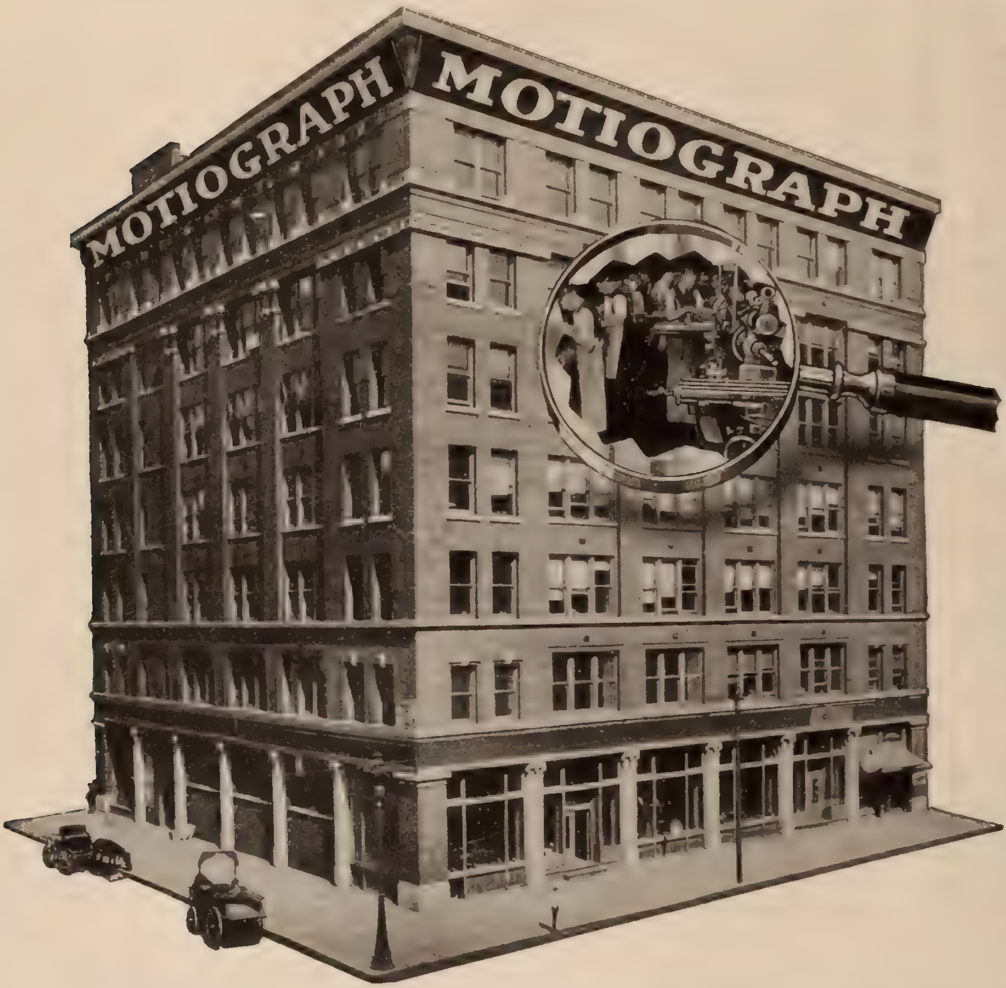
If It's A Motiograph You Know It's Made Right

IT IS THE PROJECTOR THAT REPRESENTS

the

STANDARD OF VALUE AND QUALITY

The MOTIOGRAPH factory has the reputation of turning out a projector that is made of the best material obtainable.



Did you ever hear of a MOTIOGRAPH gear; though used five or even ten years, that had to be replaced on account of becoming worn?

The Sliding Disc Connection, which took the place of the ball arbor July, 1915, has been continuously used on thousands of MOTIOGRAPHS since that date, and not one of them has been replaced on account of defect or wear.

The New MOTIOGRAPH Condenser Mount, placed on the lamphouse in December, last year, is receiving favorable comment from every part of the country. It has reduced condenser breakage to a minimum.

If you buy a MOTIOGRAPH you have the satisfaction of knowing that it is made right and will give the best projection at a price which is within reach of every conservative buyer.

THE RESULT of building a projector that is "made right" is that the MOTIOGRAPH factory is compelled to work overtime to fill all orders promptly.

JACKASS LAW!

(No. 179. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by the President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

ON May 15, according to the current issue of the Motion Picture News, the Pennsylvania House of Representatives unanimously passed a resolution in favor of stopping the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by picture houses, because such playing is "slapstick patriotism," and because it "cheapens the American national anthem."

I'm one of the best law-abiders that ever abode, but if I were a Pennsylvania exhibitor and such a crazy idea became law, I would take a fiendish delight in violating it as often as I could.

The moving picture exhibitor is good enough to subscribe toward the Liberty Loan, but he must not "cheapen" the national anthem by playing it in his theatre.

The moving picture theatre is a good place to advertise the Liberty Loan to the millions of movie fans, but it contaminates "The Star Spangled Banner."

Did you ever hear of such jackass law?

The common people are the ones who will eventually fight this war for liberty. The common people are the ones who will eventually furnish the money and the munitions, but "The Star Spangled Banner" must not be played in theatres which are supported by those same common people.

We must reserve "The Star Spangled Banner" for the pianolas and pipe organs of the rich. It must not be "cheapened" by being rendered in any theatre which charges less than $2 admission.

Rule No. 1—No man wearing a ready-made suit of clothes will be permitted to sing "The Star Spangled Banner" in the land of the free, because he will cheapen it.

Rule No. 2—No woman who does her own housework will be permitted to yodel "The Star Spangled Banner," because she will cheapen it.

Rule No. 3—Children under the age of fifty will not be admitted to theatres where "The Star Spangled Banner" might be played, because it isn't good for them.

The most cunning pro-kaiser propagandist in the country could not conceive in his fertile brain a more insidious way of dampening American patriotic ardor and enthusiasm than by getting hysterical legislators to vote for bills telling us just WHERE and WHEN and WHY we can or cannot sing or play our national anthem.

We're fighting for liberty, and we're going to get it even if we have to fight the kaiser with one hand and our own representative with the other.

The more we hear the national anthem, the better for all of us. Only a cheap mind could evolve the idea that "The Star Spangled Banner" can be cheapened.

The tune of "The Star Spangled Banner" itself is not very good. It is hard for the average person to sing it. It hasn't the "pep" that a truly American national air should have. It hasn't the swing and the lilt of "Dixie" or even "Yankee Doodle," for example. But it isn't the tune, and it isn't the wording that really counts, after all. The big thing is THE SPIRIT back of it, and the quickest way to kill that spirit is to smother it with materialism, such as laws defining when we can sing or play it, where we can sing or play it in any other way yanking the prop of Liberty from under our feet and banging us over the head with it.

Any American who says that playing the national air at any certain place is "slapstick patriotism," or who hints that the common people are cheap skates, is NOT an American in spirit, but a SNOB. And if the theatre owners of Pennsylvania stand for this sort of stuff they've got the backbone of the jellyfish and the guts of the cream puff!

Scenes From the BUTTERFLY PICTURE "THE FIELD OF HONOR" WITH ALLEN HOLUBAR AND LOUISE LOVELY

"WHO'S LOONY NOW?"

Above — Eddie and Billie each think the other is crazy. Below—Dr. Buggs hopes he has a patient.

NESTOR Two-Reel Comedy. Story by A. Van Petten, produced by Al. Christie, with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran starred. The story of Newlyweds, who each think the other crazy, and a doctor who really is a nut.

VERY unusual to see a Nestor in more than one reel, but here is one, written by A. Van Petten and produced by Al Christie, which is so good that it was a shame to cut it! Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appear in roles which fit them both to a T, and they prove that as funmakers they are fully capable of sustaining the amusement of the audience through two thousand feet as one thousand. Here is an outline of the action which is as fast as lightning:

CAST.

Eddie Newlywed	Eddie Lyons
Billie Newlywed	Billie Rhodes
A. Archibald Buggs, M.D.	Lee Moran

Eddie and Billie are at their first breakfast after the honeymoon. Billie is making the pancakes. She puts salt instead of sugar in them, and Eddie is afraid to tell her of it, so he hides them in his pocket. He throws the last batch under the table and goes off to the office forgetting them. Just as he is leaving, her old trunk from home arrives. She opens it and finds the picture of the man to whom she was engaged before she met Eddie. She hides it under the bureau cover, but it falls to the ground behind the bureau. At the office, Eddie finds a package of his letters from a girl whom he was engaged to before he met Billie. He decides to hide them, so that Billie shall never know. She discovers the salt in the cakes, and is sorry for Eddie. She resolves to tear up the picture before he can see it. She goes to the bureau, but it is not there. She thinks that Eddie has found it, and reads in the paper that a man has killed himself because he was driven insane by finding a picture of his bride in the arms of her former sweetheart. She is terribly worried.

At the office, Eddie reads of a bride who went crazy on discovering letters written by her husband to another woman. He is called to his employer, and Billie enters while he is gone. When he returns the men in the office tell him that she went dippy and that they sent her home in a taxi. Eddie thinks she has found the letters. He rushes home, where each thinks the other crazed with grief. Eddie sends for a doctor. He calls upon Dr. Buggs, and asks him to come quick as his wife has gone mad. Each humors the supposed madness of the other. Billie phones the police.

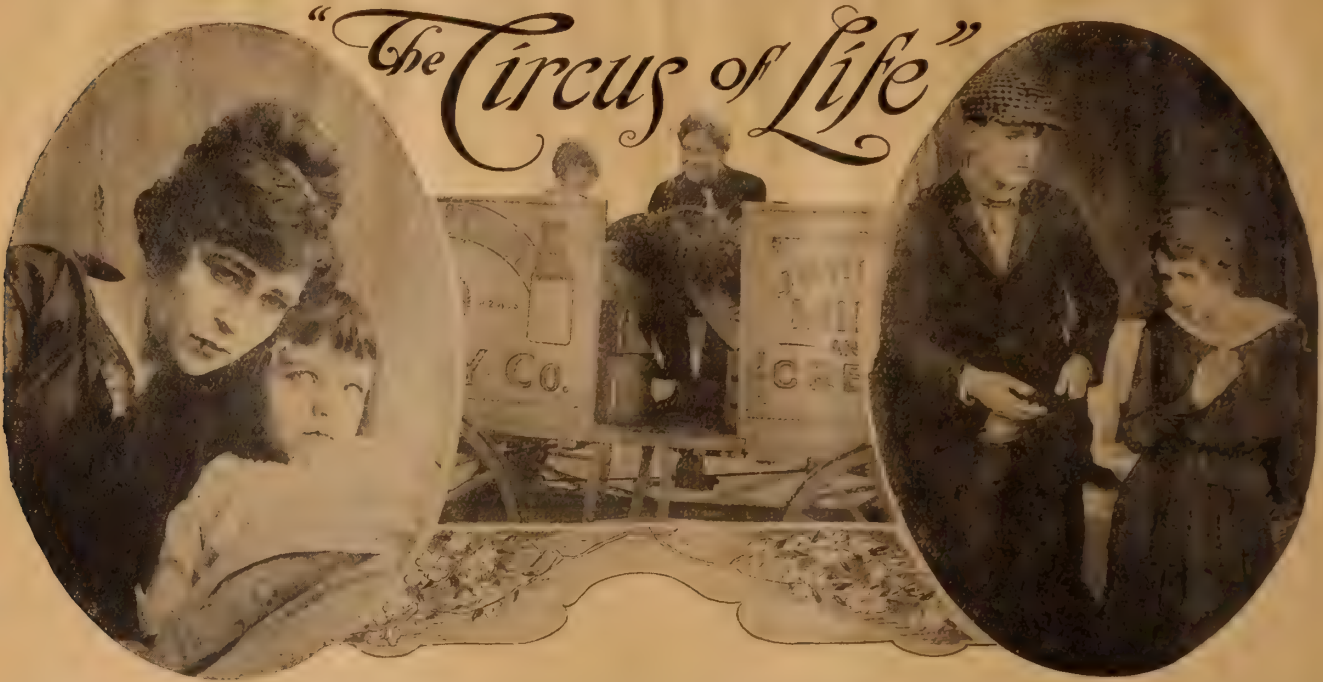
CHICAGO OFFICES AMAZE.

CHICAGO got all fussed up last week when it was honored by presence of a number of Universal and Bluebird exchange managers. They came there to meet E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Universal exchanges, and held a very interesting meeting in the sumptuous offices occupied by both the Bluebird and Universal exchanges in Chicago. They are located in the Consumers Building, 220 South State Street, and are a great credit to the planning abilitiy of C. R. Plough and I. Van Ronkel. They made such an impression on Mr. Goldstein that he suggested to Mr. Plough immediately that he take a number of pictures of the interior of these sumptuous offices in order that the Moving Picture Weekly might show all of the other exchanges what a model of its kind the Chicago exchange is.

Among those who were present were Barney Rosenthal, of the Universal Film & Supply Company of St. Louis, Mo.; George Bowles, of the Kansas City Bluebird; Julius Bernheim, of the Laemmle Film Service, Minneapolis; Joe Diener, of the Cleveland Bluebird; Jerry Abrams, of the Kansas City Universal exchange, and Nat G. Rothstein, of the Home Office.

"The Circus of Life"



FIFTH Butterfly Picture, starring Little Zoe Rae. Written by E. J. Clawson and produced by Rupert Julian, with a real all-star cast, including Elsie Jane Wilson and Harry Carter.

THE fifth Butterfly Picture, written by E. J. Clawson and produced by Rupert Julian, features Little Zoe Rae, but she is surrounded by a cast which is remarkable for the number of well-known names which it contains. There is Elsie Jane Wilson, featured herself in several productions, and in private life the wife of the director, who put on the picture. There is Harry Carter, villian extraordinary, who will play the title role in the new serial, "The Gray Ghost"; there is Mignon Anderson, one of the best-known leading ladies on the screen, and star of the Butterfly Picture, "The Phantom's Secret"; there is Emory Johnson, who will have a leading role in the new serial; last, but not least, there is a player whose name is new to Universal offerings, Pomeroy Cannon, who acts the role of the belligerent driver of the brewery wagon, drinks twelve shots of whiskey without turning a hair, as his favorite "stunt," and cleans up a barroom in single-handed fight with a gang of toughs. That is a pretty formidable array of names for any feature production. But over and above them all is the work of the six-year-old star in the role of the baby philosopher, who brings happiness to the troubled inhabitants of a whole rooming-house, by the irresistible power of her optimistic, sunny-tempered disposition. Here is the story of how she does it:

In a cheap rooming house lived Danny Orth, Gaston Bouvais, Mamie and Kate. Danny was the driver of a brewery wagon and was strong and rugged. He and Mamie were married. Gaston Bouvais, a Latin of picturesque type, a painter and amateur philosopher, believed that every person was a plaything of Nature, and that all acts were predestined by the nature of the person. He jarred Mamie's happiness somewhat, telling her that there was nothing awaiting her but tragedy.

Kate was in love with Tommie, a young fellow who had fallen in with bad companions. He made many promises to Kate—to stop gambling and drinking, but constantly broke them.

Mamie rather admired Bouvais, although she did not understand him; but when he betrayed her she hated and distrusted him, especially when he said that she had fulfilled her destiny. She refused to tell Danny who the man was, even after the baby girl was born. Danny was heartsick, never suspecting such a thing until he visited her at the hospital. Gradually he changed in appearance; he drank more and more, and his manner became gruff and sullen. He loved the child, however; she was the one bright spot in his life.

CAST.

Danny	Pomeroy Cannon
Mamie	Elsie Jane Wilson
Bouvais	Harry Carter
Kate	Mignon Anderson
Tommie	Emory Johnson
Daisy May	Zoe Rae

Daisy May falls from the wagon.

"You can't help your destiny!"

During the next five years these inmates of the rooming-house drifted downstream. But Daisy May, Mamie's child, was very happy with her ragged and broken doll, adoring Danny. Mamie had finally promised to divorce Danny and marry Bouvais, believing him when he promised to marry her and to be kind to Daisy May.

It was Daisy May's fifth birthday. Kate and some youngsters of the neighborhood were preparing a surprise party. Danny took her with him on the wagon to get her out of the way. He met some of his friends, one of whom made a wager that he could not drink the twelve glasses of whiskey, a stunt for which he used to be notorious. The child urged him to take the dare, and Danny won the bet. But on the way home he lost control of the horses; they dashed down the street, and when he summoned forth all his strength to keep them from trampling down a child in the street, Daisy May was thrown under their hoofs with a sudden stop. Danny carried her to the house, stupefied and unable to believe that the little one was unconscious.

Mamie, brought to her right senses by the accident to Daisy May, refused to go with Bouvais, who openly sneered at her. With the help of Kate and Danny, she watched over the child, every nerve tense. Bouvais was also moved, for he was fond of Daisy May. He, one day, told Mamie he had concluded to marry her, but her lips curled and she raged madly at him, rushing to tell Danny who the "man" was. Danny at first was going to kill Bouvais, but finally forced him to leave the house. For the sake of the child they decide to live together again, so that she might have her parents with her.

Tommie suddenly braced up, having hidden in Kate's room from two policemen who wanted him for gambling. Urged by Kate, he gave himself up to the authorities. Kate waited for him, and when he was released from prison they started over again.

Daisy May fulfilled her destiny and got better, and Danny ceased to drive a brewery wagon, but changed to a milk wagon, taking the child with him sometimes, while Mamie remained at the little cottage or worked in the small garden.

Gaston Bouvais fulfilled a tragic destiny, married a tall, heavily built, matter-of-fact woman, who bore his philosophizing for a certain length of time and then boxed his ears.

Mignon Anderson's Career

ONE of the most popular leading ladies in pictures is content to play a smaller role in the support of Little Zoe Rae in the Butterfly Picture, "The Circus of Life." Miss Anderson was the star of a Butterfly herself, a week or so ago, when she played the lead in "The Phantom's Secret" with great success. None of the grown-up actors and actresses object to "supporting" Zoe Rae, for she is a general favorite with all of them.

Mignon Anderson, who plays the role of Kate in the Butterfly Picture.

Miss Anderson is a Baltimore girl, who belongs to the great army of child actors. She played, at the age of six or seven in the companies of Joseph Jefferson, Richard Mansfield, Julia Marlowe, Effie Shannon, and other famous players of the speaking stage. As she grew older, she left the stage, and out of school hours she posed for artists, who found her blond beauty inspiring.

Her screen career was begun with Thanhouser, with which concern she was starred in a number of pictures which made more than an ephemeral impression. She become connected with Universal but a short time ago, and was selected by Miss Lois Weber to create the feminine lead in the multiple reel feature, "Even as You and I," which played for a week at the Rialto Theatre, New York. The camera is very kind to Miss Anderson, who is just five feet tall, weighs ninety-four pounds, and possesses a fair complexion, blue eyes and blond hair. She is an outdoor girl, plays tennis, rides, motors, swims and enjoys all sports. She has a reputation for good dressing on the screen, of which she is very proud, and she expends great care on the selection of gowns for her roles.

"Nothing awaits you but tragedy!" said Bouvais.

"The Louise Lovely Trench"

Louise Lovely's best asset.

A UNIQUE honor has just been conferred on Louise Lovely, who plays "Laura Baring" so charmingly in the Butterfly Picture of the Civil War, called "The Field of Honor." She is an Australian, you know, and she was what the "Anzacs" call "tophole favorite" in her own country. A company of gunners from the Antipodes who are fighting on the Western front in France have named their trench "The Louise Lovely Trench," and written to tell her about it.

The letters is a strange one. It is written on a piece of brown wrapping paper, and placed in a home-made envelope. It was signed by every man in the company, and told her that, in addition to naming the trench after her, they had called their howitzer "Louise."

"Yesterday we opened fire with 'Louise,'" the letter went on to say, "and bombarded the bally enemy with her for nineteen hours."

Miss Lovely is highly appreciative of the honor conferred upon her, and is making up a box to send to her gunners, which will contain a remembrance for each of the men whose signature is attached to the letter.

"I have never received anything which touched me so deeply," she said, showing the precious piece of wrapping paper. "To think that men in the stress of war should remember a girl from their own country, whom they had seen only on the screen! I do so hope that my latest photoplay will reach them. I think the story of 'The Field of Honor' would be one after their own hearts. I am prouder of the 'Louise Lovely Trench' than of anything else in the world.

"It ought to appeal to them that this Butterfly picture was written by Brand Whitlock, the United States Minister to Belgium, for it was the violation of Belgian neutrality which sent England to war, and brought the men of my country to help her. We have no conscription in Australia, you know, but it was not necessary, for every available man has volunteered, and their record speaks for itself. I am very proud of my fellow countrymen, and flattered immensely by the honor they have paid me. 'Good luck to the howitzer, Louise,' says its godmother!"

Another five-reel feature in which Miss Lovely plays the lead, is in preparation now by Director Allen Holubar, producer of "The Field of Honor."

Louise in an unfamiliar coiffure.

JACK FORD in "The Scrapper"

BISON Two-Reel Cowboy Drama. Written and produced by Jack Ford, who also plays the lead, staging one of the biggest fight scenes ever filmed.

CAST.

Buck, the Scrapper	Jack Ford
Helen Dawson, Teacher	Louise Granville
Jerry Martin, Parasite	Duke Worne
Martha Mayes	Jean Hathaway

Buck proposes to Helen for the twentieth time.

This is the little schoolmarm for whom Buck cheerfully risks life and limb.

THIS Jack Ford is certainly some boy. He has put just three photoplays on the screen, and as each one has been three times as good as the one before it, and the first was a hit, you may figure for yourself what "The Scrapper" stands for. After a conventional start, with the introduction of a school teacher, and a bunch of cowboys, varied by a thrilling rescue of the heroine from a runaway team, some broncho-busting by Jack, and a few other little details, the real action gets started, and the wind-up comes in a scene of carnage which has never been equalled. It is easy to write "never been equalled," but wait till you see this fight! It is a wonder that any one was left alive. The picture was originally made in three reels, and then cut to two, so you may imagine how fast the action is now. Here is the story:

Buck Logan was called "The Scrapper" because he was always spoiling for a fight. With most of the boys on the ranch, he was in love with Helen Dawson, the school teacher. But she was tired of her lonely life, and resolved to return to the city on the first opportunity. When the boys rode over to say good-bye, and Buck proposed to her for the twentieth time, she told him that she could not promise him anything. He had that day saved her life, when the team she was driving ran away with her, but she did not recognize any obligation in this.

In the city, Helen found it a difficult matter to make both ends meet. Day by day her funds diminished, and she was unable to find employment for any length of time. She was seen one day by Jerry Martin, a parasite, who had the reputation of being sharper than a serpent's tooth. She had the misfortune to attract him. That day he visited Martha Mayes, a cold, unprincipled woman, who was the proprietor of a questionable establishment. They laid their plans, for they found Helen the type of girl to attract a certain wealthy Colonel Stanton, whose money they were anxious to get hold of. Jerry and his friend worked the old dodge on Helen. Archie pretended to attack her, and Jerry came nobly to the rescue, and then walked home with her. That was the beginning of the end for Helen.

Several months passed. Buck and the boys were sent by their employer to the city with a shipment of cattle. They set off delighted. Buck had never forgotten Helen, and hoped against hope to meet her in the city, for she had never let him know her address. The boys did not find much to attract them in the city's joys, and went down to the stockyards "for a breath of fresh air." Jerry, however had an adventure. A girl twisted her ankle in the street, and he was forced to help her home.

In the meantime, Jerry had been pursuing his advantage with Helen. He had made her think him a friend, so when he said that his sister was giving an entertainment, and wanted her to be there, she had no suspicion, but accepted promptly. The "sister" was Martha, who received Helen kindly and offered to lend her a pretty evening gown. The girl gratefully accepted, and descended the stairs, to be introduced to Colonel Stanton. He at once began making advances to her which aroused her suspicions, and she tried to push him away. At this moment, Buck, lead by the girl he had befriended, arrived at the house. Helen had just slapped the Colonel's face, when Buck recognized her. Pushing his way to her, he demanded whether any one wanted to fight. His challenge was accepted at once by most of the men in the room, and he had just time to ask Helen to telephone the stockyards for the boys, before he went down under an avalanche of human beings. A terrific fight took place, with Buck holding his own in spite of the numbers against him, for some time. The arrival of the boys came at the psychological moment, and then there was a fine free-for-all. Jerry and Archie seized Helen and carried her to the roof. Buck saw them, and managed to free himself, and pursue them. He threw Archie over the edge of the roof, and downed Jerry with a tremendous blow. Then he followed Helen down the fire-escape, where the boys, in a battered condition, joined him one by one. Inside Martha gazed disconsolately at her wrecked furniture, while the boys escorted Buck and Helen to a train leaving for the West.

"Tacky Sue's Romance"

REX Two-Reel Drama. Written by Tom Gibson and produced by Ruth Stonehouse, who also plays the lead. The story of a "Little Mother" and her plucky fight.

CAST.

"Tacky" Sue	Ruth Stonehouse
Dick Calhoun	Chester Bennett
Henry Calhoun	Wadsworth Harris
Mrs. Clancy	Lydia Yeamans Titus

RUTH STONEHOUSE loves children. She loves them so well that she has adopted a little six-year-old boy, you know; and she likes to have them with her in pictures whenever she can. "Tacky Sue's Romance," which was written for her by Tom Gibson, gave her the opportunity, and she has made the most of it. It is the story of a plucky little worker, with a whole family on her hands. She falls in love, but she won't surrender her independence until the son of her employer, who is devoted to her, steals the children and forces her to come to him for help in finding them. Then there is a charming ending to their romance.

She was called "Tacky" Sue because of her shabby clothes, but while the other office girls dressed well, Sue spent her money to keep herself and the tots alive. Their father and mother were both dead, and she was their sole support. Mrs. Clancy, Sue's staunch friend, tried to help the poor child.

Dick Calhoun, whose father owned the Consolidated Stores, where Sue worked, went to the park one day, and here saw Sue and the tots on their long-anticipated picnic. They saw his racer in the street and, not being aware of his presence, climbed into it and made believe they were on a wonderful journey. Accidentally Sue pressed her foot on the starter and the car wabbled down the street. Dick dashed after them. He scolded Sue severely, and while he was busy with the engine, she and the children quietly slipped away. Dick was sorry for his harsh reprimand and determined to apologize.

The next day as Sue was working in the store, Dick succeeded in begging her pardon. Then the elusive charm of Tacky Sue attracted Dick, and he escorted her home. Arrived at the tenement, she rushed in and began to tell Mrs. Clancy about Dick. He saw the extreme poverty of the little family and, being permitted by Sue to enter, tried to give some money to a tot, but Sue refused to accept charity.

Dick and Sue proceeded to fall in love with each other, but she felt that his feelings for her were caused by pity. Mrs. Clancy immediately went after Dick, demanding to know why he was trifling with the child's heart. The boy, greatly flustered, replied that he wanted to marry Sue. Mrs. Clancy was delighted.

Sue refused to work at the store any longer under the existing circumstances, and looked for another position. She was unsuccessful, and became very sad and weary. One day, on returning home, she found the children gone, and when, greatly concerned, she hurried to Mrs. Clancy's, the older woman suggested that she ask Dick for assistance. This Sue finally decided to do as a last resort.

Mr. Calhoun had been told by Dick of his love for Sue and of her obstinacy in the matter. Dick came for the children one afternoon and took them to his home. She was admitted by the butler and soon was facing Dick, who made a strenuous effort to appear stern, while, fighting back her tears, she told him of the children's disappearance. Dick went into the adjoining room, where his father was trying to keep the tots quiet, and had them march in to Sue. They told her, as they clung about her skirts, that her Fairy Prince wafted them there. She just couldn't help surrendering to Dick, and Mr. Calhoun—a wise man—herded the curious youngsters from the room, leaving the lovers together.

Mrs. Clancy minds the children.

UNIVERSAL NOW IS CREAM CITY.

WHEN Universal City was completed some two years ago all of the buildings were painted white and many were in favor of calling the big Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., the "White City."

However, it was found that the glare was too severe under the strong Southern California sunshine, and the buildings have been repainted a deep cream color. This in addition to being more restful to the eyes, has been found to make equally as good a shade for the general beauty of the studios. It has entailed a great deal of work and expense, but it is declared the results are highly satisfactory.

CHARLIE, the huge pachyderm at the Universal City zoo, has been unable to woo sleep during the past week for some unaccountable reason, and his bellowing at night has played havoc in the zoo, as it keeps all the other animals awake. Apples having been considered to have a somnolent effect, Superintendent Hoover of the zoo has ordered half a dozen boxes and will feed a large number to Charlie evenings and wait for results.

WHY ZA SU PITTS

WHY ZA SU?

ZA SU PITTS is William Franey's new leading lady, and every one is asking how she came by such a name. Here is the why of it: Her mother had two sisters, Elizabeth and Susan. She named the baby "Za" from Elizabeth, and "Su" from Susan, and the combination is so original that Miss Pitts has retained it for her screen work. She plays with Franey in "His Fatal Beauty." This is the first of the Joker comedies in which Franey stars alone, and was directed by W. W. Beaudine.

CANNING HIS SPEECH

THE cut shows Herbert Rawlinson, one of the most popular leading men of the screen, delivering a speech to his admirers, "somewhere in Ohio." The girls, who are members of an exclusive club, wrote asking Rawly to be present at their annual meeting. Of course, the actor could not leave his screen work, but he hit upon a clever scheme in order to gratify their wish. This was nothing less than talking an address to the girls into a dictaphone, the record of which was then sent to his admirers for their meeting.

A supper followed at which the actor was the "guest of honor." After the supper, they all visited a theatre in the town which was showing the Butterfly picture, "Like Wildfire," of which Rawlinson is the star. The girls all voted the celebration a great success, and the "canned" speech the best substitute for the real thing.

CALIFORNIA'S FINE CLIMATE.

WHEN Stuart Paton, Universal director, came to California from New York less than a year ago to complete the big "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" production, he was in poor health. At that time he tipped the scales at 127 pounds. Today he weighs 164 pounds.

The other day Paton visited the physician who treated him during the first few months of his stay in California. The medico was surprised to find the director in such an improved physical condition.

"Why, Mr. Paton," he said, "you are in better health than I am—California certainly has been good to you." Paton produced the Butterfly picture "Like Wildfire," starring Herbert Rawlinson, besides directing twelve episodes of "The Voice on the Wire." He is now engaged on the new serial, "The Gray Ghost," starring Priscilla Dean and Harry Carter, with Eddie Polo and Emory Johnson in support. The serial is from The Saturday Evening Post success "Loot" by Arthur Somers Roche.

and HOW Hy MAYERS

SOMETHING ABOUT "THE SCRAPPER"

FOR a long time people have said, as they heard the name "Ford" in connection with picture:

"Ford? Any relation to Francis?"

Very soon, unless all indications of the present time fail, they will be saying:

"Ford? Any relation of Jack?"

For the young man, who modestly lists his name in the studio directories as "Assistant Director," is coming so rapidly over the filmy horizon and making such swift progress on the road that leads to fame and fortune, that his older brother is warned to look to his laurels, or the "kid" will catch up.

There is so little printed information about Jack Ford that it is hard to write a story about him personally. If the story were to be about his pictures, it would be different. One might wax fairly lyrical over such an achievement as the fight in "The Scrapper," for example. All he says about himself is that he was born in Portland, Maine, in 1895, and educated at the University of Maine. His screen career has consisted of acting as assistant to his brother since July, 1914, and then he goes on to say that he is six feet tall, weighs 168, and has brown hair and blue eyes—and that's nearly all.

He has been directing his own company for a short time and at present is directing a three-reel picture, featuring Harry Carey, entitled "Buckhorn Hits the Trail."

We think we hear the Junk man coming around the corner. But it is only Cousin Ella and her new costume which make all the noise.

Hy Mayer's Cartoons Internationally Enjoyed

HY MAYER'S cartoons are one of the outstanding features of the splendid Animated Weekly. Every week the Moving Picture Weekly reproduces one or more of them, which, however, conveys little more than a suggestion of the real worth and effectiveness of the cartoon. The great point of superiority of the animated drawing over the cleverest "still" drawing, is the development which takes place in the idea. Mr. Mayer himself compares the two by saying that the finished drawing, such as appears in this page, is like the illustrations in a novel, but the Animated Cartoon as shown on the screen, gives the text of the story as well.

Hy Mayer has been drawing cartoons for thirty years. In all his experience of the cartoon as a means of influencing public opinion, he has found that nothing is equal to the animated cartoon as it is shown on the screen to-day. Its possibilities of achievement are limted only by the invention of the artist, and there is no end to the clever tricks which may be used to surprise the spectator. Mr. Mayer has been particularly happy in this use of the invaluable qualities of suspense and surprise. All these effects are, of course, lost in the reproduction of the one phase of the drawing, which is all that we are able to reproduce in print—another demonstration of the superiority of the film over printed matter.

Many millions admire the cartoons of Hy Mayer.

Pete, under the table, hears Pa tell about the burglar.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY. Written by H. O. Davis and produced by William Worthington from a scenario by Bess Meredyth. Featuring Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon in congenial roles.

CAST.

"Pepful" Peter	Franklyn Farnum
Mrs. Swazey	Frances Mahon
Her Husband	Arthur Hoyt
Jackie	Brownie Vernon
Mike	Richard la Reno

FRANKLYN FARNUM and Brownie Vernon make a great team, and William Worthington understands exactly how to get the best work out of them. This is another of the series of comedy-dramas, presented by this trio, and it was written for them by H. O. Davis, and then adapted for the screen by Bess Meredyth. Here is the story minus the amusing features of the temperance parade, in which the fire-horse runs away with Pa Swazey, and which is one of the most amusing incidents ever filmed.

This story deals with the Swazey family and Peter Drake, known as "Pepful Pete." Mrs. Swazey is a candidate for alderman on the Prohibition ticket, and her husband is just the type of man who would have married her. Jackie Swazey, however, is a regular girl, and greatly appreciates her mother and father.

The story opens with the rather unusual meeting of Jackie and Peter. He flirts with her from the window across the street, where he is the centre of attraction at one of the younger set's parties.

When he meets Jackie, the mother, who is entertaining her party in the house, comes upon them unexpectedly as she is on her way to stop the riotous party across the street. She demands to know who he is, and Pete, never at a loss for explanations, says he is a member of the Anti-Vice Committee, and is sent to watch the aforementioned party. Mother instantly adopts him, so to speak, and takes him into her party. Peter is miserable, but Jackie hugely enjoys it.

It comes about that he is elected to march in mother's parade on the following day. There is no alternative, and march he does.

He gets father out of the parade by a clever ruse, and after being forced to attend a suffragette meeting, breaks away and meets father at the club. There the two imbibe much liquor, and father becomes quite helpless. Pete, though carrying a gentle edge himself, is in condition to take father home. All goes well until the two do a head-fall down the stairs and awaken mother and Jackie. Pete, who falls under a table, revives in time to hear father explain to mother that a burglar walloped him on the head. Then there is an uproar! Pete ducks wildly about the house, eluding the police, who are called in. Finally Jackie sees him and hides him in her room. When the police break in the door, Pete leaps out the window into another policeman's arms. There is a chase, and in the end Pete is caught and put in jail.

"Walk up like a little man!"

The next morning the Swazey family are notified to come and identify their burglar. Jackie and father are loath to go, but mother insists, and mother sees Pete. She insists that "She always knew he had a bad face."

Pete, wild-eyed, gets word to father to get him out, and tells him to send for Mike Clancy, who is running in opposition to ma. Mike comes, and Pete promises that if Mike will use his influence, he, Peter, will see that ma is taken off the ticket. Mike does this, giving him until midnight of the following day to come through with his promise.

Pete, free again, saunters idly down to the park, and there sees a bunch of bums holding an indignation Socialistic meeting. By the aid of five-dollar gold pieces, he enlists their services, and takes them to Ma Swazey's house in a band.

Ma Swazey is, as usual, holding a meeting with her party, and Pete comes in affecting a hurt and injured air. He says that he will not explain how he was arrested, while trying to capture the real burglar; but tells her that he has returned good for evil, and has spent the morning converting hopeless derelicts to her cause. Then he has them say the little poem, which he has taught them:

> "We're for Prohibition!
> No more will be lazy;
> We'll see for alderman we get > Eliza Tilly Swazey!"

Mother is duly impressed and Peter is welcomed back to the fold.

The following evening, Mother Swazey entertains her party at a gorgeous reception. Peter is there, quite the centre of attraction. His peace of mind is destroyed, however, when Mike Clancy telephones him that he has until midnight to make good; otherwise, back goes Peter to the jug.

Peter is desperate, but he has a sudden inspiration. He dashes to a nearby wholesale liquor house and buys up many kinds of booze. He dopes the punch, and mother, who has just finished reading her election speech to her party, imbibes freely. The inevitable happens. Mother becomes hilarious, and insists upon doing skirt dances. The virtuous members of the party confer, and it is one minute of twelve when they sweep out, after informing mother that they have withdrawn their support from her.

Peter telephones Clancy on the stroke of midnight that he has fulfilled his promise. Of course, pa instantly becomes boss, and says that they will go to Africa, or Hawaii, or parts unknown, for a time.

Pete shows Jackie a wedding license, which he has procured, and says that he has a hunch they had better start on their wedding journey that night before mother comes to. And we are left with the impression that they did.

UNIVERSAL PLAYERS IN STAGE-COACH SMASHUP.

EILEEN SEDGWICK and several other members of Director Henry McRae's Universal company were injured in a runaway in Griffith Park, near Los Angeles, recently. Director McRae was engaged at the time in making a number of country scenes for his current production, "Demster's Return," and an old stage-coach which was used in these scenes was being driven along the road when one of the horses tripped and fell. The other three horses became frightened and started to run away. The first horse struggled to its feet and then all four of the animals tore madly along the road.

Miss Sedgwick was on the box with the driver, who told her to jump as they neared a waiting automobile, and she landed on her side in the road. Just at that moment the horses crashed into the machine, badly wrecking it, and then plunged ahead into a large oak tree where they all piled together.

The coach tipped over and Rex Hodge, McRae's assistant, and two others who were riding inside were badly bruised and cut by broken glass.

Miss Sedgwick appears next week in a Victor comedy called "Making Monkey Business."

Famous Author For Butterfly

Scene from "The Field of Honor," Butterfly Picture.

EVERY one knows that Brand Whitlock was our Minister to Belgium when the European war began, and most of us know something of his splendid record there, for the relief of the unfortunate people of that pathetic country. Not so many know of his record before his appointment to the Ministry of Belgium.

Mr. Whitlock followed Golden Rule Jones as Mayor of Toledo, and his absolute integrity, courage, and far-sighted vision would cause his name to be remembered by every citizen of that city, if he had never done anything else. He is a sociologist of note, and has written much on the subject. He is also a novelist. It is one of his novels which has been produced as a Butterfly Picture by Allen Holubar, under the title of "The Field of Honor," the original title of the book. Several books of Mr. Whitlock's were purchased by Universal last year. Another, dealing with a sociological subject, was produced by Phillips Smalley, but has not yet been released. "The Field of Honor" was written before Mr. Whitlock had had the experiences of modern war which his Belgian appointment brought him. The story is set during the period of our own Civil War, and deals with the contrast between the man of instinctive courage and the physical coward. The tale is intensely dramatic, and the characters are so clearly drawn that on the screen they appear as real men and women.

Allen Holubar has done fine work with the excellent material given him. He plays the lead himself, with Louise Lovely as the heroine.

AN IBSEN STORY ON THE BLUEBIRD SCREEN

IBSEN on the screen! Who would have thought it? And who would have thought that one of his plays would make a picture which interests you from start to finish, and seems just as natural and life-like as if it had been written by John Smith. Of course, "A Doll's House" always has enjoyed a wide public. Some of the biggest actresses of our time have played it, and the galleries were just as full while they were doing it as if the play had been a musical comedy. The great Duse acted "Nora" when she came out to play for us. Mrs. Fiske added it to her repertoire a long time ago, and Alla Nazimova had one of her earliest successes in it. And now it appears again as a Bluebird Photoplay, with Dorothy Phillips, who is making a name as one of the best actresses on the screen, in the part made famous by so many of her sisters of the "legitimate" stage. And the photoplay audiences will find to their surprise, that "A Doll's House" is a big, vital, intense story of a woman and a man, as full of human interest and suspense as if it had been written by a dyed-in-the-wool scenario writer, who had never been accused of being a "high-brow" in his life.

Dorothy Phillips has a role which entirely suits her, and she is supported by William Stowell, as Helmer, Nora's husband, and Lon Chaney as Krogstad, from whom Nora borrows the money to save her husband's life.

Films From Next Week's Program

AMONG the features in next week's Universal program will be found a three-reel Gold Seal of remarkable quality. It is entitled "The Black Mantilla," and features Claire McDowell. It may be briefly described as a Rex Ingram production in three reels. It was written and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, and has all of the careful detail, wonderfully artistic lightning effects, character drawing and gripping thrill of a five-reel drama, only it is boiled down into three reels. A wonderful cast has been selected to support Miss McDowell. It includes Gypsy Hart, Richard Ryan, Harry Mann, Walter Belasco and George Pearce. The story has its locale in a Mexican mountain village and the entire action of the piece revolves about the gift of a black mantilla by a dashing cavaliero. Marachita, the part played by Miss McDowell, had only one rival in Poldique, but that rival, through a trick, made Marachita think that Huanto had given her a wonderful black mantilla, and in a passion of jealousy Marachita told another simple-minded swain that she would do anything for him if he would but get her a black mantilla. The only way he saw to do it was to steal a valuable painting from the church, and this is what he did, thereby bringing down upon the whole village of Poldique a punishment which the simple inhabitants regarded as coming straight from heaven.

There is a Harry Carey picture released as a Big U entitled "The Mysterious Outlaw," a single reel; two very funny comedies—the Nestor, with Lyons and Moran; and the Joker, featuring Gale Henry and Wm. Franey; the L-Ko two reel feature entitled "Chicken Chased and Henpecked," in which Phil Dunham and his trusty crew of comedians spring some real chicken stuff; a Bison feature entitled "The Honor of Men"; the usual Powers split-reel consisting of a comedy cartoon entitled "A Pesky Pup," and a Dorsey educational entitled "China At Work and At Play"; a Victor comedy drama entitled "A Blissful Calamity."

WE, TOO, MR. BARBASH.

IN a recent issue of the Moving Picture Weekly an article from the Moving Picture World was quoted in which reference was made to Manager Barbash. After its publication the World felt constrained to make a correction, which they did in the issue of May 26th. The Moving Picture Weekly, not only at the request of Mr. Barbash, but following out its invariable policy of open-mindedness and justice, takes pleasure in printing the same correction, and quotes again from The World:

MANAGER BARBASH NOW RUNNING THE TIP TOP.

By John L. Johnston.

In an article in this paper, "Troubles of a Film Distributor," we mentioned that film had come back to the Universal Film Exchange in bad condition from the Paradise Theatre, Brooklyn, while Manager Barbash was in charge there weeks ago. We now learn from S. Rubinstein, assistant manager of the Twenty-third Street branch of the Universal exchange, that the mention of his name at the time of the interview was inadvertent and that they are having no trouble with him in connection with the return of film as manager of the Tip Top Theatre. He is, we are told, a careful and conscientious man, and the mention of his name in connection with the matter was not just to him.

'LET'S ALL BE AMERICANS NOW'

ON Tuesday, May 29th, the second Song Hit in Photoplay was released. The order and schedule of these song hits was changed in order that a patriotic song might be released at this particularly timely moment, and the Universal was very fortunate in obtaining Emma Carus to sing this song and appear in the production of it, which was made by Harry Cohn. The illustration on this page was taken from "Let's All Be Americans Now," which was written by Edgar Leslie and George W. Meyers. The song and the picture together should be a great drawing card for any theatre, and it is expected that it will take its place among the other efforts of patriotic Americans to rouse this country to the proper pitch of enthusiasm.

PRINCIPAL

The Gray

Beautiful Priscilla Dean as she is and—

"THE GRAY GHOST"—sounds spooky, doesn't it? If you are a Saturday Evening Post reader (and if you are not, you ought to be), you will remember the name as that of a light-fingered gentleman, of commanding personality, whose adventures were published in that most popular of periodicals under the title of "Loot." This story, by Arthur Somers Roche, upon whom the mantle of Conan Doyle as a teller of detective tales seems to have fallen, thrilled the millions who read the Post, and its screen-serial possibilities were realized by Universal, on the lookout for something to maintain the high standard set by the present serial, "The Voice on the Wire." The photoplay rights were secured, and the production given into the able hands of Stuart Paton, who has to his credit such successes as "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and "The Voice on the Wire."

The name by which the personage in "Loot" is known to the police was adopted for the title of the serial, as being more suggestive than the original one, and so the next Universal serial was decided upon—an event of interest and importance to thousands of exhibitors and millions of picture fans.

The story and the director having been chosen, the next step was the selection of the cast. This is always a matter of the greatest importance. Casting any photoplay is, with Universal, a matter of thought and care. But the choice of the players to sustain the public's interest throughout fifteen or sixteen episodes, of two reels each, is an affair which is not to be undertaken lightly. The acting forces at Universal City present a wide field, it is true, and the officials congratulate themselves that the dramatis personae of "The Gray Ghost" represents the very best exponents of the principal characters that could possibly have been chosen.

The underlying motive of the story is the fight for the possession of a two million dollar necklace. A rich man, engaged to a titled Englishwoman, is to give her the ornament for a wedding present, and determines to send a young lawyer, Hildreth by name, to New York with a certified check, to bring the necklace from the firm of jewelers where it has been made. "The Gray Ghost," the elusive head of an organized band of law-evaders, has other plans for the necklace, and hearing of the unusually large check which has been entrusted to Hildreth, he thinks that he may as well collect that, too.

Of course, there must be a woman in the story—can you imagine any self-respecting serial without a heroine? Certainly not, the thing is unthinkable. In this case, she is a beautiful comic opera star, named "Morn Light," loved by the Gray Ghost, and apparently in his confidence. The element of mystery in the story is the meaning of her connection with this man, against whom she enlists the services of Hildreth. This is not explained until the last episode, and all through the serial she seems to play a double part. Her maid, apparently a spy of the Gray Ghost, watches her like a cat, and the play between the two women adds many subtle touches to the development of the plot. The fourth character of importance is that of Hildreth's valet, working heart and soul in his master's interests, ready to risk life and limb for his protection.

These are the principal personages of the story: The Gray Ghost, the young lawyer Hildreth, the actress Morn Light, and the hero's valet. They are played by Harry Carter, Emory Johnson, Priscilla Dean and Eddie Polo. These four players were selected because their talents and their physical appearance exactly fitted the character that each was called upon to portray.

Harry Carter's straight expression and—

To begin with the title role, Harry Carter is the Universal villain par excellence. As the forceful, dominant, strong-armed type of "badman," accustomed to cities, to the usages of society, wearing his clothes like a gentleman, fighting, if need be, like a lion, Carter may be counted upon to give the finest characterization of his career. We are introduced to the Gray Ghost in the flesh. He may be a superman, but he is just flesh and blood like ourselves, and works through means which are comprehensible to all of us. His men are not impelled to obey him by any supernatural force. They do his will because they recognize his authority, because they fear his strength, and tremble before his iron will.

"Morn Light" will be played by Priscilla Dean, one of the most beautiful girls on the screen, who played leads in two of Miss Lois Weber's screen masterpieces—the baby vampire in "Even as You and I," and the conventional wife in "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle." Her role in this serial will call for great versatility as an actress. She has a double part to play. She must sustain the confidence of the Gray Ghost in her, and at the same time work against him. Morn Light is a musical comedy star, and musical comedy stars these days are expected to dress the part, off the stage as well as on. Miss Dean announces that she will wear at least one new gown in every episode, and that each frock will be the newest, the most up-to-date of its kind.

Hildreth will be played by Emory Johnson. It is his task in the serial to protect the necklace and the check, to work with Morn Light against the machinations of the Gray Ghost, outwit him in the end, and win the lovely heroine for his bride. A perfectly unsuspecting Englishman, arrived in New York on the conventional errand of paying for and receiving a valuable necklace for one of his clients he finds himself from the moment of his arrival the storm centre of an intrigue, which he only vaguely understands. It is a very good thing for Johnson that he is an athlete and a good sportsman, for he will need all his prowess before the serial comes to an end.

Eddie Polo, as Hildreth's valet, completes the quartette. You know what his name in a serial stands for. "The Broken Coin" started his fame, and "Liberty" spread it further among the serial public, until, at the present time Polo's name is as big a box-office attraction as any soulful-eyed hero or curly-haired heroine in the game. Stuart Paton has given his solemn word of honor that Polo will have more opportunities to break his neck in this serial than he has ever had before.

RUTH STONEHOUSE SCOURS STORES FOR NO. 3 FOOTWEAR.

RUTH STONEHOUSE, one of the well-known stars, has decided to give up directing her own company until Fall and in the meantime she will be featured under the direction of Louis W. Chaudet. Her first photoplay under her new director is entitled "The Boots of Beatrice," and was written by Eugene B. Lewis.

In this production Miss Stonehouse has to use many pairs of boots and shoes and while the little actress has a great quantity of her own, it was found necessary to use a lot more. This was no easy matter, as Miss Stonehouse wears a number three, a size so small that the supply is limited. However, after combing Los Angeles and Hollywood, a sufficient number of pairs was secured to satisfy the director and the star. Ruth Stonehouse's Gold Seal, "The Stolen Actress," was on last week's program.

RIOT EXPERIENCES FIT YOUNG LAEMMLE FOR WAR.

EDDIE LAEMMLE, formerly of Chicago, and a nephew of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is ready to answer the call to colors, with an experience possessed by few except those who have seen actual foreign war service.

Young Laemmle, who has been working at Universal City for the past year, was for seven years a member of the First Illinois National Guard, and as such participated with the Illinois State troops in the quell of the race riots in Springfield, in 1908.

The service the State troops received at that time was trying and tedious, this training fitting them for other trying times.

Young Laemmle has offered his services and is expecting a call soon.

EARLY WALKS TO REDUCE WEIGHT.

THE principal topic of conversation at Universal City among the actresses at the present time, appears to be either the increase or reduction of avoirdupois. Nellie Allen, Irene Hunt and Brownie Vernon are adding to their weight while others, including Mary MacLaren, Betty Schade, Eileen Sedgwick and a number of others are living the strenuous life in the effort to reduce the sylph-like forms. Miss Schade and Miss Sedgwick arise every morning at five o'clock and walk at least five miles before breakfast. This serves to stimulate an appetite. But the diet prescribed fails to satisfy and the girls groan until lunch time and then groan again when they realize how little they may eat.

The Kind of Music Cue Sheet That Helps the Exhibitor by M. Winkler

I FIRMLY believe that every musician, or rather every leader playing for pictures, is capable of compiling a musical cue sheet, provided a chance is given him to review the picture at least one day ahead of the opening performance.

Such cue sheets, however, are of use only to himself. They are absolutely no good for publication. By this I mean to be reprinted in different newspapers or on press sheets issued by the different film companies and to serve as a guide and aid to all those musicians whose theatres are booking certain film productions.

This is quite a risky statement, but I will ask the readers of these columns to read the following lines, which, in my estimation, will sufficiently prove that my statement is logically correct. Two days ago I received a cue sheet from a film company located in Chicago, together with the film it was intended for, with the advice to hand this music sheet to my intended orchestra leader, and impress it upon him to use it, as it practically was the solution of the musical problem, as far as this film was concerned. But a careful study of the cue sheet convinced me that it was far from being so. First of all, 50 per cent. of the numbers suggested in this cue sheet were only published for piano or organ: they were not published nor obtainable for orchestra. This fact leads to the surmise that the "she" or "he" who made up this cue sheet is a pianist or organist without any orchestra experience. In case of this person being an orchestra musician, the very same condition might prevail. This means that the suggested music would be obtainable for orchestra only, and not for piano or organ. This factor, on the first sight, decreases the value of such cue sheets at least 50 per cent., and if exactly figured it means "half work" or "half done." This is just as much as nothing, for it only confuses the musician instead of being of assistance to him.

The man or woman doing such work must not only be a musician of merit with long years of experience, but also a man in the music business. He must at least have several years of experience in a music house selling everyone's editions and handling an international stock. Our cue sheets printed in these columns consist of numbers which can be bought everywhere and are obtainable and playable for any orchestra combination or single instrument within reason.

There is no necessity to prove the importance of an appropriate musical accompaniment for pictures—it is an established fact. But if an argument is desired, read Mr. Laemmle's Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk in the Moving Picture Weekly of May 19. The Exhibitor of to-day realizes that proper music is valuable in making his show go over big, but very few film manufacturing companies seem to know that. The Universal and Bluebird Film Companies were the first ones to acknowledge this important factor, and they were also the first ones to engage a music arranger for the purpose of arranging musical suggestion cue sheets for every one of their pictures.

These musical suggestions have been of great assistance to the musician and also to the exhibitor, and as these two film manufacturing concerns were the first ones to issue musical suggestions, it is most natural that they have attained the most experience in this particular field. The result is that the most practical musical cue sheets are Universal and Bluebird sheets. In selecting the music, we are careful to list not only the titles, but we also clearly specify the character of the compositions, which enables the musician to substitute with any other number of a similar kind, if he does not possess the number mentioned on the cue sheet. This also clearly proves that Universal and Bluebird cue sheets are not an advertising medium for any music publisher, but are designed for the sole and only benefit of the Exhibitor who books this excellent program.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

THE Butterfly Picture for next week is "The Field of Honor." Here are some suggestions for putting it over. This is a story of civil war days. What could be more appropriate than to round up the civil war veterans in your town and be their host on the night you show "The Field of Honor."

Get in touch with your local post of the G. A. R., and invite every old soldier to be your guest at this showing. There are comparatively few of them left, they will appreciate it and you will make many friends. Avoid "red tape." Simply announce that every civil war veteran who appears in uniform this night is to be admitted free. Very few of them will come alone. Be sure and notify your newspapers of this and you will get much free spare.

Dress your ushers, doorman and all attaches in the uniform of the period—the girls in crinolines, hoops pantalettes and curls.

If your local G. A. R. has a fife and drum corps, engage them to give a concert on the night, and advertise it.

Get in touch with your local recruiting office. Have them co-operate with you by loaning you uniformed men and any equipment which they might have. Have soldiers in modern uniforms pass out cards, reading as follows:

See How the Boys of '61
Enlisted for
"THE FIELD OF HONOR"
at the (name) Theatre
(day and date)

Then have an old soldier in civil war uniform pass out cards reading:

I attended
"THE FIELD OF HONOR"
in 1861
YOU can see it (date)
at the (name) Theatre

Mail the following letter to all names on your mailing list. If you have none, make one up. If you are in doubt as to how to prepare a mailing list, get in communication with your Universal exchange. They will be glad to assist you in doing this.

My Dear Friend—Is a lie ever justifiable?

That's a world-old question that should have an answer.

About the best answer I have ever seen is in "The Field of Honor," which I will show at the (name) Theatre (day and date).

One man lies to save the girl—who had jilted him and married another—pain. He wants her boy to believe that his father was a hero—not the coward he proved to be.

"The Field of Honor" is replete with tense moments and patriotically thrilling ones. Allen Holubar takes full advantage of his splendid role of "Wade Clayton"—his characterization of the real hero is perfect. Louise Lovely was never truer to her name or more capably cast than as "Laura Sheldon," and her portrayal of the belle of the stirring days of '61 is charming and appealing. The entire cast is excellently selected, and I have no hesitancy in personally guaranteeing this Butterfly feature.

If you favor good picture—the "different" sort—you will mark down (day and date) as one to be remembered.

Cordially yours,
Manager (name) Theatre.

"TWIXT DEATH AND DAWN"

BEN WILSON directed this chapter of the great serial, "The Voice on the Wire," which was written by Eustace Hale Ball, and adapted for the screen by Stuart Paton.

No. 13

"The Voice on the Wire"

Two striking scenes for the thirteenth Chapter of the serial.

BEN Wilson directed the thirteenth episode of the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," written as a novel by Eustace Hale Ball, and adapted for the screen by Stuart Paton, who had charge of the production until the next serial absorbed his attention. The present one has suffered no relaxation of interest and suspense under the guiding hand of Wilson, who thus has the arduous task of acting the lead as well as staging the exciting incidents which come thick and fast as the mystery nears solution. Here is the story:

Shirley has been warned by the Voice to watch for the hour between night and daylight. He sits beside Polly, who is lying on the couch in the house of Professor Duval. Up-stairs the professor is awaiting a call, while in another room is Doctor Renolds. Shirley feels a sinister influence at work in the house. There is nothing to be seen, but outside a dog howls persistently. Duval and Renolds also feel this influence, and resist it with all their power. Shirley sees a shadow on the window shade. He goes toward it, revolver in hand, but there is nothing there. Polly wakes. She rises as one in a dream and goes toward the thought machine. She raises the telephone as if to break the machine, when Shirley catches her hand.

"Red" Warren, alone and a fugitive, is seen coming out of a hotel. He is followed secretly by one of the detectives and seen to enter a beer garden. Here are two of his men, who have managed to escape the police. The two detectives wait outside until Red comes out with the two men. Then they follow him, but almost lose sight of him. One of them goes to the police for help. Cronin is there interrogating Pale Ida. He is trying to force her to tell who the voice on the wire is, but she resists him. She tells him that he is spoiling any chances he had to finding out. He at last offers her money.

CAST.

Shirley	Ben Wilson
Polly	Neva Gerber
"Red" Warren	Francis MacDonald
Renolds	Joseph Girard
Prof. Duval	De Bruillier
Cronin	Howard Crampton

At the professor's, Shirley is still watching Polly. Suddenly she asks him why it is so dark. He calls the professor, who comes to him at once. They realize that Polly is blind. They are terribly distressed, and Shirley goes nervously to the phone when it rings. The voice on the wire warns him that he has now seen another demonstration of power. That unless Shirley drops his investigations at once, Polly's sight will not be restored. The voice will call him again in five minutes.

At the police station, Ida is just about to give Cronin the information he desires, when something seems to catch her throat. She clutches it and falls forward. The phone rings, and the voice informs Cronin that Ida is speechless, and that if he attempts to make her write the name of the voice, she will die on the instant. Cronin is completely baffled.

Red Warren and his two men have apparently eluded pursuit, and arrived outside the Duval house. Red wraps his cloak around him and appears in the familiar guise of the muffled figure. In the house, Shirley begs Duval to do something for Polly. When he says he cannot, Shirley asks Polly to trust him whatever he may do. She says that she loves him. He embraces her, and is called to the phone.

Harry Carey in "The Almost Good Man"

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Western Drama. Story by T. Shelley Sutton. Scenario by Chas. J. Wilson, Jr. Produced by Fred A. Kelsey, with Harry Carey starred in the role of an outlaw who has not the heart to be a consistent one.

Left—Kitty recognizes her ring. Centre—"Keep still," said Dick. Right—"Why, you're an almost good man!"

THERE is no more popular player on the program than Harry Carey, and one of his Western pictures is a sure-fire success every time. "The Almost Good Man" is in every way up to the standard. It was written by T. Shelley Sutton, adapted for the screen by Charles Wilson, Jr., and produced by Fred A. Kelsey. Claire Du Brey, as usual, supports Carey in the feminine lead. Here is the story:

Dick Glenning, broke and friendless, is footing it back to Red Gulch, when he is noticed by Pete Willis, an outlaw and "bad man" in the need of a "pard," and he recklessly accepts Pete's proposition to hold up the stage that night.

Jim Manville, the Wells Fargo agent in Red Gulch, fears a visit from the company's auditor, for he has been using the money for gambling and has been losing constantly. He receives word that his daughter, Kitty, is to return home on the stage that night.

CAST.

Dick Glenning	Harry Carey
Hal Norton	Al. MacQuarrie
Jim Manville	Frank MacQuarrie
Pete Willis	Vester Pegg
Kitty Manville	Claire Du Brey

Dick and Willis hold up the stage in which Kitty is the only passenger, but find that the money has not been shipped. Dick reprimands Willis for his treatment of Kitty and returns her jewelry. Kitty is impressed and remarks that he seems to be an almost good man instead of a bad man, and she gives him a ring.

Hal Norton, a gambler, who has won much of Manville's money, is suddenly sorry for the wife, and he returns some of the money to Mrs. Manville. He meets Kitty and is much impressed.

A few lays later the pay-roll arrives by a different route and is placed in Manville's custody. Dick and Willis know of this event and the latter immediately plots to gain possession of the money.

Dick meets Kitty and barely escapes being recognized by her ring. He escorts her home, and on the way they meet Norton, who joins them. Dick sees a reward offered for Willis, who is wanted for murder. He tells Willis that he is through with him and warns him to leave the camp. But Willis is determined to stay and get the money. Dick decides to keep a close watch on him.

To relieve her mother's mind, Kitty blankly asks her father where he gets the money from which he gambles. Manville confesses to Kitty, and adds that he must have a thousand dollars or face imprisonment. And then the girl thinks of the reward for the highwaymen and, knowing that Dick is one of them, for he accidentally dropped the ring before her, she has a great struggle trying to choose between the two men. Manville says there is still a way of escape, and Kitty postpones her decision.

That night Manville gambles with the payroll, trying to break Norton, and though he wins at first, he begins to lose rapidly and soon is broke. He staggers out of the saloon and, going to the office, writes a note telling of his embezzlements and shoots himself.

Meanwhile, Dick has followed Willis and at the point of his revolver has forced him to leave Manville's office. While keeping guard there, he is startled by Manville's shot and rushes in to find the man dead. Shortly afterward, Norton, who had been forced to play against Manville, returns to give the money back. Dick sees Norton read the note, which he hastily conceals, together

Bluebird Ideas for "Southern Justice"

A SHREWD, smooth-spoken swindler who takes pains to work within the law, is given a rude jolt and a taste of Southern justice when he attempts to do the citizens of a little community out of their hard-earned savings. What happened is told in "Southern Justice."

A novel stunt that cannot fail to attract considerable attention is the following:

Obtain a suit of black fleshings (this is simply a union suit). Stitch enough feathers over the fleshings to all but cover the material. Have a man don this costume and let him carry a pole sign containing this announcement: "This coat of tar-and-feathers represents 'Southern Justice.' Come to the (name of theatre) and get the details."

If you want to go to the extra expense of a float, you can elaborate on this idea as follows: Get in touch with one of the local clothing merchants and arrange with him for the loan of one or more dummies. The chances are that he will gladly loan you these figures for some screen advertising.

Dress one of the dummies in the tar-and-feathers suit and seat it carefully on a board, crosswise. If you succeed in obtaining two additional figures, arrange the board so as to make it appear as though the man seated on it was being carried by the figures holding the opposite ends.

Alongside of this group, rig up a tripod and suspend a cauldron from it. You can get over the impression that the cauldron is boiling by placing a can of water inside it. An alcohol lamp burning under the can will cause steam to mount out of the cauldron.

Suitable signs should be fastened about the float. One of these might read: "For a sample of 'Southern Justice' drop in at the (theatre name here) to-day." Another might read: "Do you know of any crooks and swindlers in this town who deserve this sample of 'Southern Justice'? See the show at the (theatre name) to-day for details."

For "Bringing Home Father"

A HENPECKED husband who dares not call his soul his own, figures prominently in "Bringing Home Father," the newest Bluebird photoplay.

Have a man make up as a big, fat female. The bigger the better. This "woman" should be armed with a heavy umbrella. Her costume should be along grotesque lines.

Accompanying this woman is a little bit of a man. This individual should be thin and look as though he hadn't had a laugh since the day he married. At intervals, the woman should grab him by the back of his coat collar and drag him along on his heels. Every once in a while, have her drive her husband ahead and prod him in the ribs with the umbrella.

A sign fastened to the woman's back should read: "I'm 'Bringing Home Father.' Visit the (theatre name) and see what happens when he gets there." The same copy can be painted on the umbrella, which should be of the old-fashioned "bombershoot" type.

If you have a Ford, or can rent one cheaply, have a man dressed in evening clothes sprawling on the rear seat. His appearance should indicate that he has dined not too wisely, but too well. His high hat should be battered and over one eye. His collar hangs by one button, while his tie straggles down his shirt front. Have a comedy cop driving the car, and along the sides of the latter fasten a sign reading as follows: "We're 'Bringing Home Father.' For details see 'Bringing Home Father' at the (name here) Theatre to-day." If you get up heralds or circulars for this Bluebird, they can be distributed by "father" at busy street corners.

Don't overlook the fact that two of the most popular Bluebird stars, Franklyn Farnum and "Brownie" Vernon, appear in this production. Advertise this fact and get the benefit of the business their popularity will bring.

Gentlemen:—

I don't believe that you have a more enthusiastic exhibitor on your books than the Pastime Theatre.

We are firm believers in your standard of production and in your methods of doing business.

Bluebirds have established themselves solidly in our community. We do not know of any line of features which are giving greater satisfaction from a box office and "Pleasing Patrons" angle than Bluebird Features.

Hoping you will continue to give us money-makers in the future as in the past, we are,

Dear Sirs—You have asked me several times my opinion on "The Bluebirds," and how my patrons like them; now, there is never anything but praise for them. They are liked by all.

"Glorianna" was simply great, as was also "Love's Lariat." In fact, all of them and each new one seems better than the one before. They give complete satisfaction, but the show business is quite poor this winter, and could not expect anything else considering the cold weather, high prices and conditon of the country. Will have to hope for better times later on.

Hoping you are having great success with the Bluebirds, as they are worthy of it, I remain,

BLUEBIRD BALANCE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen—As to our opinion of Bluebirds, I can freely give you this and give it to you honestly. About six months ago we tried out two or three of your pictures, included in which were "The Eye of God" and "Love's Lariat." They gave such universal satisfaction that we have been using them almost exclusively ever since for our Wednesday and Thursday program, although there have been a few cases where we have laid them off to play some special features of other brands.

We use the Triangle on Monday, Tuesday, Fridays and Saturdays, and frankly, I feel that the Bluebird pictures balance out a week that it would be hard to replace with any other two programs.

MAKE A LIVE NIGHT OUT OF A DEAD ONE.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
Des Moines, Iowa.

Gentlemen—When I assumed the management of this house, I found that my Wednesday night receipts were way below what they should be. In trying to better this state of affairs I changed about from Exchange to Exchange to see if I could not find the service that my patrons wanted. I ran serials, I ran features, and I ran diversified programs in an endeavor to stir up a little enthusiasm. During this course of changing about, I ran Bluebirds for a few weeks during the months of last July and August.

At the time that I first started running Bluebirds, my patrons did not seem to be very enthusiastic over them, and it was not until I had changed to something else that they began to speak of the Bluebird merits. The longer I kept away from Bluebird service, the more urgent became the requests of my patrons that I show them Bluebirds until finally these requests became demands and I re-enlisted on November 29 last. My Wednesday night receipts have been steadily growing since then, until now Wednesday night is fighting for place with Saturday night (formerly my best night).

Bluebirds have done me the favor of changing a dead night to a live one.

Yours very truly,

NEVER A COMPLAINT.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen — In regard to your "Bluebird" Program, beg to state that I have been using it since it was wrapped in swaddling clothes and can truthfully say that I have never had a complaint of a bad picture produced by your company, and I attribute a great deal of my success to the splendid pictures which you have produced and which I have had the profit of showing.

Your organization at Oklahoma City, that is, Mr. Sam Benjamin, who is manager of your office, in my opinion is a great asset to your wonderful organization, for the simple reason that Mr. Benjamin is an untiring worker and is always ready to put himself out to accommodate his exhibitors. He is loyal to his "Bluebirds," and his word is as good as his bond. Many exchangemen in my opinion, make a grievous mistake by throwing a good account up for some mushroom exhibitor on account of their offering a little more money, not realizing that this fly-by-night exhibitor cannot last long in the business. But this is not the case with Mr. Benjamin. When he opened up my account he had a great many other exhibitors come to him and try to undermine me and get the Bluebird pictures, saying that it was impossible for me to last on account of not being in the right location and off the main drag, but his faith in my was unshaken and he would not listen to them.

As I have said before, I have used the Bluebirds for fifteen months and believe them as good, if not better, than any program produced to-day; and I say this without any favoritism whatever, but simply because it is a business proposition with me to use the program that is most consistent in my success.

Yours very truly,

Universal Dora Recruits 4 More

DORA RODRIGUEZ enrolled four recruits in Clarksburg, W. Va., last week. You remember, she is the Universal Film Girl who is hiking from New York to Universal City, California, in a natty soldier's uniform. When war was declared, Dora just bubbled over with patriotism. Being a woman, the outlet for her patriotism had to be different from the usual kind, and she has decided to use it to obtain 40,000 recruits for Uncle Sam's army and navy. In her brief stay in the cities she has visited she has aroused a great deal of enthusiasm and patriotism, much more than was evinced since the declaration of war. Every one is talking about her, and of course, every one is in sympathy with her efforts. This is not due to the fact that she is a girl, and pretty, but that her appeal is strong and sincere. She is received amidst rousing cheers as she enters each city, and recruiting officials are doing a great deal to co-operate with her. She is giving a course of lectures in theatres in conjunction with which moving pictures of the lives of the soldiers and sailors are thrown upon the screen. In Clarksburg, West Virginia, where she spent the early part of this week, she arranged for a parade of the Boy Scouts through the city, which was beautifully decorated to fit the occasion. Of course, the entire town turned out to watch the proceedings, all of which caused a great sensation, and aided her materially in her recruiting work, which is rapidly increasing.

The next city she is to visit is Pittsburgh, where preparations are already being made for her arrival.

Needless to say, Dora is setting a great example to the rest of the country, and is obtaining more recruits than she ever hoped. Here's to more success for her.

The next morning on hearing the "attempted robbery," Willis accuses Dick of double crossing him and writes a note, insinuating this fact, which he slips under the sheriff's door. Dick is arrested. Norton tries to exonerate Dick, but the latter prevents his talking. Meantime the sheriff has received a photograph of the man wanted for murder in Arizona and recognizes Willis.

Norton affects Dick's escape from the jail and suggests that they allow the girl to decide, telling her the truth of the whole affair. Kitty is overcome with sorrow. Norton, believing that Kitty loves Dick, is about to leave when she suddenly throws her arms about him. Dick realizes that he has lost, and, gaining permission from Kitty to keep the ring, he rides away into the night.

HERE'S ANOTHER ONE.

THIS is plain talk from an exchangeman who wishes to protect his territory and that of every other exchange from fraudulent practises and persons. The Moving Picture Weekly last week carried a story about the New England Universal Film Exchange's loss of several reels through Jerry A. Brown of Shirley and Townsend, Mass. This exposure should bring said Brown to book very shortly. This second case is also one upon which the Moving Picture Weekly feels that its wide circulation can be of benefit, and it prints the letter written by C. E. Penrod of the Cincinnati Buckeye Company in the hope that the "C. F. Rogers" will be summarily prevented from annoying accounts in other exchanges:

and he called on one of our accounts in Springfield, Ohio, and had quite a lengthy conversation with her, also called on Gus Sun, our first-run account in Springfield and talked with him for some time on Friday, May 11th. About 6 p. m., on the same day he returned to Mr. Sun's office, and while the janitor was cleaning the office, he requested the janitor to allow him to sit down at the desk and write a letter. Some way or other he got into the bookkeeper's desk and took a check that had been filled out to some film company. At the same time he appropriated Mr. Sun's stamp that he uses in signing his mail. He then forged the check and cashed it, and at the same time took a blank check from a Springfield bank and went to Columbus. He stamped Mr. Sun's name on the end of the check and forged his signature. This check he made out for $35 and took it to a drug store and made a purchase of $1 and received $34 in change. The first check he forged amounted to about $12. In other words, the two checks amounted to $47.

"We are advising you of this, as we feel that all exchanges should be notified throughout the country as well as the exhibitors to beware of this kind of men. This party informed Mr. Sun and Mrs. Murphy of Springfield that he was sent out as a special field man and was looking after the complaints and troubles of the exhibitor. Yours very truly,

ST. VITUS'S WEEKLY WIGGLE

HOW it came to pass that Knowitall, son of Haswas, the Pastnumber, took counsel to himself, saying:

"Yea, verily am I the biggest noise in this moss-grown burg. For can I not point to a large movie house to which I have given my name and to which the pee-pul do come in goodly numbers to see the wondrous flickers of film that I cause my hireling to flash upon the screen? Yea, it is even true.

"Then why should Knoxal, son of Mudslinger, and his miserable flea-bitten handful of disciples dare to stop me in the market place to say that the pictures that I show are not worth a mill-dam, and that at my charge of a shekel a peep I am in a class with the food price boosters and other malfactors of tainted wealth? Of a truth I know my own business. And, lo, do I decide what the miserable, degenerate inhabitants of this hamlet shall see. For, verily, if I should rent what are known as first run and other costly Feature films, then of a truth would my cash register lose some of its beautiful bell tones."

So it came to pass that Knowitall refused to listen to the demands of his congregation to show plays that were advertised and would hear none of their complaints about the condition of his theatre or such pictures as he exhibited.

Now within this hamlet lived a stripling who was the subject of much discussion, for he was cross-eyed. And some said it was good luck to have him look at one, but Knowital swore a great oath whenever he did meet yon stripling, and did call him "hard luck" and other harsh names. And he did order the stripling to remain into the outer darkness and to never come into his movie house. For, said Knowital, "of a truth I cannot tell whether thou art looking at the films or down thy nose in derision of what I am showing. Out upon thee into outer darkness where thou cans't gnash thy teeth or gum it if thy teeth are gone."

So the stripling went into the woods and wept bitterly and did cry with a loud voice, "Ah, woe is me —yea thrice is my backup. Now will I have my vengeance. Ye gods, but I will put that grafting sonavagun into the pastnumber class. For my name is ISSER, and I will run true to form. Yea, I, even I will open a movie in my father's house, and then will I let him have his ace and king, but I will play a JOKER, likewise an L-KO'S and a NESTORS. Yea, verily, I will have the BLUEBIRDS and the BUTTERFLY and other of the good stuff which the UNIVERSAL tribe are putting over. Even then will I let that mighty organization help me "put it over" this low-life of a Knowitall—by using all the stunts and advertising helps which the Universal bunch are only too tickled to give me without price, yea, without even a farthing of cost to me."

So it came to pass that Isser called for his camel and did hie himself into the large and beautiful city, and when he had come to the street called Broadway, he did find the number of 1600 and entered therein. And he was within for a span of time, and when he came forth his face was as lighted as an angel's at the first night's performance of the show he is backing for love of a buxum dame. Then was he busy as a red-shirted Irishman pacing a bull in a twenty-acre lot. Yea, verily, he hardly took time to eat thereof of beans and ham which the beautiful hand-painted damsel dids't scale dexteriously before him. Yea, so busy was he that even the sound of the sinkers falling into his empty stomach failed of his notice—so he surely was some busy.

Then on the third day did the lights burst forth in splendor before his movie. And, lo, there were many and strange banners and posters and ads in the papers and wondrous eye-catching stunts and small gifts. And the people of the hamlet said, "Behold, the magi are here. Let us then go up and see what strange thing has come to pass." And they did go and came forth later with huge and expansive looks of pleasure. Also did they herald the glad tidings among the slackers. Yea, more popular did the place become than even the famous corner where damsels pass on a windy day. Then Knowital tore his hair and dids't try to pull back the passing people with other pictures, saying in bleating tones, "Come, ye blessed, come and see the makings of other houses than the Universal."

But the people would have none of him, for they reasoned among themselves, "If this offal from a bull thinks that we all come from Marblehead, Mass., and don't know real leading reels when we see them, he has more bones in his skull than even we suspected." So they would have none of his substitution.

And, behold, in six months Isser was strutting around in fine raiment and purple, while Knowital was seen at the gates of the city with but one suspender. For of such is the power of the advertising features back of the pictures which the Universal put out that they have a pulling power unto the third and fourth generation.

And, ye of little faith, take unto yourselves the lesson as taught by Isser and go thou and do likewise.

"Dry Goods AND Damp Deeds"

L—KO KOMEDY, featuring Phil Dunham in Two Reels of foolishness. Directed by Vin Moore, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone.

CAST.

A Wayfarer	Phil Dunham
Beautiful Sewing Girl	Lucille Hutton
I. M. Shoddy	Charles Inslee
Forelady	Merta Sterling

DRY GOODS AND DAMP DEEDS" turns Phil Dunham loose in a dry goods emporium and leaves him to do his worst there, ably supported by Lucille Hutton, Chas Inslee and Merta Sterling. The two reels of alternate dryness and dampness were directed by Vin Moore, under supervision, as usual of the Director General of L-Ko, J. B. Blystone.

Phil arrives in town on the top of a freight car, dressed in an autoist's outfit. He sees I. M. Shoddy, the proprietor of the dry goods store, persecuting a defenceless sewing girl, and trying to persuade her to enter his car. Phil rescues her and follows her to Shoddy's store, where she works. She gives him an orange as a souvenir, and he carefully saves a piece of the peel. He waits outside, and through the window sees the shadow of Shoddy undressing a wax model. He rushes into the store, and after explanations, is given the position of porter. He meets the beautiful sewing girl, but Merta, the forelady, falls in love with him, and makes it hard for him to meet the girl. Phil has all sorts of adventures in the store. He gives away the goods, and a policeman is called who chases him. He pretends to be a model, and escapes. He waters the flowers on a lady's hat, and finally, when a customer gives him her baby to hold, he puts the child in the cash basket, and swings it to the bundle girl.

He sees a girl putting stockings for display upon a dummy, and is shocked, and later when a real customer is trying on stockings, Phil gets in wrong again by thinking her a dummy. A veiled woman comes in. Phil pursues her, and when he finds she is colored, he faints. At last he finds Lucille in the sewing-room, and plays her a serenade on the sleeve-board. Shoddy has been watching him, and now he enters, knocks Phil out, and carries the girl to the cellar. He ties her to a pillar, and turns on the water. Phil follows and there is a desperate fight. Lucille is drowning, and though Phil tries all sorts of ruses, he cannot manage to get into the cellar to rescue her. At last he is thrown out of the window, and falls through a manhole into the flooded cellar, and finds himself with Lucille at last.

L-Komiums

VIN MOORE, director for Phil Dunham with the L-Ko Kompany, has finished a two-reel comedy which he declares has Belasco shouting for mercy. The working titles is "Chicken Chased and Henpecked."

J. G. Blystone, director-general of L-Ko Komedies, after a few days' vacation spent at Arrowhead Inn, is again at work, this time on a circus picture.

L-Ko has a new director—Bob MacKenzie, who has appeared as the heavy in a number of Dan Russell stories, has been given his own company, and will produce comedies featuring himself as comedian. Normand Taurog will be his co-director. The last picture in which MacKenzie appeared was directed by Noel and Dick Smith, and MacKenzie was put through a series of apparent accidents in the taking of the picture which would have given the strongest man a touch of nervous prostration, but the most exciting scene of all was one which the directors had not scheduled. They supposed, of course, that MacKenzie knew how to drive a Ford.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

For the Week of June 18, 1917

A good feature is a fine business proposition in its place—but your patrons don't want all features any more than you want fish at every meal. Variety is the spice of life, whether it's eating or picture-seeing. Isn't that so? Then WHY DON'T YOU GIVE A VARIETY PROGRAM TO YOUR PATRONS? Variety is the first, last and middle name of the Universal Program. It's the kind of Program the people like, because they can slide into a seat any time convenient to them and know that they won't leap into the middle or tail-end of a feature. Get the point? THEN, ACT!

Here are specials that are all cream. They cost a slight advance, just as cream costs more than milk. And they are worth the little extra because they are money magnets that make the nimble coins change from the crowds' pockets to your cashbox. They can be booked separately, if desired.

When you book the complete Universal Program you get two kinds of punches for your show: the "specials and "regular." These "regular" one- two- and three-reel dramatic and comedy subjects are brilliant and powerful, and don't you make any mistake of thinking otherwise. They can be booked separately, if desired.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,

Gentlemen—I have contemplated writing you a letter complimenting you and your superior productions for some time and have at last decided the opportune time has arrived.

One year ago April first I established a Bluebird day in my house, and on every Saturday since that time I have shown a Bluebird photoplay to a steady increase of business; in fact, patrons inquire if there aren't to be more shown during the week.

I certainly compliment you on the great improvement in your productions. Every new picture shows marked improvement.

I find, first of all, you are sure you have a good story to work with; second, you do not mis-cast your direction; localities, atmosphere, lighting, settings and details are all wonderfully well done. I don't believe I am complimenting you too highly when I say your photoplays are supreme, to say the least they get the money.

LILLIAN K. COLLINS,

"THE HUNTED MAN."

Imp Drama.
Written by Harvey Gates.
Produced by John McDermott.

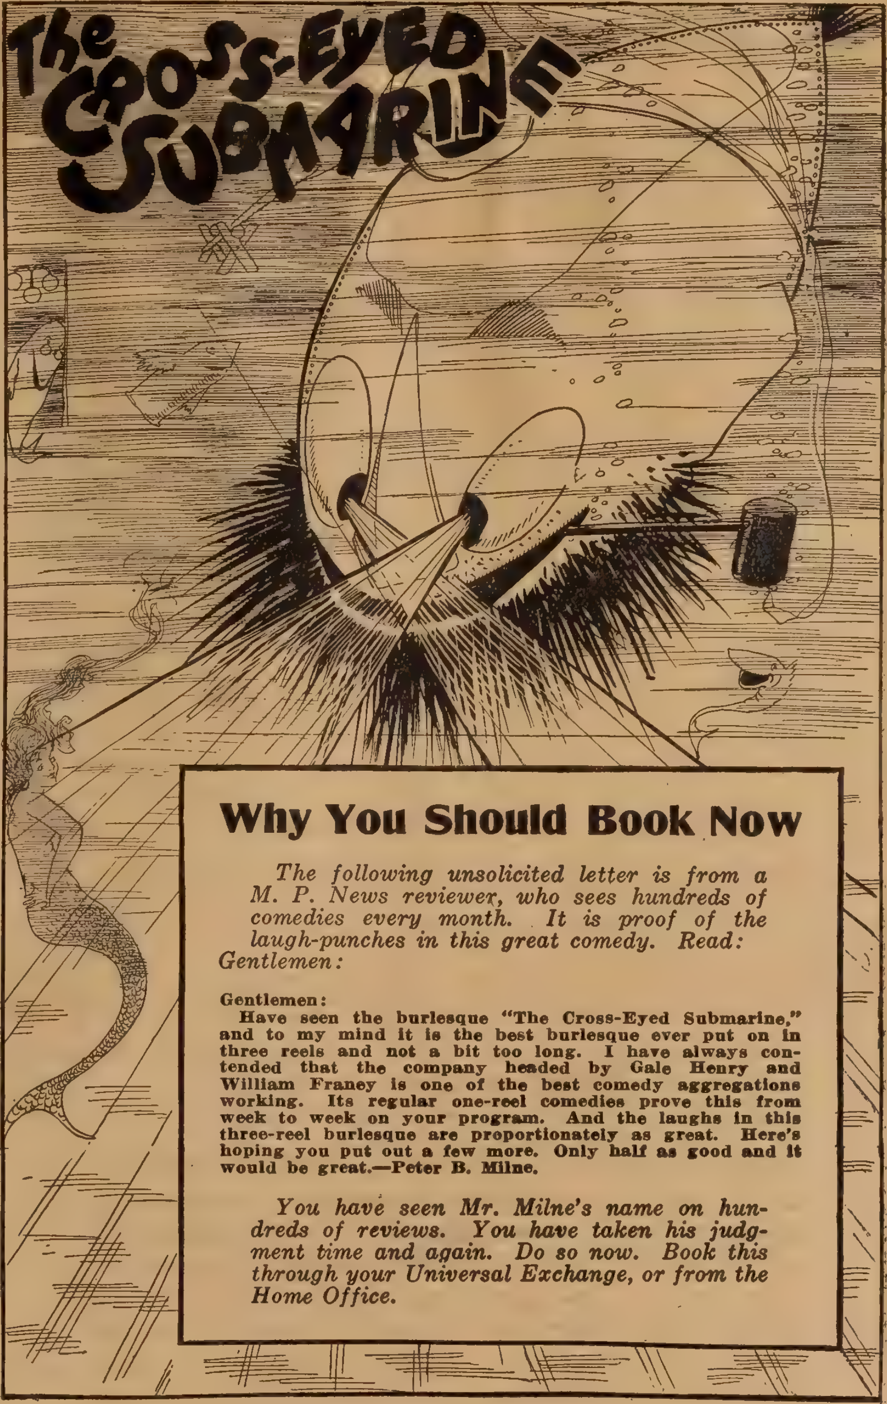
CAST.
Gilder	Lee Hill
His Wife	Mignon Anderson
His Child	Gertrude Messenger
Detective	Malcolm Blevins

Gilder, a clerk, is charged with embezzlement, and put in jail. He manages to escape and returns to see his wife and child. He finds a note from her saying that she has gone with another man, a former friend. He is leaving with vengeance in his heart, when stopped by the detective. He tells him that he can go free, if he will reveal the hiding-place of the money. He does so. His wife then rushes into the room, telling Gilder that it is all a trick, and that the detectives have forced her to write the note. He goes into the bedroom with her, and breaks down beside the child's crib. The phone rings, and the detective learns that they have found the money and with it the president of the bank, who has used Gilder as his tool. The detective informs Gilder, and advises him to tell the State all he knows, and that he will probably be freed.

"SUPERSTITIOUS CHINA."

Powers Dorsey Educational Split Reel

Nearly all merchandise in China is carried by water, as there are few other highways. The interior commercial capital of the province of Sechuan, called Chuugking, is set upon high ground overlooking two rivers. This province has eighty million inhabitants, and adjoins Thibet, at the head of the Yangtze river. We see the gates of the city, and then the public laundries, where the Chinese use the primitive method of beating the clothes against the rocks. We see a public lamentation over a death. The Chinese not only mourn their dead but worship their spirits. White is the mourning color. We see the ancient and universal "Feast of All Souls" being celebrated in the city of Chungking. The Chinese believe that everything in nature, whether animate or inanimate, possesses a soul. Therefore they burn quantities of paper money on that day, so that the souls of the dead may be supplied with the soul of the money. The American Consulate strikes a modern note. We see a rich man being carried in a Sedan chair through the streets.



Why You Should Book Now

The following unsolicited letter is from a M. P. News reviewer, who sees hundreds of comedies every month. It is proof of the laugh-punches in this great comedy. Read:
Gentlemen:

Gentlemen:
Have seen the burlesque "The Cross-Eyed Submarine," and to my mind it is the best burlesque ever put on in three reels and not a bit too long. I have always contended that the company headed by Gale Henry and William Franey is one of the best comedy aggregations working. Its regular one-reel comedies prove this from week to week on your program. And the laughs in this three-reel burlesque are proportionately as great. Here's hoping you put out a few more. Only half as good and it would be great.—Peter B. Milne.

You have seen Mr. Milne's name on hundreds of reviews. You have taken his judgment time and again. Do so now. Book this through your Universal Exchange, or from the Home Office.

Bess	Marcia Moore
Her Mother	Sylvia Ashton

Billy buys a conjuring outfit from a showman, and invites the guests to a show. Charles bribes a small boy to steal the hat which he has hidden in the trick box. Billy searches for another, and grabs one off a woman's head. Her wig comes with it. This is Bess's mother. The boys from the city arrive and tell the guests that Billy is a waiter. They all chase him. He takes refuge in mother's room. She is hiding her bald head, and he promises to return her wig and say nothing, if she will support what he says. When they all break in, the mother has to offer her daughter's hand to Billy to make him keep her secret. But Charles and the boys are outside the window. They pull him through it and dump him in the lake. Then Charles takes Bess in his arms.

"SIMPLE SAPHO."

Joker Comedy—Written by Jack Cunningham.
Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

The Vampire	Gale Henry
The Country Youth	Jack Dill
The Artist	Milton Sims

Gale sells hot dogs and is a potential vampire. An artist sees her and thinks that she is good material for caricature. He lures her to Paris with a roll of bills. The country youth says good-by to his sweetheart, and goes to the city. He meets Gale, who proceeds to vamp him to a finish. She then leaves the artist for whom she is posing, and leaves with the poet. But she deserts him for a man of wealth. He gives a masked ball for her. Jack is there as a shepherd, and the crowd makes fun of him. He falls for Gale, and places her in a fountain which is not running. When the crowd rushes to her in admiration, Jack is jealous and turns on the water. Gale faints. Jack then carries her to his home, up flight after flight of stairs. He is nearly exhausted, when her mask falls off. He drops her, and runs, she after him, right out into the country, where he grabs his sweetheart and marries her at once, to save himself from Gale.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE
Issue No. 22.

The reel starts with a demonstration of the new farm tractors which perform more work in an hour than the old types in a day. A new invention is a telephone recorder, for taking down accurately all calls received during the absence of the subscriber. The necessity of thorough physical examination every so often, is urged by a demonstration of the research done by the Life Extension Institute in New York City. Defects are revealed in almost every person examined, which gives them a chance to counteract them in time.

Preparedness is touched upon by views of the making of enormous pieces of ordnance in the gunshops of Uncle Sam, and the reel closes with a miracle in mud by Willie Hopkins, the Screen Magazine's animated sculpture artist, called "Don't be a Food Hog."

BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS

These are stirring times for America. History is being made. On June 5th the manhood of this great, big country will write an immense Roll of Honor. Does it spell O-P-P-O-R-T-U-N-I-T-Y to you? Your patrons are far more interested in these preparedness and war subjects than they are in the biggest majority of "thrillers." Why? Because in a short while their sons will march to meet conditions very much like those told of in the following four stories:

"The Eagle's Wings" This play has received the endorsement of highest officials in Washington. It has also received a pledge of support from the D. A. R., through their National president. It is far above any silly, weak sham battle, studio "war" picture.

Rupert Julian, Ella Hall and Kingsley Benedict in "THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS," from the world-famous novel, "We Are French." A five-reel Bluebird story that sways the patriotic emotions of the audience and thrills them with a force that they seldom feel.

Harry Carey and Edith Johnson in "BEHIND THE LINES," a compelling and timely picture that faithfully reproduces the actual conditions along the Mexican Border. It abounds with intrigue, love and adventure. It entrances and excites the emotions through its true atmosphere.

Allen Holubar in "TREASON," with Lois Wilson and Joseph Girard. These three bend their inexhaustible energies to get this true lesson in patriotism over. And they do get it over with a strength and pep that is seldom shown. Its intense scenes and convincing pictures of modern warfare arouse the emotions of movie fans to their very depths.

SPECIAL POSTERS, HERALDS AND ADVERTISING PROPS

Your patrons will compliment you on these plays. They'll turn out in "standing room only" crowds. Your local patriotic associations and Boy Scouts will be glad to co-operate with you to make these plays a success in your town. Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

Jack Mulhall in "The Fire of Youth." With Dona Moon and Alfred Allen. Seventh Butterfly Picture. Directed by Elmer Clifton. Released June 18. Big Jim Gorman was an indulgent father, too much so, he sometimes thought, for his son Jack's good. It seemed to him that Jack was good for nothing but to spend money and run his racing car into fruit stands and other forms of trouble. Big Jim was a partner in an opal mine concern, located on Calabas Island, and he had a shrewd suspicion that his superintendent was robbing him. He wanted to send Jack to investigate, but he was afraid the boy was a mollycoddle and couldn't make good. However, Jack got into a row in a cabaret and cleaned up the bunch of roughnecks. Big Jim heard about it, and decided Jack would do, after all. Jack's adventures on the island are about as thrilling as anything you have ever seen on the screen. Just to let you into a secret we'll tell you that Dona is on the island—and when you've seen her you'll know that Jack was fighting for something besides his dad's property. It's a corking Butterfly, and when you book it, boost it.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran with Edith Roberts in "Jilted In Jail." One Reel Nestor Comedy. Directed by Roy Clements. Released June 18. Take two extremely popular funny fellows, one very pretty girl, a capable cast, a strong comedy plot, dashing, swinging direction, beautiful photography and ingenious settings—mix in the order named and the result will be a particularly pleasing entertainment—if—it bears the Nestor brand. Eddie and Edith want to get married, but Edith's papa, who is chief of police, prefers Lee, a member of the force. Lee captures a minister and two suspects (one of whom is Edith in boy's clothes—oh, boy!) and puts them together in a cell. When papa arrives to look the prisoners over he discovers who they are, and also that the minister has performed a ceremony more binding than a jail sentence. And there you are. Book it.

Tina Marshall in "The Brand of Hate." Three Reel Gold Seal Melodrama. Directed by Edwin Stevens. Released June 19. It all began because Tina's father was too stingy to repair the tenements that brought him a large share of his income. One day, while inspecting them, a fire broke out and he paid for his meanness with his life. Shortly after Tina was born, and there, on her face, was a flaming mark of a hand. In time it passed away, recurring only when Tina excited herself. When she learned the tragic story of the tenements she set about improving those her father left to her (her mother having died at Tina's birth), and employed a young architect who promptly fell in love with her. Separated through a misunderstanding, Tina flies into a rage and the "brand of hate" returns—to stay. How this terrible affliction is conquered by love makes a big picture that your patrons will enjoy to the limit.

Gretchen Lederer and Wm. V. Mong in "Bartered Youth." Two Reel Laemmle Emotional Drama. Directed by Wm. V. Mong. Released June 20. Wm. Mong makes a most distinguished looking elderly senator, and Gretchen fell for his good looks and his money, but she didn't think the old gentleman would live long. When she found her youth responding to the call of a younger man, she planned to run away with him. But unfortunately the younger man met a younger woman, and, well—write your own ticket. A big and powerful one-reel drama that holds the attention and grips in the way the fans love. A stronger picture than many a longer subject on competitive programs.

Gentlemen:—

We are taking the liberty of writing you in regard to our second run of "L I B E R T Y". She played to CAPACITY BUSINESS ON THE FIRST RUN and the SECOND RUN IS BREAKING ALL PAST RECORDS. She is a winner. I just wish you could hear the house roar when she started on the screen. My advice to Brother Exhibitors is to book liverty again. This is my first and one time that I ever booked any feature for a second run. I am enclosing post card of our house with my operator standing to my left. The big sign that you see in the lobby was hauled over town on a wagon for the first night's show.

Hoping that the Universal will make more fiction with the drawing power of "LIBERTY", we remain,

Very truly yours,

AND The PLAY is "LIBERTY"

Do you get the full significance of what Mr. Clayton means when he says that "LIBERTY" "SECOND RUN IS BREAKING ALL PAST RECORDS?" The INSIDE information is what others are getting out of a picture—just how it is cashing in for the other exhibitor. Do you agree? Then read the letter over again.

MARIE WALCAMP and EDDIE POLO put into "LIBERTY" a fervent, patriotic spirit for the sake of arousing intense patriotism and so help Uncle Sam. The box office records of Exhibitors prove that they succeeded. Not only for the big returns that you will get by showing "LIBERTY"—but you owe it to your country to show this picture. You would only be doing your bit if you "papered" your entire house to lay this big lesson of patriotism before your patrons. Book it REPEAT and you will smash every box office record that you ever made. Wire or write your nearest Universal Exchange, or to

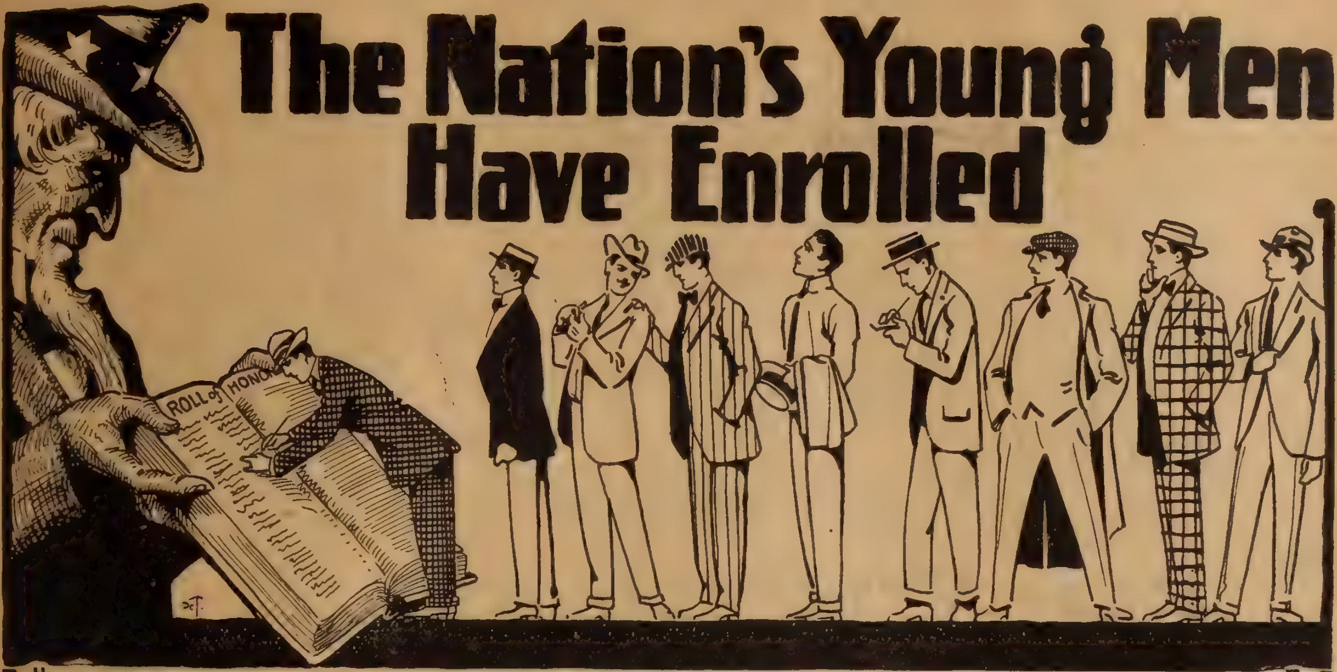
The Nation's Young Men Have Enrolled



Which means even greater interest in BLUEBIRD Preparedness Films

The bugles have sounded: "TO ARMS!" The manhood of the country has buckled on the sabre; caught up guns; has stepped aboard battleships. Every man, woman and child that is left at home is keenly interested in PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS. Crowds flock to the theatres that are showing the pictures they want to see. Are you getting the crowds through BLUEBIRD PREPAREDNESS PRODUCTIONS—or playing to a poorly filled house by running pictures after your own ideas? Show the people what they want to see and they will show you what you want to see—the color of their money. Here are the big four that get the money. Book them immediately—while they are timely and hot.

"The Eagle's Wings" FEATURING HERBERT RAWLINSON, SUPPORTED BY VOLA SMITH, GRACE CARLISLE AND CHARLES MAILES. The most unusual picture on the market to-day. An intense and absorbing story presented in the most dramatic form. It deals with present conditions, and with industrial preparedness. It is as far beyond the jingo pictures with their fake and sham battles and studio atmosphere as it is possible to imagine. It is a real picture for real Americans, and that is why it is playing to repeat bookings and capacity houses everywhere.

"The Bugler of Algiers" FEATURING RUPERT JULIAN, ELLA HALL, WITH KINGSLEY BENEDICT. Produced by Rupert Julian from the famous novel "We Are French," by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. Five-reel BLUEBIRD. An inspiring picture of patriotism that is particularly acceptable at this time. No living American can see this great production without leaving the theatre a better man than when he entered. Yet it does not preach; it simply grips and convinces. A picture you should book immediately.

"Behind the Lines" HARRY CAREY in "Behind the Lines," supported by Edith Johnson, directed by Henry McRae, constitutes a fascinating entertainment of war, political intrigue, romance and adventure. It is a thrilling portrayal of present-day conditions, and has played to capacity houses wherever shown. A BLUEBIRD with a big punch.

"Treason" FEATURING ALLEN HOLUBAR, LOIS WILSON, JOE GIRARD AND DOROTHY DAVENPORT. Written by Lee Weigert—five stirring reels, produced by Allen Holubar. A big production with some tremendous war scenes and the most intense situation. A picture that will crowd your house for more than one showing.

Universal Film Company, New York City.

Dear Mr. Gulick:—I am desired by the Committee to express to the Universal Company the pleasure they have had in recommending to their members in various localities and their branches throughout the country not to miss seeing "A Kentucky Cinderella," which you forwarded for their private viewing last week. They consider it one of the best pictures of the kind which they have seen, full of interest and genuine amusement, without a dull moment from start to finish. It is a pleasure to the committee at all times to see pictures such as this, and others which you have submitted to them, and by their definite recommendation and notification to their members to actively encourage and support such high class productions.

Yours very truly,
FRANK LASCELLES, Director of the Photoplay League.

Read the names of the Advisory Committee, Mr. Exhibitor. Note what prominent names are represented there. Don't you suppose that the wonderful actor and actress, Mr. E. H. Sothern and Miss Julia Marlowe, know what they are doing when they endorse a play? Don't you think that the famous artist, Mr. Charles Dana Gibson, and his wife know what they are saying when they endorse a play? Of course, they do. And the answer to you is to "Start a Bluebird Day"

Book the pictures that get the endorsement of the people whose encouragement is worth having. Show the pictures that the people want to see, because they are highest in quality, in story, production and acting—the marvelous BLUEBIRDS.

GOOD STUFF! Says "Universal Sam"

I'VE always been set against political regulation of this here business. Compared with Politics and Business, Oil and Water are a highly successful combination. BUT—

Up in Toronto, a chap named Robert C. Newman, has taken a slam at the film hogs that tickles me clear down to my number twelve tootsies. Said Robert C. Newman holds down the job of Chief Provincial Inspector, which carries with it the right to say what's what so far as the showing of films in his neck of the country is concerned.

Newman must have got sorter riled at the doings of the film butchers, because the other day he up and notified all exhibitors that, commencing now and continuing henceforth and hereafter, IT WOULD BE UNLAWFUL TO RUN FILM FASTER THAN FIFTEEN MINUTES TO THE REEL!

To the everlasting credit of the exhibitors in the province, there have been mighty few protests against this rule. To the one or two exhibitors who did let out a holler, Newman is said to have murmured gently to wit and as follows:

"Listen, friends. There are two reasons why you can no longer work your projection machines like rapid fire guns. Reason No. 1, is that it gives the fans a bum show for good money. Reason No. 2 is that it makes possible the jumping and jamming of film which, in turn, is liable to cause a fire.

"Therefore, you will kindly beat it home and instruct your film chauffeurs to run their machines at a 'Safety First' speed. Being naturally humane and kind-hearted by disposition, I hate to tell you what's a-coming to the first guy who gets gay with this rule. So let's talk about something more pleasant—the U-boat campaign, for instance."

Again I rise to remark that I'm plumb set against political regulation of this business. At the same time, more power to your right arm, Brother Newman!

Here's The Girl That Tames Trains

By Marjorie Howard

HAVE you ever stood close to the tracks when a great Mogul tore past with about ten cars behind it? The suction of the draft it made almost pulled you off your feet, didn't it? And you had an impression of supreme, irresistible power, which was a wholesome corrective to excessive conceit and self-confidence. Can you imagine yourself on terms of familiarity with such a mighty mass of mechanism? Dropping into the cab in a friendly manner to play with the throttle or the whistle, or any other part of its anatomy which might appeal to you? Controlling its gigantic bulk and terrific speed, making the whole immense thing obey you as if it were no more formidable than a little Ford car?

Could you, by the greatest stretch of imagination, picture yourself taking liberties with the monster—jumping playfully down on it from the high bank of a cut through which it was passing—dropping onto it from a bridge, or anything like that? Of course you couldn't, if you are a normal person. And really, one would have to be excessively abnormal to do such things.

Well, then Helen Gibson must be a real anomaly, for she simply revels in them. She hasn't any more respect for the biggest locomotive ever made than she has for a kitten that is so new its eyes aren't open. As a mere child she was on terms of intimacy with air-brakes and steam-gauges. At nine years old she was accustomed to taking long trips with her father in his engine. She learned from the firemen how to bank fires and how to take on water. The telegraph operator near her home was delighted to teach her the Morse code and make her an expert telegrapher. There wasn't anything connected with the running of a railroad with which Helen had not a speaking acquaintance, at least, by the time she was twelve years old.

Then her parents migrated to California, and Helen's ranch life began. Probably her first horse seemed to her like a sort of unreliable locomotive, which did not respond invariably in the same way as the mechanism did, but had ideas and intentions of its own. If so, she very soon abandoned this idea, and all the horses on the place became her obedient slaves as the locomotives had been. She began looking for new worlds to conquer. If she heard of a horse with a bad reputation in the neighborhood, she could not be happy until she had mastered it. The cowboys declared that she was a sure enough wizard with horses. Witch is the feminine, of course, but "witch" means something quite different. Little by little her reputation as a bronco buster grew, and she drifted naturally into the rodeo game, going about the country giving exhibitions of her skill and daring at those exhibi-

"The Black Mantilla"

Two scenes from this striking Gold Seal.

A REX INGRAM in three reels," was the verdict of the Universal projection-room when this Gold Seal, written and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, was run there for the first time. A most dramatic story is acted by an admirably chosen cast, headed by Claire McDowell, who is supremely fitted for such colorful, temperamental roles as that of the "Senorita Shrew" of the Mexican village. Little Lena Baskette's name does not appear in the list of players, but she has an effective bit in the dancing contest which forms one of the artistic scenes of this highly colored little melodrama. An outline of the story, of course, gives no idea of the beauty of the settings, the lighting effects, and the wealth of telling details with which the plot is developed.

The villagers called Marachita "The Senorita Shrew," but to Juan she was a saint in disguise. He carried her clothes back and forth, for she was the washerwoman of the village, and silently adored her. Juan carved wooden images, and had carved a small model of Marachita Huanto of the Ruales, the most dashing caballero in the State, was loved by both Marachita and Guella, daughter of the tortilla-maker, and Marachita's only rival in Poldique. Trouble was stirred up when Huanto presented Guella's mother with a black lace mantilla, because of her wonderful tortillas. The old woman, as soon as Huanto was out of sight, told Guella to put the mantilla on so that people would think Huanto had given it to her.

Marachita, that night at a fete, saw the mantilla. Fury blazed in her eyes; she competed with Guella in dancing and easily outshone. When she left the crowd, Juan followed her. He cringed beneath her wrath, while she sneered and told him if he would get her a mantilla finer than Guella's she would be his sweetheart.

Juan remembered the words of a tourist, who looking at a picture in the Mission, had remarked that it could be sold anywhere for several hundred dollars. He promised Marachita that in three days she should have a mantilla, finer than Poldique had seen. That night he cut away the picture and hastened to Calino to sell it.

Next morning the Angelus failed to greet the rising sun; the people could not fathom the mystery, until they were informed by the Padre of the theft. Marachita quickly told them that Juan had stolen it to buy her a mantilla. Knowing that Juan would have to return through the pass, three men went to wait for him.

Juan soon pawned the picture for a beautiful mantilla and ten pesos, which he intended to put on the shrine before the virgin as he returned to Poldique.

It was three days later when Juan came to the little shrine, weary and famished. As he knelt to put the money on the shrine, the waiting men approached and one of them ran his dagger through him.

Huanto was due again that day in San Poldique. As he rode along through the pass, he came across the body of Juan. A buzzard cast its shadow upon it. Huanto saw the mantilla, which he tore from Juan's hand, picked up the money, and started on his way again.

The men told of the death of Juan. Marachita was not even interested. Soon Huanto rode in and stopped at Marachita's hut. She told him that having given Guella the mantilla, he had no time to bother with her. Huanto laughed, delighted with her jealousy, and then told the truth about the mantilla. Guella, from her house, saw the two, and was furious. Huanto offered the mantilla Juan had bought to Marachita and kissed her. As he did so, the shadow of a buzzard hovered over them. Exclaiming, "You, the mantilla, and the coins are all accursed!" he left her. She slowly drew off the mantilla, and, hanging it beside her door, went into her house.

IBSEN on the screen! Bluebird Photoplays presents the picturized version of his famous play, "A Doll's House," from a script by Mrs. E. M. Ingleton. The production was made by Joseph De Grasse, with Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell and Lon Chaney in the roles made famous by many celebrated actors of the legitimated stage. Mr. De Grasse is a student of Ibsen's plays, and has long wished to produce this one, which he felt sure would offer a splendid opportunity for the emotional talents of Dorothy Phillips. The version of the classic has won high praise and added to the reputation which she is rapidly building. Here is an outline of the well-known story:

Nora is the wife of Torvald Helmer. They have three children, named Ivar, Emmy and Bob, and they live in a flat in Christiania. It is Christmas Eve, and they are very happy, for Torvald has been appointed manager of the Joint Exchange Bank, his duties to begin with the New Year.

In the first year of their marriage, Nora and Torvald had been very poor. Torvald had failed in health, and the doctor had said that the only way to save his life was to take him to sunny Italy. There had been no money, and Nora, in desperation, had borrowed on a note from Nils Krogstad, a widower with children, who was employed in the Joint Stock Bank. They had gone to Italy, and Torvald's life had been saved. Torval thought th money ha been loaned b Nora's fathe who had died. All through the eig years of their married life Nora h secretly worked and saved to pay t note on which she had forged h father's name.

Torvald never takes Nora serious to him she is only a doll wife, wh he loves, and who can furnish h with amusement after his work.

lable outburst. He tells her how he has loved her secretly, and then she cannot speak.

Krogstad is discharged and writes a letter to Torvald, divulging all. He drops the letter in the Helmer letter-box in the hall, of which Torvald has the key. Nora, desperate, contemplates suicide.

Mrs. Linden discovers that Krogstad holds the note. She promises to help Nora and goes to Krogstad. She had loved him in her youth, but had married Linden because he was rich, and she had a mother and two brothers to look after. Their former relations are renewed, and Krogstad repents having put the letter in the box. Mrs. Linden says it is better for Torvald to know all. In the meantime Nora has been hiding her anxiety in her efforts to please Torvald and keep him away from the letter-box. They go to a ball in the flat above, at which Nora, in the costume of a Capri peasant, dances the tarantella, which Torvald has taught her. At last, flushed and excited, they return, and Nora is unable to prevent Torvald from going to the letter-box. There are many letters, and on top lies a card with a black cross on it. Torvald opens two or three which refer to business matters, and then opens the Krogstad letter, reading it first in surprise, and later in anger. Enraged, he turns on Nora, telling her that she has disgraced his family by forging her father's name. He opens another letter and immediately his manner changes. All is well now, Krogstad has repented and has sent the note. His reputation will be saved, and he must protect his little wife more than ever Nora tells her plan to obtain a position for Mrs. Linden.

Nora and Torvald.

But a change has come over Nora. She asks him to sit down as she wishes to have a talk with him—the first since their marriage. She tells him that all her life, first by her father and then by him, she has been treated as a child. She married him and catertered to his whims, danced for him, sang for him, whenever he wished. She has been nothing but a doll, with whom he played. Her love for him is dead, she is going to leave him. She cannot live with a stranger.

Without another word she leaves, going out into the night. Torvald realizes at last that his doll's house is shattered, as he sits alone, until the dawn.

FOR HIS UNCLE SAM.

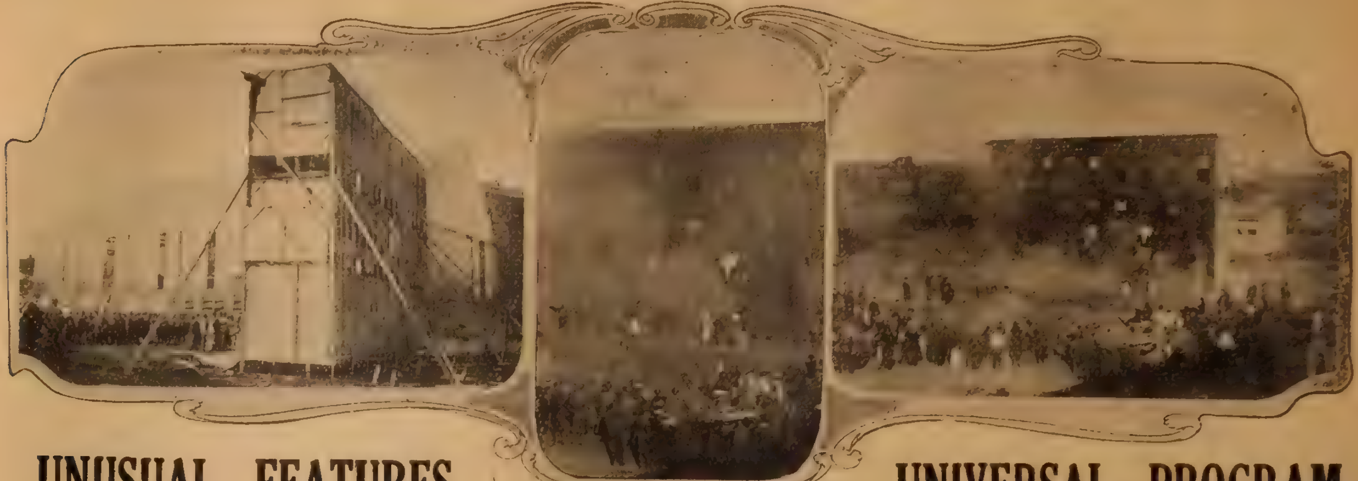
B. F. Reynolds, of the staff of the Universal Animated Weekly cameramen, rendered a service while on an assignment for the news pictorial the other day, both to the Government and the Southern Pacific Company. Reynolds had covered the arrival from San Francisco and departure for the Navy Yard at Philadelphia of several hundred Filipinos who had crossed the Pacific to enter the naval service.

Shortly after the train had pulled out, two of the Filipinos were discovered to have been left behind. The Southern Pacific's representative thereupon asked Reynolds if he would take the men in his automobile and try and meet the train at San Gabriel, the first stop, about twenty-five miles away.

The news pictorial man quickly piled the men in his car and started away at a fast clip, reaching San Gabriel a few minutes in advance of the train. There he turned over the men to the Government officer in charge.

ACTRESSES TRY ICE SKATES.

THE latest fad among the younger actresses at Universal City is ice skating, and it is easy to distinguish those who are enjoying the Southern California "indoor sport." Many of the girls never have skated in their lives, but they are determined to learn despite bumps and bruises from the falls. A few night ago Betty Schade, Priscilla Dean and Eileen Sedgwick attended the festivities at a rink in Los Angeles, and only the former had ever worn skates before, the result being that Miss Dean and Miss Sedgwick found themselves entertaining all of the others at the rink by their efforts to keep on their feet. Both girls appeared at the studios the following morning with a decided limp which did not dampen their ardor.



UNUSUAL FEATURES IN THE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

PROBABLY the most unusual feature of next week's program is the Gold Seal three reel drama called "The Brand of Hate," with Tina Marshall in the leading role, which was directed by Edwin Stevens. In the first reel of the play a tenement fire takes place, which was staged with extraordinary care, and at great expense by Director Stevens and his able assistant, Tom O'Neill, then Technical Director of the Fort Lee studio. The three cuts at the head of this page give a good idea of how the effect of a real tenement fire was produced. The cut in the centre shows the scene as it appears on the screen. Every spectator will be convinced that he is looking at a real building, wrapped in real flames and real cluods of choking smoke. Well, the flames and the smoke were actual, but the cuts on either side show that the tenement, so dramatically consumed, was only a "prop"—though certainly a giant of a prop at that. The picture at the left shows the back of the mammoth "set," and just how it was constructed. A stair inside made it possible for the tenement dwellers to mount to the windows, from which they were later rescued. At the right we see the whole scene "shot" from a sufficient distance to give away the construction of the building.

Lots of things in this fire scene were real besides the smoke and flames. Mr. Stevens tried the effect, in rehearsal, of supers made up to look like typical "Eastsiders," and abandoned the idea of using them, as they did not give the impression of reality he was after. He sent to the foreign quarter of the lower east side and hired over a hundred men and women, to come to the studio, just as they were, without "slicking up" or putting on their best clothes. So few of them spoke English, that it was difficult to make them understand what to do when they got there. Many of them, in their bewilderment at the strangeness of the scene, looked scared to death, which was just what the director wanted.

The fire department of Fort Lee volunteered their services for the "big scene," and the nets into which the rescued women jumped from their story windows, were held by real firemen, whose chief directed the operations exactly as if he had been bossing an unintentional conflagration.

And all this to secure realism for half a reel of a three reel photoplay! Certainly the Universal spares neither trouble nor money to maintain the program at the highest standard.

Other worth-while pictures for next week, are the Laemmle Drama, "Bartered Youth," a strong story with an unusual ending which features Gretchen Lederer and William Mong; "Helen Grayson's Strategy," a drama of society and crooks, featuring Irene Hunt, L. C. Shumway and Malcolm Blevins; a Victor Comedy, called "She Married Her Husband," with Matt Moore as a Hindu Swami and Jane Gail as his fiancee-wife; "Lone Larry" the Bison with Kingsley Benedict and Eileen Sedgwick in a story replete with the usual Bison thrills. "The Voice on the Wire" comes to an unexpected and yet thoroughly satisfactory end next week.

BISON Two-Reel Western Drama, with a dual role for Neal Hart in a story by Grace Helen Bailey, adapted for the screen by Chas. J. Wilson, Jr., and produced by George Marshall.

A VERY strong story has been handled in an unusual way by George Marshall in this Bison two-reeler, written by Grace Helen Bailey, and adapted for the screen by Charles Wilson Jr. Neal Hart plays a dual role, and the scenes in which he appears in both characters at once have been handled with remarkable skill, without resource to double exposure and camera tricks. Joe Rickson, for once in his screen career, appears as a perfectly respectable sheriff. The change must be a great one for him, especially as he does not have to take even one little risk in the part. Here is an outline of the intense plot:

The story opens with two men, Dick and Jerry Hatton, struggling in a dark cabin—Dick's face is registered to camera, while Jerry is kept in the shadow. With the remark "I reckon you won't bust in on my game tonight!" Dick leaves Jerry bound to a chair. A short time later, Jerry escapes, but without facing camera, and rides off.

That night, Dick holds up a rancher at his home and in the struggle wounds him.

In the morning the rancher notifies the Sheriff and says that in the struggle he recognized the man to be Jerry Hatton. Accordingly the posse is sent out. Janice Mercer, the schoolteacher who lives with the Sheriff and his wife, is in love with Jerry. She sets off to warn him and says that they believe he shot the rancher, though she still trusts him. Jerry rides off and the posse after him. He reaches the cabin and warns Dick, who is not recognized, to get across the border. Then he rides off and is captured by the posse and taken to the jail. That night, Janice hears threats to lynch Jerry and, getting the keys from the Sheriff, aids him to escape. His escape is discovered and the posse again gives chase. The next morning Dick leaves the cabin, the posse get on his trail and while Jerry watches from the hilltop, he sees them shoot and kill Dick. The posse return to the town with the body, and Janice thinks it must be Jerry. At this moment, Jerry rides into the town and all are astonished. He clears up the mystery by explaining that Dick was his brother whom he had sent for in the hope that he could make him go straight. But as they all knew, he had failed. He relates to them the story of the struggle, and how Dick left him bound in the cabin. Janice is delighted at the outcome of affairs and Jerry embraces her as the picture fades.

"A Blissful Calamity"

VICTOR Two-Reel Society Comedy-Drama. Written by James Douglas and produced by James Heffron, with Fred Church and Fritzi Ridgeway in the leading roles. The story of the conversion of a woman hater.

Westie tries to escape from the party which includes so many girls.

Centre—The end of a perfect house party.

THE conversion of a woman hater is the theme of this amusing Victor comedy-drama, written by James Douglas, and produced by James Heffron, with Fred Church and Fritzi Ridgeway in the leads. It tells the story of a chap who was scared to death of girls, of his arrival at a house party, to which many of them had been secretly invited, of his ruse to avoid their ministrations, and of his final subjugation and his surprise at finding the operation such a pleasant one.

Mr. Westerfeldt made millions and then died, leaving his money to his wife and son. The son became known as Westie and was a great favorite in society, because of his money. The mothers chased after him for their daughters, the boys for their sisters, and the rest of the girls for themselves.

Some friends invited Westie to a supposedly stag affair, but many girls were there. When Westie discovered this fact, he tried in every way to escape from the house. Finally he decided to say he was engaged; and, asked who the girl might be, manufactured the name, "Annie Smith from Calliope Center." He thought there was no such girl and no such place. After this he enjoyed himself immensely. The host, however, came to the conclusion that Westie was lonesome and wired to Calliope Center to Annie Smith, asking her to spend the week-end with him and his wife.

Annie Smith was the editor of a small-town paper, and had become greatly interested in Westie through the numerous newspaper articles which she had read. Urged by her boss, for the benefit of the town paper, she consented to accept this sudden invitation.

Annie Smith was approaching the house when Westie bumped against her. She showed him the telegram, and together they planned that she should play the part of his fiancee. The host and the other guests insisted that Westie and his fiancee should be married right away, and so Westie wired to a friend to send a fellow to impersonate a minister. Annie, after some persuasion, consented to take part in the fake marriage.

A minister arrived, who failed to see why Westie nudged him and winked at him. Westie thought the man was a very good actor. After the ceremony, Westie watched his chance to sneak downstairs. He realized now that he really loved Annie and that she was the only girl for him. Pondering over the situation, he walked out to the veranda and met a man who handed him a note from the friend to whom he had wired for the fake minister. The note said, "This man will do the work all right." Westie was terrified, and woke up the host to ask if that was a real marriage. The host thought him crazy. Then Westie rushed to Annie's room and found her in bed. He wildly told her that it had been no fake ceremony, and added that for himself he couldn't say he was sorry, and before ducking under the bed-clothes she calmly remarked, "Well, don't expect me to be." He was stunned, and at the same time delighted.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS SALUTES.

THIS is a picure of the little Bluebird star, Dorothy Phillips, in the uniform of an infantryman of the United States army. She posed in this, with Brownie Vernon a sailor on the other side, and Priscilla Dean, dressed as Columbia, in the centre of the group of three of the prettiest girls in pictures. The picture was run as a trailer to help the sale of Liberty Bonds all through the country, wherever Universal or Bluebird pictures are shown, and had an unquestionable influence.

Miss Phillips is a Baltimore girl, and the South is noted for the virtues of loyalty and devotion to a cause. She is a sincere little patriot, and when she was asked to pose for this trailer, she was delighted with the opportunity to do anything, no matter how little, for her country. Though she is one of the busiest of all picture players, she willingly took time from her brief rest period to be fitted for the khaki uniform.

HER NEW NAME IS DONNA DREW.

WHEN Jack Mulhall's Butterfly Picture "The Flame of Youth" was shown in the Universal projection room, every one exclaimed "Why, he has a new leading lady!" Her name on the title which introduced her as the nymph of Calabas Island, was "Donna Moon," and she proved to be a very satisfactory personification of the nymph, Nadine. But "Moon" was not a name which seemed to suit the little slip of a dark-haired girl who bore it, and she was the first to agree that a change was advisable. A one-syllable surname, she decided, would go best with her pretty Christian name, of "Donna." She looked over the whole of her family history, hunting for some ancestor's cognomen, which she could borrow for her screen title.

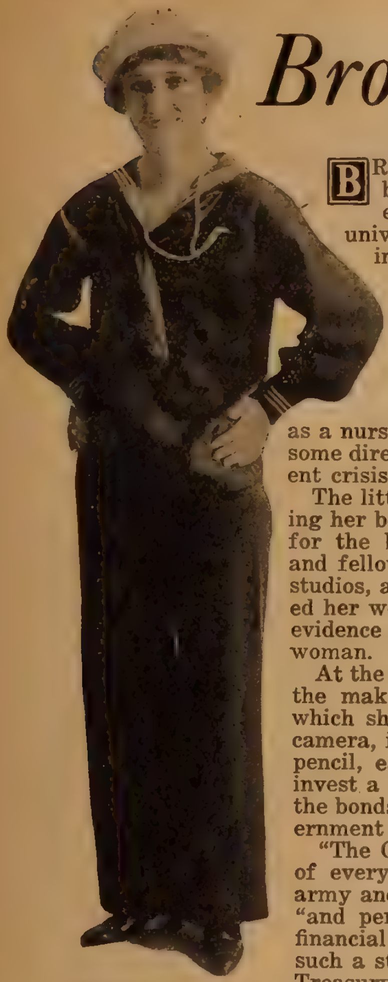
At last they came upon the name Drew. There is no better theatrical name in the country, and it goes most beautifully with Donna.

RUTH LOVES SHOES.

ALMOST the most interesting thing in the world for Ruth Stonehouse, just now, is footgear. This is because she is working on a five-reel feature, with the provisional title of "The Boots of Beatrice" under the direction of Louis Chaudet, of Nestor fame, and Beatrice has to have so many pairs of foot coverings of all sorts, that Miss Stonehouse says she is in danger, when once the picture is over, of adopting the fashion of going barefoot forever afterwards.

The little actress is just over five feet tall and she has a foot to correspond, wearing size 3-A. Many of the stores do not carry a full lines of goods in this size, as there is so little demand for them, and Miss Stonehouse has ransacked all the shoe stores in Los Angeles hunting for pretty models in boots, low shoes, and slippers, in black, white, brown and colors, which will fit her very slim and dainty foot. At all times Miss Stonehouse is immensely interested in the proper dressing of her feet.

Brownie Sells Liberty Bonds



Brownie Vernon.

BROWNIE VERNON, Bluebird star, is an ardent and enthusiastic advocate of universal training, and is working during her spare hours aiding in the sale of the Government issue of Liberty Bonds. Miss Vernon takes the position that even if an actress is unfitted by training to do her bit as a nurse, she can exert herself in some direction to assist in the present crisis.

The little actress therefore is doing her best to obtain subscriptions for the bonds among her friends and fellow players at the Bluebird studios, and those who have watched her work say that she is giving evidence of being a born saleswoman.

At the noon hour Miss Vernon, in the make-up of the photoplay in which she is appearing before the camera, is often seen with pad and pencil, earnestly urging others to invest a portion of their savings in the bonds which are to aid the Government in financing the war.

"The Government needs the help of every man and woman for its army and navy," said Miss Vernon, "and perhaps never before in the financial history of the nation has such a strain been placed upon the Treasury Department, to finance not only our own needs but to give support to our allies in the war with the Central Powers. If the Pacific Coast is to absorb $166,000,000 of the bonds, Los Angeles must take at least $20,000,000. The Liberty Loan is announced as a loan from a free people to bring freedom to the world, and it is backed by the credit of the United States and a liberty-loving people. Every American who loves America and can possibly spare any money from the actual necessities of life should make an investment for his or her country. The loan to the Government is unquestionably safe, and offers a plan for payments in installments. The investor knows that the money will be spent in the United States.

"I believe every actor and actress should come forward at this time. It may mean short rations on gasoline, or the other luxuries, but on the other hand the very life of our nation, our industry and ourselves is at stake."

POLO TRAINS RUTH CLIFFORD.

RUTH CLIFFORD, who is making a deep dent in the Bluebird program these days, and will soon be seen as the heroine in Hopkinson Smith's "Kentucky Cinderella," has come out strongly in favor of physical fitness for women.

"I know that I am not in the pink of condition myself," she says, "but that is a state of affairs which I am going to remedy as quickly as possible. It is all a matter of a little will-power, and some expert advice and assistance. Well, I can furnish the first myself, and for the second, I have gone, I think, to headquarters. I have prevailed upon Eddie Polo, the champion strong man and athlete, who is working in the new Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," to give me a series of lessons which will be of the greatest benefit to me."

Polo is delighted with his pupil, and says that if more of the actresses would follow her example they would find their physical condition much improved.

A NEW VAMPIRE.

BURNE-JONES, the English painter, little knew what he was doing when he revived the old legend of the vampire and painted her in all her native rapaciousness for one of the Royal Academy Exhibitions in London Rudyard Kipling came along and saw it, and wrote his famous description of the pictured creature, "A rag and a bone and a hank of hair," and lo and behold! a new type was classified! To call a woman a vampire, before all this happened, would have raised no image in the mind of the hearer, but we have not only adopted the noun, but have made a verb out of it as well. When a screen actress (for it is the motion picture which is, after all, responsible for the incorporation of the new term in the language of every day) declares that she wants to "vamp," the expression no longer causes the slightest comment. The natural occupation of a vampire is vamping, and she is only being true to her trade.

So motion pictures have their ingenues, their leads and their heavies, just as the "legitimate" does, and besides these, they now have their vampires, all in the day's work, just like that. Universal City has its vampires, too. The lates recruit to the ranks is Claire Du Brey, who has been hiding her natural vamping talents as leading lady for Harry Carey's Western company. De Grasse, the Bluebird director, saw the possibilities in her, and chose her to play a dance-hall variety in "Vengeance of the West." The cut shows Miss Du Brey in this character, but wait till you see her on the screen. Take it from us—he is some vampire!

Excellent war camp scene in "The Field of Honor."

The Heart of a Soldier-to-be.

BRAND WHITLOCK, our Minister to Belgium, whose work in the interests of the afflicted people has made his name famous, is the author of the Butterfly Picture, which he published some time ago in novel form, under the name, "The Field of Honor." The scene of the story is laid in the time of our own civil war and the succeeding years, and the title was kept as being thoroughly descriptive of the picture. Allen Holubar was entrusted with the production, and chose a fine cast, headed by Louise Lovely, who looks more than usually charming in the becoming hoopskirts of the period. The battle scenes are particularly interesting, in contrast with the present methods of warfare with which we are all more or less familiar through the official war pictures of the different belligerent countries. Here is the story in outline:

It is April of the year 1861. Wade Clayton, having left West Point, is settled as a lawyer in his Ohio birthplace. He is reading that the President will call for volunteers. Poole, who takes care of his office, and his partner are reading too. The boys outside, playing at war, throw a stone through the window. Wade goes out to remonstrate and sees Laura Sheldon, the prettiest girl in Ohio, laughing at them. He escorts her to her home, just across the way. Her mother does not approve of him, because his people are Southern. She favors George Baring, of an old Ohio family, who is very wealthy. Laura does not know which of the two young men she prefers.

George arrives, and Mrs. Sheldon is cordial to him. Wade says good-by to Laura, as he is on his way to the county seat to try his first big case. He is puzzled when she asks him not to go, but she will not explain. When he returns, ten days later, he finds that she has been married privately to Baring. She is just leaving the house, as he catches sight of her. She hangs her head, for she feels that she had treated him badly by not telling him of her intention.

Wade raises a company, and many of his friends join it, including Poole. George does not do so, but Laura shows plainly that she is disappointed. He asks her if she wishes him to go, and she says yes. He follows the others, and through Wade's influence he is made an officer. But he finds that he cannot recover from the shock of his first battle. He is nervous and distraught. He finally confesses to Wade that he is afraid of being afraid. Wade tells him to brace up. At the battle of Nashville, Baring entirely loses his nerve. He cowers in a ditch, while his men, left without a leader, falter and almost break. Wade sees this through his field glass. He gallops to the spot, rallies the men, and wins the charge. Poole has seen Baring's cowardice. He tells him that if he does not face the music he will shoot him. Baring tries to run away and Poole halts him with a bullet. He tells Wade what he has done, and Wade makes him promise never to tell Laura how Baring came to his death.

Wade is invalided home. He goes to Laura's and tells her his version of Baring's death. Laura's child, born soon after George went to war, is now almost three years old. He is taught to regard his father as his greatest hero. When peace comes, the men of the 66th who are left, come home. Poole is invited to Laura's, and tries to tell her the real story of Baring's death, but Wade will not permit it. He is devoted to Laura, but she will not marry him, as she is afraid that in that case Victor will not be true to his father's memory. Wade makes his home with Poole, who takes care of him. He sees Laura every day.

After seven years, Laura practically proposes to Wade herself, and he is more than delighted. They are so engrossed in each other, that they do not even realize it is raining in torrents and that the lightning is flashing ominously.

And while Laura remains at home, perturbed and depressed by the weather and different foreboding signs, George Baring, who has aged fearfully, comes to Wade's home, where he tells him that Poole made a bad job of his killing—he escaped through the lines wounded and went to Peru, where he has been until now—afraid to return. Wade paces back and forth and finally Baring asks him about his boy. Wade, with a shade of bitterness, tells him the child's ideal is bravery. Realizing that Wade has invested him with a personality which he couldn't have developed for himself, Baring knows he must go back to the grave, but this time to a real one. Wade, hearing this, hands him a revolver, but George draws away from it and the other tells him he knew he couldn't do it.

Laura's negro servant is at Wade's home playing checkers with his darky; he sees George, and immediately rushes home to tell Laura. She, with sudden determination. hurries across the street, but Wade keeps her out of the room until George has gone into an adjoining room. He tells George that he must tell Laura everything and make his own peace.

Laura, without being told, understands all, especially Wade's part of it, and thanks him for deceiving her. While they talk, the lightning still flashes, and in the midst of it a shot is heard. Wade finds George dead. He orders Poole to bury him that night, for none need know that Baring did not die upon the field of honor. Wade returns to Laura to tell her that it was only a ghost of fear, a spirit of the storm, that George died upon the battlefield. And looking at him with love, she asks him to take her to their home.

This is the story which has been worked out in the most careful detail by Allen Holubar, assisted by Louise Lovely, M. K. Wilson and Sidney Dean. Nothing which would give the correct atmosphere of the time of our civil war has been neglected. The rooms with their furnishings, the carriage, the costumes, the hairdressing of the women—every point has been supervised with skill and minute attention, and the result is as if we were looking at real scenes of the time, miraculously reproduced in some magic mirror. This care in production adds greatly to a story which is already unusually strong, and makes "The Field of Honor" one of the best Butterflies yet.

Before the call to war.

HOLUBAR SEES CAPT. NEMO.

AMONG the brilliant accomplishments of Allen Holubar none has mare him more fame than his creating the role of Captain Nemo in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," the huge submarine drama which has made such a furore wherever shown. This film is a wonderful box office attraction. Mr. Holubar, who directed and starred in "The Field of Honor," had an invitation to see himself in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" last week.

"I had a grand time," said Holubar upon his return to Universal City from the Majestic Theatre in Los Angeles, where he had made a curtain talk at a children's matinee of '20,000 Leagues Under the Sea.' "

EDDIE BROWN SEWING SHIRTS FOR SOLDIERS.

"IF I'm too old to fight, at least I can sew!" That is Eddie Brown's opinion, and he proceeds to carry his intention into action. Brown is one of the oldest men in pictures, and has played character parts in dozens of Universal productions. He will be seen in an important role in the Gold Seal release for July 3d, which bears the provisional title of "The Little Patriot." He plays the role of the grandfather of a fighting family, who takes a prominent part in the unexpected happenings of a Fourth of July. He also had a "bit" in the patriotic special, "The Birth of Patriotism."

Brown frankly admits that he is over thirty-one years of age. But he is filled with patriotism, and he simply had to do something. So he determined to master the mysteries of the sewing machine, and borrowed the use of one in the costume department. He learned to run it with very little trouble, and his next move was to go to the local Red Cross for information as to what sort of garment was most required by the hospital service.

A CLOTHES PATRIOT.

LOUISE LOVELY received a letter from the front, you know, telling her that a company of Australian gunners "somewhere in France" had named their trench and their howitzer after her. The first thing she did, on receipt of the news, was to go to her tailor in Los Angeles, and order the military outfit which is shown in the cut on this page. There is a "kepi," which suggests that worn by the French infantry, and a big military coat, both of which are in "horizon blue," the color of the distance in a French landscape, which has been adopted by their troops as the most "invisible" color for uniforms. There is a suggestion of the oldtime infantry red of the "poilu's" trousers, before the war, in the piping of the coat and the striping of the crown of the hat. Every one has congratulated Miss Lovely upon her effective motor costume which is practical and becoming.

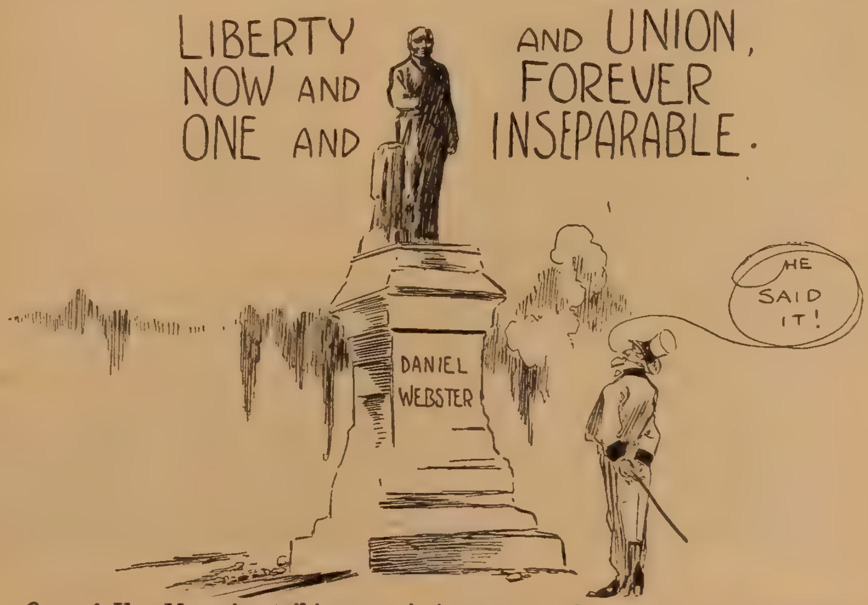
MR. LAEMMLE'S LETTER TO DEPARTING RECRUITS.

EVERY employee of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. has been assured by Pres. Laemmle that his position will be open for him on his return.

The following letter, signed in person by the head of the Universal Company, was handed this week to at least half a dozen Universalites who departed from the plant to join either the Army or the Navy:

"This is to confirm the understanding between the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and any of its employees who are called to the colors, namely, that their positions will be open to them when they are discharged from the service of the Government.

"I am glad of this opportunity to express my deep appreciation of your loyalty to the flag, and assure you we will be only too glad to reinstate you in your present position and at the same salary when you are at liberty to return to resume your present duties. —Carl Laemmle."



One of Hy. Mayer's striking patriotic cartoons drawn for the Universal Animated Weekly.

Introducing the H

of "THE GRAY GHOST"

Emory Johnson as the Handsome Hero.

HAVING decided upon a screen version of the novel "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, published in the Saturday Evening Post, for the next Universal serial, and chosen Stuart Paton to direct it, and Priscilla Dean and Harry Carter to play the leading roles, the next problem was to suggest a sufficiently talented, sympathetic and good-looking youth to undertake the arduous role of the hero. Of course, they have a wide choice at Universal City, but that makes it all the harder. After a lot of discussion, the mantle fell upon Emory Johnson, one of the handsomest leading men in pictures, who has done consistently good work in Red Feathers and Bluebirds, with the best directors on the big lot. He was the hero of "The Gift Girl," you remember, with Louise Lovely, and the young nephew of Scrooge in "The Right to Be Happy." He filled the same position in "The Unattainable," in "Black Friday," in "Barriers of Society," and in "The Girl and the Crisis."

Johnson is a straight unhyphenated American of the best type, born in San Francisco in 1894. He thought he wanted to be an architect, and was educated for that profession in the University of California. However, exclaiming, "I care not who makes the houses for the people so that I can make their movies," he shut up his books and went into pictures. He had a handsome face, and a fine figure, six feet two inches tall; he was a fencer, swimmer horseman and boxer—what was the use of confining himself to an architect's office? Universal saw his screen possibilities, and his three years' work has now been rewarded with the honor of playing hero in a Universal serial.

Johnson has many qualifications besides good looks for the exacting role of serial hero. He is an athlete, proficient in many sports, and he is not in the least afraid of taking chances. The first scene he ever made for the films called for a spill from the top of a coach in a Western picture. All of the occupants were injured except the novice, who had the luck to land in some soft brush. That was his introduction to pictures, but it did not shake his nerve. He will have plenty of opportunity to display novelty of their character. She wears this one in the third episode, which shows her in her dressing-room in the midst of the performance of the musical comedy of which she is the star. This frock is a combination of black and orange, and was designed by Miss Dean herself. The novelty appears in the cut of the bodice, which is high to the neck in front, with a collar of black kvelvet studded with rhinestones. In the back it is cut to the waist-line, while the fluffy skirts are of orange and black tulle. There are satin slippers, and half hose of black silk, and a big crownless hat completes the costume.

When such a producer as Lois Weber, with the entire forces of the Universal Film Company at her disposal, chooses the same girl to create an important part in two of her justly celebrated screen masterpieces, there must be something out of the ordinary about that girl. Priscilla Dean played for Miss Weber in "Even as You and I," and in "The Hand that Rocks the Cradle"; and her beauty, charm and the naturalness of her acting made her the talk of many towns. Critics all over the country have hailed the appearance of a new screen star of the first magnitude, and the result of her successes has been the chance to create the feminine lead, "Morn Light" in the new serial. This is an honor which leads straight to international fame.

Miss Dean is one of the large army of stage children. She was only four years old when she played one of the little Dutch children in the immortal classic, "Rip Van Winkle," with the great Joseph Jefferson himself, and was a member of Ben Greet's Shakespearean company. She left the boards to go to school in a convent, but she was determined to go back to the stage as soon as she could. At fourteen she appeared with James Hearne in "Hearts of Oak." She was still a schoolgirl when she heard the call of the camera, but it remained for the Universal to place her where she really belongs.

Priscilla is a brunette, and the specifications of her beauty include brown eyes, brown hair, and five feet five inches of pretty figure. She is a fine sportswoman, a good swimmer and a super-motorist, and drives a Buick car. She is an actress of proved ability, and it is safe to predict that her work in "The Gray Ghost" will put her in the very first rank of screen favorites.

GYPSY HART, AS THE MAID.

AN important part in the new serial is that of Morn Light's maid, who apparently in the confidence of her mistress, is seen to spy upon her. This role will be played by Gypsy Hart, the discovery of Rex Ingram, who has been seen in several of his feature plays, particularly, "The Flower of Doom" and "The Pulse of Life." Miss Hart has been in pictures only a very short time, but she has already made her mark. Besides the lead in these two features, she has played in several Westerns for the veteran Henry McRae. She has a piquant expression, and an everchanging smile, which makes her screen work interesting and varied. She has to convey the double play of her relations with Morn Light and with "The Gray Ghost" by means of the subtlest changes of facial expression—a task for which she is peculiarly well fitted.

Here is the beautiful heroine, Priscilla Dean.

This is Janet Eastman with a card for an apple.

The modern William Tell—Universal City sharpshooter.

Universal City's Modern WILLIAM TELL

"READY, Miss Eastman? Then please page the apple." So spoke Ed Jones, sharpshooter extraordinary of Harry Carey's Western Company, as he made ready to stage a modern version of the famous apple stunt of the illustrious William Tell, with little Janet Eastman, leading lady for Director George Marshall, in the classic role of apple-holder. Only they were not using an apple. At the present price of the fruit? — perish the thought! Universal City would not be guilty of such unpatriotic waste of food material. They were using a piece of paper. Of course, paper, especially white paper, is almost priceless, too, but there has been no suggestion, so far, of a "Paper Dictator" to regulate the use or misuse of it—much to the relief of us poor writing guys.

"Just forget all about me, and you're safe," went on Jones.

Do you think that you would be capable of forgetting the existence of a man who was about to put three bullets through a piece of paper which you were holding before your lips with your right hand? The worst memory in the world would be apt to work overtime in those circumstances. But Janet Eastman is quite worthy of a leading place in a Universal Western company, for she raised the card to her lips, and held it there with a hand which was as steady as a rock. Look at the picture. Her other hand hangs beside her in a natural position without a trace of nervousness, the fingers not even clenched.

Jones raised his rike, and ping-ping-ping! the three bullets tore through the card, almost in the same place.

"It was funny to feel the bullets snipping through the paper so near my face," was all the little lady said when it was over. You know how they "take on" on the stage when they play this scene. How the mighty Tell clasps his son to his manly bosom again and again. How the chorus men have to tear the boy (always a soprano, by the way) from him, and how he faints and almost falls when it is over. I wish the original Wilhelm could have seen the nonchalance with which the modern prototypes of the tale staged this stunt, going him not only one better, but three.

When any director on the lot wants a shooting stunt, he puts in a hurry-call for Jones. Allen Holubar thought of a scene which would add thrills to his production of the Butterfly Picture, "The Reed Case," and Jones performed it for him. Allen sat at a window, with small panes of glass in it, holding the edge of the sash, while the sharpshooter put two shots through two panes, and the camera caught the scene. Later, Holubar lay in bed, and another bullet came sniping through the same window, and embedded itself in the woodwork, close beside his head.

Allen Holubar in a dangerous scene in "The Reed Case," new Butterfly Picture, in which the sharpshooter played his unseen part to perfection.

Harry Carey allowed himself to be hanged in good earnest by the cowboys of his company, in the Bison, "The Bad Man of Cheyenne," trusting to Jones' rifle to cut the rope at the psychological moment. In another, "Goin' Straight," Jones had to fire from the ceiling and upset a frying-pan on the stove to scare a band of opium smugglers. A very effective stunt is the shooting out of a light at the critical moment in a fight. Jones goes all over the outdoor stages doing that for different companies. In the serial, "Liberty," real bullets shot into the water at the foot of a big rock behind which some of the most important members of the company were only partially concealed, added many thrills to the fight scenes between the Americans and Mexicans in the earlier episodes. It was a little dangerous, of course, for a bullet, striking the rock, might easily have glanced and hurt one of the leading players, perhaps fatally, and that might have delayed the serial while the plot was rewritten to account for his sudden death. Every one who knows a picture studio from the inside knows that it is an unforgivable crime to delay a serial. So Jones had VIN MOORE perpetrated this two thousand feet of the Henpeck family, of which Phil Dunham is the leading exponent. J. G. Blystone supervised the operation, as usual, and a synopsis of the resulting laughs is here appended.

The old man goes away on his vacation and leaves his son in charge of the house, without any money. The son gets the idea of renting the rooms from a nigger who chases a chicken into his house. He steals a sign from a neighbor and hangs it out. Mr. and Mrs. Henpeck with their daughter arrive at the station. They are looking for a place to board. They are all loaded into an auto, but it breaks down. They see a wagon for hire, and Henpeck has to transfer all the bundles to it. The horse makes an incidental meal off Mrs. Henpeck's new hat, and she becomes peeved.

In the meantime, Filet Mignon of the Follies has rented a room in the house. She is shown many with folding beds of all kinds in them. The Henpeck family arrives as she is choosing. Hen falls a victim to her charms at once. Mrs. Hen catches one blink of Filet and then ties hubby to the bedstead. He, however, transfers the rope to the heaviest bag in the outfit and goes out to inspect the new arrival. An old man who rooms across the hall is much interested in Filet, too. She puts on the ballet costume in which she practices, and dances with Hen. He decorates himself with a lamp shade, and they do a pas de deux together.

Her nigger maid gives a note to the nigger porter asking him to meet her in the park at three o'clock. Mrs. Hen finds it and thinks that it is from Filet to her husband. So she ties a bean bag to his back, with the corner out of it. However, the chicken which the nigger has placed in the canary's cage gets out and eats the beans.

Hen gets through the transom and goes back to Filet. He orders supper for her with wine. He connects a tube with the open gas light and asphyxiates the old man by passing the tube through the keyhole. Mrs. Hen has gone raging to the park, thinking to trap her husband. But she meets the nigger maid instead and they have a furious fight. Both end up in the lake. Meantime, the snake in the grass has seen through the window the supper party having a good time. He creeps in on them. Filet flies, and Hen puts on a suit of armor. The nigger comes out to serve the next course and is scared white. Mrs. Hen returns sadly bedraggled, and Hen hides. He takes the bellboy's cap and goes in to answer Filet's ring. Mrs. Hen follows, and Hen hides in the folding bed. Mrs. Hen suspects where he is, and there is a mix up in which the bed goes through the wall, with a general wreckage of the house. Hen flies and climbs a tree. It is in a picnic ground, and the village band is playing under it. Hen drops off the tree into the drum and goes rolling down the hill. He falls over a bank and into the auto which is carrying Filet away from the house.

"The Thief Maker"

A CLEVER story written by Geo. Surprenant, adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates, and produced by George Cochrane, is the Imp two-reel drama called "The Thief-Maker." Molly Malone has the role of the little stenographer, the son of whose employer falls in love with her, and thus incurs his father's anger. When the poverty of the girl tempts him to steal, he takes a valuable jewel from his own mother, and goes with it to a "fence" to try to sell it. Then comes a big surprise, which no one in the audience will suspect.

Walter Stoddard, a wealthy broker, believes firmly in social caste. When he discovers that his son Jack is interested in his pretty stenographer, Jane Godfrey, he tells the young man in no gentle terms that he will not countenance any love-making between the two. To be quite certain that nothing comes of their growing friendship, he discharges Jane.

Jack, incensed at his father's ultimatum, feels that he has no right to control his friendships; and, while in this mood, he chances to meet Steve Rowe, who is a thief. Sensing Jack's mood, Rowe intimates that if ever the times comes when it is necessary to make some easy money, he will help him.

IMP Two-Reel Drama. Story by George Surprenant. Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by George Cochrane, with Molly Malone in the lead, and a surprise ending.

As a birthday present to his wife, Walter Stoddard buys a very valuable jewel. She is delighted, and he places the jewel in the safe in their home. Jack, estranged from his father, has been unable to secure any work, and is very discouraged, especially when he discovers that Jane has been discharged. He does not know where to find her. One night he happens to see Jane on the street and finds that the girl is really suffering from want of food. He remembers Steve's suggestion, and tells the girl that he will soon have plenty of money, and that they will marry that night. Leaving her for a short time, he steals home and secures the jewel. He hunts up Steve, and the latter takes him to the place where he can dispose of the jewel, but lets Jack go in alone.

Stoddard discharges Jane.

Stoddard sees with anger his son's infatuation for Jane.

Jack enters the place and approaches the counter where two gloved hands take the jewel and give him the money. Suddenly the hands flash the light on Jack's face. Jack is angered at this, and tries to throw the light upon the old man. In the struggle, Jack hits the old man, and, thinking he has killed him, rushes from the place. He finally confesses to Jane what he fears he has done. The girl tells him that she will not marry him, and begs him to go home and tell his people what he has done, while she waits outside.

Stoddard, coming home, discovers the girl and takes her inside. In the library, he has a talk with his son and shows him the jewel. It turns out that Stoddard himself is the fence through which the crooks dispose of their ill-gotten goods. The old man now awakens to the fact that he is a thief-maker. As partial reparation he consents to the marriage of Jane and Jack.

Do You Know Why Thirteen out of Sixteen Houses in Evansvi

THIRTEEN OUT OF SIXTEEN.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.:

Gentlemen—It is with much pleasure that we herewith notify you of the fact that yesterday, May 30th, in the city of Evansville, Indiana, out of a total of sixteen houses in operation, thirteen were using the Universal program. No special drive was made to give this result, and it has been very nearly equalled on several other occasions. A great deal of credit for this fact, and the condition which it shows in Evansville, is due to our branch manager there, H. E. Chaw, who is a live wire, a hustler.

If this information about Evansville is of any value in the way of publicity, and will serve in any way as an example for other exchanges and branch exchanges, you are at liberty to use it in any way you wish.

THEY WANT THEM CLEAN.

Laemmle Film Service,
Des Moines, Iowa.

Dear Sir—The Universal program I have received from you so far is very well liked by my crowd and I am glad to write you a word of praise.

One thing I wish, and I think there are thousands of people who like the motion picture show think the same, and that is this—that they would cut out so much Leg Show, in the dance part of a drama, and also excessive liquor drinking by the Lower Sex.

I have had some five-reel dramas recently which seemed kind of fast. Now I have not received any of this stuff from your program, but I have run a lot of stuff and while writing I like to let go what is on my mind.

I have learned while in the business that the clever comics and clean pictures, eliminating the excessive dancing and drinking, appeal to the majority of the people.

Yours very truly,
C. F. JOHNSON,

STRONG FOR "THE PERILS OF THE SERCRET SERVICE."

Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd.
87 Union St., St. John, N. B.

Dear Sirs—I have your favor of the 24th inst., advising that the "Perils of the Secret Service" series will end with the seventh chapter. I am extremely sorry to learn this because it has been the best all-round adventure series that I have ever shown in my house.

Based as they are on the famous Yorke-Norroy stories of Geo. Bronson Howard, so widely known through their publication in one of the popular magazines, and universally read because of their strong appeal to all lovers of serial adventure stories of genuine merit, it is indeed to be regretted that the series does not run longer.

In spite of many strong counter attractions showing here from week to week, every one of the series proved of particular drawing power and I always did more than ordinary business.

I trust you will be able to offer another series as good as this in the very near future. If such be the case you may assuredly count on a booking from this theatre.

Very truly yours,
EMPIRE THEATRE,
(Signed) G. J. B. METZLER.

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

"THE FLAME OF YOUTH" tells the story of a young chap who simply could not stay whipped. His father considers him a mollycoddle until the boy's pugilistic tendencies are brought to light. The father then sends him to his opal mines, which are being systematically fleeced by a dishonest superintendent and his henchman. By sheer pluck and determination the boy regains the stolen opals and wins "the girl."

Have a man dressed like a typical "tough" with a blackened eye and all appearances of having come out second best in a fistic encounter. Send him around town and have him pass out cards reading as follows:

TOO GOOD TO MISS.

The following letter was written by by a patron to a theatre manager:

Mr. C. C. Hoops,
Kingsley, Iowa:

Dear Sir—I thought I would write and let you know what I thought of the picture "Liberty." I think it is the best picture that I have seen. I drove fourteen miles every Saturday night to see it, as it was too good to miss.

WOULDN'T THINK OF SHOWING ANY OTHER.

Universal Film Exchange,
Grand Rapids, Mich.:

Gentlemen—As you are always interested in the welfare of your customers and if your product is getting them the money, I take pleasure in letting you know what your "Purple Mask" did for my Stocking house.

You know I only seat 600, but when I ran the first episode of the "Purple Mask" I had 700 people in the house for the first show, which I gave early in the afternoon, and I had them lined down on the sidewalk each continual show.

I was compelled to hire four men (not boys) to control the crowd. That day spelled the largest business of my house and it is delightful to write that every episode of the "Purple Mask" which I ran since, has been the same story. I shall surely follow the "Purple Mask" with "The Voice on the Wire," as I am an ardent adherer to the Universal program and their serials. I would not think of showing any film in my houses other than those released by you because of the pleasurable and very important fact that they get me the money.

Yours very truly,

ADVANCE FEATURES

Silhouette effect from "The Flame of Youth," coming Butterfly Picture.

Jack Mulhall Does Water Stuff

NO excuse for a fellow brought up in New York not being able to do water stuff," says Jack Mulhall, when complimented upon his swimming and diving, of which he gives a fine display in the coming Butterfly Picture, "The Flame of Youth." The story is all about a young fellow who has never done much except spend his father's money, but who astonishes the old man by his prowess in a fight, and is then sent to take charge of the complicated affairs of an opal mine, on a remote island off the coast of California. The superintendent is dishonest, and the young chap's adventures begin on the way over in a launch, when he is knocked on the head and thrown overboard. This is the chance that Jack has been looking for.

Then he swims to shore, and lands in the tremendous surf which breaks eternally on the island's rocky edge. The camera shows him doing it, too.

Jack then sets to work. The first thing he does is to fall in love with the superintendent's innocent nymph of a daughter. This disarms suspicion at once, for he cannot tear himself away from the girl long enough to show the slightest interest in the mine. The defaulter and his men decide to make a getaway, and to take the girl with them. Jack objects to this. He overcomes the native servant who knocked him out, and makes a break for the launch and freedom. He is detained by a deputation of nearly all the workmen, whom he fights, on the edge of the cliff with an axe. Then he looks down on the beach and sees the villainous foreman attacking the girl. There is no time to run down the winding paths to her assistance. So he dives off the cliff, at least eighty feet, into the ocean below, scrambles to shore, knocks out the villain, and sets off in the launch with the rescued girl. And there is no excuse, according to him, for any one's not being willing to go and do likewise, if he was only born in New York.

ELLA HALL PLAYS A BELGIAN ORPHAN FOR BLUEBIRD

MY goodness, what are you going to do with all those suits of clothes?" cried Ella Hall to her director, Jack Conway, when she found him examining a stock of new suits enough for a small-sized clothing store, in his dressing-room, just before they began work on the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Little Orphan," in which little Miss Hall is starred.

"Well, you know," said Conway, somewhat embarrassed, "I am going to play opposite you in this picture as leading man, and I discovered that I had nothing fit to face the camera in. It is so long since I played in a picture that my wardrobe has been terribly neglected."

Their latest Bluebird is a delightful story of a war orphan, imported from Belgium by a confirmed bachelor, who thinks that he ought to do his bit for the afflicted country. Three of them room together, and send word to Ellis Island that they will take three Belgian boy refugees, and provide homes for them. The three appear, but one of them turns out to be a girl. Her name is Renee, and the qualifying "e" which betrays her sex has been left off in some unaccountable fashion. The arrival of a girl upsets the bachelor household very seriously, but the problem is solved by the opening of her foster-father's country house. Then the little girl, safely installed, sets about the selection of a wife for her patron, with results which are surprising.

Scene from the coming Bluebird Photoplay, "The Little Orphan."

BEN WILSON in "The Light of Dawn"

WITH this chapter of the weird serial, written by Eustace Hale Ball, adapted for the screen by Stuart Paton and produced by Ben Wilson, comes the beginning of the end. The "Hand" kills "Red" Warren and the "Voice" promises the truth.

Polly	Neva Gerber
"Red" Warren	Francis MacDonald
Dr. Renolds	Jos. Girard
Prof. Duval	De Brullier
Cronin	Howard Crampton

Striking scenes from the Fourteenth Episode of "The Voice on the Wire."

"THE Light of Dawn" is the appropriate title of the fourteenth episode of this most successful serial, adapted from the novel by Eustace Hale Ball, by Stuart Paton, and produced, since the twelfth chapter, by its star, Ben Wilson. The foreshadowing of the solution of the mystery takes place in this installment. Red Warren is shot by the "Hand," and Shirley and Polly are called into a room by themselves to hear the truth.

Shirley watches over Polly as she lies asleep on the couch in Duval's home. "Red" Warren is seen approaching the Duval house and is followed by Cronin and a detective. Duval, fancying he hears a noise, awakens and goes toward the library, while Renolds sleeps on restlessly. Red starts to climb up to the library window, Cronin watching him. Shirley sees Red's figure silhouetted on the shade and at the same time feels the draft of the door's being opened. Red gets ready to aim his revolver. Shirley sees the door open and close, but no one appears. Duval also notices the door close without any one's entering. And in the library, the "Hand" points a revolver at Shirley, who gazes at it fascinated. The "Hand" fires simultaneously as Shirley fires, and Red, just starting to open the window, is hit by the bullet from the "Hand" and falls backward from the window to the feet of Cronin and the detective. Leaving Polly under the care of Duval, Shirley dashes down to Red.

In Renolds's bedroom, no one is in the bed; the door opens and closes, but no one is seen.

Red is carried into the house, where Duval examines him and sees that he has not long to live. Renolds hears these words as he stands at the door, and slowly enters and kneels beside the dying man, asking permission to speak with him alone.

Renolds listens to Warren's whispered words and bows his head in sorrow. Renolds dazedly walks from the room and Shirley and others go to the library. "Red" refuses to say anything and dies. Renolds has gone to his bedroom, completely overcome. Shirley answers the phone to hear the "Voice" say that he, Shirley, has waited long, but at twilight, he shall know the truth. At twilight the Hand appears in the next room, and the "Voice" tells Shirley and Polly to come into the room alone. They do so and see the Hand hovering over a pile of paper. The Voice says, "On this paper will be written the truth."

MORAN'S CLEVER MAKE-UP.

A FEW days ago Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, and who for the present has assumed active command at Universal City, found time to leave his busy office and take a stroll about the stages of his big institution.

He stopped on the set of the Nestor comedy company and greeted Eddie Lyons, Edith Roberts and Director Roy Clements. He glanced at a strange woman working in the set, but did not address her in any way.

"Where is Lee?" he asked. A smile went over the face of Lyons as he called over to the strange woman, "Miss Moran, come over here, please, and meet President Laemmle."

Mr. Laemmle laughed heartily as he discovered the "woman" was no other than Lee Moran, who is playing a feminine role in the Nestor production.

tions of daredevil riding which are about the most dangerous and exciting contests in the world.

Later, Helen joined the Miller Brothers "101 Ranch" show, as their leading horsewoman, but she never forgot her first love—the locomotive. Winning championships grew monotonous after a while. She received the highest honors at the Los Angeles "meet" two years in succession. Enough was enough, and about this time she received an offer to do some of the things for which she is now famous, for the cameras of the Kalem Company. Her pictures were to be railroad thrillers, a type of film for which the public has an apparently unsatiable appetite. The name "Railroad" got her, and she signed immediately and began risking her life once a week regularly, to put the punch in the two thousand feet of film which was released as a "Hazard of Helen" with great regularity. If she had made friends by the dozen in the rodeo game, she made them by the million now. Her pictures became some of the most popular on the market, and there seemed little possibility of her returning to riding.

This is the girl who has just joined Universal and is out to beat her own record under the direction of J. D. Davis. Their first picture is known by the provisional title of "Mettle and Metal"—the first applies to Helen, of course. The little stunt that she performs so nonchalantly in the second reel is merely riding furiously to an overhead derrick, catching the hook which is dangling from it by leaping right out of her stirrups, and swinging on the hook over the track on which a runaway engine, with a wounded man inside it, is coming. She drops from the derrick and enters the cab, steering the engine safely into a siding just in time as the limited tears by. There is a picture of her doing it on page eight. M. K. Wilson will play hero to her heroine, and the other members of the company include Jack Dill, Marc Fenton and Peggy Custer.

"One thing," says Helen, smiling, "I know as long as I'm doing railroad thrillers for Universal I'll never be bald. I'll be in the hair-raising business!"

UNIVERSAL CITY'S MODERN WILLIAM TELL.

to do all the shooting, and jump from rock to rock like a giddy mountain goat, in order to make it appear that a large force of desperate greasers was besieging the little party of Americans. Everybody felt safe when they knew that Jones was doing it.

You see, Jones has been shooting, riding "outlaws," and throwing the lariat all his life. His father was a ranchman in Texas, and as soon as the son was old enough he rode the range in American Valley, New Mexico, with the Slaughter Brothers outfit. He was appointed deputy sheriff under Bob Leatherwood, at that time sheriff at Tucson, and given the little job of rounding up the badmen on the border, his two predecessors having been killed in the occupation. Jones' unerring aim was excessively useful in this work, and after a while a peace was restored, which he was largely instrumental in establishing. Then he bought cattle and settled in the neighborhood of Globe, Arizona, winning riding contests there, and at Prescott. For eight years he was with Buffalo Bill, returning again to the occupation of buying cattle for a big packing company in Los Angeles. Universal City attracted him, and he found his natural place as a member of Harry Carey's company about six months ago. There isn't a shooting stunt that Jones has not performed for the camera, and every one had the most implicit confidence in his unerring aim. He is the terror of all the shooting galleries, from which he always returns loaded with prizes. They feel inclined to put up the shutters when they see Jones in the offing.

HOLUBAR TELLS CHILDREN OF WONDERS UNDER OCEAN.

"I HAD a grand time," said Director Allen Holubar upon his return to Universal City from the Majestic Theatre in Los Angeles, where he had made a curtain talk at a children's matinee of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." "I never did like making a talk before the curtain, but the children seemed so interested in what I was telling them about submarine life and how the picture was made that I hardly knew I was taking up so much time."

The performance had been given especially in the morning, so that as many children as possible could avail themselves of the opportunity to see the big Universal production which is having a successful run in Los Angeles. The theatre was crowded, and the youngsters frequently applauded the speaker.

BEANLESS DAYS ARE HERE.

HENCEFORTH there are to be beanless days in the cafes at Universal City. The caterer who has been feeding the film folk for years at the motion picture municipality and whose baked beans have been one of the staple dishes there, has decreed that the restaurants that have announced meatless days will have "nothing on him," beanless days now being in order at the big plant. These beanless days will be Monday, Wednesday and Friday of each week, on the other three working days of the week the delectable baked beans being served as usual.

The caterer says he has been forced to do this on account of the high price now being charged for beans. If they continue to aviate in price he may have to eliminate them altogether from the Universal City bill of fare.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS For "A DOLL'S HOUSE"

A DOLL'S HOUSE" is one of Ibsen's best-known plays. Handled properly, the Bluebird production based upon this famous play will bring you big returns.

If there is a bookseller in your community, arrange to co-operate with him in advertising this production. Valuable advertising for both of you would result if the book dealer were induced to get up an attractive window display, in which copies of the play and the Bluebird 1-sheets on "A Doll's House" figure. Your part of this co-operative plan would consist in flashing upon the screen an announcement telling the patrons where the book could be purchased.

This co-operative plan could also be used with good results in connection with a local department store. The window display in this event should consist of a doll house out of which doll characters are coming. It would be doubly effective if the dolls were dressed to represent the various characters in Ibsen's story and the display shown based upon one of the scenes in the play.

Another idea that will enable you to get the co-operation of every patriotic organization in your community is to offer a prize for the best dressed doll brought into your theatre on the day or days you show "A Doll's House." Announce in your advertising that the dolls should be dressed to represent one of the characters in Ibsen's story and that you retain the privilege of keeping the prize winners. The prize winning doll or dolls should then be raffled off for the benefit of the local Red Cross organization, D. A. R., or any similar patriotic order. Or, the money derived from the sale of these dolls could be devoted to the purchase of supplies for the men of the local militia organization away at the training camp. For that matter, any number of worthy purposes to which the money can be put, will occur to you.

Do not try to work the foregoing idea alone. Instead, get in touch with the members of the various patriotic organizations and see whether you cannot induce them to work with you to the extent of pledging themselves to be on hand, or else helping sell tickets. You will undoubtedly find the Boy Scouts glad to co-operate with you.

CROWDS THROUGH The Universal Program

What makes vaudeville so popular? The short, snappy acts that have punch and a quick get-over, of course. It is this same meeting of a popular demand that makes Universal Program Pictures a powerful crowd-drawing force for the Exhibitor. People hate to feel that they must get to your theatre at a certain minute to see the feature—often it is very inconvenient for them to do this and you lose the dimes which you might just as well have gotten if you had been running Universal Program Pictures. You ought to have some of the Universal releases listed here—in fact, you need them if you are really trying to make your house a big money-maker through its popularity. Dora Rodrigues Retains Femininity in Uniform

(From the Pittsburg Sunday Dispatch)

Universal Girl Stimulates Recruiting on Walk to Universal City.

A MERE slip of a girl, accoutred in the garb of war, that of the Plattsburg uniform, but nevertheless feminine to her finger tips despite her masculine dress, will arrive in Pittsburg, Monday, June 4. Who is she? She is Miss Dora Rodrigues, who is walking all the way from New York to San Francisco, establishing in all the places in which she stops recruiting stations and enlisting young men who will do their "bit" for Uncle Sam.

The Pittsburg Dispatch and the Universal Film Company are co-operating in making her tour attain the greatest possible success. She was formerly a talented member of the Universal forces, and along the route she is called "Dora, the Universal Film Girl." When the war broke out she wished to enlist herself, but then she was told that if she enlisted as a yeoman, her work would be clerical and on shore. She then conceived the idea of becoming a walking recruiting station and the idea was fostered and encouraged by army and navy officials, who told her she could do very meritorious work for her country by enlarging the number of enlisted men. When she arrives in Pittsburg she will establish a recruiting station, and she expects to do a land office business in this city.

Yesterday she left Fairmont, W. Va., and her first recruiting stop in Pennsylvania will be at Uniontown, in which city she will stay two days, Monday and Tuesday. She will appear in the Penn Theatre, Uniontown, and in Pittsburg at the Downtown Cameraphone, where she will remain all week. In the theatres she gives a lecture on why young men should enlist, and as illuminative of her lecture, two reels of moving pictures, "Uncle Sam at War."

When in Pittsburg she will enlist young men for the army, navy, Marine Corps, the Eighteenth Regiment and other military units.

Duffer handcuffs him, but the ape unlocks the bracelets. Betty yells for help and Duffer finds her. The men fight again, and "The Flea" escapes up the chimney, from there waging a battle with bricks. The ape goes up the chimney after Duffer, who hangs on to two bricks. They finally pull out and prove to be the goldbricks of which Betty's inheritance consist. They bless the ape as their friend.

Feature Releases in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

Kingsley Benedict and Eileen Sedgwick in "Man and Beast." Eighth Butterfly Picture. Directed by Henry McRae. Released June 25. Fresh from the ex-citements and perils of the life of a secret service operative, the redoubtable Kingsley Benedict invites further disaster by braving, under the direction of Henry McRae, the terrors of the African Wilds. All of which proves that Mr. McRae can direct powerful dramas as "Henry" as well as thrillers under the more significant handle of "Hank." And if that seems to be deep stuff, read on. In this strong picture Henry knew that to produce drama he must have strong, virile actors of pleasing personalities. Wisely he chose Kingsley and Eileen. For the plot he found ample action in the former differences existing between Boer and Britain. You have guessed it. They love. Their parents do not. The latter fight, during a period of drouth, over the use of a water hole. Water being scarce, Kingsley's Boer dad takes to gin, or as one might say—"rum and rebellion." The kids get married. A baby comes. The old man incites the natives. The young couple are on a wagon in the forest. They stop for lunch—baby wanders—the elephant beast-of-all-work goes in search, and shortly returns with the baby. This is the barest outline of a thrilling story, punctuated with many of the best things Henry McRae ever put over. Watch for the complete story and you will realize that your patrons will enjoy this "Man and Beast" Butterfly to the limit. And that's the way you should boost it.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in "The War Bridegroom," with Edith Roberts. One Reel Nestor Marital Mix-up. Directed by Roy Clement. Released June 25. Eddie and Edie are to be married. Eddie and Lee attend a farewell stag, accomplish a jag, run against a snag, arrested by a wag—of a constable and the judge sets them to breaking slag. They send word home they have been drafted into the army, and after serving 30 days, are released, buy overgrown boy scout uniforms and return as heroes—almost. Unfortunately the constable follows them and takes them back. They still have two days to serve. This corker is as "merry as a marriage bell," though their ringing was postponed.

Harry Carey in "The Golden Bullet." With Fritzi Ridgeway. Three Reel Gold Seal Western Drama. Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released June 26. Harry and his partner were working a rich claim, and not wishing to attract claim jumpers, they kept their strike secret. But a "bad man" found it out and stole a can of nuggets. One of these was shaped like a bullet from a .44. The bad man gave it to Harry's girl, and that started the trouble, because she showed it to Harry, who recognized it. There is a fight and a merry chase, in which Harry lives up to his reputation, and the bad man dies with the golden bullet in his heart. An unusual Western drama.

Neal Hart and Janet Eastman in "Swede Hearts." Two Reel Victor Comedy Drama. Written and directed by George Marshall. Released June 29. You have known and liked Neal Hart ever since you saw him in "Liberty," haven't you? You liked him as the Irish soldier in a funny comedy-drama a few weeks ago. Here you get proof of his versatility—he plays a Swedish emigrant. Ole leaves Hilda and comes over to make his fortune; is robbed of his money; gets a job as hotel porter, and gets more laughs than a king's jester. Hilda's father comes over too, and engages her to the man that robbed Ole. Does Ole get even? Better book this for a big laugh. Yes, right now.

"Hell Morgan's Girl"

Brought this Letter from a big Exhibitor!

"Last evening I completed an engagement of three days on the Bluebird Photoplay, "Hell Morgan's Girl," or, "The Queen of the Barbary Coast," with Dorothy Phillips as the star. It rained hard every one of the days, so bad each evening I did not look for even ordinary business, but was compelled to hold out people for each second performance each evening long before the usual time and did a packed business every day. I did not advertise it any stronger than for ordinary attractions.

"The play: Fine. Splendid acting in every role; never had a photoplay with better selected cast. Parts very difficult, but handled superb throughout. Dorothy Phillips, the star, is perfectly W-O-N-D-E-R-F-U-L as the girl and Queen of the Coast. You could not get better lines than you have on advance advertising, for my patrons fairly loved her, even though they knew it was a terribly distasteful role she had to assume. Her support, as stated above, was perfect, and each principal deserves highest praise. You may book me a return appearance as soon as you have open time." Sincerely yours, JOHN M. ROOT, Mgr. LET'S GRAB IT

(No. 182. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

THE Universal Company could shut down all of its studios for a few weeks this summer, avoid an expenditure of SOMETHING OVER A MILLION DOLLARS and still have plenty of negatives on hand to release its regular program and all of its special features without a break.

We now have such a huge reserve supply of high-class pictures on hand that we could stop everything in the line of producing and not fall behind our schedules.

BUT WE'RE NOT GOING TO DO IT!

Uncle Sam wants us to keep things humming. He doesn't want us to WASTE anything, but he wants us to SPEND NORMALLY. The Universal is going him one better by spending even a LITTLE MORE than normally. But we won't waste a cent.

Outside of the fact that this is practical patriotism which every business concern in the country should practice, it is MIGHTY GOOD BUSINESS. It will keep thousands of people at work and thus it will encourage regular and normal living, and regular and normal spending of all kinds.

And there's nothing better for the whole nation right now than a continuation of normal spending.

AND DO IT!

Theatre owners can do their bit in this national job by keeping their theatres open all summer. If it has been your custom in the past to close for the summer weeks, keep open this summer and encourage your patrons by your own example.

You and your theatre have far more influence in your community than you realize. Nothing looks deader than a shut-up theatre, and nothing brings depression quicker than a dead-looking place of business, whether a theatre or a store or anything else.

If you can help entertain certain thousands of people for a few hours each day, or if you can entertain only a few hundred, you have done more than you will ever realize toward keeping the nation RIGHT SIDE UP WITH CARE.

The moving picture industry is a gigantic power for good. This is the greatest opportunity we have ever had to silence the long-haired reformers and prove to the whole nation that we are on the job to HELP KEEP THINGS HUMMING.

Let's Grab it and do it!

"A Young Patriot"

The laboratory after the explosion.

Tommy and his grandpa were pals.

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Military Drama for Fourth of July. Story by M. & W. Pigott. Scenario by E. J. Clawson. Produced by Louis Chaudet. A tale of the spirit of '76 in 1917.

CAST.

Captain Phillips	Charles Mailes
Tommy	Elwood Bredell
The Colonel	Jack Connolly
Katie	Mignon Anderson
The Grandfather	Ed Brown
Dick	Roy Stewart
Janos	J. Morris Foster
Miklos Vitez	Wadsworth Harris

A FINE picture to show on the Ever Glorious Fourth is "The Young Patriot," which was written by M. and W. Pigott, adapted for the screen by E. J. Clawson and produced by Louis Chaudet, as soon as he relinguished the Nestor Company into the hands of Roy Clements, and turned his attention to more serious drama. Mignon Anderson heads a cast which includes some well-known Universal names, and Elwood Bredell has the title role, which will make every member of the audience feel sure that there cannot be much the matter with a country as long as it contains such boys as "Tommy."

Because Tommy, the small son of Captain Phillips, who is privately experimenting with some new explosives which he hopes soon to present to his country, can't seem to get much attention from his too pre-occupied father, the boy goes out to romp with his grandfather, a veteran of the Civil War. They have a great time throwing lemons at each other. One of the lemons goes through the window of the laboratory, and the captain warns them they would have blown up the house if they had knocked over a bottle of explosive which is on the table.

Tommy's sister, Katie, and her fiance Dick are sitting on the veranda. Miklos Vitez, a foreign gentleman, who is also a suitor of Katie's, joins them. Kate, to make Dick jealous, is very gracious to the foreigner, and Dick soon leaves them with a rage in his heart.

Captain Phillips considers Vitez a friend, although the Colonel, his best friend and confidant, warns him against the man. Vitez learns that the captain's notes and formulas are kept in a certain strong-box. One day he steals the key to the laboratory and hides in a closet behind the stairs, while Janos, a foreign accomplice, having been previous instructed by Vitez, phones the captain that he is wanted at the barracks. Though Kate and Dick sit for some time on the stairs so that Vitez can't come from the closet, the two lovers finally run out into the garden. Then the foreigner emerges and furtively makes his way into the laboratory, where he is compelled to turn on the lights in order to get the box open.

Tommy has gone to bed, where the old man is relating war stories to the boy. They agree that they are scrappers, and Tommy describes his idea of a battle. The grandfather hears a noise and, ordering Tommy to go to sleep, goes down-stairs with his old musket on his shoulder.

Katie has seen the light in the laboratory and takes it for granted that her father has returned. The two start toward the house. Janos, hidden in the shrubbery, catches Katie, and he and Dick fight, Dick throwing the foreigner down the well. Then Kate rushes for a rope and they try to pull Janos from the well, but he is afraid to come up.

The captain, meantime, having arrived at the barracks and being informed that there has been some mistake, has become suspicious, and has rushed home, fearing a plot against his precious explosives.

Harry Carey in the Western Drama

"The Wrong Man"

Two scenes from "The Wrong Man."

BISON Two-Reel Western Drama. Story by N. P. Oakes. Scenario by J. L. Cunningham and production by Fred A. Kelsey. Harry Carey in one of his typical characterizations, supported by Fritzi Ridgeway.

CAST.

Jack Wilson	Harry Carey
Ben Bostwick	George Berrell
Auice Malone	Fritzi Ridgeway
Larry Malone	Bill Gettinger
"Chip" Stevens	Vester Pegg
"Chip's" Pal	Hoot Gibson

"THE WRONG MAN" is a typical Harry Carey story, written for his use by N. P. Oakes, adapted for the screen by J. L. Cunningham, and produced by Fred A. Kelsey. In the course of the picture Harry Carey rolls off the back of a moving stage-coach and lands in the road with Vester Pegg on top of him. He is accused of robbing the stage, but the ending is perfectly satisfactory for all that.

On a certain day in early June of the year 1891, two men toil through the desert toward Guaraloop, a town on the edge of the desert, of many parts, and nearly every one of them wicked. Jack, the younger, is a desert prospector, while Ben Bostwick is considered the derelict of the town, because of his age and his craving for gin. Ben taunts Jack for being in a hurry to see Alice Malone.

"The Silver Top" Saloon is the social and business centre of Guadaloop and is owned by Larry Malone, boss of the whole town. "Chip" Stevens, a man of uncertain profession, is a pal of Larry. The stage drives in, and while the driver is getting a drink at the bar, he tells of the money he is carrying, but boasts of the five thousand dollars he is to bring for the Banner Mine the coming week. Chip is startled, but pleased, by this news.

Alice Malone, the bright spot in the drab town's life, comes to the saloon to see Larry, her father, just after he has received a letter from a friend, warning him to elect a sheriff in the town or the U. S. marshal will take charge of it themselves and will make it extremely unpleasant for the inhabitants. Alice chides Larry and Chip for not managing the town themselves—they are so big and strong.

When Jack and Ben arrive in the saloon, Chip proposes to Larry that Ben be elected as sheriff, for he would be absolutely harmless. And as usual the bosses win and their candidate gets in office. Ben displays his star and revolvers with the greatest pomposity. He never realizes that the men are making fun of him, though Jack warns him. When Jack starts out again toward the desert, Ben can't be persuaded to accompany him. Alice has promised to become Jack's wife as soon as he makes his strike, and is impatient for his return.

Chip and two pals arrange to hold up the stage to get the five thousand dollars. Jack happens to be passing over a ridge and sees their preparations, and, being suspicious, rides toward them. The stage is pursued, two of the outlaws are shot and then Chip climbs up on the back of the stage, fires at the driver and is just searching for the bag of money, when Jack climbs onto the coach. They fight, and soon both roll off the stage, while the horses dash away driverless.

Chip regains consciousness and, seeing Jack, removes the mask from his own face and puts it on Jack. He then takes the gold and rides away, meeting one of his pals.

The stages arrives in Guadaloop and Ben immediately sets out to catch the bandits. He finds Jack lying in the road with the mask on, and though grief-stricken, forces him to precede him to the town where he places him in jail. When Alice is told of the story, she passes a bar through the jail window, with which he pries up the bars of the window and escapes. He rides quickly to the cave and catches Chip just as he is leaving with the gold.

Ben and Alice follow Jack and meet him on the road as he is bringing Chip to town. They tell the people that it was just a joke, a preparation to get the real outlaw. Ben rides on with Chip, while Jack and Alice loiter on the way.

MORE PERILS OF SECRET SERVICE

IT is doubtful if a series of two-reelers ever made a bigger hit than "The Perils of the Secret Service," the timely and engrossing stories by George Bronson Howard, in which Kingsley Benedict was featured. The Universal was fortunate enough to secure the noted author of these stories, which appeared in book form under the title of "The Adventures of Yorke Norroy, Diplomatic Agent," to produce them at Universal City, and so carefully did Mr. Howard husband his stories that there were several more to be put out when his contract expired. It will be pleasurable news to the thousands of exhibitors who have run this series, and who have sent in their own and their patrons' requests for more of these stories, to know that more are on the way. Kingsley Benedict has been taken from feature work long enough to appear in several more "Perils of the Secret Service," under the direction of Jack Wells, although he is assisting Wells in the direction of the stories himself.

The first of the new adventures is Episode 8, and is entitled "The Adventure of the Icon." In the original George Bronson Howard stories which appeared in the Popular Magazine, this adventure was the most exciting and interesting of all, and it has as great pictorial possibilities as any of the others. The scenario was all prepared by Mr. Howard before he left the Universal, and his script is being accurately followed. In it appear Mignon Anderson as Irma Mailoff, the Russian lady, whose efforts to escape make the drama, Frank Lanning as Boris Van Haden, Baron Van Ritzau as Von Linden, the German spy; Al MacQuarrie, H. C. DeMore, and of course Kingsley Benedict as Yorke Norroy. Carson Huntley does not appear in this episode.

The following adventure has been provisionally entitled "The Door With the Iron Ring," with Harry Schumm.

CAREY'S MOTHER COMING.

HARRY CAREY, Universal western star, is having his house at Newhall newly papered, a gardener is busy and everything is being made spick and span because the actor has received word that his mother Mrs. Ella J. Carey, wife of the late Judge Henry D. Carey of New York, is about to pay him a visit.

"You know mother is mighty particular about the looks of things around the house," said the actor as he was explaining how delighted he was at the knowledge of her coming, "and I don't think she has changed her views since I saw her last.

Carey lives on his ranch near Newhall about twenty miles north of Universal City and he makes a great many of the exterior scenes for his western plays in that neighborhood.

Kingsley Benedict.

HIGH SPOTS AMONG NEXT WEEK'S UNIVERSAL PICTURES

IT is seldom that we find such an abundance of remarkable features as appear among the pictures released by the Universal next week. "A Limb of Satan," "Three Women of France," "Double Suspicion," are all remarkable in their way, and as three and two-reelers are bound to make a lasting impression among exhibitors. The Nestors, Jokers and L-KO on the program are also deserving of special mention. One of these, "Minding the Baby," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, is one of the most enjoyable Nestors ever put out, and was considered so good that it was put into the Broadway Theatre to run with Herbert Rawlinson in "Come Through," which is the talk at present of New York City's moving picture Rialto. A little piccaninny which unconsciously takes the place of a white baby left in charge of Mr. Young Husband causes most of the complications.

Lyons and Moran.

The next illustration shows Irene Hunt in the role of a Red Cross nurse in "Three Women of France," featuring Jack Mulhall, Irene Hunt, and a cast including the following players: Richard Ryan, Adelaide Wood, the late Daniel Leighton, and Virginia Lee. The story itself was written by Bess Meredyth, and was produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin in a remarkably artistic fashion. As a war picture it is the companion piece to that other two-reeler which has made such a reputation for itself, "The War Waif." War is a great leveller of caste and station, and the three women who are the subject of this feature and whose relation centers in their acquaintance with one man, are brought by force of war's stern realities into a peculiar and most dramatic bond.

Irene Hunt.

The third illustration is taken from the Gold Seal three-reel drama entitled "A Limb of Satan," featuring Ruth Stonehouse. This picture not only features her, but she directed it as well. It furnishes the clever little star with an extremely sympathetic role, that of a mischievous orphan who kept an asylum in such an uproar that the poor manager was tickled to death when she ran away. Her first realization of responsibility, and her first serious attempt to do good in the world, brought her plumb up against a term in jail. "Double Suspicion" is a Bison featuring Neal Hart and Janet Eastman, and it is a corker.

There is a very good L-KO entitled "Hearts and Flour," featuring Eva Novak, Bob MacKenzie, and Chas. Reichman, and Gale Henry in a Joker comedy entitled "Kitchenella," to complete the comedies for the week. There is also a single-reel Imp drama entitled "Hatton of Headquarters," with Lee Hill and Charles Mailes, which deserves special mention.

MARY MAC LAREN IN

Mary at her mother's grave.

WAR times and the consequent scarcity of men to do the work of the world are forcing women into farming, so that they and the fighters may be fed. We look upon this situation as a new thing, but "The Plow Woman," the Butterfly Picture which was made by J. G. Alexander from the novel of Eleanor Gates, and produced by Charles Swickard, shows us that the splendid pioneer women of America, whose fearlessness and indomitable persistence in the face of overwhelming odds was so largely instrumental in making this country what it is to-day, knew what it meant to plow and sow, to reap and thresh, in the days when the flag contained fewer stars than it does now. The story of one of these mothers of the race, who sacrificed herself for her family, is well told in this fine picture, in which Mary MacLaren is starred in a congenial role. Quaint costumes of the seventies, uniforms of our frontier soldiers, Indians in feathers, settlers in coonskin caps and "butternuts," hunters and frontier characters, make up the varied personages who play their parts in the development of the story.

Andy MacTavish was a pioneer, a stern, God-fearing Scotchman who held that women were but slaves to men, and that they needed no education. He was power supreme over his little daughter Mary and his wife, whose failure to present him with a son had damned her in his eyes. When she gave birth to another girl baby, Andy became so violent that the little woman passed away, leaving only Mary to care for the new child, named Ruth. She did this with every bit of energy and love in her whole being.

Mary had first met Jack Fraser, the pride of the army surgeon's heart, when she rushed for the doctor when Ruth was born. They had become great friends.

Womanhood found Mary MacTavish still a willing slave to the little sister whom she mothered. She sacrificed her life to Ruth, who was content to rest in the shadow of her sister's protection. Lieutent Jack Fraser of "B" Troop, continued to be the brother to Mary and also to Ruth, who adored the big fellow. But seeing the look of love in Ruth's eyes, Jack immediately confessed his love for her. They forgot to tell the older girl of their discovery, and for that reason she herself kept on loving Jack.

The railroad was planning to build through this country, and the squatters were urged to protect their land by filing their claims at the government office in Bismarck, as there were many claim jumpers. Andy MacTavish decided to do so, but he found that Buck Mathews and his brother Bill, Sioux half-breeds and new arrivals, known the length and breadth of the Indian country as "badmen," had already jumped it. Buck had to take possession by noon of that day, and for that purpose, went to the cabin where he found Mary and Ruth alone. Mary attempted to protect her sister, and because of her anger, aroused the admiration of Buck. Fraser entered the cabin in time to force the half-breed to leave, vowing to get revenge. Just as Jack was departing, Andy returned and accused the young fellow of stealing his claim, but Mary told her father that he had saved it for them.

A cyclonic storm had arisen, and while the lightning flashed and the thunder roared, Andy read from the Bible to Mary and Ruth. Mary dreamed during the reading, but Ruth furtively read from a book given her by Fraser. Her father, noticing this, demanded the book, and the girl refusing, snatched up his rawhide whip and started for her. Both Mary and Ruth backed to the cabin door, followed by their father with his whip upraised. A flash of lightning struck him to the ground, his left side paralyzed.

Buck, from their first meeting, desired Mary, and determined to get her as well as the claim. One day he approached her as she was plowing in the fields. She raised her whip and struck him, but wresting it from her, he snarled that he would get her.

Mary sent Ruth, escorted by Jack Fraser, to school at Bismarck. Some months later she received a letter from the matron of the school, demanding that she come for her sister immediately, as she was not a proper associate for the other girls. Mary hastened to Bismarck and found that Ruth was now the mother of a baby boy. Though heart-sick, Mary adored the babe and denounced the matron for her treatment of Ruth.

BILL GANZ SCORES AGAIN

"BILL" GANZ, the cameraman of the Animated Weekly and Current Events, has had another adventure. You remember it was he who went so cheerfully under fire at the time of the munitions explosion at Haskell, New Jersey, and took the best night photographs which were secured, though shells were falling all around his camera. Well, he's been at it again, and this time in the City of Brotherly Love, Philadelphia. They were receiving the Italian Commission there, you know, and of course the cameramen of the different Weeklies gathered like flies around a honey-pot. One in particular had aroused the ire of the redoubtable Bill on another occasion. "He put one over on me once at Columbia," says Bill, "and I made up my mind that here was my chance to get even." Even it is, and a bit to spare, for Bill came home with some absolutely exclusive pictures, and this is the way he did it.

"They were going to present a medal to some Italian whose son had been killed in the war," he says, "and there were about 25,000 people at the Columbus, or Colombo, Monument—I don't know which it is—to see them. Marconi was there and all the big guns, and the people were just crazy to see them. They made a circle around the monument and ringed it with mounted police, and I set up my camera in the cleared space in the middle."

"How did you get permission to go in there?" I asked.

"Oh! I didn't have no permission," said Bill quite cheerfully, "I just went in on my nerve—— Well, nobody paid any attention to the police or the roped-off space when the Italian bigwigs arrived. They surged in and there was the greatest mob you ever saw. They shoved me all over the place and nearly busted my camera, and I grabbed it and tried to force my way across to the cars of the Commissioners on the other side. I nearly spiked a lot of people with the tripod, and it was certainly a great mix-up for a while. I managed to get into Marconi's car, and I stood up with my feet on the cushions where he had been sitting, and started to take pictures of the jam. They couldn't present no medal, or have no speeches, or anything, and the police got mad and began to club a way through for the big Italians, and there were a lot of people lying around hurt—and it was one grand time generally. All the time I was grinding pictures, and when Marconi finally got back to his car, I refused to get out, so he had to find another. I got a fine close-up of him, and got even there with my cameraman friend, because he was boasting that he had got a fine close-up at the monument, and that I had nothing, and my picture is just as good as his.

"Well, I wanted to get rid of the other guys, so I pretended that I hadn't got nothing, and said that I was disgusted and that I was going over to the station and go home. But of course I really hung around for the doings next day. One of the still photographers told me that the others had all gone back to New York, so I knew this was my chance to get even for good. They had a big time all prepared at Independence Hall for the next day, and I stayed over and was the only cameraman present and got fine pictures of them presenting the medal and the reception and everything. One of the cops asked me if I wouldn't like the statue in Independence Square moved out of the way for me so I could get a beter view—so I suppose I must have acted as if I about owned things around there. I telephoned over to New York that I had pictures of the two events, but I didn't think they were much. And when Jack Cohn saw them he said they were simply great—so that shows you never can tell. Anyway, I got even with my camera friend. It reminded me of the story of the green reporter who was sent out to get the story of a wedding. When he got back they said, 'Well, where is the story of that wedding?' He said, 'There ain't no story—the bride shot herself.' That's what it reminded me of," said Bill.

THE second chapter of "The Gray Ghost" is called "The Mysterious Message" and refers to the telegram from the young Englishman Hildreth, to the Fifth Avenue jeweler, Arabin, which is intercepted by Williams, the jeweler's secretary, who is in the pay of the Ghost. The screen story follows pretty closely the original tale by Arthur Somers Roche, published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "Loot," adapted and produced by Stuart Paton.

Hildreth, the English attorney, is ready to go to New York, and Carlow commissions him to get a necklace worth two million dollars from Arabin in New York, saying that he will cable Arabin in code that Hildreth is coming.

On the steamer Hildreth receives word from Arabin that he will be unable to meet him at the dock, but will call at the Hotel Battenberg that night, where Hildreth's room is already engaged for him.

Meanwhile, The Gray Ghost reads the copy of the cablegram from Carlow, which says that Hildreth will arrive in New York on the 25th; that the necklace is to be delivered to him per order, he having Carlow's certified check for two million dollars. One of The Gray Ghost's men as a taxi-driver is sent on a commission at once.

Morn Light, in her dressing-room, awaits a message from Gray Ghost. Her maid watches furtively and closely; she appears to be a woman not to be trusted. The Gray Ghost arrives, first phones to some men and then proceeds to try to make love to the girl, but though he loves her, she hates him and eludes him at every turn.

Hildreth lands from the steamer and is met by a man who presents a card from Arabin & Company, and leads him to a taxi. But just as he is about to enter the machine, Hildreth suddenly remarks that he prefers to walk. Behind his back, the driver and the other man glare at each other.

In the Battenberg Hotel, other men are waiting. Hildreth learns that a room has been engaged for him by Mr. Arabin on the sixth floor, but when he gets up there he shudders as he looks down into the street—such a distance below—and tells the bellboy he thinks he will have to change his room. The men in the adjoining room hear his words and are furious. They manage to stand near Hildreth as he procures another room near the ground floor, so that they see the number of it. Then they phone The Gray Ghost at Morn Light's apartment of the change of rooms. The Gray Ghost curses them for bungling things.

William, private secretary to Arabin, but really a co-worker of The Gray Ghost, comes to the apartment and the former tells him of their disappointment. William is worried about having intercepted Carlow's cablegram, but The Gray Ghost merely nods grimly. The three crooks enter and The Gray Ghost flays them for their failure to do as ordered. He tells them of the two million dollar check and of the pearl necklace—he wants them both. Morn Light is fearful of what is going on. The Gray Ghost phones Hildreth that he is Arabin and is very sorry he couldn't meet him at the dock, but has booked seats for a show at the Brooks Theatre, after which they will have a supper party. He will be unable to go with Hildreth to the theatre, but will join him as soon as possible. Hildreth is delighted at Arabin's thoughtfulness.

Morn Light blames The Ghost for lying and saying that he is Arabin. She declares that she is going to telephone Hildreth. She picks up the telephone, and he grabs her. They fight, and he chokes her into submission as the picture fades out.

Fancy Shooting in "The Reed Case."

WHAT would you do if you went up to a lonely shack in the Adirondacks to recover from a nervous breakdown, and were greeted on your arrival by a bullet through your hat? Then having convinced yourself that it was an accident, how would you like to have two bullets come sniping through the window as you lay in bed and land in the headboard? That was the reception which awaited the young detective, Jerry Brennon, hero of the Butterfly Picture "The Reed Case," and the spectacular shooting which puts punch in the story, was done by Universal's modern William Tell—Ed Jones.

All the Universalites trust Jones to take pot shots at them whenever he feels inclined, for they have perfect confidence in his marksmanship. Allen Holubar, who wrote, directed and starred in the picture with Louise Lovely opposite, allowed Jones to put the bullet through his hat, and later to drive two shots through a pane of glass as he sat beside the window. He also feigned sleep while the two shots whizzed into the headboard of his bed.

"The Reed Case" is decidedly there with the punch. When ill health forces the young detective to leave town, he takes refuge in a mountain cabin. Crooks have been there before him, and have hidden the kidnapped niece of Senator Reed in a secret room. They have to get rid of the detective, so they try to scare him with fancy shooting. They fail, and after a lot of fighting, the picture ends in a pretty love story.

FARNUM CELEBRATES HIS PICTURE ANNIVERSARY

FRANKLYN FARNUM and Brownie Vernon are the stars of next week's Bluebird Photoplay "The Car of Chance," in which a young fellow "cut off without a shilling," makes his car earn a fortune and the girl of his choice. While this picture was being made, Farnum gave a dinner to a number of his friends from the Bluebird and Universal studios, to celebrate the anniversary of his picture debut. The dinner was given at a Los Angeles cafe on the evening of Decoration Day, for exactly three hundred and sixty-five days before the actor played his first scene for the camera—in a picture called "The Heart of a Showgirl" which was released as a special, and in which he played opposite Ella Hall.

Elmer Clifton, Farnum's new director, and the Nestor comedians, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, who live in the same club with him, were guests of honor at the party, and there were speeches, in one of which the host apologized to motion pictures for not taking them seriously at first, and failing to appreciate them at their true value. He was afraid he would miss the audiences to which he had been accustomed so long on the legitimate stage, and he had an uncomfortable feeling that pictures were a "comedown." But a month's experience of the life convinced him that he had never made a greater mistake, and now it would be impossible to persuade him to return to the stage. The regular hours, outdoor work, home life, steady work with no disappointments, no weeks of rehearsal for a play which proves a failure, as well as the enormous public to which the picture actor can appeal, and the pleasures of finding that personal popularity has not been lost but rather increased, have proved to one more actor the superiority of pictures to the speaking stage.

Universal Dora Has Recruited 1000 Men

Dora Rodrigues in uniform.

HURRAH for Dora Rodriguez!—Universal Dora, the girl who is traveling from New York to Universal City recruiting forty thousand men. Before she closed her triumphal engagement in Pittsburgh, in which she was assisted by the recruiting officers, an army and navy regiment, and the boy scouts, she had recruited her one thousand men. If sixty-nine other ladies as proficient as Dora had done the same thing, President Wilson would not have been forced to send out his call for seventy thousand volunteers as he did. While in Pittsburgh, Miss Rodriguez recruited 52 men. The Pittsburgh Dispatch gave her all the space that any national public character could desire, featured her recruiting on its bulletin board, and gave her the freedom of the city to use as she saw fit in her work.

J. B. Buchanan, the Universal cameraman in that territory, followed her about with his camera and got an elegant picture of her in the wonderful parade which marked her supreme effort in Pittsburgh. The negative was sent to New York and the print rushed back to her to use in her further recruiting along with the pictures of the army and navy which she carries, and on which she gives a very interesting lecture in connection with her appearances.

While in Pittsburgh, Miss Rodriguez met Ben Wilson, the star of "The Voice on the Wire" serial, who was making a whirlwind tour of the "Smoky City," and is jumping across the country much faster than Miss Rodriguez, to return to his work in another Universal serial. She states in a letter to Mr. Laemmle that she was very much pleased to make Mr. Wilson's acquaintance, and that he in turn added to her popularity by referring to her in every one of the speeches he made in the Pittsburgh moving picture theatres.

Miss Rodriguez is starting out bravely for her second thousand men, and with the experience behind her, and with the enthusiasm of the first thousand, she feels that that will be a very simple matter. The first objective of her march is Cincinnati, which she claims as her home town in America. She has wired on to her home for a new suit of clothes to be made for her, her present suit showing evidences of the wear and tear of the courageous journey that she is making. The new suit will be an exact replica of the United States service uniform, will be of the same material, color, cut and weight, although it will probably be the smallest service uniform ever made, for Dora stands just five feet in her socks. Yes, sir, she wears socks, too, and she is having a pair of army shoes made in 2½A.

Her route has already taken her from Newcastle, Pa., where she stayed two days to Beaver Falls, Pa., where she set up her recruiting tent in the Nixon Theatre, and aroused tremendous interest and enthusiasm. This week she is in Youngstown, Ohio, and next week will find her in Cleveland. A tremendous reception is being prepared for her, of course, in Cincinnati, where she has numberless friends, and where a sort of an "old home" week will await her.

A COMEDIAN AND HIS MOTHER.

MILTON SIMS, who plays opposite Gale Henry, Universal Joker comedienne, rushed back to his set a few days ago all smiles.

"What's happened?" asked Miss Henry, "did you get your salary raised?"

"No, but I just talked to my mother on the telephone—it is the first time I have heard her voice in over two years. She has just arrived from New York and called me up at once. Thank goodness she did not come out here and see me in this make-up for "Kitchenella," or I know she would have gone right back to New York.

"For Me and My Gal" Registers as a Song Hit

ANOTHER song hit has made its appearance. "Let's All Be Americans Now" delayed it for three weeks, because the time demanded a patriotic song hit instead of a sentimental one only, but now "For Me and My Gal" has made its appearance and amply justified itself. This is an adaptation of the well-known song by Edgar Leslie and E. Ray Goetz, and was directed by Harry Cohn with the well-known dancing stars, Gladys Clark and Henry Bergman, of the Winter Garden. Our illustration at the head of this page shows them signing a contract for the song with Ted Snyder.

DANIEL LEIGHTON DEAD.

Universal City, June 20.—Daniel Leighton, one of the cast of the new serial, "The Gray Ghost," died today of heart failure. The actor was making up in his dressing-room for his role in the serial, when he dropped dead, and was found by some of his fellow players. Leighton was thirty-seven years old, and the son of Horace Leighton, a famous Irish actor of the last generation. Leighton had had a long stage career before he became a screen player, and he had been at Universal City for some time. Beside his role in the serial, that of one of the henchmen of the "Gray Ghost," he played an important part recently in the Butterfly Picture, "The Phantom's Secret," in which Mignon Anderson was starred. In this photoplay he had a most remarkable makeup, for he was well known for his ability to make an interesting "mask." He also plays an important role in "The Woman Who Would Not Pay."

Leighton leaves a wife and child who were with him in California. He will be much regretted by his fellow players, and the sudden death made a deep impression at the picture city.

CANADIAN NOTES

By J. W. Cambridge.

HAMILTON, Ont.—David Stewart has assumed ownership of the Red Mill Theatre.

Mr. Stewart has a reputation of being one of the most successful showmen in Canada. Another notable feature about Mr. Stewart's success is that during the entire period of his exhibiting, he has stuck to Universal Films and Features and he has always stated that this was in a large measure responsible for his progress.

The Red Mill Theatre has been greatly improved and enlarged during the time that Mr. Stewart has been its manager and now as its owner it is quite within reason to state that further changes will be made for its betterment.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—A party of welcomers from the University of British Columbia gathered at the station to meet Professor O. H. Richardson of the University of Washington who was due to arrive here from Seattle. They reached the Great Northern station in good order and lined up to make the visiting professor feel at home. Presently a gentleman carrying a bag with the name Richardson hove in sight, the welcome party approached him, relieved him of his bag. "Professor Richardson?" they queried. "That's me," professor answered, and it was quite a time before the welcome party cleared up the mystery and discovered that the one they welcome was no other than Professor F. H. Richardson of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World.

Universal Office reports that the Pantagee Circuit has booked the new Current Events and Universal Comedies to run in their Victoria and Vancouver houses. Mr. Langley of the Vancouver office reports that they are going to put these pictures in all their houses in the West, including those in Winnipeg, Calgary and Edmonton.

CALGARY, Alta.—Mr. D. G. Walkley, president of the Film Exchange Managers Association of Albert, has announced that their association is going to strenuously fight the proposed Daylight Saving Bill for their territory and has enlisted the aid of exchange associations of Canada for a Dominion wide campaign of protest against the measure.

The association points out that it not only shortens the dark hours of the evening which tends to keep patrons away from the show but also confuses the time table for shipping the film.

Dorothy Phillips in "THE FIRES OF REBELLION"

WITH LON CHANEY AND WILLIAM STOWELL

Right—"You can do anything with two hundred dollars."

FIRES OF REBELLION" is the second Bluebird Photoplay to be produced by Mrs. Joseph de Grasse, better known to the profession as Ida May Park. In this case, she wrote her own story, and then directed it with the fine company composed of that famous trio, Dorothy Phillips, Lon Chaney and William Stowell, who have done some of the finest things on the Bluebird program this year. Many of the scenes were laid in a factory town of New England, and in order to reproduce the correct atmosphere, Miss Park took the company into the factory district of Los Angeles, where a large crowd became unintentional actors in the drama which was filmed there. Miss Phillips does some of her best work as the little heroine who is determined that her life shall not be that of the women whom she sees around her, living drab lives, little better than slaves. Her fire for rebellion is finally quenched, after a bitter experience in the city, and the ending is more than satisfactory.

Madge Garvey works in the Sackville Shoe Factory, where most of the inhabitants live out the daily round of their drab lives. She lives with her weak mother, and drunkard of a father, and hates the drudgery of her life, wondering why her mother puts up with it all.

Madge has a sister Helen, who is married to Dan Mallory, and Helen's life is a counterpart of her mother's. Dan has taken to drink, and is discharged from the shoe factory by John Blake, the new foreman.

Helen comes to her old home, full of anxiety. Dan has not been home all night, and she fears he may have come to harm. Her mother is afraid to sympathize until her husband has left. Madge pats her sister's shoulder in silent sympathy and leaves. Another day of work begins.

In the office of the Sackville Shoe Factory works Cora Hayes, a stenographer. She is self-conceited and vain, believing herself the recipient of admiration from all men. Cora condescends, however, sometimes to eat lunch with Madge, who proves a good listener to the tales of her conquests. Cora is telling Madge about John Blake, who has been called into the office that morning and complimented by the superintendent for his courage with the men, when suddenly a noise is heard at the other end of the yard.

It is Dan, drunk and threatening. He staggers about with a couple of his cronies, bragging of his contempt for Blake. The cronies point to Blake, who has come in. Mallory assaults Blake, but Blake knocks him down, together with his cronies, who spring to Mallory's assistance. Madge runs up. Blake is attracted by her sorrowful face. The two cronies pick themselves up, and Blake orders them to carry Mallory, still unconscious, to his home. Madge leads the way and Blake follows, hedged in by a mob of workers.

The doctor pronounces Dan dead, but says that the cause was heart failure from alcoholism, not the blow which Blake gave him. The mob yells and clamors, but Blake, unafraid, walks into their midst. Madge watches him, impressed by his strong will and bravery.

Now that Dan is dead, Helen, alone and miserable, comes back to live in her old home. Garvey is furious at this, but the prospect of Blake for a son-in-law appeases him, and Helen is allowed to remain. Blake at first comes on account of the bills incurred by Dan's death, which he has paid, but gradually it is evident that Madge alone brings to this home of squalor.

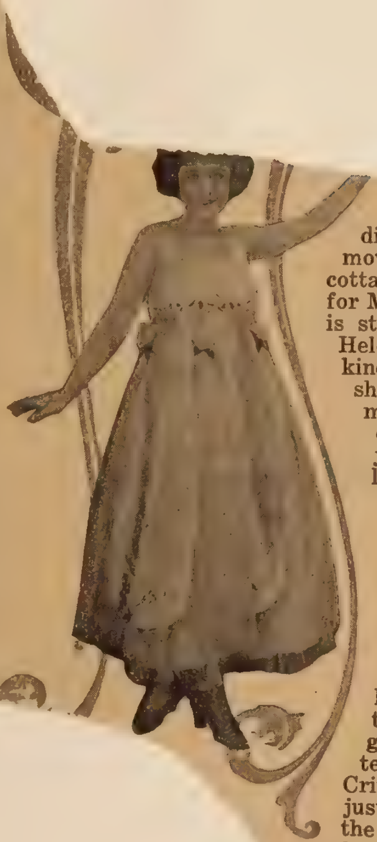
Madge receives another letter from Cora, who says that her boss is willing to give her the "once-over" for a new poster idea. She urges Madge to dress well and come to New York. Madge is determined not to become another slave, like her mother and sister, and decides to go. She thinks kindly of her father for the first time, as she counts the money she managed to save on the wedding clothes. Then she discovers that Blake had given her father the money. The wedding day arrives, and while Garvey and his wife get dressed, Madge weeps. Madge tells Helen of her plan, which is spoilt by her discovery. Helen pulls out an insurance check for $200. She gives this to Madge, and tells her to cash it in New York, and take with her Blake's money. Madge is grateful for Helen's sacrifice, and dresses in her old clothes, escaping by the window.

She arrives in New York safely, and is taken by Cora to her room. Later, when she is introduced to Russell Hanlon, Cora's boss, she is shy. Hanlon approves of her appearance, and takes her to Crinnell, the artist, where she is to pose for the poster. But when she sees the scanty costume she is to wear, she runs out.

That night Cora is surprised by Madge, who blames her for having misrepresented everything. Cora tells her that Hanlon has decided to alter the poster, and that he wants her to come to a little dinner party that evening. Madge goes out and has her first taste of wine. She begins to feel dizzy and sick, and the party is broken up, as Cora takes her home. All her money is gone, but she pawns her new clothes to send Helen the money to return to Blake.

Meanwhile



dies. Blake takes Helen, her mother and the baby to the little cottage he had kept as a surprise for Madge. And in New York Madge is starving. When Madge receives Helen's letter, telling of Blake's kindness and of the little cottage, she is driven to desperation. Almost mad, she goes to Hanlon's office and asks for the poster job. Hanlon tells her she is too late for that now, but he has a magazine ad for which she can pose. Madge accepts the offer. Later Blake discovers the "ad" in the magazine. He is shocked, and determines to bring her home. He secures her address from Helen and leaves for New York.

At the lodging house the landlady tells him she has gone in a taxi with a gentleman. Blake goes to Cora and forces her to tell him that Madge is at the Crinnell studio. He arrives there just in time to save Madge from the clutches of Hanlon, and takes her home. Next morning Blake tells Madge of the little surprise cottage waiting, and she nestles in his arms with a sigh of content.

A NEW LIGHTING MET

TIME was when a man lit his cigar on the moving picture screen and no flame appeared; no glow was reflected from the match. Only the smoke of the lighted cigar showed in the picture. The same time saw flickering candles and apparently lighted lanterns casting no beams, and scarcely a sliver even of light into the darkness. Back lighting, side lighting, overhead lighting and foots—all were required, and none of them sufficed. To the critically inclined they were all makeshifts, and such they were. It's all the fault of the camera. This treacherous instrument, so kind to some, so cruel to others, for a long time had the Indian sign on any light not cast by old Sol. The ingenuity of man minimized this shortcoming of the camera when the big Cooper-Hewitts came into existence. But a match was still a match to the camera, nothing more. This substitute for the sun has been a great boon to the movies, and has enabled New York and other aspiring movie centers to give sunlit California a run for her supremacy, but even the Cooper-Hewitt has its limitations. The Universal through its lighting experts has been working to overcome these drawbacks for several years and early this year it put into operation a new method for producing lighting effects which marks a tremendous step forward in picture art. It is the talk of all the Western studios as well as the admiration of all who see productions made at Universal City.

To John M. Nickolaus, Superintendent of Photography at the Universal Company's Pacific Coast studios, belongs the credit for the new discovery. And it is but one more honor, which the Universal heartily acknowledges when it calls him the most prolific inventor in the moving picture world. The new lighting method is but the most recent of his invaluable discoveries extending over six or seven years. Superintendent Nickolaus entered into a series of experiments with O. Elmore, Chief Electrician, which resulted in an entirely new and advanced method of making the light effects real in any picture taken by the new nvention in lighting has been so suddenly and is so far in of anything of its kind previ- operation, that to the director the picture in which the effects are used, it seems almost uncanny; when reproduced on the screen the director can hardly believe his eyes and marvels at the fact that after all the years of artificiality and crude methods in vogue something of practical use has become a reality.

"There is no doubt, whatever," said Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Manufacturing Company, after viewing a number of scenes in current productions in which the new lighting effects were shown with a vividness really startling, "that this new discovery will have the effect of making the pictures more interesting and it will certainly contribute an added attractiveness to the productions. Superintendent Nickolaus and Chief Electrician Elmore are to be warmly commended for their scientific achievement."

On the two centre pages appear a number of illustrations of the new lighting method. The first picture in the top line is Mr. Nickolaus,

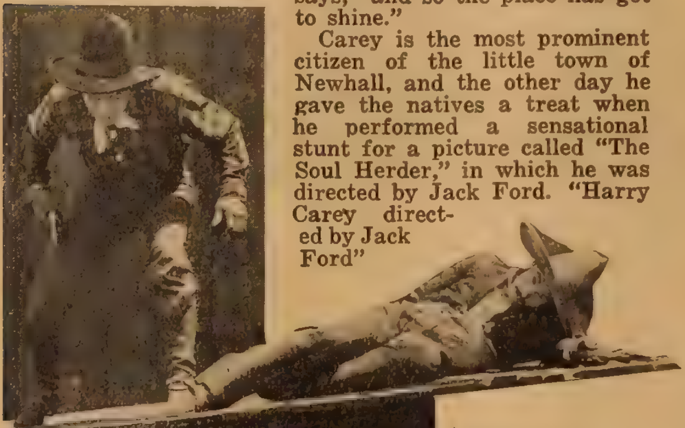
Why Carey Prizes Pete

By Marjorie Howard.

GREAT preparations are on at "Careyville," as Harry Carey calls his ranch at Newhall. The house is full of paperhangers and painters, and there are gardeners hard at work in the grounds. And all this because the actor's mother is coming on from New York to visit him, and he has not seen her for two years.

"But I remember that mother simply can't enjoy herself if things are out of order," he says, "and so the place has got to shine."



This sort of thing is all in the day's work for Carey.

Carey is the most prominent citizen of the little town of Newhall, and the other day he gave the natives a treat when he performed a sensational stunt for a picture called "The Soul Herder," in which he was directed by Jack Ford. "Harry Carey directed by Jack Ford" has a promising sound, and this promise is being fulfilled to the letter in the company which is producing pepful pictures for the program these days. When the Newhallites learned that the actor was to jump from the top of a building onto his horse, and make a getaway from the men chasing him for the film story, business was suspended for the day, and the whole countryside flocked into town as if there were a circus.

Scene from a coming Carey picture.

"Pete," the other actor in the scene, is nearly as famous as Carey himself in the neighborhood. He is the dapple-gray horse who appears with him in nearly all his pictures. When the crowd saw Pete lead in front of the building, they greeted him with applause. Then Carey was seen coming over the roof, and Ford cried "Camera!" Pete started, and at exactly the right moment, Carey came flying through the air, landed squarely in the saddle, and was away as his pursuers came after him, firing as they ran.

Harry Carey and "Pete."

Every one broke into applause, but Carey, waving his hat, cried out: "It's lunchtime and I'm going home!" Then he galloped over to his own house, and when the others came up, he was placidly enjoying his meal. The picture on this page is a "still' posed afterward for the camera, and gives only a slight idea of the thrill in the original scene.

Carey and Pete have worked together so long that they thoroughly understand each other and Pete will do anything required of him with very little urging. Just before they started on this picture called by the working title of "The Soul Herder," the actor had been teaching his horse a new trick. In one of the scenes, Carey was to drop with his horse, when his pursuers make the animal their target. In order to give realism to the incident, he had been teaching Pete to stop suddenly as soon as he heard several shots, fall to his knees, and roll over. After Pete had earned a lot of sugar, the new stunt was performed with success. Later, "Cheyenne" preaches a long sermon to his congregation of cowpunchers, who go to sleep while he is doing so. He wakes them with a few well-placed shots. Pete was outside the set, waiting to be used later,

A Humorous Scene in "Five Little Widows."

EDDIE LYONS AND LEE MORAN in

"Five Little Widows"

A NESTOR Two-Reel Comedy. Written and produced by Al Christie and starring the famous team of comedians in a tale of an engaged man and a Turkish harem to which he falls heir.

CAST.

Daniel Morgan	Harry Hattenberry
His Secretary	Eddie Lyons
Morgan's Daughter	Betty Compson
Mogul Hassan Pfeffer	Lee Moran

IT is most unusual for a Nestor comedy to run to more than two reels, but this one has the advantage of a story sufficiently good to stand it. In fact, it would have been impossible to tell it in less. Eddie Lyons is the recipient of a batch of Turkish trophies from a wealthy uncle, and Lee Moran is the Oriental personage who is sent in charge of them. Five of the prettiest girls on the lot are decked out in bifurcated garments, veils, beads and jewelry to play the "Five Little Widows."

Eddie loves old Morgan's daughter Betty, but her father says he can't support her. Eddie tells the old man that he will go in business for himself and make a fortune. He sets up a broker's office, and waits for clients. Betty tells him that she overheard her father telling some one to buy B. V. & D. Eddie does so, and the bottom drops out of the market. Then Betty finds out that father was ordering underwear, not stocks.

But Eddie had forgotten that he had a wealthy uncle in Turkey. One day he received a letter from him, saying that he was sending his nephew his Turkish treasures, as he could no longer safely keep them there on account of the war. Of course, Eddie fell for the treasures, and so did Betty's father and mother when he told them of the news. A few days later they arrived in charge of Mogul Hassan Pfeffer. Eddie went to meet them, and was flabbergasted to find that they were five beautiful wives. They insisted upon being taken to Eddie's home, though he had invited Betty and her mother there, and was afraid to take five girls to meet them. But Hassan's formidable sword compelled him. The girls were delighted with all they saw, and insisted upon embracing Eddie, much to his embarrassment. Just then Betty and her mother came in, and Eddie hustled the girls into the bedroom. But one of them came running out, and Betty's mother was furious. She would listen to no explanation, but took Betty home.

That night Eddie's engagement was to be announced at Betty's. He went home to dress, and found all the wives in his bed. He called Hassen and had them taken out so that he could dress for the party. They tried to go with him, but he escaped. They followed, however, and arrived in the midst of the party. At last Eddie was given a chance to explain that this was his uncle's harem. When Hassan opened the box he was carrying and showed all the jewels within, Betty and her mother were reconciled.

and as the man in the pulpit fired, he fell to the ground according to instructions.

"Carey's shot Pete!" cried the cameraman, and the scene broke up while there was a rush to the side of the horse.

"Hold on, boys!" shouted the actor. "Pete is all right—that's a new trick I've taught him. Get up, Pete, and show you're not a dead one."

Pete can dance a waltz, play policeman, jump through a hoop, ring a bell, and perform other tricks which qualify him for a headliner. He is a perfect glutton for work, and, though Carey has other horses, and a whole kennel of dogs, Pete has earned first place in his master's affections.

Carey and Ford are working on a five-reel picture written for them by George Hively ,and called by the attractive title "Joan of the Cattleland." It is good news that pretty Molly Malone will play the title role in this picture, which promises thrilling fight scenes and unusual riding. Carey is also being featured in a series, in which his favorite character, "Cheyenne Harry," will go through all sorts of adventures, in his own inimitable fashion, under the direction of Jack Ford, with whom Universal's favorite Western actor is doing some of the best work of his career.

the idea of seeing pictures during

FROM September to June, the average picture theatre owner gives an excellent imitation of a wilcat in action in his endeavor to keep old man Bum Business at a respectful distance. But with the coming of June, the exhibitor's heart turns to butter and is melted by the first rays of the hot summer sun. The result is that his opponent has things pretty much his own way.

As a matter of fact, there is no real reason why the moving picture theatre should not do almost as much business during the summer as is done during fall, winter and spring. If the public will tramp through mud, snow, slush and rain during the other three seasons to see its favorite form of entertainment, it can be induced to sit in the cool airdrome, or in the well-ventilated theatre during June, July and August.

If custom is keeping the public away, every advertising weapon available should be brought into play to either break or change it. The public should be told of the special advantages of seeing pictures during the warm period.

The cry of the efficiency experts who have studied the exhibitor's problems is that the showman must merchandise his theatre—that it is up to him to put his enterprise upon the same sound basis as does the merchant in any other field.

That these experts are correct is seen in the fact that there is hardly a single legitimate business that closes its doors during the summer months. Where seasonal changes are likely to have a bad effect upon business, the merchants liable to be influenced by these changes put their best foot forward and endeavor to overcome the harmful conditions. And the better the quality of salesmanship displayed by the merchants, the greater is the measure of their success.

The success of the exhibitor therefore depends upon the salesmanship he displays. If he is of the ribbon-counter type, he is content to hang around his lobby and wait for business to drift into his house. If he is of the aggressive insurance-agent type, he goes after his prospects, wherever they may be, and never lets up until he has thoroughly sold them on the merits of his proposition. Once sold, he makes it his business to see that they STAY sold.

There are many exhibitors who do a thriving business during the summer months because they make a special effort to land and hold the crowds throughout that period.

One exhibitor, for instance, made last summer as profitable as the previous spring had been because he got the local merchants to co-operate with him.

There was the case of the confectioner who was exceedingly anxious to get some of the ice-cream soda trade that was flowing into the largest drug store in town. This confectioner was located just half a block away from the theatre in question.

Calling upon the soda merchant, the exhibitor suggested that the former could get some exceedingly valuable advertising and succeed in building up a regular clientele by going after the trade of the people patronizing the picture theatre.

This could be done by giving every man, woman and child attending the theatre a coupon entitling bearer to a free ice-cream soda. The coupons were to be paid for the exhibitor at the rate of one cent for each one redeemed.

The day on which the coupons were to be distributed was to be known as "FREE ICE-CREAM SODA DAY." The advertising mediums were to be the screen, all printed matter issued by the exhibitor, and the confectioner's windows.

The exhibitor figured that although each ice-cream coupon redeemed cost a cent, it was worth that much to get photoplay patrons into his theatre on the days when business was at its lowest level. At most, it simply represented a few extra dollars spent on advertising.

The confectioner speedily saw that while his loss averaged about one-and-a-half cents per coupon redeemed, each coupon represented a possible permanent customer. It meant getting the crowd into the habit of coming his way.

It required but little argument to get the soda dispenser's consent to the plan, which was to remain in force for two weeks. At the end that period, however, the results proved so gratifying to both the amusement and represhment merchants that the "FREE ICE-CREAM SODA DAY" remained in force for the rest of the summer.

His first co-operative plan having proved a winner, the livewire exhibitor got in touch with the merchants selling the same brand of electric fans that kept his house cool. After pointing out to these electrical goods men that the fans were keeping the temperature of the theatre at least 20 degrees cooler than it was out in the open, he suggested that they arrange window displays of these fans containing announcements of the service and satisfaction they were rendering in his house. The merchants seized at the opportunity of using this idea, with the result that the exhibitor was given much free advertising that not only kept his house before the eyes of the public, but also caused the latter to really believe all he had to say concerning the coolness and comfort of the amusement emporium.

We cite the foregoing as an instance of how eager the local merchant is to get together with the theatre owner on anything that promises to bring business. Show him how to make a dollar and he will gladly help you make one. It is therefore up to the showman to study ways and means of inducing the business men in his community to work with him—and for him.

Co-operative plans can be used to wonderful effect in those rural towns which depend upon the farmers' trade. As a general rule, the Chambers of Commerce, or Boards of Trade in these communities are glad to work with the exhibitor on any idea that will bring the farmers to town for a day.

Consider the circus. It's a big event and nothing short of a disturbance of nature can keep the crowds away.

The live-wire showman can use this intense desire upon the part of the public to be amused to good effect. One exhibitor, located about sixty miles from Albany, not only made use of this idea, but also won the everlasting gratitude of the merchants in the community.

Calling upon the trade body which contained the foremost merchants in town, the theatre owner suggested that a special effort be made to get the farmer folk to come to town other than on a Saturday.

Proceeding to outline this plan, the exhibitor advised that this day be known as "FREE MOVING PICTURE DAY." Naturally, free admission to the theatre would be confined to the out-of-towners.

This could be done by having a man equipped with a Ford, distribute, or "peddle" as it is known in that section of the country, circulars containing the details of "FREE MOVING PICTURE DAY." On these circulars, coupons admitting two or three people would be printed and the people desiring to see the free show would be required to present the tickets at the door.

It was the showman's idea to have the circular contain a number of special bargains offered by the merchants co-operating on the plan. Seasonable goods at marked-down price would act as an additional incentive for the thrifty farmers and their better halves to come to town. Futhermore, the exhibitor suggested the savings these bargains entailed be totalled up so that the out-of-towner be shown that instead of losing whatever money the day meant to him in labor, helping celebrate "FREE MOVING PICTURE DAY" would actually find him ahead in cold cash.

Naturally, the merchants to whom the foregoing was presented demanded to know wherein the showman hoped to benefit. The latter promptly explained that he was willing to rent his theatre, together with the services of his attaches and himself, to the Board of Trade. His own compensation was to be based upon his Saturday profits.

A little calculation proved that the cost of this proposition would mean but a few dollars to each merchant on the Board of Trade body. The publishers of the local papers were called in and they promised to support the plan in their colmuns. One of the newspapermen went so far as to suggest that a prize, in the form of merchandise, be offered for the best esay on "What Moving Pictures Mean to Me," written by the feminine members of the farmers' families.

The date for the big event was set four weeks off, to permit the working

Seeds of Redemption

HOW the innocent theft by a baby of a string of pearls, which she takes for seeds and plants in garden nearly caused a tragedy, is the theme of "Seeds of Redemption," which was written and produced by Robert F. Hill and stars Claire Mersereau, the younger sister of the well-known Bluebird star.

Rita Ashley is the guest of Mrs. Warren, but she is expected to put in most of her time taking care of the little girl. Jack, the son, is the only one who pays much attention to her. Cora Maitland is the other guest, with designs on Jack. She tells Rita that her clothes are getting positively shabby. Rita then refuses to appear at the musicale that night, and Cora offers to buy her a gown. Rita rather angrily refuses.

Thomas Houpe is a young man with a curious position in society, who lives by a refined form of blackmail. He needs money, and reads in the paper of the house-party at the Warrens. He sees Cora's name among them, and sends word to her which compels her to go with him. At his rooms he tells her that it ought to be worth something to her to keep her past from Jack Warren.

In the Warren home, Rita is playing with the baby. They go into the garden and watch the planting of seeds. Rita tells the baby that flowers will grow from them. Jack returns and gives the baby a package, which she hides in Rita's room. That night Rita is dressing for the musicale in her old gown. The baby says that Santa Claus will be angry if she doesn't wear his gown. She opens the closet door and there is the box. Rita puts on the frock and goes down. Jack proposes to Rita, who asks him to be very sure before announcing their engagement. In the meantime, the baby is searching in Cora's room and finds her string of pearls. She thinks they are seeds, takes them out in the garden and plants them.

Later in the night Houpe and his pal come to the house with the intention of robbing it, and Cora lets them in. They chloroform Mrs. Warren, and are searching her room, when Jack, hearing a noise, comes in with a gun. Houpe trips Jack, who falls, and then shoots. Houpe falls dead. Rita awakens and comes in; she revives Mrs. Warren. The whole house is aroused and the police summoned.

The following morning the missing pearls bring new complications, as the police think it is an inside job. Cora says that it is strange that Rita should wear a new gown the night the pearls were missing, as she has no income. Jack, who has bought the frock, remains silent, as he fears to compromise the girl. As they are about to accuse Rita, the baby enters and says that Rita fibbed, as the pearls have not come up. She takes Jack out the garden and shows them to him. Cora leaves the house, and Jack announces his engagement to Rita to his mother.

promptly thought it Mary's, and ordered her from the house. To protect Ruth, Mary took the child and set out in the direction of the fort.

Fraser later tried to arrest Buck in the saloon, and a terrific battle ensued, during which the log building caught fire and was burned to the ground. The lieutenant was severely wounded and was rescued from the flames by a troop of soldiers, who were summoned by the shots and fire. Buck escaped through a window and immediately wrought up the Sioux Indians, who with their war paint on, started to sweep over the prairie. They met Mary as she was fleeing with the baby, and surrounding her, were about to murder her, when Buck saw the child. His white blood for once aroused, he fought the angry and blood-thirsty Indians, keeping Mary behind him, where they desperately struggled until rescued by Fraser and his troop. Buck was fatally wounded and died after being forgiven by Mary.

Meanwhile, Jack had come to Andy's cabin to warn him of the Indians and was happily surprised to find Ruth there. Andy, seeing him, and believing him the betrayer of Mary, managed to rise and, grappling with Jack, was about to strike him with a bowie knife, when Ruth in a frenzy threw herself before Fraser and told her father she was Jack's wife and it was their baby Mary took away. Andy was then pacified.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS

HERE is a feature that will appeal to the masses as well as the classes. If you have any mills or factories in your town make a special effort to reach the worker and their families.

Have some throwaways printed as follows and see that they are distributed in the vicinity of the factories—noon hour would best accomplish this and get best results.

Which do you prefer?
Honest labor or sinful ease?
"FIRES OF REBELLION"
Answers this burning question at the (name) Theatre (day and date)

Have a young woman dressed as a mill hand pass out cards on your principal streets, reading:

Don't let the "FIRES OF REBELLION" guide you wrongly! Profit by my experience. See me at the (name) Theatre (day and date)

If practicable, place a whistle, similar to those used at factories, and connected with a compressed air tank, in front of your theatre. Blow this whistle at fifteen-minute intervals. Have a sign on it, reading: The Whistle Calls You—It Warns You—See "FIRES OF REBELLION" Here To-day.

Then use your regular mailing list with the attached copy. It will get results.

> I want you to see my latest production, "FIRES OF REBELLION," which Manager (name) is to show at the (name) theatre on (day and date).
> I consider Madge Garvey as absolutely the best role in my whole photoplay career. And its a wonderful story. One that teaches a lesson every one should know.
>
> My supporting cast is superb and the photography is simply exquisite.
> If you miss it you are losing a rare treat.

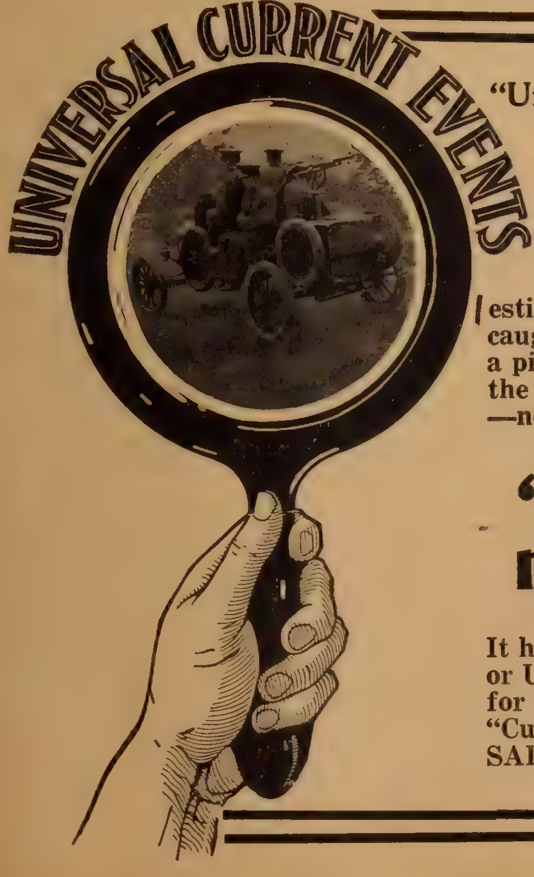
ADVANCE NOTICE

Jack Mulhall in "High Speed." With Fritzi Ridgeway. Five-Reel Comedy-Drama. Eleventh Butterfly Picture. Directed by George Sargent. Released July 16. Pork! Inspiration of backwoods congressmen; the crest of certain American nobility. Pork! To thee we sing. Not to plebian pork chops, but to pork as she is packed. In other words pork that is spelt in millions, which in turn makes its possessors purse proud and puffed with—pork. That was all that was the matter with Fritzi's mamma. So she sent Fritzi to a fashionable school and the smiling, happy girl came home with a finish that almost finished her poor old dad. She had acquired a blase manner and a languid air that drove her mother into a near trance of admiration, but which made dad sadly long for the little girl she had been. Besides, dad was strong for Jack King, known to his friends as "Speed," because—well, the reason is obvious, and dad didn't see how Speed could fall for anything as slow as Fritzi had become. But mamma had other plans. Count Englantine was her choice for a son-in-law, but that was before Speed saw Fritzi. In two weeks, just to make good his nickname, he had proposed and been accepted. Still Fritzi didn't wake up, and just for the effect it might have Speed suggested that they elope. Father was in on the plan, but Fritzi was so slow that mamma got next and sent her back to the count. Then things began to happen and your audiences will be given real entertainment in this wonderful Butterfly. It goes with "speed," believe me. There's more pep and ginger and suspense and good fun mixed up with strong dramatic situations than you usually see in five reels. Book this, good people, and play it up strong. It will make a hit and bring you friends and coin as well.



"Universal Current Events" is the big feature that will draw the men folks out to your theatre. It has an equal magnetic force to the women—but get the man and the chances are he will bring his entire family.

"Current Events" holds up to human eyes modern events that will be written into history. It cuts out all the uninteresting parts and shows the actual dramatic punch of the event caught while it is actually happening. It is more fascinating than a pictorial section of a newspaper or magazine, because it shows the full feature with the characters completing the actual event—not special poses.

"Current Events" has made a Whale of a Hit

It has no connection with either the Universal Animated Weekly or Universal Screen Magazine. It is an entirely new opportunity for Exhibitors which should not be missed by any one. Book "Current Events" through any Universal Exchange, or UNIVERSAL CURRENT EVENTS, 1600 Broadway, New York.

A NEW LIGHTING METHOD.

in the act of lighting his cigar with a common match. This effect is reproduced on the screen with regulation motion picture speed in the same way that it appears in this picture. Every bit of the light illuminating his face comes from the "match" which Mr. Nickolaus holds in his hand.

The second picture is an illustration of the use of the new light in an ordinary lantern. The third shows Louise Lovely reading a book without difficulty from a light thrown from an ordinary table lamp, with the new lighting system. The centre illustration is of the same kind as the first, showing Herbert Rawlinson as he appears in the great Universal state rights feature, "Come Through," which is playing to unusual business at the Broadway Theatre, New York, now. The other pictures on the top row also show similar uses of this wonderful effect.

In the bottom line the first illustration shows the adaptation of the system to outdoor lighting. The second illustration shows how realistic an effect can be obtained with all of the light in the picture centered in the lamp over Dorothy Phillips' head. The three next illustrations show Mr. Nickolaus and Mr. Elmore experimenting with the light, and the last picture is one of Gypsy Hart enjoying the same light from a floor lamp.

The new lighting system has not only revolutionized lighting effects, but it has been the means of making a number of stories possible which were hitherto impossible.

Now that the picture is released, on the market and "over" properly, there is no danger in telling a little tale about "The Phantom's Secret." At the time this Butterfly Picture was under consideration at the Coast there was the unanimous opinion that a tremendous railroad wreck was absolutely necessary to put it over properly. Mr. R. H. Cochrane, who was there at the time, called Mr. Nickolaus into consultation, and referring to the lighting discovery which Nickolaus had just made and put into operation, he asked him if he could not arrange a lighting effect which would serve all of the purposes of an expensive railroad wreck, especially in view of the fact that the wreck was supposed to take place in a tunnel.

"By Jove!" said Nickolaus, "I think that that can be done. It would 'make' the picture."

He went to work on it, and in a few days returned to Mr. Cochrane with a plan which, if you are curious, gentle reader, you may see realistically depicted in the extraordinarily successful Butterfly Picture, "The Phantom's Secret." As Nickolaus said, it was "made" by a lighting effect, and some fifteen to fifty thousand dollars' worth of busted railroad paraphernalia was saved to the company. And what is more important, you would swear that the wreck actually took place.

The grandfather enters the laboratory to find Vitez working with the strong-box. He holds him up, but when the foreigner makes a move toward him, and he fires, no sound is heard, the musket is too old. Vitez sneers and, springing upon the old man, begins to choke him. Tommy, having grabbed his sword, has sneaked down quietly after his granddad. Vitez slams him over against a bench and continues his work. Tommy, however, tells him he is a scrapper, and picks up the bottle of explosive. Vitez is horrifiefid. Tommy hurls the bottle on the floor and a terrible explosion follows.

When Kate, Dick, the captain and the policemen enter the room, they find Vitez dying. Tommy, though injured, is trying to help his grandfather from the laboratory. A week later, Tommy sadly tells his grandfather that he knows he hasn't much chance of ever being a hero now that he is injured, but he changes his mind when the colonel, the captain and the sergeant visit him to present him with a medal, upon which is inscribed "To a Little Hero, from His Regiment."

Dan Russell, most genial of comedians, is working on an L-Ko in two reels, which bears the suggestive title of "Suits and Suitors." A fashion display in which some of the handsomest girls in Los Angeles took part makes a part of this picture, and the cost of the production may be imgained as the dresses they wore were made by Lucile of New York, London and Paris. Dan does some of his funniest work in the picture, which is directed by Noel Smith, and in which Gladys Varden plays the ingenue.

DODGING THE SUMMER SLUMP

up of an aggressive advertising campaign. When the big day finally arrived, even the oldest inhabitants were compelled to admit that it had any circus day they had ever seen, backed off the boards.

"Summer Night Parties" enabled another exhibitor to do a good business during the hot spell last year.

This showman knows practically everybody in his community and is in touch with all the social, fraternal and religious organizations. Recognizing the clan instinct in the crowd, he set aside certain nights on which the photoplay patron could attend the show with the knowledge that the audience would be composed of people belonging to the same organization of which he or she was a member.

"Masonic Night," therefore attracted the Masons and their auxilary, the Eastern Star. "Elk's Night," brought out the members of that organization, while "Red Cross Night," found the house jammed with the people enrolled in that body, etc. At the same time, those people who were affiliated with no particular organization attended because of their desire to see moving pictures, so that the holding of the special nights had absolutely no harmful effect so far as the ordinary individual was concerned.

The ideas mentioned in the foregoing can be worked by the majority of exhibitors. The big city showman may doubt their efficiency in his particular case, but a little study will show him how to give them the twist that will enable him to put them to work.

After all, the big city is simply a number of small communities linked together. While the residents of these communities pride themselves upon their civic patriotism, their own little section gets the major part of their interest and affection. This is proven by the fact that practically every one of the separate communities possesses its own merchant body.

The exhibitor who desires to put to work the suggestions outlined in this article, should bear the foregoing in mind. Let him forget the big city and regard the community as a separate town of moderate population.

Where this is done, and the exhibitor displays the same aggressive salesmanship in going after business as is displayed by the live-wire merchant, the summer slump won't mean a blame thing in his young life.

A number of exhibitors have in mind the idea of raising their price five cents for night shows and not charging any war tax, paying it themselves.

"Dolly, dear, I just made $20,000 easy money. Let's elope to Mexico."

"Bombs and Bandits"

L—KO Two-Reel Komedy. Directed by A. Jaescheke, under supervision of J. G. Blystone. Featuring Sammy Burns in a mixture of Mexico, money, murder, machines and marauders, which must be seen to be appreciated.

A JAESCHEKE says he is responsible for "Bombs and Bandits," an L-Ko supervised by J. G. Blystone, and in which Sammy Burns and Dolly Dimples have a series of adventures which culminate in a fiery death for Sammy and an eleventh-instant rescue for the girl. The plan is as follows:

The Mayor and the Chief of Police have offices in the same building and are both enamored of the chief's stenographer. She has entangled their middle-aged hearts in her curls and both are determined to win her. Dolly, in the meantime, gives most of her attention to young Sammy, secretary to the Mayor, a dashing young blade who wears the loudest socks in town.

The two old chaps each wager ten thousand dollars on the winner of fair Dolly's hand. Each is sure that he is betting on a cinch. They place their money with Sammy, telling him to take it to the bank for them. The temptation is too great. Sammy calls Dolly and tells her that he has just made $20,000 easy money, and invites her to beat it to Mexico with him. She agrees, and they start in his car.

It is a dull day for Ignatz Tamale and his bandits, for no one has been either killed or tortured thus far, since sunrise. When Sammy and Dolly appear in their car, they fall an easy prey to the bandit chief, who decides to hold them for ransom. He sends a wire to the Mayor, telling him that he is holding the secretary and the stenographer. The Mayor and the Chief remember their ten thousand dollars simultaneously. The call out the police, the railroad cops and the aerial patrol and all set out for Mexico.

Dolly and Sammy are in a room made of steel, the walls of which are gradually closing in on them. The only open wall leads to a pit of flame. They are pushed nearer and nearer the terrible death. As the hours go on and the ransom money does not arrive. At last, just as they are about to skid over the edge, the advance guard of police arrives. The bride is saved from a fiery death, but Sammy is heartlessly left to be pushed over the edge.

L-KOMIUMS.

Vin Moore has just completed a schoolroom picture called "Blackboards and Blackmail in which the board of education of a village town unwittingly hire a vampire to teach the young idea how to shoot.

A County Fair racetrack figures in the coming L-Ko, called "Vamping Reuben's Millions," which Dick Smith is working on at present. He has taken Eddie Barry under his wing, and is featuring him in this komedy. The whole technical force of the L-Ko studio was called in to complete the racetrack set on time. The plans for it were sent on from New York, and were drawn by the architects Collins & Collins.

"CHINA AWAKENED."

Powers' Hy Mayer Travelaugh.

Based on Remarkable Scenes from the Dorsey Expedition.

The Yangtze River is the scene of the commencement of this combination of Doctor Dorsey, with the inimitable art of Hy Mayer. We see steamers leaving Ichang for Hankow. The scene then changes into a cartoon. A pagoda at Ichang towers seven stories in height, while the houses of the poor are poor and low. Drawings are interspersed with the pictures. Great junks transport the commerce on the broad waters of the river.

"THE MAD STAMPEDE."

Big U Drama.

Based on the poem "Lasca," by F. Desprez.
Directed by J. Farrell MacDonald.
With Jane Bernoudy.

John is thinking of the past, when two cowboys appear. He tells them the story of Lasca. Years before he had ridden the range in Texas and loved the girl, who was as fearless as a man. She was always laughing, except when he made her jealous by attention to other women. Once when he flirted with a pretty Mexican she stabbed him in the shoulder. Then one day they rode off. Beside their camp-fire they forgot everything but each other. Suddenly the Texas norther was upon them, and the cattle all around them were stampeded. There was but one thing to do, to try to keep ahead of them. Both on one horse they fled before the herd. But it was useless. John knew that the only thing that could save them was to shoot the horse and crouch under its body, taking their chance. He attempted to carry out the plan, but the horse ran away and he was thrown and hurt. Lasca then fell over him, and with her body protected him from the hoofs of the cattle. When they had passed and he regained consciousness, she was dead. He buried her there on the plain, and never forgot her.

At first he is frightened, but he sees the curls under her cap and calls her attention to a policeman. She leaves in a hurry. She regains her courage and enters a saloon. She crawls under a table and hears three crooks planning a job. She hears their names, and determines to follow them and be a great gunman. She is arrested as suspicious on the way, and taken to the station. Here she says that she is "Daredevil Dan, the Dangerous Dago," but her curls again betray her. Her mother misses her and comes to the station. Mary Ann is scolded and released, and decides that she will be a cop as they are mostly all Irish.

Feature Release in the Universal Program of Two Weeks from This Week

Harry Carey in "Six Shooter Justice." With Claire Du Brey. Three Reel Gold Seal Western Surprise Drama. Directed by Fred Kelsey. Released July 17. Claire and her father, on the way to a new mining "strike," get lost and wander into Jawbone, a disreputable desert camp. Here Claire meets a good-looking "bad man," Mike, and a bad-looking "good" man, Cheyenne Harry. Mike volunteers to guide Claire and her dad, and incidentally has his eyes on the old man's coin. The party get lost in the desert and finally stumble on a water hole. It is marked "poisoned," but Mike removes the sign and after drinking the water the old man dies. Harry in the meantime is worrying about Claire, who has plainly shown her preference for Mike. So he takes a ride into the desert and finds them. They return to Jawbone, where Mike tries to do Harry up. In one of the grandest little fights ever filmed Harry gets the best of the situation, and it doesn't take long to open Claire's eyes to the fact that she had been wrongly judging the two men by surface appearances, and that Harry is worthy of the final close-up and fade-out. A wonderful Western picture. Boost it.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in "A Dark Deed." With Edith Roberts. Nestor Comedy Scream Directed by L. W. Chaudet. Released July 17. Just because Eddie loved Edith was no reason why he should want her to follow her own sweet will in all things. So when she began taking lessons in Hindoo Magic from a celebrated Swami, Eddie decided he'd stop it. He induced Lee to impersonate the guy from East India's coral strand and then the fun began. The police were after an East Indian faker and raided the house. The climax and the final punch in this clever comedy will win every audience that sees it.

Cleo Madison in "The Web." With Jack Nelson and Gretchen Lederer. Two Reel Cleo Madison Feature. Underworld Drama. Directed by Geo. Cochrane. Released July 19. Cleo loved jewels and didn't hesitate to appropriate any she found lying around. Careless Cleo. She and Joe were pals on this, so when Cleo met Jack—Joe was peeved. However, Jack introduced Cleo into a wealthy home, where she got the combination of the jewel safe. As Joe emerged from the house one dark night with the jewels in his kick, a mysterious hand nabbed them. Cleo accused him of the double-cross. Then Jack appeared with them, giving them to Cleo to keep for him. With this as a starter there is worked out one of the cleverest plots you ever saw, and with a punch-ending that will send the fans home happy.

William Franey in "He Had 'Em Buffaloed." One Reel Joker Comedy Haw-Haw. Directed by Wm. Beaudine. Released July 21. The boys in a bum western town elect Bill, a bum, sheriff, just for a joke. Trouble starts in a dance hall and Bill takes refuge in the old stagecoach in the yard. He goes to sleep and on waking finds that the stage is on its way with a shipment of gold. The stage is held up and Bill's dander rises. In one of the funniest burlesque scenes ever filmed, he captures the robbers, saves the coin and grabs a girl, all by himself. A humdinger comedy, if ever there was one.

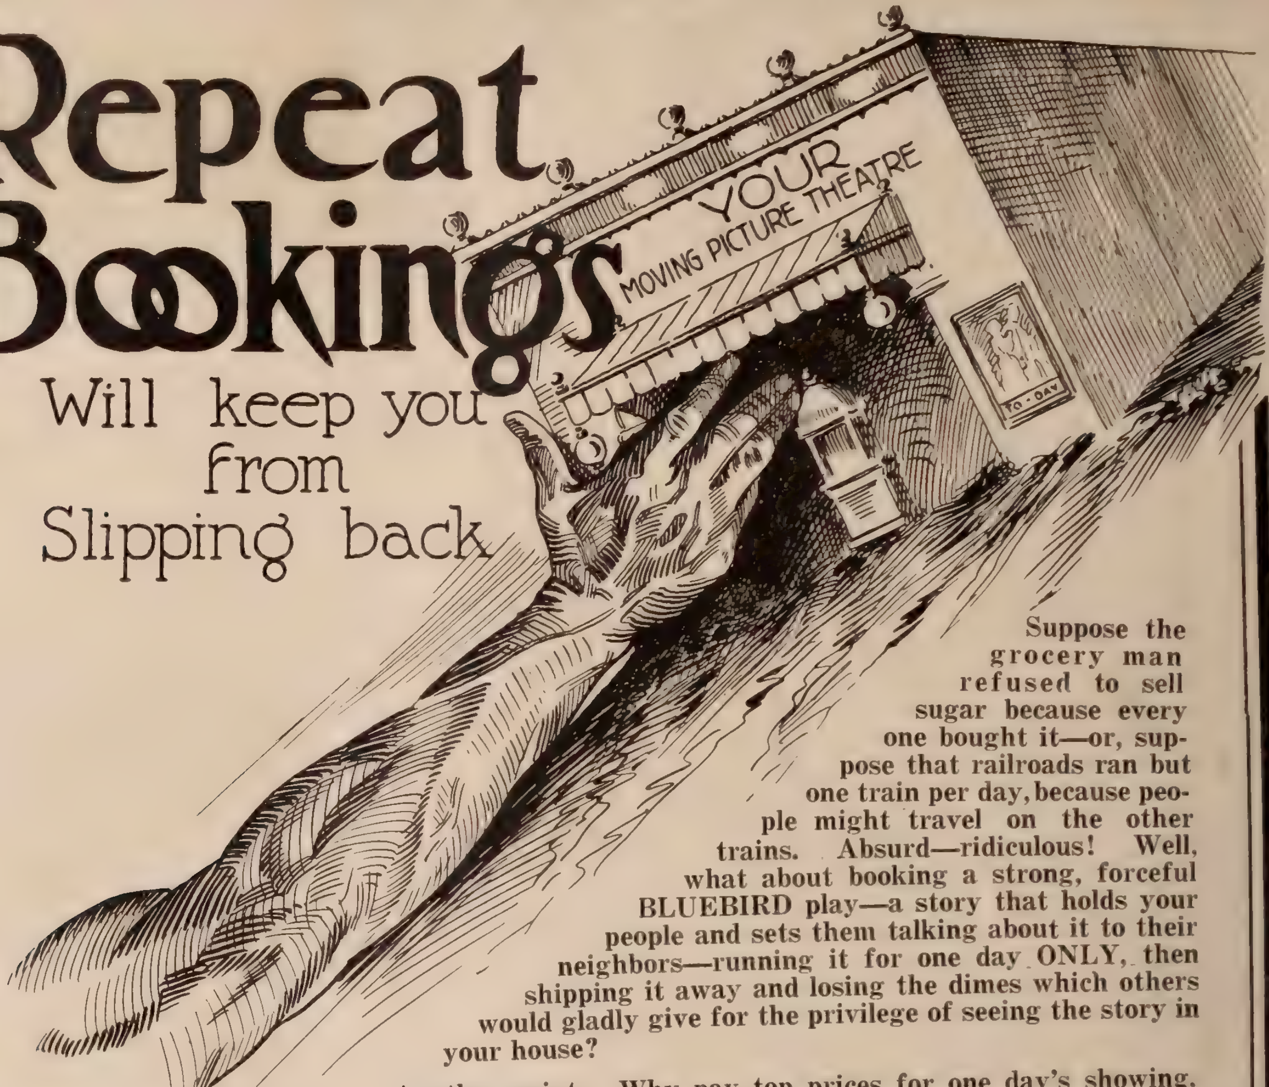
Repeat Bookings

Will keep you from Slipping back



Suppose the grocery man refused to sell sugar because every one bought it—or, suppose that railroads ran but one train per day, because people might travel on the other trains. Absurd—ridiculous! Well, what about booking a strong, forceful BLUEBIRD play—a story that holds your people and sets them talking about it to their neighbors—running it for one day ONLY, then shipping it away and losing the dimes which others would gladly give for the privilege of seeing the story in your house?

Another point: Why pay top prices for one day's showing, when by booking repeat you get the benefit of a sliding scale of prices. Are profits so large—is business so rushing that you can afford to lord it over your patrons—telling them what they shall see and when? If it isn't true that you are independent of profits and patrons then investigate REPEAT BOOKINGS.

Tyrone Power and Lois Weber in "The Eye of God"

An unusual drama of gripping power and big scenes of intense action. Written and produced by Lois Weber, producer of "Where Are My Children?" "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," "Even As You and I," and many other great film successes.

Harry Carey in "The Three Godfathers" Most remarkable outdoors picture ever produced. From the Saturday Evening Post story by Peter B. Kyne. A living expression of human life that leads through every human emotion.

Mary MacLaren in "Shoes" Produced by the genius, Lois Weber, producer of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," etc. A BLUEBIRD masterpiece—a chapter from the life of a girl who sold herself for a pair of shoes. A powerful story; a wonderful production.

Don't Ponder START A BLUEBIRD DAY

From New York to Portland, Ore., is a long stretch. But H. W. Pierong, manager of the Strand Theatre, took to heart our advice to "START A BLUEBIRD DAY"—and here is his letter telling of his results:

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.,
New York City:

Gentlemen—When people disregard the title of a picture and the star appearing in it and plank down their money because of its BRAND NAME, it's a safe bet that that particular brand is a good one to tie up with. We've had people call us up on the phone and ask about the attraction of the day. If it's an ordinary feature, we have to tell the inquirers its name and the star featured in it. IF IT'S A BLUEBIRD ALL WE SAY IS, "WE ARE SHOWING A BLUEBIRD TODAY!" The result is almost always the exclamation, "That's fine!" In conclusion we will say this: The Strand Theatre will continue to show BLUEBIRDS just as long as their present quality is maintained.

Here is all we need to say about "Come Through" —From the

THE MORNING TELEGRAPH, SUNDAY, JULY 1, 1917.

"COME THROUGH" DECLARED TO BE CENSOR-PROOF

"Come Through," George Bronson Howard's big screen drama, which has just closed its two weeks' run at the Broadway Theatre, is expected to develop into one of the most popular State rights features that the Universal has ever issued.

On the day that the picture began its run Stanley V. Mastbaum purchased exclusive rights for eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey with the declaration that he expected to do a record business with the Howard story. The officials of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company are also considering propositions from other well known operators in this country and abroad. Special showings have been arranged for these buyers, following the Broadway engagement.

The reviews and press notices of "Come Through!" have been so generous in their praise that widespread interest has been aroused among exhibitors without any special effort being made to attract them. Suspense is employed throughout the story with effect, and despite the fact that much of the action transpires on the threshold of the underworld the bounds of good taste have not been overstepped, and it has not been necessary to eliminate a single scene out of deference to the censors. Members of the National Board of Review have declared that the feature will get by every board of censorship in the country without difficulty.

"COME THROUGH" is the only film play shown on Broadway this year that has received the enthusiastic and unqualified endorsement of every critic in Greater New York.

Direct Bookings Accepted

"COME THROUGH" is the work of that master of melodrama, George Bronson Howard. DIRECT BOOKINGS WILL BE ACCEPTED—until further notice—IN ALL UNSOLD STATE RIGHTS TERRITORY.

A Wonderful State Rights Opportunity

Positive proof of the pulling power of "COME THROUGH" is your assurance of the way YOU can present this marvelous picture to the Exhibitors in YOUR territory. Apply to any Universal Exchange for DIRECT BOOKINGS—For STATE RIGHTS address State Rights Department.

SHOWING OUR

(No. 184. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

WHEN some one who knows more than we do says something that we don't quite understand, we sometimes laugh to cover our ignorance. But we succeed only in showing our ignorance plus our gold teeth.

When President Wilson said that the bad business conditions which prevailed some time ago were not due to any real cause, but rather to a "phychological depression," people laughed and thus showed their gold teeth. They simply didn't know what he meant.

As time passed, however, they began to get the drift of it. They saw that business was bad simply and solely because business men were afraid that the unsettled conditions would tend to make it bad. This in spite of the fact that the people had great gobs of money and were willing to spend it when their fears were allayed and they were properly soothed and solicited.

In other words the business depression was caused by fear, and fear is no tangible thing but only a state of mind. And psychology is nothing but the workings of the human mind. And therefore the bad business conditions were, as President Wilson said, a "psychological depression." And there you are!

The moving picture theatre man is now confronted with exactly similar conditions, and he has no one but himself to blame. There is no real cause for poor box office receipts in the summer time. A poor business in the summer time in this business is nothing but a "phychological depression" and you can lick the tar out of it if you only determine to do so.

People stay away in summer time because you expect them to stay away. During winter months you promptly increase your advertising when business falls off a little. You also see that your house is kept warm and cozy.

The same common sense applied in summer time will work exactly as well. If you will take just as much care—or even more—to get a good show in summer time and advertise it just as thoroughly as in the winter time, you'll make money.

If you will constantly hammer it home to your patrons that your theatre is kept cool in the hot months (and then keep your promise) you will educate them up to the point where they will attend just as regularly as in the winter time.

The Universal has selected the very cream of its huge reserve supply of pictures to release this summer, to give you something extra good. If you will book these and then ADVERTISE WITH ALL YOUR MIGHT AND MAIN you will not only make money but help to prevent any kind of a depression.

If you are too hot to think this thing over, you'll probably laugh it off. But the laugh won't be on me.

Don't Fritter It Away!

A Message to Exhibitors Assembled in Convention At Chicago

By CARL LAEMMLE,

President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

DON'T fritter away this convention. That is the one word that I want to bring to the exhibitors of America assembled for their annual convention in Chicago. I don't think you are going to fritter it way ,and I don't say it because I consider that other exhibitor conventions have been frittered away. Every convention has had its part in the wonderful development of this business.

I say it because this convention is the most important exhibitors' convention ever held. This is the most important week of the entire year for the exhibitors, and this is the biggest year we ever saw, too. There are more important questions to be decided in Chicago this year than have ever occupied the attention of an exhibitor's body before. But they are very important to the other element of the business as well. The producers will all have their eyes upon Chicago during the convention. So will the distributors, and so also will the supply men, the trade paper men, and the players. What you say, what you do, what you accomplish, and what you leave undone, are all going to be eagerly watched.

IT'S A WINNER!

IT is well to bear in mind at such a time the important position that the motion picture industry occupies among the other industries of the world. President Wilson in a special message told the country how much he thought of the industry as a whole, and how much good this industry could be in the trying times in which the country finds itself. President Wilson is a thorough student of the motion picture. He has followed it as few public men have done, and he has a peculiar realization of the potential strength and wonderful possibilities which moving pictures present. I hope that his message to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be read at your convention. I know that the exhibitors of this country are loyal Americans to the core, and that they will do everything in their power to assist the President, and to mould public opinion, and to keep the public mind thinking along right channels. This is particularly important, and it has been demonstrated that in this field the moving picture exerts a much more potent influence than the newspaper, or any other agency.

The moving picture exhibitors are an extremely important branch of the motion picture industry, and anything which is to be done along this line by the government will have to take the exhibitor into consideration as the last and most important cog in the wheel. Every exhibitor who attends the convention, every delegate representing bodies of exhibitors who cannot come, should realize the importance of this convention, and his own part in it. As far as possible, let personal advantage, personal animosities, personal gain, be forgotten. Bear in mind that you are a member of one of the greatest industries in the world, and that as such the world has its eye fastened upon you.

YOU will elect a president, but who that president is, or what part of the country he comes from, makes no difference to the Universal, so long as he is SATISFACTORY TO YOU. Choose the best man in your midst to bear your standard for this coming year. You will need the strongest man among you. You will need a leader—one to whom the other exhibitors can look with confidence, and with the assurance that their trust in him is not misplaced. If you find and elect such a man, and carry out the program of important matters which is before you seriously, thoughtfully and patriotically, the time of this convention will not have been frittered away.

You will have left a deep mark on the pages of motion picture history.

Screen Magazine Shows Airplane Building

THE illustrations on this page are from the Screen Magazine No. 30, one of the subjects which is a complete revelation of the making of an airplane—the war machine which experts think the United States should supply in large enough quantities to win the war. The Screen Magazine gives us a peek into all sorts of queer places, but surely no subject, in even this enthrallingly interesting motion picture reel, has ever had a wider appeal to a greater number of people than this airplane feature of Issue No. 30.

"Roughing out the struts," is the title of the first picture, and shows the minute care with which the workman measures his work by means of a guage, to insure a perfect stream line. A government inspector examines every part as it is turned out. Cutting the sections of the propeller is a nice job. The blades are made of walnut wood, strong and light. The sections are deftly shaped, and then glued together into the propeller form. After gluing, the parts are trimmed and shaped by hand. Instruments are constantly applied to the propeller to insure the correct slant, as the slightest error causes serious vibration in the finished plan. Copper tips are fastened to the ends of the propeller to prevent splitting of the wood. The balance of the parts is so minutely adjusted that a dab of paint on the end of the propeller will maintain it.

Making the wing ribs is shown next. They are cut out by a special saw, and then placed on the wing, carefully checked up on the blueprint by the inspector, who sees that the government stamp is on all the parts. Vigilance never relaxes throughout the entire operation, as the slightest variation from the model may cost a pilot's life. Irish linen, which is strong and light and is not affected by the chemical with which it is painted, is used to cover the wing to lessen head resistance. The wheels, also, are covered with linen to decrease air resistance. Then the longerons are laid out on the skeleton body and the struts carefully located, and not until all is aligned is the motor put into place. Every wire at each station is turned to the proper degree of tautness, an operation which recalls the tuning of a piano. An airplane fleet has been declared to be New York's best defense.

Other subjects in this fine number are the teaching of the blind to "see" at an Ohio institution. The Hyde ship-brake, which allows craft to stop in their own length, thus preventing

Some High Spots In Universal Pictures

(WEEK OF JULY 30)

HIGH spots are frequent among the Universal pictures for the week of July thirtieth. The Gold Seal, appearing on July thirty-first, is called "Right-of-Way Casey," and was written and directed by George Marshall, from a scenario by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., and tells the amusing experiences of a traffic cop. Neal Hart is the cop, and Janet Eastman is the girl, who is pretty enough to attract the Sergeant, played by Joe Rickson. Joe plans to get Casey out of the way so that he may have plain sailing with the girl, and two crooks knock him out, bundle him into a post-bag, and ship him as far West as they can. He is thrown off the train, and comes to with a well-developed case of fashionable aphasia. He proceeds to apply the traffic rules of the Avenue to Mud Creek, to the bewilderment of the natives, who think him a harmless lunatic until he puts to rout the gang which has been terrorizing the town. Then he is a hero, and as regulating traffic is the only thing which gives him any pleasure, the cowpunchers allow him to indulge his idiosyncrasy to his heart's content. Of course, he is restored to the girl in the end—nothing tragic could possibly happen to any one by the name of Casey. You can imagine the humor that Neal Hart gets out of this situation, and there are some of the scraps for which he is growing famous. Joe gets his in the end—it has gotten so that Joe never expects to come alive out of any picture that he plays in anyway. Don't pity him, he's used to it.

Down in the right-hand lower corner, there is a "teaser" from the Cleo Madison Feature, released on August second, called "The Woman Who Would Not Pay." The story is by E. M. Ingleton, and the scenario and production by Ruth Ann Baldwin. This is a tale which might easily have been expanded into a five-reeler. Cleo is a spoiled and petted woman, who is determined to eat her cake and have it, too. She is a charmer by profession, and attracts men as a candle attracts moths, but her doting husband has perfect confidence in her, and refuses to heard a word against her. At last, he receives a warning which he cannot ignore. He goes to her room, where she has just time to hide her latest admirer in the wall-safe. He sees a corner of a handkerchief in its door, and deliberately remains, smoking cigar after cigar, while the wretched man smothers and the woman is kept on the rack. In that hour she pays in full all the long account which she has ignored in years of selfish indulgence. The tragic intensity of this situation is realized to the full by Miss Madison, whose facial expression, through her long agony of waiting, is a wonderful study.

The other cut, down in the right-hand corner, is from the two-reel Victor, released on August third. Carter De Haven produced this and played the lead himself, with his pretty little wife, Flora Parker opposite. It is a tale of the frightful predicament of a young husband, whose entire wardrobe has been sent to the country where wifie is awaiting him. He falls and ruins his only pair of trousers, sends them to a tailor to be cleaned, and then waits for them, hour after hour, in the privacy of his office, the tailor having sent them after the others. At last, he sneaks out clad in a raincoat and B. V. D.'s. Little boys chase him and he is finally arrested.

He nearly dies of mortification and cold and is taken to the hospital, where he raves for his trousers till wifie comes to rescue him.

In the centre is a picture from the Nestor "Married By Accident" in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran disport themselves in their characteristic manner. Besides this, up at the head of the page is a sample from the L-KO of August first, called "Blackboard and Blackmail" with Merta Sterling, Lucille Hutton, and Phil Dunham in a phantasy of laughs. Then there are the two Jokers, one with Gale Henry called "The Stinger Stung," in which Gale Henry and Milton Sims get all mixed up with a hive of bees. Another Joker, called "The Battling Bellboy" features William Franey in a boxing contest that is a scream. There are also the usual Animated Weekly, and Current Events news reels, and the latest issue of the Screen Magazine, the three reels which cover all that is new in the world's history.

"THE GREATER LAW"—Bluebird

BLUEBIRD Photoplay masterpiece. Story by Charles J. Wilson, Jr. Adapted for the screen and produced by Lynn F. Reynolds, with Myrtle Gonzalez in the leading roles. Photographed in Californian mountain snow-fields.

ONE of the most pictorially beautiful photoplays ever turned out by Bluebird, and there have been many beautiful pictures from this company, is "The Greater Law," in which Myrtle Gonzalez, George Hernandez and Lawrence Peyton, assisted by a large cast, were photographed in the dead of winter among the Sierras, near Truckee, California. Charles J. Wilson, Jr., laid the scenes in Alaska, in the early days of the Klondike rush, and Lynn Reynolds, the producer, took his company to the frost-locked peaks of the Sierras to provide suitable backgrounds for the exciting episodes which abound in the five reels. Nearly all the scenes were made out-of-doors, but for the interiors of "Basil Pelly's"—the primitive hotel of the district—one of the largest sets ever constructed was built. The play takes its title from the action of the girl, who took the law into her own hands when she went to the Klondike to avenge the death of her young brother. Truth to tell, no crime had been committed, and this leads to a surprise finish of a theme which alternates between rugged strife and a delightful love story.

When the Widow Henderson died, her son Jimmie was left to the care of his sister Barbara. The boy was lazy and inclined to be wild. When he decided to try his luck in the Klondike, the girl was better satisfied than to have him at home. She thought he might make something of himself in contact with rugged men of the North. But when her letters to him were unanswered and finally returned with notice that the boy could not be found, Barbara determined to go herself to the Klondike and seek him.

Upon reaching Seattle, she heard a report that Jimmie had been murdered in Chilikoot. Outfitting herself in fur clothing to withstand the rigors of the Arctic blasts, Barbara set out for the Klondike to become her brother's avenger. She applied for lodgings at Basil Pelly's at a time when Chilikoot was flooded with transients and the only hotel in the camp was crowded to capacity.

Jolly old Tully Winkle offered her shelter in the shack he was using, together with his prospecting partner, Cort Dorian. The girl accepted the invitation and entered upon a housekeeping arrangement with the two men. Cort Dorian found Barbara extremely congenial, and the girl soon realized that the prospector had won her heart. When Cort declared his love for her, Barbara bade him bide his time for her answer. She had come to Chilikoot to accomplish a purpose which she must fulfill before any other consideration.

From various sources around Chilikoot's dance hall—principally from Anne Malone, a denizen of the "honkey-tonk"—Barbara learned much of the story concerning her brother. Anne told her that Seattle Lou had formed an attachment for Jimmie Henderson when the lad first struck the camp. Laberge was away most of the time prospecting on Nenana River, and his absence had given Lou opportunity to be in Jimmie's company more than usual.

Above—"Do you mean that Laberge is back?"
Centre—"She'll make biscuits for you!" said Cort.
Below—"Lou spends all her time with Jimmie."

On the day Laberge unexpectedly returned to Chilikoot, the boy had been ill and Lou had been nursing him in his room at Basil Pelly's hotel. Being tipped off as to conditions, Laberge had mounted the stairs and surprised Lou in Jimmie's room, holding the lad's head in her lap.

Tully Winkle and Cort Dorian had been stopping at Pelly's hotel at the time, and when they heard the shooting that followed Laberge's sudden entrance to Jimmie's room, they rushed to the scene, but found the place in darkness. There were many shots fired, and when the smoke cleared away Laberge had fled and Jimmie Henderson had been found prostrate and bleeding from bullet wounds with Seattle Lou bending over him.

As the key to the story seemed to be in possession of Laberge, Barbara determined that she would meet him, gain his confidence and learn the complete details from his own lips. She waited an opportunity to meet Laberge and when eventually the prospector again came to Chilikoot, the girl sought him out, feigned extravagant interest in him, and when Laberge was well filled with "hooch," led him to tell the story of Jimmie Henderson's passing.

Barbara ran straight to the cabin where she had been keeping house with Cort and Tully Winkle. Cort was challenged to step forth and defend himself. Her accusations roused Cort's pride to angry resentment. She insisted upon his "pacing off the distance."

Cort shot straight in the air, however, while Barbara's bullet gave him a nasty wound in the shoulder. Just as the shots were fired, Tully Winkle who had been spending an hour in Chilikoot's drinking place, came running up to break the extraordinary news that Seattle Lou had just come to town with her husband—Jimmie Henderson. Remorse seized Barbara, but Cort found it a simple matter to forgive her.

"The Gray Ghost"

THE fourth installment of the serial, adapted and produced by Stuart Paton from the novel by Arthur Somers Roche, is called "The Fight," and allows Eddie Polo to perform some of his famous stunts.

EDDIE POLO is featured in the fourth episode of the serial, "The Gray Ghost," which is being made by Stuart Paton from the Saturday Evening Post success, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche. The chapter takes its name, "The Fight," from the encounter which Marco, the hero's secretary, has with several men in the cafe from which Hildreth has just escaped. In order to give him time to get away, the redoubtable Marco attacks the whole gang and holds them at bay by his tremendous strength and fighting skill. Eddie Polo put up a very real battle, which the camera has caught at the most advantageous point, so that this episode is the most exciting so far. Here is the development of events, as far as they have gone.

The Gray Ghost is held at bay by Morn Light, who has snatched a sharp paper knife. But he laughs, pleased at her exhibition of spirit. Meantime, in the cafe, Jacques, the waiter, is telling Hildreth about the Gray Ghost. Hildreth is inclined to be incredulous, but Jacques relates the story of the Olmstead bank robbery, and tells him that the watchman was left to pay the penalty, and then his wife and children were well provided for. He says that that is the way the Ghost always works.

The Ghost bids Morn Light good night and going downstairs, stops at the switchboard, where he sees the number she has called, under her name. He calls the number, and learns that it is Bishop's cafe. Then he phones his own apartment, and his valet says that Williams is there. Williams tells the Ghost that Morn Light knows where Hildreth is, and he is surprised. He tells Williams to take some men and get Hildreth without delay. Williams leaves in a taxi. Jacques sees the men approaching, and hears them ask for Hildreth. He warns the Englishman, who quickly disappears through the secret door. He runs down the stairs and out into the street. When the men enter the private room, Jacques is alone. He says he does not know where "Mr. Daly" is, but they force him at the point of a gun to open the secret door. They strike Jacques to the ground and start to leave. They open the door and find that Hildreth has escaped. They are nonplussed, when Marco, Hildreth's secretary, enters in search of his employer. He has become suspicious and followed him. He demands from them en what they have done with the Englishman, and a fight is quickly started. This detains the men so that they cannot follow Hildreth. Marco holds them and defeats them one by one.

Hildreth has rushed to Morn Light's apartment. He knocks and tells her he is Ted Daly. She whispers to him that she told him not to come to her, but she lets him in. He demands from her the name and purpose of the Gray Ghost. She is about to answer him, when the door swings open and the Ghost appears. He sarcastically

Real Hold-Up Staged for "Gray Ghost"

STUART PATON'S robbery of Los Angeles store creates lots of excitement until explained.

STUART PATON, director of Universal's newest serial, "The Gray Ghost," put over a new one last week, when he staged the hold-up and robbery of one of the biggest jewelry stores on the Coast for an episode of the serial. The store was Brock & Co., of Los Angeles, and the scene of the robbery was filmed without letting the public into the secret, so that the customers at the counters at the time thought that a real hold-up on a tremendous scale had taken place. Of course, the management of the store was in the secret, and Paton had taken care that the loaded revolvers kept below the counters had been made innocuous before the event started.

When a dark young man with a business-like gun gave the command "Hands up, everybody, and shell over those jewels!" there was consternation among the clerks and their customers. The dark young man was Francis MacDonald, who is playing the chief agent of the mysterious personage, "The Gray Ghost," for whom the serial is named. The cameras had been placed on the balcony overlooking the floor of the store, and on Paton's signal MacDonald and the other crooks came in from different parts of the store, and backed up the order of their leader. Hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of gold, silver and precious stones were in the cases, and much of the loot was quickly transferred to bags which the crooks held concealed.

Outside, the news quickly spread that robbers had invaded the jewelry store in broad daylight, and policemen and spectators rushed to the scene, blocking the entrances. It required considerable diplomacy on the part of Paton and the managers of the store to explain that no real robbery had taken place, no one had been hurt, and that the whole affair was staged for the camera. Paton is a stickler for realism, and he knew that the scenes in the store would gain tremendously in effectiveness if they could be staged in a real shop, and after a great deal of persuasion he finally induced the managers of Brock & Co., to see it in the same light. Not a bit of damage was done, and the customers and clerks who unwittingly became screen actors were delighted with their experience when the thing was explained to them.

UNIVERSAL BABY SAVES FOR SOLDIERS.

ZOE RAE, the Universal baby, known as one of the cleverest child actresses of the screen, has earned a new title—that of "youngest Red Cross girl." She has contributed a large sum out of her own money to the cause, and says that "if the war lasts long enough" she will buy an ambulance with her salary, which runs into three figures weekly.

"I'm saving dollars every day I can," says the kiddie, earnestly, "'cause I want to give an ambulance all myself to the soldiers."

Besides saving, Zoe is taking lessons in all sorts of Red Cross work. She cannot yet role bandages tight enough to be much use, but she is learning to crochet, and as soon as she comes home from the studio, she sets to work on wash rags for the men who will leave Universal City for service very soon.

"Every one of the boys is going to have one to take with him," she says.

tells Morn Light to tell Hildreth his name, but she is speechless. Hildreth attempts to defend himself, but the Ghost steps aside, and three men cover Hildreth with drawn revolvers. He holds up his hands.

The next day the Commissioner of Police asks Jerry if he still believes in the identity of the Gray Ghost. Jerry says that he does, and this so angers the Commissioner that he tells Jerry he is no longer a member of the force. Jerry is about to leave Headquarters, when the secretary of Hildreth arrives and asks for him. He tells the detective that Hildreth has not been home all night, and about the fight in the cafe. Both men are worried.

The Ghost, in his apartment, is delighted to read of the mysterious disappearance of the young Engish lawyer. His men, headed by Ashby, come in and say that they were just about to get him, when the boss did the job himself. The Ghost sneers at them. Arabin returns from his trip and goes to his store. The Gray Ghost appears at the store very fashionably dressed, and walks about inspecting the jewels displayed.

DORA ORDERED TO CHICAGO.

Universal Film Girl on Transcontinental Recruiting Hike Will Preside Over Recruiting Booth at Convention.

DORA RODRIGUES has reached Cincinnati on her transcontinental hike, from New York to Universal City. After having been received with the greatest enthusiasm in Pittsburgh, where the Mayor and city officials, and officers of the army and navy and marines paid her every attention and took part in her parade, the plucky girl pushed on for Cincinnati, which is her own home town. Here her reception was even more enthusiastic than the one she received in Pittsburgh, and she was looking forward to a short stay, a rest, and a little relaxation among her relatives and friends, when orders came for her to proceed at once to Chicago for the Convention. Dora is a soldier, and "her's not to question why." She immediately packed the small kit which she carries and set out for the Windy City.

The Convention, as all the world knows, will be formally opened on Sunday night, the fifteenth of July. Dora will be on hand in the new field uniform which she wears by special permission, and which is the exact replica of that worn by a U. S. infantryman. The number of men who have enlisted in the various branches of the service under her persuasion has reached the grand total of eleven hundred! Dora hopes and intends to add greatly to this total at Chicago, where she will preside at the Recruiting Booth, and at which she will have the co-operation of the Navy League of the United States, the D. A. R., Sons of the Revolution, and other patriotic societies. The Universal is taking care that Dora's booth shall have a central position and all the advantages of equipment and attractiveness which they can give it, for they are immensely proud of the record of the little soldier who is carrying their banner across the continent.

AN ADOPTED AMERICAN.

GRETCHEN LEDERER, one of the handsomest women of the screen, appears in two Bluebirds running, "The Greater Law," which is the release for this week, and the coming Bluebird, "The Rescue," in which she supports Dorothy Phillips. In "The Greater Law," Miss Lederer plays the role of "Seattle Lou," a woman of the resort, "The Nugget," in the gold country of Alaska, in which the scene of the play is laid. The cut shows Miss Lederer in the dance-hall costume which she wears in the play. She takes the boy Jimmie under her protection, and disappears with him, so that when the boy's sister arrives she is told that her brother is dead. His murderer is even pointed out to her, and her revenge makes the unusual punch of the picture.

In "The Rescue," Miss Lederer shows her versatility by appearing in a part of entirely opposite character. She is the mistress of a large Long Island house, and the mother of the girl who fights a feminine duel with an actress—played by Dorothy Phillips—for the possession of the affections of the player's divorced husband. In this, Miss Lederer wears some handsome gowns and plays the grande dame to perfection.

She is enabled to change so easily and lightly from one type to another by reason of her thorough stage training. She was educated in the Conservatory of the city of Cologne on the Rhine where she was born. Miss Lederer set her affections upon a grand opera career. Upon her graduation from the Conservatory, she was offered a position with an operatic stock company which was sailing for this country. She toured the United States with this organization with great success, and would undoubtedly have continued in a musical career had she had the great misfortune to lose her voice. She was so young that the constant singing was too much for it. Miss Lederer then found herself in a serious predicament—a stranger in a strange land, with an imperfect knowledge of English and very little money. She would have turned her attention to the speaking stage, but the language was a barrier. However, there are no such obstacles in the movies, and at last she was persuaded to try them. Here she found herself so much at home and so happy that she has remained acting for the screen with great success ever since.

Only recently Miss Lederer took out her final papers as a citizen, and there is no more loyal American at present.

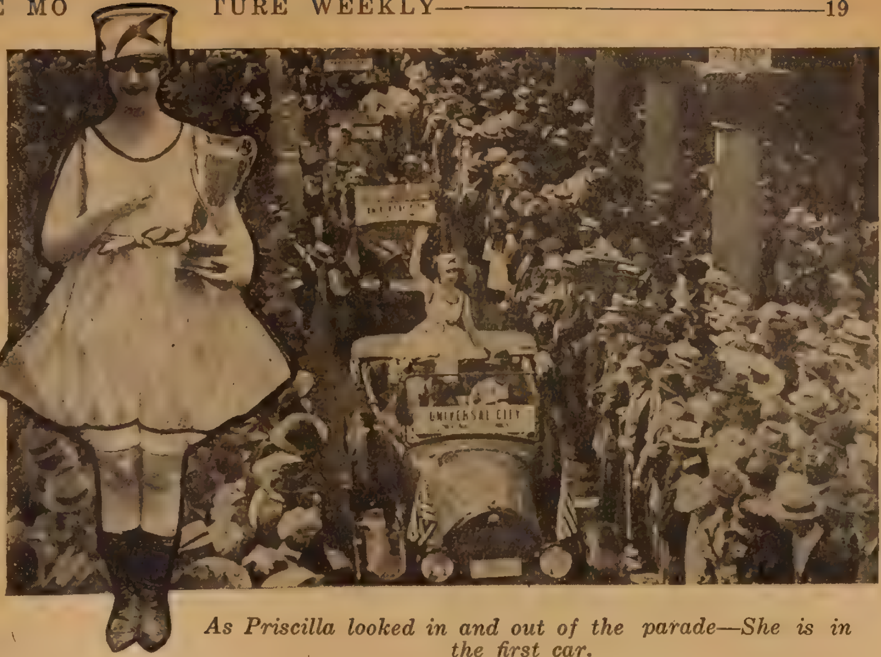
LIONESS SPRINGS UPON UNIVERSAL ACTOR.

PERMITTING a real live, hungry lion to spring upon his shoulders, was the stunt performed by "Curley" Stecker of the Universal Film Company, in order to put a thrill into an animal story filmed at Universal City by Henry McRae. The lion had been fed only lightly during the day, so that he would be certain to jump at Stecker at the critical moment, when the camera was ready to shoot him. At exactly the expected moment the lion dived through the air, and the still camera secured the picture which is reproduced in the cut opposite. Stecker has worked in animal pictures for years, and has performed a lot of hazardous stunts, but this feat exceeds them all.

The lioness, which was born and raised at Universal City, was considered one of the most vicious of the large troupe, and Director McRae told Stecker that he would be taking a desperate chance. However, there is nothing the matter with "Curley's" nerve, and he went through the ordeal with nothing more serious to show than a few scratches and a torn shirt. The picture for which this stunt was performed will be released as a Bison by the Universal Company, and is called by the working title "His Master's Wife." There are plenty of exciting situations in it, but the culminating point is, of course, the leap of the lioness onto the man's shoulders.

Priscilla Dean Wins Bathing Suit Parade Prize

THREE hundred California beauties in bathing-suits! Wouldn't that be some parade? This was the treat which the lucky inhabitants of Venice, Cal., enjoyed the other day. Priscilla Dean, the lovely star of Universal's newest serial, "The Gray Ghost," was one of the prize winners, of whom there were just three out of three hundred entrants. That is about the best endorsement that a film favorite could ask for in her wildest dreams of popularity and public favor. The cut shows some of the reasons why Miss Dean received this honor.



As Priscilla looked in and out of the parade—She is in the first car.

The annual automobile parade of bathing-suited loveliness is the event of the most popular of Los Angeles' seashore resorts, and this year the entrants were more bewitching than ever, and costumes were displayed the like of which was never seen on sea or land. Priscilla's, which received the cheers of 75,000 spectators and the award of the silver cup she carries, was a futuristic effect in black and white satin, with a military touch in the cap. The route of the parade was literally lined with admirers, and the three hundred American beauties heard such cheers as had never saluted their ears before.

Later in the day there was a prize dancing contest on the roof of one of the biggest and best hotels in Venice, and in this exhibition Miss Dean again triumphed and became the proud possessor of the silver loving cup which was offered as as first prize.

"Two prizes in one day!" she exclaimed as the second trophy was presented to her. "That's enough glory to keep me satisfied for years to come!"

Miss Dean is a hearty advocate of water sports, and she stood a good chance of another trophy had the bathing parade included a demonstration of the fair wearers' proficiency in the water. She loves more than anything else to motor out to a secluded spot along the coast, after her day's work in the studio, turn her car into a dressing-room, don a practical suit of Annette Kellermann's, and dive head-first into the briny for a real swim. No satin caps and futuristic effects when Priscilla goes in swimming for real pleasure.

"Of course, I love pretty beach suits as much as any other girl," she says, "and I am delighted that mine won such favor in the parade, for it cost me hours of thought. But when I want real enjoyment in the water, a practical woollen suit, and a rubber 'diver' for me—and no fancy shoes and stockings, either. That's why I take my real water exercise in secluded spots."

JACK FORD DIRECTS CAREY.

JACK FORD, who is directing Harry Carey in a five-reel picture called by the provisional title of "Joan of the Cattleland," is working under difficulties these days. Three of his champion Universal cowboys, who usually take any risk that he asks of them without turning a hair, are being very careful of themselves since registration day. Each of them, registering in different districts, drew a little green card, carrying the ominous number thirteen. Ford is trying to convince them that the jinx can't possibly apply to their work before they are drafted into the army.

Jack Mulhall as "Speed."

CRACKING the finish which a fashionable boarding-school has smeared thickly over the natural impulses of a pretty girl, is the task which confronts "Speed" Cannon, played by Jack Mulhall in this Butterfly Picture, "High Speed," written by Helen Starr, adapted for the screen by Leo Sargent and produced by George L. Sargent. "Speed" proves that he earned his name by the time that he has succeeded in awakening the languid young beauty, who is the joy of her nouveau riche mother's heart, and the despair of her father. An amusingly frustrated elopement is one of the besit situations in a picture, which keeps the young star jumping from start to finish. Here is the story:

Father made his millions in pork, and was rather proud of the fact, but his society loving wife wanted to forget that there was ever such a sordid thing in the world as a pig. Consequently she had sent her daughter Susan off to a high-priced finishing school where she absorbed learning and a blase manner of bearing that sent her mother into ecstasies of delight. Father was anything but pleased with the change that had come over his little girl.

Father had about abandoned Susan to her slow-moving fate, when, one day at the club he came in contact with "Speed" Cannon, so called because he never wanted even a second of the day. Father was so impressed with the fast-moving youth, seeing the effect which his presence had upon people, filling them full of "pep," that that he determined to try an experiment, hoping that Susan might be speeded up by it.

He visits Speed at his office and on a pretext gets him to his palatial home. As they arrive there a burglar has terrorized its women occupants. Speed proves more than a hero in capturing the burglar, but Susan, true to her breeding, evinces only a passing interest in the incident. Speed, however, is at once smitten with the languorous Susan, and welcomes eagerly the opportunity of seeing her again on the following day, when father offers the chance.

Speed's courtship is as fast as he is himself. After two weeks (which he considers long enough to court any woman), without knowing where he stands, he manages to smuggle Susan away from a reception, which her mother is giving in honor of a Count Englantine, whom she hopes to adopt as son-in-law. Speed secures Susan's consent to their marriage, but she shows so little interest in the matter that Speed is nonplussed. She is discovered by her mother, who haughtily whisks her away from Speed and to the Count, who at once offers his proposal. Susan puts him off. Speed again finds her and proposes that they elope that night at once. Susan thinks that would be romantic and makes preparations to go. Father, an eavesdropper on the plan, lends his aid; but it is unavailing, for Susan is so slow that mother discovers her, and back to the Count she goes. Speed is all broken up, but father has a big tip on the Market, and for the time his woes are forgotten as he talks over the details of it with Speed. Susan languidly tells the Count she will give him his answer on the morrow.

"Explain this conduct, miss!"

Next day Speed starts father's stock movement. Susan writes a curt note to the Count, dismissing him, and one to Speed declaring her love. The maid gets the two mixed. Speed is broken-hearted and goes to the club, where he finds the Count, who has gotten his note. Speed wants to die and sends an attendant for a gun, while the Count dashes to Susan. She quickly disillusions him and dashes, dragging the bewildered father with her in search of Speed. She finds him in time to prevent his killing himself—with an empty gun. She whisks him back to the office to save them all from the ruin Speed's truancy threatened. Father sees an opportunity to consummate his plans, and hikes to the office with a minister. Mother, becoming suspicious, visits the office where the hasty ceremony is being performed. Father holds her long enough to have Susan and Speed married. Mother is very sore until she learns that father's fortune has been augmented very much, and then accepts Speed because he made it possible.

Father locks the auto door.

JACK MULHALL HAS PERSONALITY PLUS.

JACK MULHALL, who is starred in the Butterfly Picture "High Speed," is one of the most popular leading men on the screen, and adds to the number of his admirers in every photoplay in which he appears. He is the best type of American youth—clean-cut, handsome and active—with a most ingratiating smile. He knows how to get his personality over, and the fans never get enough of him and want him in the picture all the time. He has plenty of opportunity in his latest Butterfly, "High Speed," which is the story of a whirlwind young business man, who has earned the nickname of "Speed" and applies it to everything he does, including his lovemaking. There is a foreign count, whom the girl's newly rich mother desires for a son-in-law, but of course the hero outwits them. Matters are complicated by the fact that all the punch and pep have been educated out of daughter at a fashionable boarding-school. However, Speed wakes her up at last, and carries her off in the very middle of her marriage to the count.

WHIRLWIND COURTSHIP IN "HIGH SPEED."

JACK CANNON was some little speed boy. He was a broker with a reputation for putting over more successful deals in less time than any one else in the field. Girls and society had seemed to him too slow to deserve his attention, until he met Susan, and then he found that she was so superlatively slow that she stirred his fighting spirit. Susan's father agreed wtih Cannon, who had won the nickname of "Speed," but her mother thought the girl was perfect as she was. With father working for him and mother against him, and the girl a dead weight between them, Speed sets out to wake up the sleeping beauty and get her to acknowledge that an American business man is the true Prince Charming for an American girl. How he goes about it, the ups-and-downs of the proceeding and the ultimate result are told in a cyclonic five reels in the Butterfly Picture, "High Sped," with Jack Mulhall starred.

JACK MULHALL NOW POPULAR YOUNG STAR.

JACK MULHALL is the star of the latest Butterfly Picture "High Speed." This young man, who is winning a large following, is a dyed-in-the-wool New Yorker. He was born in that city twenty-five years ago, and educated in its public schools. Later he attended Columbia University, and won a degree there. Out of college, Jack went on the stage with the West End Stock Company, and later tried vaudeville with Ned Wayburn. He then was a member of James K. Hackett's company in "The Grain of Dust." But Jack saw a better future in pictures, and secured an engagement with the Biograph, where he remained for four years, playing leads from the start. In May, 1916, he joined Universal, and appeared in the support, at first, of several women stars. But Jack's popularity grew so rapidly that he was soon promoted to be star in his own right. He was cast for the name part in "The Terror," in which he played the part of a New York gunman. Since then he has made regular appearances about four weeks apart, playing live flesh-and-blood American boys with ever increasing success. His latest picture "High Speed,"is a role of this type.

CLAMBAKE OF THE UNIVERSAL CLUB WAS HUGE SUCCESS.

OUR artist with the unpronounceable name has sketched on the opposite page several incidents which give an inkling of the fun that more than two hundred and fifty people enjoyed at the clambake and outing of the Universal Club last Saturday, at Donnelly's Grove. There was a seven inning ball game between the Laboratory Sharks and the Home Office Babes-in-the-Wood. Rothstein pitched and pitched and pitched and batted some for the Babes, but whether he won the game or not, will never be known. Here are the known facts: With wonderful luck the Home Office was only one run behind in the seventh inning, though there had been some difference of opinion before that to make it seem like a real ball game. The Home Office was in this deplorable condition because of Harry Cohen. Harry made a good umpire, but as a player he outboned Merkle and allowed the score that put the Home Office to the bad. That was in the first of the seventh. Before the last half was over with, two two-baggers, two runs, and a man still on second, there were all kinds of accusations—of not stepping on first base, being hit with foul balls, disputing the umpire, and daring the pitcher to come and fight it out in the back lot. So the factory, in spite of the fact that they were one run to the bad, called it a tie, and Jack Cohen, who was scoring, permitted them to get away with it.

Anyhow, it had all the thrills of a regular game, and Rothstein and Bendel, the opposing pitchers, are both

FIVE BEAUTIES IN ONE BLUEBIRD.

THOSE who love feminine beauty—and who does not?—will have a treat in watching the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Rescue," filmed by Ida May Park, one of the few women directors, from a story by Hugh Kahler. Dorothy Phillips, prettiest of all Bluebirds, is the star, and she is supported by four lovely women, each of different type—Gretchen Lederer, Molly Malone, Claire Du Brey and Gertrude Aster. Never before has so much feminine loveliness been gathered together in one screen play. The nature of the film, a society story of a strange duel between an actress and a young girl for the affections of one man, demanded great care in the selection of actresses who could both look and dress the part, and a cast was gotten together for this production, which rivals for beauty any one group of players in the world, not excepting the famous Follies themselves. And the sartorial display is a fashion show all by itself.

To begin with, Miss Phillips, who plays the part of a famous actress, wears no less than eighteen gowns, including evening dresses, negligees, morning frocks and two riding habits, illustrating the latest ideas for horsewomen. Molly Malone and Gretchen Lederer, who have the parts of mother and daughter, are not far behind her, and Claire Du Brey, in the role of a smart maid, shows exactly what should be worn by a lady's maid who respects herself and her employer. Miss Aster appears for a brief minute at the end, in the most modern of sport suits.

The story is that of a duel to the death between a young girl and a woman of the world, and is waged with feminine weapons, almost as deadly as those in use in the trenches.

CRUCIAL SCENE IN COMING BUTTERFLY.

"THE DOUBLE STANDARD," the latest Butterfly Picture, is from the pen of Brand Whitlock, U. S. Minister to Belgium, who gave Butterfly Pictures his other story, of the Civil War, called "The Field of Honor." While Mr. Whitlock was Mayor of Toledo, which office he held after the famous "Golden Rule" Jones, he became much interested in sociological problems, and plans of all kinds for social betterment. Some of his ideas on this subject he embodied in a novel.

It is this story which was used as the basis of the picture, "The Double Standard," which has been made into a photoplay by Phillips Smalley.

A judge has been elected to office by the combined efforts of his wife, who has worked for him socially, and her brothers, the editor who has used the whole force of his paper for him, and the bishop, who has upheld his reform theories in the pulpit. It is the judge's first day on the bench, and notwithstanding the protests of his relations, who tell him not to let his reform notions jeopardize his career, he determines to be true to his convictions no matter what it costs him. Two girls appear before him to answer a charge of disorderly conduct in a notorious dance hall and cafe. The judge calls the men who were taken with the girls, and who, according to custom, have been released, though the girls had spent the night at the station. When the men appear, one of them is his wife's nephew, the son of the editor who is more responsible than any one else for his obtaining his office. This is the crucial scene of a strong play.

Crucial scene in coming Butterfly.

"Queer that the board should be down!"

GOLD SEAL Three-Reel Western Drama, with Harry Carey starred. Written by T. Shelly Sutton. Adapted for the screen by George Hively and produced by Fred A. Kelsey.

HARRY CAREY in a Western is a sure bet, and this one, written by T. Shelly Sutton, adapted for the screen by George Hively and produced by Fred A. Kelsey, is a very good one. The name "Six-Shooter Justice," is a good indication of what the fans may expect. Of course, the girl suspects "Cheyenne," and equally of course he justifies himself in the end. There is a tremendous fight in a Western barroom, in which Kelsey, the director himself, took the part of a drunken cowboy, who is knocked out after a most realistic battle by the redoubtable Harry. Here is the story:

CAST.

Miguel Hernandez	William Gettinger
"Cheyenne" Harry	Harry Carey
John Gregg	Arthur Witting
Mary	Claire du Brey

John Gregg and his daughter Mary, on their way to Burro Springs, a boom mining town, lose their way and stumble into "Jawbone," a dilapidated town in the middle of the Mojave Desert. Here they meet Miguel Hernandez, a good-looking badman. Mary, judging Miguel from appearances, takes him for a gentleman and takes a liking to him. That night, "Cheyenne" Harry, the bad-looking good man, pays a visit to Jawbone. Again, judging solely by appearances, Mary takes a dislike to Harry. Harry, instinctively knowing her to be different from the usual run of women in that country, takes a liking to her, but she pays no attention to him. Gregg hires Hernandez to guide him to Burro Springs, displaying his small store of gold when paying Hernandez. The next day, Mary bids the people of Jawbone farewell, but pays no attention to Harry. Later, Gregg and his party become lost in the desert, and run out of water. Mike finds a spring of poisoned water, which is guarded by a sign warning persons away. Mike deliberately removes the sign, and leads Gregg to the spring, where he drinks, dying from the effects of the water. Mike then robs his body of the gold. Harry, back in Jawbone, is unable to keep Mary out of his thoughts, and being convinced of the evil intentions of Mike, starts to follow them. He comes upon the party at the poisoned spring. Mary discovers that her father has been robbed, and suspects Harry.

Harry guides Mike and Mary to the edge of Burro Springs, where he leaves them. Mary tells Mike that she cannot impose upon his hospitality, as she has no money, and must find work. Offering her his protection, he induces her to enter Murphy's place as a dance-girl. On her first night in the place, she is insulted by a drunken cowboy. Harry, returning to Burro Springs with some ore for assay, learns of her being in the dance hall, and arrives there in time to stop the insult. Mike, knowing that he can do very little with Mary as long as Harry is around,

Her Sweetheart	Al Edmunston

SURF SCANDAL” is a fine title for this two-reel L-Ko, directed by Noel Smith, with Dan Russell as the principal malefactor. A dozen bathing beauties in suits which would make Trouville itself open its blase eyes, enliven the scene when the plot begins to dwindle—who cares about the plot of a comedy anyhow, when the laughs come fast enough, and this one is just packed with them. However, something like this is what happens.

When it came to strength, the Sand Dow family had a shade on the rock of Gibraltar. They are at breakfast with their little daughter before the business of the day at the gymnasium. The janitor was called by his alarm clock, to which he had attached a feather which tickled his bare feet. He slept underneath the tank in the gym and had a trap door through which he emerged. Gladys was the belle of the ladies’ department, and Al of the men’s, and they were sweethearts. Mr. and Mrs. Sand Dow took charge of the respective departments, and when they had at last had enough breakfast they appeared for business. But Dan would flirt with the girls, and Mrs. with the men, and they both grew peeved at each other. At last each had an idea. They called the janitor, and told him, secretly, to bring them disguises in which they would look like each other. The hard-working man did so, and they retired to transform themselves into each other. Dan shaved his mustache, and Mrs. put one on. Then they emerged, and even the janitor was completely fooled.

It was too hot to work, so they decided to close the gym for the day and go to the beach. Dan had a wonderful time with the girls, posing as his own wife, and Mrs. had an equally lovely time with the men. But the sweethearts were each planning revenge, and a chance to get togethr. Each party raised a bathing tent at the beach, and got into swimming suits as quickly as possible. Then they began to be hungry. The men had brought a lunch, but the girls had none, so Dan decided to go fishing. He used his own ample carcass for bait, and came up with fishes in his hair, in every pocket and hanging lovingly on his person. The janitor, who had followed them to the beach, was instructed to cook the fish, and the girls sat down to wait for them to be done. The other party was lunching in the meantime, and the Janitor got mixed and threw the cooked fish to the men instead of the girls. Dan went to remonstrate and recognized his wife with the men. He snatched Gladys and ran. Mrs. at the same time decoys Al to a secluded nook. He opens a sandwich and puts sand in it, giving it to her. As she sputters over it, he makes a getaway and rejoins Gladys. Dan comes up and fights Al for the girl, while Mrs. fights him for Al. The husband and wife come face to face, and recognize each other. Dan beats it with Gladys and Mrs. follows. After a chase, the picture ends in a pie fight.

brews trouble among the men in the saloon and a fight is started. Harry, after a free-for-all battle in which he whips several of the men, holds the crowd at bay with his guns. Mike, half drunk, has in the meantime slipped upstairs, where he attacks Mary. Harry, holding the crowd at bay, backs up the stairs and unintentionally backs into Mary’s room where she is struggling with Mike. Turning, he sees the situation and kills Mike. The crowd has followed him upstairs and now threatens him. Mary, realizing that Mike was to blame for her trouble, defends Harry,

Bouquets for Butterflies

RUSSELL SAYS: "SUCCESS TO BUTTERFLY PICTURES."

Lincoln Neb., May 31, 1917.

Butterfly Pictures,
Omaha, Nebr.:

Gentlemen—Now, let me congratulate you on the first Butterfly production, "Eternal Love." It is without a doubt one of the best pictures I have ever had the pleasure of running. My patrons by the dozens stopped on their way out and showered congratulations upon me and were high in their praises for the Butterfly. The scenery and interior settings are beautiful, and the photography is without a blemish. The scenario is wonderfully interesting. In an all-day downpour of rain 1,738 people witnessed the first showing of "Eternal Love," and I think that is some business for a house with a seating capacity of 425. If you care to use this as a testimonial you may do so. Well, here's hoping the success of the Butterflies will be long and prosperous.

With best wishes, I am, Yours very truly,
CHARLES W. RUSSELL,
Mgr. Lily Theatre.

CONSTANTLY GROWING.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,

Gentlemen—Universal pictures with one Butterfly feature each week, also the Universal Animated Weekly, and Universal Current Events, is surely enough to satisfy all lovers of amusements. For this reason it ought to satisfy any exhibitor. That is the real reason that I have been a steadfast adherent to the Universal. What my patrons want they get—short subjects, two features a week, news films, and a good show always. That's why my patronage is constantly growing.

Gentlemen — After running your Special Attraction, "The Birth of Patriotism" to-day, can safely say it is the finest picture I have ever run.

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

Consolidated Film & Supply Co.,
Dalas, Texas:

Gentlemen—We wish to write you regarding our second showing of "Liberty." This wonderful serial is undoubtedly the greatest picture for drawing power that has been offered to the public. After showing it to capacity houses at its first showing, we are again repeating our former experience. It makes us feel good to see the same big crowds turning out to see this picture, as we were in the habit of showing last summer. We have come to the conclusion to ask one question and answer it with the same words: What's the use of buying first-run pictures when good repeaters will get more money?

With best wishes, I remain,
Yours respectfully,
J. A. LEMKE,
Mgr. Crystale Theatre.

GALE HENRY

"The Stinger Stung"

One-Reel Joker—Released Week of July 30.

Gale loved a farmer boy, that's why she wasn't interested in the judge when he tried to make love to her. Her lover tried to chase the judge away, but didn't succeed until he let a hive of bees loose where the judge would get the full benefit. He was tried for assault, and part of the evidence was a hive of bees. When they were brought into court, the hive was overturned, and the jury promptly said "Guilty." And you can't blame them. Released week of July 30.

HIS FIRST LETTER.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York:

Gentlemen—Although one of the oldest Universal exhibitors in Western Wisconsin, I have never contributed to the "Exhibitors Letter" column. About all the big features the Universal company has made have been shown in my theatre, and have got me the money.

I finish "Liberty" Tuesday, and open with "The Voice on the Wire" to-day. Business is good.

Yours truly,
B. C. BROWN,

MADE HIS THEATRE.

Universal Film & Supply Co.,
Kansas City, Mo.:

Gentlemen—I wish to commend you on your serial "The Voice on the Wire" for it is, without a doubt, the best serial that has ever been shown in the city of Topeka. The people all over the city are speaking of it, and say it is the most interesting serial they have ever seen. As for its being a success, it has indeed been the making of my theatre, and you know conditions previous to the time that I contracted with you for service.

"The Voice on the Wire" has even outclassed "Liberty," and on the first episode I had an attendance of twenty-five hundred people, and for the above named reasons, it is with pleasure that I recommend "The Voice on the Wire" to other exhibitors.

When I was in your city some time ago, you told me that Ben Wilson would be here in July, in person. I should like very much to know if he is putting out a new serial, and if so, I would like to contract for same to start at the conclusion of "The Voice on the Wire." I would also like to arrange for Mr. Wilson to appear at my theatre for one week, for which I am willing to pay him 50-50 over all expenses for that week. Kindly advise me concerning this matter at your earliest convenience.

Thanking you for past favors, I am,
Youre truly,
V. C. BEELER,
Best Theatre.

EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD.

Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd.,

Gentlemen—"The Perils of the Secret Service," the entire program which you supplied for last night's show, and which I am returning to you to-day, was exceptionally good. Please endeavor to keep it up to that standard.

Yours faithfully,

CARTER DE-HAVEN
IN
"Where Are My Trousers"

TWO REEL VICTOR

Too much mother-in-law furnishes the basis for the clever comedy plot in this two-reel Victor. The famous comedian, Carter De Haven and his pretty and talented wife, Flora Parker De Haven, as husband and wife, would be happy if it wasn't for Flora's mother. After a stormy scene mamma takes daughter to the country. Wifey sends hubby's clothes to the cleaners, and so, when Carter falls in the mud and has to send his only pair late at night to be cleaned, thru a chain of events he finds himself wandering about with only a raincoat to hide his nether extremities. The finish makes sparkling comedy entertainment. This is released week of July 30, and can be booked thru any Universal Exchange.

UNIVERSAL FAN.

The Moving Picture Weekly Pub. Co.,
New York, N. Y.:

Dear Sirs—I am a Universal fan and just can't help but write you why. I think Universal has the very best of screen artists and they put on the cleanest pictures.

Such artists as Grace Cunard, Francis Ford, Ella Hall, Franklyn Farnum, Ben Wilson, Jack Ford, Gale Henry, Little Zoe Rae, and others, are the very best players in the world.

Universal puts on the best serials and they are always full of athletic stunts, and they are pictures to be appreciated.

I just wanted to write and let you know how much we think of Universal pictures. Wishing you the best of success always, I am,

Sincerely,
MARY PARKS.
Waco, Texas.

Little Zoe Rae, the Universal baby, is not sewing shirts for soldiers, as she is not yet sufficiently proficient with the needle, but she is raising beans for them. She has a garden in which there are several rows of the vegetables, and Zoe can hardly wait for them to be ripe. Every day she visits them and asks her mother when the Boston baked beans will be ready to send to the soldiers.

"One Bride Too Many"

VICTOR Two-Reel Comedy. Written by Cyril Bentinck and produced by Matt Moore, with himself and Jane Gail in the leads. The story of a bridegroom who supped not wisely but too well.

Jane is surprised to find a strange man in her room.

"But I can't marry both of them!"

A BRIDEGROOM-TO-BE who rented his flat to an irascible Frenchman, wildly jealous of his daughter, and then forgot his new tenants and returned late that night to his original quarters, and how father nearly insisted upon his marrying the girl, is the central idea of an unusual Victor, called "One Bride Too Many," which was written by Cyril Bentinck and produced by Matt Moore with himself and Jane Gail in the leads.

Tom has just left his fiancee. On his way home, Tom meets an old Frenchman, Jean Dupree, and his daughter, Jeannette, who are looking for a furnished apartment. This reminds Tom that his own apartment has not yet been taken off his hands. So he writes a letter to Arthur Brown, the real estate broker, notifying him that he won't have him as his best man unless he hastens to get him a tenant.

Mr. Dupree enters with his daughter in quest of an apartment. Brown takes them to Tom's apartment, and the Frenchman decides to take the flat and signs a lease, upon the condition that he may take possession of it that very day at six o'clock.

Brown reminds Tom of the farewell bachelor dinner to be given in his honor at the club that night, and Tom promises to be on hand. They both leave for the club, leaving instructions with Tom's valet to pack all his clothes and belongings and engage rooms for him at a hotel for that night.

While the festivities are going on at the club, Dupree, his daughter and the maid arrive at the apartment. Dupree goes to dress for dinner, and the maid, who is in the daughter's confidence, admits her lover, Alfonse, a poor artist, whose suit is not approved by the old Frenchman. Presently Dupree returns, and on discovering the presence of Alfonse, he promptly ejects him.

At the bachelor dinner Tom feasts not wisely, but too well. The result is that when Tom leaves the club he forgets all about having sub-let his apartment, and instead of going to a hotel, as planned, he automatically goes back, enters his bedroom and begins to undress.

The bedroom is unfortunately the one assigned by Papa Dupree to his daughter. Old Dupree, on hearing voices, looms up in his night attire. Being a hot-headed Frenchman, he demands, as the only reparation possible for his daughter's compromised honor, that Tom marry her the next day.

In spite of Tom's apologies and explanations, the old Frenchman keeps him in the apartment at the point of a pistol, and the next morning, he drags him to the Little Church Around the Corner. There, Grace, her father, the minister, and the entire bridal party, have been anxiously awaiting the arrival of the belated Tom. When he finally appears with Dupree and his daughter, general trouble ensues.

Meanwhile, Jeannette, without her father's knowledge, tells the maid to run and fetch her beloved Alfonse. Dupree finally permits Jeannette to marry the man of her choice.

The Universal Joker Company, under the direction of Allen Curtis, was making a comedy at the beach in which it was planned to use a raft, which was taken to Long Beach in advance. When the company, with their star, Miss Gale Henry, arrived on the scene, the raft could not be found. At last it was discovered. A party of young girls had appropriated it for use as a lunch table. They were much embarrassed when they found that they were using a piece of Universal property, but Director Curtis set them at ease by saying that he and the company would join them at the picnic lunch, which was then spread out on the raft. Later the girls played the part of bathers in several of the scenes for the comedy.

BLUEBIRD BOOTH AT THE CHICAGO CONVENTION.

FOR the advance information of exhibitors who cannot attend the Seventh Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, and who cannot reach there until the convention is well under way, the correspondent of the Moving Picture Weekly sends us a description of the Butterfly booth which occupies a prominent position in the Coliseum where the exposition and convention will be held.

In view of the fact that Illinois has not as yet made up its war quota, Bluebird has decided to devote all of the space in its beautifully located and capacious booth in the Coliseum to the interests of recruiting in the United States Army and the United States Navy. Violet Mersereau, the famous Bluebird star, will preside in the booth during almost all of the convention, and will direct the work of her assistants in recruiting. On Tuesday, which is Bluebird day, she will act as hostess for the entire Coliseum, and will receive in the recruiting booth.

Miss Mersereau is also likely to run over to the Universal Booth, which will be fitted up in imitation of the splendidly equipped artists' dressing rooms at Universal City, California. Universal actresses will demonstrate the art of make-up as practised on the screen. The general public has an idea that make-up is the same for the legitimate stage as for the screen, but there is a wonderful difference.

FILM SUPPLY COMPANY'S BIT AT PORTLAND.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon held a convention in Portland for two days, at the Multnomah Hotel, on May 29th and 30th. The Film Supply Company of Portland, Ore., always ready to "do its bit," arranged a very attractive booth. They also made arrangements with the Exhibitors' League to furnish badges for every woman attending the ball. There were fifteen hundred badges given out that night, and there were three thousand people in attendance. The badges consisted of a blue ribbon stamped "Butterfly Pictures," with a butterfly brooch. It made a very beautiful novelty, and was appreciated by all the women there.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS FOR "THE GREATER LAW"

A STORY of the frozen North, "The Greater Law," will naturally be very acceptable to your patrons in torrid summer weather. The contrast in temperatures affords you unique methods in ballyhoos. You can readily realize the furore and comment to be excited by a man strolling down your streets in furs and high shoes or boots, with snowshoes strapped to his back—as compared to summer clothing and straw hats.

Hire a good, big, strapping young fellow and dress him up in Northern garb—mackinaw or fur coat, fur cap, high-laced shoes, gloves and snowshoes strapped on his back. Have a sign on his back reading:

Do you follow
"THE GREATER LAW"
? ? ? ?
See Its Workings
at the (name) Theatre
on (day and date)

Also have him pass out cards reading:

What do you know about
"THE GREATER LAW"
It is the code of the land of the Northern lights.
See its practises at the (name) Theatre (day and date)

Decorate your lobby after the fashion of an Alaskan dance hall. Cover the walls with skins, snowshoes and other relics of the North country. A well decorated lobby will go a long way toward the success of your theatre.

Then cover your mailing list thoroughly with the following letter. Letters always have an appeal that cannot be overlooked by your patrons. They get business!

My Dear Friend—Right now—with the mercury trying to climb out of the top of the thermometer—how would you like to take a trip to the Land of the Northern Lights, up in the Frozen North, 'mid snow and ice, where it's nice and cold?

Perhaps that's a physical or financial impossibility—but you can get the atmosphere in "The Greater Law," a Bluebird photoplay of the North Country!

Its scenes are laid in Alaska, during the gold rush. In those days life was held cheaply—blood was spilled upon the slightest provocation—real love was deep, and hatred was never forgotten and venomous. Yet in those days Romance thrived! Under the spell of yellow metal men were lured from comfortable homes to the privations of a desolate land.

Even a tender, gentle girl becomes so imbued with the mingled love and hatred of the times that she, too, is led into the Gold Land, not in search of gold—but seeking revenge. But love conquers, as it should and always will.

Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez play the leads in "The Greater Law," and their work is flawless. You will surely like this Bluebird—it is all so real and rings so true!

It has many thrills, its tense moments are gripping and it carries a great big, smashing climax that is tremendous—one that you will not soon forget! Be sure and see "The Greater Law" at the (name) Theatre on (day and date).

Cordially yours,
(Manager sign here),
Mgr. (name) Theatre).

CANADIAN NOTES.

TORONTO, Ont.—The Ontario Government has established a Moving Picture Bureau with Mr. S. C. Johnson, B. S. A., as director. This new bureau as defined is organized for the purpose of giving instructions in all branches of agriculture, fruit growing, etc., to advertise the resources of the Province and to encourage the construction of highways and other public works. It is for the time being under the Department of the Provincial Treasurer and the Educational Campaign to be carried out has not yet been worked out. It is believed a number of small machines, which may be operated in any room that has electrical installments will be secured, while a film exchange may be conducted under the auspices of the Government.

It is believed by Provincial officials that motion pictures will have a leading part in educational affairs in the years to come, and it is felt that lectures on different methods of farming, horticulture, road construction and various other subjects may be made more useful if supplemented by moving pictures. The director of the new bureau, Mr. Johnson, is a vegetable specialist, and is the author of several works on vegetable growing and kindred subjects published by the Department of Agriculture.

Canadian Universal Co. reports tremendous demand for the new serial, 'The Gray Ghost."

The Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd., is introducing a new brand of Cartoon Pictures, each 500 feet long and called for the present "Dog Cartoon Pictures."

Jerry Ruck, the speedy salesman for the Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd., is wearing a smile that won't come off these days. Some little time ago the Universal Film Mfg. Co., inaugurated a sales contest on the Universal Screen Magazine among its sales force throughout Canada and the United States, and immediately there was a scramble for the handsome gold watch which was placed under the wire. Jerry was the fortunate winner in the contest, hence the reason for the broad smile these days. Canada evidently has a habit of copping off the prizes in the selling contests, as Mr. Ruck is the second Canadian salesman to win this coveted prize, being the second only to Claire Hague, general manager for Canada.

Manager Willis of the Rialto Theatre, is attracting a great deal of attention in trade circles as an originator of the best front or lobby advertisements of any theatre in these parts. They have been drawing business at an exceptionally good rate.

The new Pantages Theatre in Vancouver, B. C., is opened and is doing a splendid business.

On account of the extremely cool weather up to date, all the Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto houses have been doing exceptionally good business for this time of year. With the coming of tourists in July and August, the summer season looks like a good one.

One of the most important announcements for some time in moving picture circles in Toronto has been made at the Strand Theatre, one of Toronto's leading first-run houses. The management has decided to change the pictures every other day, instead of twice a week. This policy will be kept in force during the summer and if successful will be carried throughout all winter and become a permanent fixture.

The Canadian Universal Film Co., Ltd., has again been given the contract to supply comedy for the open air theatre at Scarborough Beach, Toronto, Ont., for the summer months. The Alice Howell Comedies will be featured and practically every street car in Toronto will carry half-sheet, featuring these comedies.

The new $20,000 Sunset Theatre of Estuary, Sask., was opened Saturday, June 23d. Mr. O. Schneider is the manager and Mr. Art Pelletier has been secured as operator. The new theatre will use Universal, Bluebird and other services.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The St. John Standard is publishing an interesting series of interviews by the editor of their motion picture column. She was sent to New York to meet the stars and see the pictures in the making.

WINNIPEG, Man.—Owing to the splendid business which the Strand Theatre of Winnipeg did on "The Voice on the Wire," they deemed it advisable to contract for its successor "The Gray Ghost," which is booked to them for three days each week. They opened with it Thursday, July 5th.

OTTAWA, Ont.—Both the Dominion and the Flower Theatres in Ottawa are dark, having closed for the summer.

NEW GLASGOW, N. S.—The Academy of Music has joined hands with H. C. MacNeil and associates who have just completed the new Itzit Theatre and who also control the Crescent and Jubilee Theatres in Stellarton and Westville. A new company will now have control of the Academy of Music, the Roseland Theatre and the new Itzit Theatre in New Glasgow, and the new Academy of Music which is going up in Trenton. Besides this, they have the privilege of two nights a week in the Catholic Society Hall there. N. W. Mason, who will be in charge, is making arrangements for service and the different features, Bluebird Photoplays, Butterfly Pictures, L-KO Comedies and the "Voice on the Wire," with extra service, will be used in New Glasgow.

SUPERBA STANDS THEM UP WITH "A DOLL'S HOUSE."

My dear Mr. Laemmle—I want to congratulate you upon having selected such a wonderful picture as Ibsen's "A Doll's House," featuring Dorothy Phillips, as part of your Bluebird program.

The film is breaking all records at my theatre for attendance, and is being commented upon by my patrons in the highest of terms and praises.

My theatre is the only one on Broadway that is compelled to hold out the patrons for the second show, and the line extends nearly a block away from the box office.

I consider the picture one of the greatest money-getters I have ever exhibited, and with proper publicity, every one of your many customers ought to speak of it as I do after they play it.

Its advertising possibilities are limitless and its pleasing qualities are numerous. I wish you much success with it and hope to be able to play many more Bluebird features of the same calibre as "A Doll's House."

Yours very truly,
AL. NATHAN,

SIXTY-TWO QUESTIONS

THERE is a one-word question that the exhibitor should have ever before him, if he wants to hold his own in the face of discouraging conditions and keen competition.

The question is, "WHY?"

Analysis has still to find its place in the exhibiting end of the moving picture industry. When business is good, the exhibitor, assuming the attitude that it is best to leave well enough alone, makes no attempt to find out WHY business is better this week than it was two weeks ago. It's GOOD—and that's all he cares about.

On the other hand, when that crowd inside his theatre is conspicuous mainly by reason of its absence, Mr. Exhibitor will cuss all creation in general, and the moving picture industry in particular, without making an effort to trace the cause of the poor box office receipts.

With the passing of the old Eldorado days, when all that was required to cash in on the public's demand for screen entertainment was a vacant store, a projection machine, a reel or two of film, a screen and a box office, those exhibitors who have not kept pace with the times are face to face with a serious situation.

It is for this reason that the question "WHY?" should loom up so importantly in the showman's mind. The three letters may represent the difference between success and failure.

Successful exhibitors, men whose growth has kept pace with the progress of the industry, are the showmen who, consciously or unconsciously, have asked this question of themselves at one time or another, and did not rest content until it was answered to their entire satisfaction.

Asking and answering the question "WHY?" represents your effort to take stock of yourself. It is self-analysis. Done mercilessly and honestly, it is bound to lead you unerringly to the leaks through which your profits are vanishing.

Let us take Mr. Average Exhibitor as an instance.

Mr. Average Exhibitor owns a five-hundred-seat house, and because he represents the average showman, he lives in a community neither too large nor too small.

Business isn't all that it should be, and the house cannot be classed as a profitable investment. Looking the situation squarely in the face, Mr. Average Exhibitor asks "WHY?"

In his effort to find the answer to this, he asks a few more questions. They are about as follows:

HERE ARE THE QUESTIONS

What causes the crowd to pass my theatre up in favor of my opposition?

Am I showing the right kind of pictures?

Am I doing the right kind of advertising?

Am I fighting hard enough to get business?

What do I do to hold on to business when I do get it?

Are my business methods such as to win friends for me?

Have I been successful in making friends of my patrons?

Is my personality a liability or an asset?

Have I been sufficiently attentive to my customers?

What kind of employees are on my payroll?

Are they helping me, or are they hindering me in my effort to make my theatre a paying investment?

Is my theatre the kind of a place I would allow my own children to attend?

Does it present an inviting appearance, both inside and out?

Is the ventilation everything it should be?

Is it comfortable both winter and summer?

Is it kept in spotless condition?

Have I paid sufficient attention to the musical end of my shows? Or are my musicians the "don't-give-a-darn" variety who play ragtime stuff during intensely dramatic scenes, and "Hearts and Flowers" during comedy pictures?

What is the condition of the films I show?

Am I saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole by getting old stuff that costs me little—and that pleases my patrons about as much as it costs?

What have I done to make my theatre one of the community's social centres?

Am I a member of the local merchants' organization?

Have I ever attempted to get the local merchants to cooperate with me for our mutual benefit?

What have I done to get such special business as various social, fraternal and religious organizations could be made to yield?

Am I paying more for my pictures than the seating capacity of my house warrents?

Am I charging the proper admission price?

Is it too high? Too low?

Have such big special features that have cost me higher prices, brought me as much business as regular program features bring?

Did they please my patrons as much?

What percentage of my trade comes from the immediate vicinity?

What percentage comes from outside the community?

What am I doing to attract the latter class?

To what extent is my opposition cutting into my trade?

Why should people who would find it more convenient to patronize me, attend my opposition?

Are my patrons satisfied with the shows I am presenting?

Have I ever taken such steps as would enable me to know accurately my patrons' likes and dislikes?

Would it be worth my while to offer little prizes for suggestions that would help me make my theatre more popular?

Do I keep a set of books, so that I may know at all times exactly where I stand?

Where do I stand?

Am I in the business best suited to my peculiar talents?

Would I do better in some other line?

What are the prevailing conditions in this community?

What is the outlook for the next year?

Is the community going back? Is it progressing?

Is the location of the house against me?

Is there any way in which the handicap of location can be overcome?

Are my cashier and ticket taker courteous and reliable?

Which pictures, according to my box office receipts, have brought me the most money?

Which brand yields the poorest receipts?

Which players, according to the same authority, are most popular with my patrons?

What am I doing to build up my matinees?

Am I exerting any effort to make my Saturday mornings productive by presenting special children's performances?

Is my projection all that it should be?

Are my projection machines up-to-date?

Is my operator the right man for the job?

Is my screen suited to the peculiar requirements of my theatre?

Which are my best days?

Which are my poorest days?

Why?

What can I do to build up my attendance on these days?

Have I given the business as much of my personal attention as it deserves?

Have my personal habits injured my theatre to any extent?

Cleo Madison in "The Web"

Norman looked into a lovely face.

"There go your jewels!"

She wrote the combination on the wall

CLEO MADISON feature in two reels. Story by Katherine Kingsbury. Adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates and produced by George Cochrane, featuring Cleo Madison as the accomplice of a band of crooks.

CLEO MADISON has never appeared to better advantage than in this two-reel feature, which was written by Katherine Kingsbury, adapted for the screen by Harvey Gates, and produced by George Cochrane. It is well named "The Web," for all of the characters find themselves involved in a situation which works out in an utterly unexpected way. The complicated story runs as follows:

Cleo is in league with "Gentleman Joe." She is tired of lounging in her gorgeous boudoir, so she dons apron and cap and walks out into her garden to do some work. At the same time, Mrs. Van Wert enters Norman's studio and finds him painting. She orders him to go drivng with her as she has her limousine at his door. They are driving along the street where Cleo lives when Mrs. Van Wert tells Norman to wander about a bit until she pays a visit. Norman comes to the fence of Cleo's garden just at the time that Cleo reaches out her hand on the other side for a flower. Their hands meet and he climbs up to see the owner. But Joe appears and Mrs. Van Wert catching Jack hanging over the fence angrily calls him.

Joe points out to Cleo that there are the jewels worn by Mrs. Van Wert that she so much wants to have. Cleo thereupon instructs Joe to trace the man's whereabouts and come to inform her. On the following day she dresses as a young widow and goes to Norman's studio, to have her portrait done. Just then his phone rings and it proves to be Mrs. Van Wert asking Norman to invite a woman guest to her week-end party. After some persuasion, Cleo signifies her consent to go.

At Mrs. Van Wert's Norman dances with Cleo when suddenly her string of pearls falls to the ground. She begs Mrs. Van Wert to allow her to place them in her safe. She goes with her and watches the combination. Later, as Cleo stands talking with Norman outside the house, Joe slinks around and sees the numbers Cleo writes on the fence as she holds one hand behind her.

In the dead of night, Joe robs the safe and is clambering down the window. He is struck down and a hand is seen to remove the loot from his trousers' pocket. Then there is great commotion, when Mrs. Van Wert finds the safe robbed.

Joe is at a loss, and thus confronts Cleo. She accuses Joe of not being on the level. Joe is tortured, for he loves Cleo. She takes the gun on the table and in their struggle she fires. Norman hears it and, giving the alarm for the police, rushes in and hands Cleo a jewel case, asking her to keep it safe for him. When the police come, Norman gives himself up and says he did the shooting. Joe is taken to the hospital. Later, Cleo decides to make a clean breast of things.

Joe is recovering and refuses to press the charge against Norman. Norman is released and goes to Cleo. He tells her her friend Joe is a bungler and that he, Norman, has an admiration for her cleverness, and that they had better join forces. Detectives are on his trail, for this and previous offences, and Cleo sees through her mirror, the head of one of them. Cleo gets the jewels, and as the detective enters, she protests to Norman she doesn't want to buy these jewels before examining them.

Neva Gerber, one of the Universal actresses who played the lead in the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," is an expert with the crochet needle. She has crocheted shawls for all the women of her acquaintance, and carriage robes for all the babies. Her present craze is beaded bags, and she has made quite a lot of money for the Red Cross, from the sale of these fashionable trifles.

PUTTING IT OVER

THE very name of the Butterfly feature "High Speed," featuring Jack Mulhall, is suggestive of innumerable novel advertising ideas. One way of capitalizing on the title is to place this line in all your advertising:

If you want to see a "High Speed" show, see Jack Mulhall in
"HIGH SPEED"
at the (name of theatre here)
(day and date here)

If you own a Ford, or can hire one cheaply, fasten a muslin sign bearing this legend, across the back of it:

Excuse my dust, but I want to get to the (name of theatre here) in time to see Jack Mulhall in
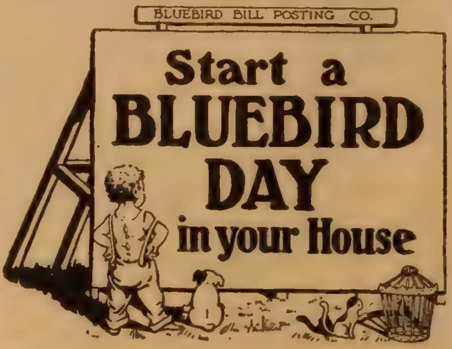
"HIGH SPEED"

If you can get hold of a little burro and a long, lean, lanky chap, have the latter ride the former about the community. The rider should be dressed up in a long Prince Albert, and also wear a battered plug hat. Put a long-haired wig over his head and then arm your man with a pole sign reading:

If we can't travel at
"HIGH SPEED"
we can see it at
(name of theatre here)

Like all Butterfly features, "High Speed" is a picture that every member of the family can see. Therefore, if you have never conducted a "family night," or a "family matinee," use it to introduce this event in your community.



The idea is simple enough. Simply emphasize in all your advertising that here is a production of such wondrous worth and so absolutely lacking in the elements that would offend the most delicate sensibilities, that every member of the family, from the parents down to the youngest of the children should see it. Let your advertising appeals contain the line:

Don't forget to bring the children—Although a story about grown-ups, they'll laugh as heartily as you will.

Distribute throwaways among the children, urging them to get their parents to take them to see this delightful production. It will be well worth your while.

THREE REEL CLEO MADISON FEATURE

Released Week of July 30

CLEO MADISON in "The Woman Who Would Not Pay"

Spread the glad tidings to all the Cleo Madison fans that here is a genuine opportunity to see some of Cleo's genuine tears trickle lingeringly down her damask cheeks. As "The Woman Who Would Not Pay," in the dramatic and emotional Cleo Madison feature of that name, Cleo has one of her favorite roles. Married to a fine chap, she lived but for excitement, and found that in flirting with all flirty males within her ken. But one night hubby came home suspicious, and walked over to a tall safe and locked it. He sat through the smoking of four cigars, and then opened the safe. What was concealed there was—enough—but your audiences will be thrilled to the core with the magnificent emotional acting of this great screen star.

SCREEN MAGAZINE SHOWS AIRPLANE BUILDING.

many losses through collisions, is shown in operation on a model vessel and in the harbor on a small craft. How to make a fireless cooker at home, is an interesting and timely study in domestic science, the directions for which are so clear and plain, that a housewife can go home and construct one from this demonstration.

Willie Hopkins, the young wonder-worker in clay, who makes clay cartoons exclusively for the Screen Magazine, has a particularly effective one, this week, called "Faces U Face." A ball of clay changes as if by magic into all sorts of different countenances, in a fascinating manner.

The Screen Magazine is so varied, reveals so many hidden processes, tells so many secrets, and lets us in to so many forbidden places, that it is acknowledged to be the most worthwhile thousand-feet film ever gotten together. Every one loves to see things in the making. Americans especially have a never-dying interest in "how things are done." The Screen Magazine tells them. Through its remarkable organization it gets the entre into government workshops, into the very sanctum of manufacturing plants, and shows things from which the public is shut out. But the Screen Magazine does more than show pictures of things. "How to do" all sorts of things, is an important part of it. Women find in it a complete course in Domestic Science, with wonderfully clear lessons in household art and in cookery by the special expert, Mrs. A. Louise Andrea, who is the proud possessor of gold medals. Humor is not neglected. Besides the clay cartoons of Willie Hopkins, there are occasional numbers in which clever trick photography gets many a laugh from the spectators. Altogether, it is impossible to imagine a single reel in which entertainment, instruction, amusement, and education are blended in a more perfect whole.

Still Pulling
with tremendous Power

Did you ever, Mr. Exhibitor, buy a picture or read a story that some one didn't knock it to you? This is pretty straight talk, but we say it because you may have heard some knock on "The Eagle's Wings."

If you've heard some knocks, you'll be interested in a letter from an Exhibitor in Jerome, Idaho, who signs "E. M. Steele and Wife." Read just two paragraphs from his letter on his experience with

"About 'THE EAGLE'S WINGS,' that is the best picture I ever saw. For the first time in our stay of 4 years in Jerome, the people shouted and applauded of their own accord, at least a dozen different times during the show. Everybody was up on the edge of their chairs."

"The best picture and the best crowd I ever had. SOME GUY ONCE SAID TO ME: 'DON'T BOOK "THE EAGLE'S WINGS"; IT'S BUNK.' NOW I WANT TO MEET THAT GUY. WE TOOK IN $150."

CLAMBAKE OF THE UNIVERSAL CLUB WAS HUGE SUCCESS.

being followed by big league spies and scouts.

There were many other athletic events. The 50-yard dash was won by Pitcher Bendel, and as a prize he received an easy-running fountain pen. The Goff sisters won two prizes between them. Miss J. Goff won the baseball throwing contest and received a pair of silk stockings, while her sister, Miss K., won a five-dollar prize in the 50-yard dash. Blanche Wallach took second in the baseball throw. The factory won the relay race, and a red-headed Mercury named Waucke loped to an easy victory in the 100-yard dash.

After that every one from Mr. Laemmle down to Jimmie, the office boy, had their pictures taken and then obeyed the hunger impulse. Mr. Donnelly had set out his best fare, and those who could do so after the clambake, danced to the music of a Jass Band, which almost broke up the ball game in the second inning. Joe (Brass Band) Brandt was so incensed at them for not playing and then for playing, that he became water boy for the crowd, and we have a snapshot of him doing it.

SIXTY-TWO QUESTIONS.

Now, it is not claimed for a single moment that the foregoing questions represents the sum total of all that can be asked where an honest and a sincere effort is made to arrive at the solution of the problem confronting the owner of the losing house. Nevertheless, they will help the exhibitor to make some exceedingly interesting discoveries, if answered conscientiously.

Mr. Average Exhibitor would probably find his ego writhing in anguish before half the answers were forthcoming, but it must be borne in mind that a well-developed sense of ego is bound to suffer injury in the process of self analysis. By the time the cross-examining process has been concluded, Mr. Average Exhibitor would learn that although he isn't half the showman he thought he was, the information now in his possession has set him on the high-road towards becoming one.

NO LONGER WE HEAR OF THE MAN WITH THE HOE.

IT IS "THE WOMAN WITH THE HOE"

As a mirror of the public mind as reflected in the newspapers, fashions, customs and frivolities of America, there is no more enjoyable institution than Hy Mayer, the famous artist of the Animated Weekly. For he is an institution. Without rancor, synicism or cruelty, he holds the glass up to his constantly growing and wonderfully appreciative audience through the Animated. The two illustrations above are striking examples of his art and his humor.

Universal Current Events Gets The News While It IS News

Nothing stale or behind the times can find any space in "Current Events." The big things that are daily happening to thrill Americans with a deep-rooted national pride are caught by "Current Events"—rushed to the Exhibitor and are on the screen almost before others have had time to make a print

Expense Is Not Considered To Keep Current Events in the Lead

No matter what the cost to get a "story"—no matter how big the bill may be to get the film FIRST ON THE SCREEN, "CURRENT EVENTS" pays the charges and counts the cost as money well spent.

"CURENT EVENTS" shows the meat of the subject only—it pictures the one big dramatic punch—not special poses, but THE ACTUAL EVENT ITSELF—with the living characters and authentic surroundings.

Book "CURRENT EVENTS" immediately. It has no connection with either the Universal Animated Weekly or Universal Screen Magazine. It is an entirely new oportunity for live Exhibitors. If your Universal Exchange hasn't a print fill and return the coupon.

"I have just finished the first day's showing of Episode One of 'The Gray Ghost,' and am mighty pleased to tell you that in spite of the torrid day and a crippled advertising campaign, it has started bigger than any of its predecessors, and you know that is saying a lot. I have spent a lot of money and turned the town upside down in starting several serials before, but when 'The ray Ghost' starts off bigger without any effort, I think it is speaking ghty well for the Universal's latest serial production."—Arthur M. It is also the first iversal serial I have ever run, and I can truthfully say that the first episode surprised me, and this ial is, in my estimation, the strongest and best that I have ever run or seen in my life. * * * It ny honest opinion that it will make more money for Exhibitors than any serial they can book, and be the means of many Exhibitors keeping open during the summer months."—W. "LIBERTY" is a red-blooded play that comes up to the ideals of the great American public. It puts a punchful story over in a marvelous manner. It gives 20 weeks of sure-fire profits—large profits, because it is a wonderful money-maker. Mr. F. D. Baird, Seemore Theatre, Garland, Utah, writes: "I deem it a duty to express my opinion to you as to what I think of the 20-reel photoplay serial, 'LIBERTY,' which we just finished this week. It was great, and I will say that it is the best serial that we have ever run and the best that I ever saw. So, if you have any patrons who have not run it, it is a mistake. It is a good house-puller and is interesting from the start to the finish."

"BOX CAR BILL FALLS IN LUCK."

Powers Comedy Cartoon Split Reel.

Bill arrives by the side-door Pullman route, and is thrown off the train. He finds some money and goes into the bar to spend it. He asks for another botle of prune juice, but a purple goofus comes out of the neck of it, and this puts him off. He rambles out of the bar and sees all sorts of curious creatures, until exclaiming, "I'm through!" he climbs onto the wagon for good.

"IN THE HEART OF INDIA."

Powers Dorsey Educational Split Reel

The national drink of India is "toddy," a wine made from the palm tree. The palm flower is cut and the sap collected by the "toddy drawers," who form a cast of their own. The wine is sold in great jars in the market. On the farms every farmer grinds his own castor beans, the oil of which is used for all sorts of things. The huge mortar is fixed, and oxen are harnessed to the pestle which revolves in it. Fuel is scarce in India and everything that will burn is saved. We see some of the old, old people of a native village. One old woman is 105, and has great-great-great-great-grandchildren. Then we see a high caste woman dressing her daughter in the "sari" or national dress of India. Roadmaking is well understood and the roads last for centuries, as they are so well constructed. Then we see the broadest banyan tree in all India, the main system being seventy feet in circumference. Its shade diameter in every direction is 180 feet.

Richard Manslot	William Franey
"Coyote" Dan	Milburn Moranti
Hepsabiah Hardlot	Zasu Pitts
Pearl Handled	Lillian Peacock
Pete	Bobbie Mack

Richard Manslot, a stranded actor, drifts into Satan's Gulch, broken in purse and spirit. The cowboys have never met an actor and he is an object of ridicule as well as wonderment. They rope Richard and bring him to the dance-hall, where he meets "Coyote" Dan, the sheriff, who is in reality a thief and a desperate character. "Coyote" Dan resolves on a bold course. It is election day in the Gulch and a sheriff is to be elected. They decide to elect Richard sheriff, as a joke, but really for a sinister purpose. The cowboys are informed the election will be a farce and they enter into the spirit of the occasion and Richard, to his surprise, receives the unanimous vote of the place. Richard swells up with pride at the unexpected honor and is covered with guns and cartridge belts.

Hepsabiah is a slavey in the kitchen of the dance-hall and restaurant. She discovers Richard and becomes much interested in the stranger. Pearl Handled is the "Girl" of Dan, and she regards Richard as a freak.

The dance-hall toughs start a sham fight in the dance-hall. Richard does not appear to quell the riot. He hides in the stage coach that is about to take out a large sum of money to pay off miners. Dan and Pete, masked, start out to rob the stage. The driver engages in a pistol fight with the desperadoes. A bullet drives a splinter of wood into the anatomy of Richard and his fighting blood is aroused. He sallies forth and he wings both Dan and Pete, who are still masked. The driver is killed. Hepsabiah appears on the scene and Richard throws her into the stage, drives back to the Gulch and throws Dan and Pete into jail. Richard is a hero and Pearl falls for him, but he drives away with the stage.

Direct Bookings Accepted in Unsold State Rights Territory

Thousands have pronounced this LOIS WEBER PRODUCTION to be the most enthralling—the most gripping—the most stupendous photodrama they have ever witnessed. It is the play that commanded front page news positions in the Philadelphia papers. It is the drama that from a "lost cause" to an almost tie vote. A play that can swing such powerful influence should be worthy of your booking. It will not only add to your prestige—it will not only set people talking about the play itself and your foresight in booking it for your theatre—but IT WILL PLAY CAPACITY IN YOUR HOUSE AT EACH PERFORMANCE.

Changed the Vote on Capital Punishment in Pennsylvania State Legislature

"God's Law" was Written and Produced by

LOIS WEBER

Producer of such successes as "Where Are My Children?" "Shoes," "Hypocrites," "Jewel," Scandal" and others.

Direct bookings are now accepted on all unsold State Rights Territory. Direct bookings will also be accepted (until further notice) on Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley's "EVEN AS YOU AND I" and "THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE"—direct from Broadway run. 3 TIMES The Profits Through Repeat Bookings

Hetty Green, who was reputed to be the richest woman in the world, once said: "Sell what the people want and you will have no trouble to do a large business with a big list of steady customers."

You don't need to be told how hungry the people are to see good moving picture stories—you know. But do you know that when you get one of the wonderful BLUEBIRD Photoplays and only show it one day you are only scratching the surface, so far as your profits are concerned? That simply because people have flocked into your place at each performance you have not got all the money out of the picture? Don't overlook the fact that there are considerably more people in your town—yes, even in your own neighborhood, than can be packed into your theatre in two performances. What's the answer? REPEAT BOOKINGS—the only logical way that any and every Exhibitor should conduct his house. Prove this statement. Order the following well-acted and perfectly directed BLUEBIRD plays on the REPEAT BOOKINGS plan—run them for THREE days and take a three times profit.

Tyrone Power and Lois Weber in "The Eye of God"

An unusual drama of gripping power and big scenes of intense action. Written and produced by Lois Weber, producer of "Where Are My Children?" "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," "Even As You and I," and many other great film successes.

Harry Carey in "The Three Godfathers" Most remarkable outdoors picture ever produced. From the Saturday Evening Post story by Peter B. Kyne. A living expression of human life that leads through every human emotion

Mary MacLaren in "Shoes" Produced by the genius, Lois Weber, producer of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," etc. A BLUEBIRD masterpiece—a chapter from the life of a girl who sold herself for a pair of shoes. A powerful story; a wonderful production.

Book these three REPEAT. Play them for every dollar they hold for you. Book NOW through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or communicate with

The card reproduced above is from the Green Room Theatre at Plains, Mont. Notice that this theatre is using five of the Universal features—and IN PARTICULAR NOTE THE PRICES CHARGED. Look at the question of

from a common sense business point of view. If the Green Room was not getting the crowds on its BLUEBIRD Day it would not "raise the ante," would it? It certainly would not be good policy to make an extra charge for something the patrons were not keen about. The ordinary things of life are always cheap, whether it be clothes, automobiles or moving pictures. But the good things come high, because they are worth more—they make a good value received, because they stand above common-place things.

What The Green Room Has Done—You Can Do

You can START A BLUEBIRD DAY and pack your house. You can do this, no matter where you may be or where your theatre may be located. Investigate! Dig for the proof! Get in touch with your local BLUEBIRD Exchange —and do it NOW.

VIOLET MERSEREAU
IN
"THE LITTLE TERROR"

The first meal in the big house.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAY, Written and directed by Rex Ingram and starring Violet Mersereau in one of the juvenile roles which she fills to perfection. A comedy-drama with the accent on the comedy.

CAST.

John Saunders	Ned Finlay
Tina Alice	Violet Mersereau
Wallace Saunders	Robert Clugston
George Reynolds	Sidney Mason
Archibald Watkins	Jack Raymond
Mrs. Watkins	Mrs. Brundage
The Manager	Edward Porter

Violet doesn't care for Archibald.

WHEN Rex Ingram, who by the way introduced Miss Mersereau to Bluebird Photoplays, started on this production, "The Little Terror," he was asked to make it one long beam of sunshine, and he responded with a comedy-drama, in which the accent is very heavily on the comedy. Violet says that this is the best role she ever had, and that is a good indication of its character, for until now her favorite was the waif in "The Great Problem," also directed by Mr. Ingram.

For this production, he wrote his own story, and then went to work on it all alone in the studio, for Miss Mersereau's is the only Bluebird company working in the East. There is just a suspicion of a tear in the first part of the tale, in which Violet plays a circus rider, on whose account John Saunders disinherits his son Wallace. The young man, however, persists in marrying the girl he loves, and when his wife dies, he brings up their little daughter to the life of the sawdust ring, appealing to her grandfather only when he is dying from an injury. From this point on, with Violet as the madcap daughter, there is nothing but laughter of the most exhilarating variety. Alice goes to live in the solemn house of her grandparent, and takes her pet pig with her. The introduction of "the little terror" into this well-ordered household provides excitement enough to keep four reels simply humming. A fortune hunting mother and her sissy son provide an endless source of amusement, and through it all Violet romps as if she were having the time of her life. That is just what she was having, and the picture shows it.

At the very end, the little terror grows up and turns into a woman, in the manner in which Miss Mersereau well knows how to suggest. But she insists just as definitely on her own way when she reaches years of discretion, and no one will suit her for a husband but the companion of her old circus days, for the word snob simply isn't in her vocabulary. This charming story is told with the wealth of beautiful lighting, of effective grouping, of pictorial interiors and well-chosen exteriors, for which Rex Ingram productions are famous. A cold recital of the events of the story gives very little idea of its charm.

When Wallace Saunders fell in love with Queen Tina, a circus rider, and asked his wealthy father to consent to their marriage, the elder Saunders flew into a violent rage and declared that he would disinherit his son if he married the circus girl. Wallace was not long in deciding.

Turning his back on home, young Saunders married Queen Tina and joined the circus profession, ultimately becoming a trapeze performer. Queen Tina and Wallace led a life of ideal love, until their little daughter Alice was born, at the sacrifice of Queen Tina's life. Wallace continued with the circus and reared little Alice as a rider.

When the show visited Saunders' home town, in later years, the elder Saunders, prompted by curiosity and suffering from remorse for his ill treatment of his son and only heir, determined to attend the performance and behold his boy, known as "Prince Wallace," perform his aerial feats and at the same time behold his little granddaughter, upon whom he had never set his eyes. During the performance Prince Wallace fell from his trapeze and was killed.

John Saunders rushed into the ring, arriving beside his prostrate son at the instant the grief-stricken Alice reached her dead father's side. Grandfather and grandchild were reconciled then and there, and Saunders determined to take the girl into the home where she rightfully belonged. This arrangement would have better suited Alice had she not been compelled to separate from George Reynolds, a lightning cartoonist, who had travelled for several seasons with the same show. Alice and Reynolds are in love, the man simply biding his time until Alice shall be old enough to marry him.

Established in her palatial home, the sumptuous surroundings are hard for the circus girl easily to adopt. Hoydenish and care-free, her mischievous ways upset her grandfather's serenity to no small degree. She is especially fond of making fun or Archibald Watkins, who has come, with his mother, to visit John Saunders.

Mrs. Watkins has designs upon the Saunders millions, as represented in Alice, the heir apparent. She would have her foppish son marry the girl, but Alice would have none of the scheme. She made all manner of fun out of the pranks she played upon Archibald, and had not the least intention of marrying him.

When George Reynolds, back with the show, realized that Alice was now an heiress he rightfully considered that she had different aims than when she was a circus rider. Determined to make himself acceptable as a husband, Reynolds quit his nomadic life and by application of his skill as a cartoonist obtained a profitable position on a newspaper, and in two years became famous and high-salaried.

Then he went to the Saunders home, greeted Alice and arranged for an elopement. Archibald, urged on by his mother, had constantly aimed at his union with Alice, and when he found the girl had eloped, attempted to thwart the marriage. But Mr. and Mrs. George Reynolds greeted their foppish "avenger" with jeers and started upon their honeymoon undismayed and happy.

"I don't like him!"

"Take him away!"

The death of Wallace Saunders.

Centre—The pig is Violet's leading support.
Below—This scene is the only sad one in the picture.

Such is the plot of "The Little Terror," in which dainty Violet Mersereau plays the dual role of Tina, the circus rider, later on continuing as heroine of the romance as Alice Saunders, the heiress to millions.

MARY FULLER FEATURE
"The Beautiful Impostor"

TWO-REEL DRAMA. Written by Catherine Carr and produced by Lucius Henderson, with the star in an appealing role.

Above—Mary Fuller as Isabel Whitlock. Left—Scene at the dressmaker's.

A WONDERFUL opportunity to see Mary Fuller in a dozen marvelous creations of the dressmaker's art, is presented in "The Beautiful Imposter" which was written for her by Catherine Carr, and produced by Lucius Henderson. Mary is induced by the exigencies of a lawsuit for the possession of her old home, to impersonate a French countess at the house-party of a social climber. Here she meets and loves a young man in society, who returns her affection. But her Cinderella-like experience over, she returns to her position as mannikin in a fashionable shop. Both as the countess and as the mannikin she wears some of the most gorgeous gowns which the screen has seen in a large time. Besides the fashion review, however, there is a satisfactory and touching love story, and of course it all comes out right in the end.

CAST.

Isabel Whitlock	Mary Fuller
The Countess	Clara Beyers
Mrs. Grayson-Dodge	Nellie Slattery
Bob Hathaway	Johnnie Walker

Isabel Whitlock is told by her lawyer that the loss of her ancestral home is threatened, unless she has money to continue to fight for it. She determines to get the money somehow. She goes to New York hoping to succeed on the stage, but is disappointed. At last she finds a position as mannikin in a dressmaking establishment. Her air of distinction makes her a favorite with the customers.

Mrs. Grayson-Dodge is a climber, and has made the acquaintance on board ship of the Countess de Mobre, a celebrated French beauty. She invites the noblewoman to her home, hoping that news of her distinguished visitor will help her socially. The countess has succumbed to a bad cold, and has telephoned to Mrs. Dodge that she cannot accept her invitation. Mrs. Dodge is in despair, as she has widely advertised the coming of the Frenchwoman. She resolves to go in person and appeal to her guest. She arrives as Isabel is exhibiting the gowns. Both women are struck by the beauty and culture of the model, and the countess, half in jest, half in earnest, suggests that the girl take her place at the house party. Mrs. Dodge catches at the idea, and it is arranged. The countess gives the girl the gowns she has ordered to wear. Mrs. Dodge agrees to pay Isabel a large sum of money, and the girl sees the chance to prosecute the suit for her old home.

IMPORTANT.

In order to put into effect a new copyright system which the well-known attorneys, Stanchfield & Levy, expect will revolutionize the copyrighting of moving pictures and enable the companies to protect their property, the Moving Picture Weekly this week carries the stories of Universal, Butterfly and Bluebird pictures for the weeks of July 30, as well as July 23. In the issue of July 28 will be found the stories of the photoplays to be released the week of August 6. In this way the stories carried in the Moving Picture Weekly will be fully two weeks ahead of the release date, and each story will then carry a coypright line. Exhibitors, particularly those who are running first-run or pre-release pictures, will then have no difficulty whatever in finding everything that they need for their guidance, such as synopsis, music cues, ideas, suggestions, sample advertisements and publicity stories especially adapted for their use in the Weekly, and far enough in advance to make the most effective use of them. —Editor.

Cleo Madison in "The Woman Who Would Not Pay"

A professional charmer.

Duane pays at last.

Cleo as Duane.

CLEO MADISON feature in two reels. Story by E. M. Ingleton. Scenario and production by Ruth Ann Baldwin. The story of the bitter retribution forced upon a woman who thought herself invulnerable.

CLEO MADISON has a part after her own heart in the two-reel feature, "The Woman Who Would Not Pay" written by Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton, and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin. Three clever women combined their work to make this picture the success that it emphatically is.

Duane Lovett was a woman whose husband adored and trusted her after four years together, although she squandered his money madly.

One evening as Duane was surrounded by her usual small court, attracted by the rare magnetism which drew men to her and held them, Lovett presented her to Daredevil Dan Hargreaves, the millionaire explorer of the seven seas, who had heard of the fascinations of his old friend's lovely wife, and had come to confirm these rumors. One of her old lovers, Malcolm Leroy, who had clung desperately to the edge of her attention for years, watched the introduction.

When questioned fiercely by Leroy, Duane, infuriated, dismissed him from her home. He resolved on revenge. He took rooms across the street, from whence he saw Lovett leave and Dan arrive every day. One night Leroy, making certain that Dan was with Duane, hastened to the club to warn Lovett.

And as Leroy talked, suspicion grew in Lovett's thoughts.

Cautiously, he entered his home that night, but was seen by the maid, who rushed frantically to Duane to warn her. Duane, terrified, hid Dan in the wall-safe, just in time to open the door of her room in answer to Lovett's pounding and shaking. Lovett saw that she had been packing to go away, and calmly and cruelly, he surveyed the place. Without disclosing that he had seen the corner of a coat sticking through a crack of the safe door, he begged her forgiveness for his suspicions, seated himself, and with tranquil cruelty slowly smoked four cigars, all the while talking carelessly, while with vicious satisfaction he watched her growing agitation. Finally he finished his last cigar, bade her a cold good-night, and made as if to retire.

Half-dead with terror, Duane rushed to the safe, and after clumsily fumbling with the lock, opened the door. Dan's body fell out before her—dead. She looked about wildly as if for help, and saw Lovett standing at the door, smiling malignantly at her. She screamed and backed away from him to the window, and Leroy, watching from across the street, saw Lovett's shadow approach Duane's, grab her by the throat and begin to choke her; but suddenly flinging her from him, blow a puff of smoke into her face and leave the room. Duane stood staring at the body of Dan. At last, she had paid.

(No. 185. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

NO nation on earth has the newspaper habit and the magazine habit so strongly developed as the American public.

No people on earth have that "nose for news" that the American people have.

No folks anywhere love the thrill of the new or the novel so keenly as Uncle Sam's nephews and nieces.

The exhibitor who thinks nationally can take advantage of this and apply it to his own business in no better way than by making the Universal Animated Weekly a big feature of his show every week in the year.

There is no better way to keep up the public interest in your theatre during the summer months, for example, than by showing the Universal Animated Weekly with consistent regularity and letting your people know about it.

Every issue of the Universal Animated Weekly contains high spots of sufficient public interest to justify you in advertising it even more than you advertise your dramas or comedies.

Dramas and comedies are not news. The people love them, without a doubt, but they cannot possibly contain the punch that the Universal Animated Weekly packs every week.

The history of the world is being turned upside down, inside out and made over every week during these tempestuous times. Fact is giving Fiction a swift kick in the trousers every hour out of the twenty-four.

The Universal Animated Weekly is picturizing these Facts every week—doing it better than any one else is doing it—doing it more quickly than any one else is doing it. No organization of skilful camera-news-men on earth comes anywhere near equalling the world-wide Universal organization of motion picture news-getters.

OF THIS MONEY!

We scooped everybody on pictures of the Pershing expedition; and not content with that, we scored another beat on the Russian revolution pictures. We have done these things so often that it is expected of us every week—and we deliver.

Our record is 100 per cent. We've never been beaten on a real news item yet and we're working our heads off to see that such a calamity never does happen.

Any exhibitor who is NOT using our Universal Animated Weekly and FEATURING IT is overlooking a corking good opportunity. If you haven't the nose for news, if you don't know how to get the very best results out of the proper handling of a news weekly in moving pictures, the nearest Universal exchange can furnish you with all kinds of ideas. And if the exchange runs out of ideas, it can always get a fresh supply from the live-wire service bureau maintained in our New York headquarters.

The most successful exhibitors in America—those of the Rothapfel-Strand type—are making the news reel a great big FEATURE of their shows; setting them to appropriate music; featuring them all the time and never letting up.

No matter if there is something wrong with a part of your show, you can always save the day with a well handled, well advertised Universal Animated Weekly. Most of you have never given this feature half the thought it deserves.

There's a pot of gold in this for you and you don't have to chase rainbows to find it; simply trot to the nearest Universal exchange and get your share!

TOPICAL PICTURES EVOKE APPLAUSE

IN this issue of the Moving Picture Weekly, Mr. Laemmle in his Straight-from-the-Shoulder-Talk lays particular stress upon the unusual interest which the American public takes in its news reels, and the advantage which exhibitors should take of this fact.

From the Universal standpoint, the wonderful success of the Animated Weekly decided the company to release another news reel and now the Universal Current Events is running the Animated Weekly a very close race for popularity. They are by all odds the most successful of Universal's short reel subjects as well as the most successful news reels on the market to-day. But lest the reader should think that Mr. Laemmle and the Moving Picture Weekly are biased in their opinions, let us look into this morning's paper and see what a critic of The Sun thinks of news reels.

The following item is taken verbatim from the issue of Monday, July 16th, head and all.

Newsy Actualities Surpass the "Feature Plays" on Screen Bills.

Merciful abridgement of the so-called "feature" plays, both at the Rialto and the Strand, yesterday was not without its effect on the public at both theatres. Instead of the resigned indifference with which the spectators contemplate the progress of a "picture play" from one bit of fatuousness to another with the philosophic conviction that everything, however bad it may be, must eventually reach an end, there was a spirit of interest and enthusiasm throughout the exhibition of the "topical" views that almost brought the spectators to their feet in their fervent approval.

Not all the pictures, either at the Strand or the Rialto, were of our own men abroad. Scenes in the rebellion in China, on the Russian front, in our own West and in the West Indies made up a series of pictorial delights which kept the spectators uncommonly interested throughout the performance.

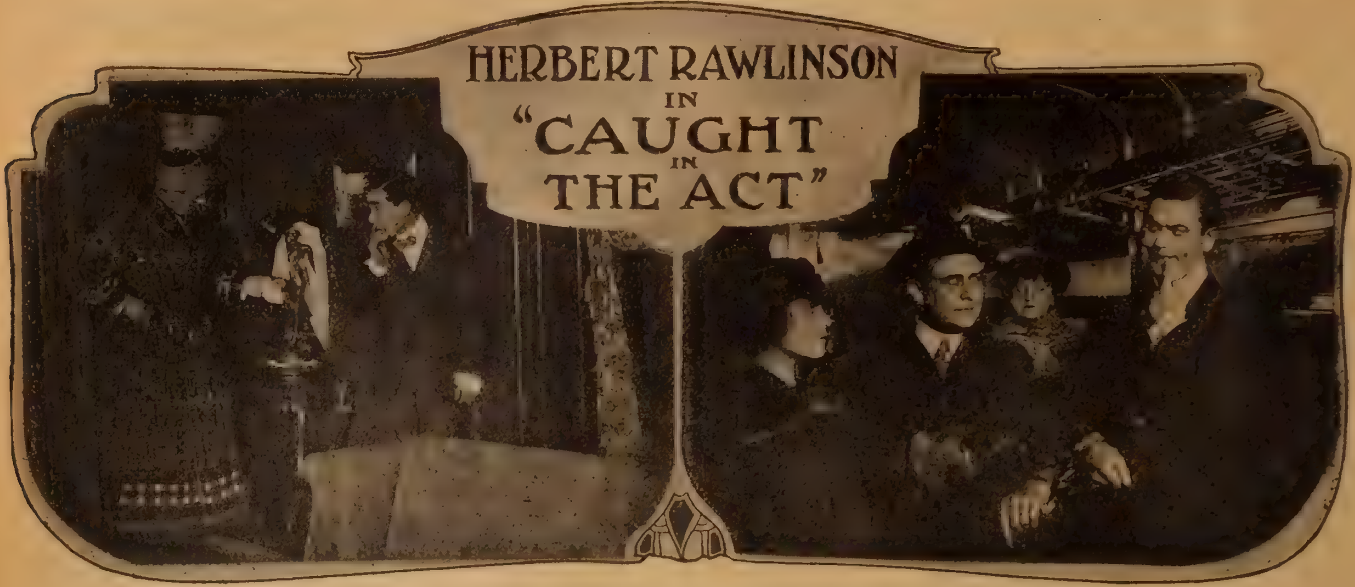
HERBERT RAWLINSON IN "CAUGHT IN THE ACT"



Two scenes from the Victor Comedy drama.

VICTOR Two-Reel Comedy-Drama, starring Herbert Rawlinson. Written by Eugene B. Lewis and produced by T. N. Heffron. An amusing story of mistaken identity and a mysterious crime.

CAST.

Billy	Willard Wayne
Banzai, the Jap	Frank Tokonaga
Tom Worth	Herbert Rawlinson
George	Dick Ryan
Jack	Billy Human
Effie Jane Page	Neva Gerber

THERE is a lot of talk about Herbert Rawlinson just now, on account of his tremendous success in the seven-reel feature, " Come Through," by George Bronson Howard, which made such a hit at the Broadway Theatre, New York, recently. There will not be many more chances to see the young star in short comedies like this one, "Caught in the Act," which was written by E. B. Lewis, and produced by T. N. Heffron. Yet it is in such pictures that a good part of his reputation has been made. He has a new opportunity as the young fellow, who goes out to celebrate a night with the boys, commits a mysterious crime, and is pursued by the police, who mistake him for a well-known crook. The complications follow each other in bewildering succession, ending with a big scrap.

Tom Worth has a very painful awakening one morning, and is unable to remember anything that happened the night before. The phone rings and Billy tells him that he has made a wreck of his whole life. Tom yells to him that he doesn't want to know what it was he did.

The Jap valet, Banzai, comes to Tom's assistance with ice-water, a cold cloth and finally a block of ice. Soon George phones him, but he is afraid to allow him to say what the trouble is. When Jack phones and informs him that what he did is worse than burglary or murder, Tom is a nervous wreck. He sits up in bed, his head in his hands, and imagines the scene. He sees himself in a fight, and when three policemen stop him and his three friends, he shoots two of them. He imagines the headlines in the newspaper about a gay young clubman becoming a desperate criminal and committing a triple murder.

Just at this time, Effie Jane Page, Tom's sweetheart, phones him that she is going home to remain for a month, and asks if he will accompany her. He is to meet her at the station.

As Tom and Banzai are hastening in an auto to the station through the thick traffic of the busy city, a detective and a policeman notice Tom and chase him. Stopped by the traffice policeman, Tom becomes so terrified that he jumps out of the machine and runs into a store, the men after him. After much chasing and gathering of a great crowd, Tom is caught and handcuffed. The detective forces him to get on a trail at the railroad station, telling him that they are going to the scenes of the crime.

Effie Jane has arrived at the station, but is unable to find Tom. Tom and the detective are sitting in that very train and Tom tries in every way not to be seen by her. He covers the handcuffs with a newspaper and introduces the detective as Count de Marmalade, a friend of his. But she sees that his hand is fastened to that of the detective's, and Tom tells her that it is a bet.

Meanwhile, three crooks are following Tom and his guard. When the two are about to step into a taxi after descending from the coach, the crooks grab the detective and carry Tom to another taxi. They stop at an old house and demand of Tom that he come through with the loot. They take him for "Curley, the Fox," and though Tom tells them that they are mistaken, they only jeer at him.

Effie Jane has quickly hired a taxi and having followed the other one, arrives at the old house. Another crook comes up and catches her, she screams and Tom hears the cry. He begins to fight with the crooks, snatches up the lamp, and hurls it at one of them. The room is soon aflame, the men struggling in the midst of it. A crowd gathers outside the house and soon an auto with the detective and other officers arrive. They break into the house and take all the inmates prisoners.

Taken to the police station, Tom is put in a cell. The phone rings and the chief is very surprised when he is told that a man positively identified as "Curley, the Fox" has been caught and that they are on their way to the station with him.

The chief sends for Tom. The detectives arrive with "Curley, the Fox," who is an exact duplicate of Tom, and along with them are Tom's three friends, Jack, Billy and George.

They laughingly tell him that his "crime" was signing the pledge. Tom laughs, but when he suggests that they all have a drink, Effie Jane remonstrates.

L-KO KOMEDY

"BLACKBOARD and BLACKMAIL"

TWO-REEL cataclysm of children and chicanery. Directed by Vin Moore. Supervised by J. G. Blystone and played by Phil Dunham, Merta Sterling and Lucille Hutton.

CAST.

Baby Mert	Merta Sterling
President of the School Board	Charles Inslee
Angelface, his Son	Al Forbes
Mishap, the Cook	Phil Dunham
The Brand-New Teacher	Lucille Hutton

The new pupil does not seem to enjoy the indoor sport of holding teacher's hand.

BLACKBOARD AND BLACKMAIL" is the title of an L-Ko Komedy, directed by Vin Moore and supervised by J. G. Blystone, which tells the story of the pranks of as lively a band of country school children as ever gave a teacher nervous prostration. They are led by Baby Mert, the daughter of Mishap, who is cook at the hotel kept in his leisure time by the president of the school board. Phil Dunham has some original ideas on housekeeping and the saving of waste in the kitchen, which will be of interest to all housewives in these war times. As for Lucille, as a thousand-dollar teacher, she earns her money.

It was a quiet day at the district school, as the children were quite peacefully engaged in killing the teacher. Angelface, the son of the President of the Board, ran to tell his father of the event, who went to the rescue, and found the children, led by Baby Mert, just about to put the teacher out of his misery. He rescued the man and sent him on his way. At that moment two light-fingered persons from the city arrived—Lucille and her brother. The old man fell for Lucille at once, and asked her if she would like to be the new teacher. She accepted the job.

Mishap is the cook in the boarding-house kept in his leisure moments by the President of the Board. His daughter is little Mert, who makes all the trouble. She helps in serving the guests, and always champions her father. Two old maids, quite man crazy, live in the boarding-house, and when the children toss Angelface in a blanket and he comes through their ceiling, they try to hold on to him. He manages to escape. Lucille has accepted the job of teacher, because the Board has offered a reward of $1,000 to any one taming the school. The President escorts her to the school on her first day. Mishap has cast his eagle eye on her, and thoroughly approves of her. The old maids watch her with suspicion. Lucille and Mishap go out walking. Mert and Al climb a tree and watch them. Mishap swings Lucille in the swing and the children untie the ropes from above and the two fall into the stream and get soaked. Mert then steals their clothes, and Phil has to make a hula-hula skirt out of reeds. The President comes up and gives Lucille his coat, which she wears as trousers.

The next morning Mishap writes a note to her and puts it in a pancake. By mistake the President gets the pancake and he starts a fight in which Mishap gets the worst of it. The President escorts Lucille to the school. Mishap steals his son's clothes, leaving the boy in the bushes, and goes to school, too. Angelface later arrives in a barrel and exposes him. Mishap breaks the barrel, and Angelface takes refuge in a huge map. Lucille's pal breaks into the President's safe, and when the President appears, hangs him by his coat to a nail in the wall. They tie Mishap up in a hammock and throw him in the river. Mert and Angelface, fishing in the river, catch him and pull him out. The President and Mishap then go after the crooks. The pal escapes and runs into the old maids' room. They will not let him go. He gets away and climbs on the roof. Mishap follows and they fight on the roof. Mishap jumps off and into an auto, gets Lucille and elopes with her. The crowd ropes the auto, and Mishap and Lucille take refuge in the schoolhouse. The crowds then blows it up, and Phil and Lucille from high in the air, shower the crowd with the stolen money.

One of Mishap's daily calisthenic exercises.

"THE HOUSE OF MYSTERY"

EPISODE No. 6 OF

"The Gray Ghost"

THE sixth chapter of the serial produced by Stuart Paton from the novel by Arthur Somers Roche, finishes the robbery of the jewelry store and brings us to a mysterious island.

The store detectives break in.

The robbery in the jewelry store.

IN the sixth installment of the serial, "The Gray Ghost," produced by Stuart Paton from the novel by Arthur Somers Roche, published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title of "Loot," we see the culmination of the carefully staged robbery of Arabin's. The crooks get away with their haul, and then the scene changes to a mysterious island, where the kidnapped pair, Wade Hildreth and Morn Light, are locked up in a lonely house. Here Hildreth meets young Olmstead, who has been a prisoner ever since the bank robbery, and is informed that neither of them will ever leave the house alive.

In the store the others of the Gray Ghost's men are awaiting Williams' signal to fall upon the loot. In the back alley, behind the store, we see a huge empty motor truck ready. At a signal from Williams, the Ghost's men all pull their guns, order the customers to line up at the right, and the clerks to the left. They then proceed to fill their bags. A crowd might gather, and so another of the crooks deliberately stalls his huge motorlorry outside in the street and provokes a fight with one of the men in the street to keep the attention of the cops away from the store.

At a sharp order from Williams, the crooks back out with the loot, keeping their guns pointed at the crowd. They slam the big iron gates behind them. Williams is the last to leave.

For cast see page 32.

The commissioner at headquarters is told of the robbery. His first thought is of Jerry Tyron, who predicted that the Ghost would soon be active. He calls Jerry and learns that though he has left the force, he has gone to the hospital to interview the waiter Jacques, who is still unconscious, and may not be able to speak for weeks—perhaps never again. The commissioner tells Jerry that maybe it was the Gray Ghost, and that anyway he wants him back on the force.

Out on a country road the auto truck is met by a hay wagon. The crooks hide their loot in the hay, and the wagon drives off, while they, after setting fire to the truck, take to an automobile.

Meantime, the Gray Ghost, with some of his men and his two captives, Morn Light and Wade Hildreth, are in a launch, rapidly nearing a mysterious island. They disembark, and are driven to a lonely looking house. Wade struggles a bit, but is easily overpowered. Morn Light demands to be told what will be done with him. The Ghost says that that is strictly his business, but that he can tell her that Hildreth will never leave the place alive. She is horrified. He locks her in a room, and she beats on the panels. Wade has been put into another room, where he finds a young man, whom he does not recognize. The Ghost introduces them. It is young Olmstead, who is told by the Ghost that the police are still anxious to know of his whereabouts for the murder of his own father, the banker. He says he hopes that the two men will become friends, as they are destined to see a great deal of each other.

NEAL HART IN "RIGHT OF WAY CASEY"

GOLD SEAL Three - Reel Drama, starring Neal Hart. Story and production by George Marshall from a scenario by C. J. Wilson, Jr. The story of a traffic cop transported to the West.

CAST.

Casey	Neal Hart
Sergeant	Joe Rickson
The Girl	Janet Eastman
Her Father	L. M. Wells

A traffic cop in Mud Creek.

NEAL HART'S popularity is increasing by leaps and bounds. He has the sort of personality which gets over with a bang; the comedy sense of a true Irishman, and at the same time the faculty of appealing to the sympathy of his audience. "Right-of-Way Casey," the Gold Seal three-reeler, written and produced by his director, George Marshall, and adapted for the screen by C. J. Wilson, Jr., gives him a wonderful opportunity, and he certainly makes the most of it. Young and old will enjoy this picture.

Casey is a traffic cop and favors pretty girls. Traffic halts for them until they are ready to cross, but the old spinsters have to wait. He is in love with the same girl that the Sergeant, his superior officer, is in love with, and the Sergeant catches Casey spooning while on the job, and sends him to report to the Captain.

Casey is then sent to the suburbs of the city, where he captures two crooks, who are under the protection of his rival, the Sergeant. On marching them to the station, where the Sergeant is present, the captain then and there reinstates Casey to his former post as a reward for his capture of the crooks. The Sergeant plots with the crooks, and allows them to escape, on their promise to get Casey out of the way. The next day the crooks make good and, knocking Casey out, put him in a sack and start him on a journey in a freight car.

The car arrives at a small Western town, where a gang have chased the sheriff out of town. Casey crawls out, but his mind has been affected by the blow, and he then starts to direct the traffic on the Western street and bawls out the cowboys for not obeying his orders. They begin to think he is crazy, but that night Casey is on watch, and sees the gang who are robbing the bank, and become the idol of the town.

Meanwhile, the Sergeant has told the girl that Casey is dead, and persuades her to marry him. The two crooks make a big haul, and after dividing this with the Sergeant, they decide to "blow" the town for a time.

They arrive by chance at the same town, and are recognized by Casey. The recognition restores his memory. Accordingly, he throws up his new job as sheriff and starts back to the city with them.

Casey hears that the Sergeant is that minute being married to his girl. He rushes to her house, and breaks in in time to act as substitute bridegroom.

Casey and his girl.

LATEST NEWS FROM CHICAGO

Chicago, Ill., 10 a. m., July 17, 1917.

(Special to the Moving Picture Weekly.)

Universal has again succeeded in making itself the most dominant factor in the success of an exposition. On Saturday night, the opening night of the Exhibitors' Convention in the Coliseum, the famous Universal City Band, which was organized several years ago by Joe Brandt, and which is still playing, opened the exposition after having paraded through the prominent streets of Chicago. At the head were the Boy Scouts, who escorted Universal Dora to the exposition, followed by automobiles in which Pres. Carl Laemmle, Violet Mersereau, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were seated. Carl Laemmle received a great ovation from thousands of Chicago friends, and the crowd almost wrecked the special stage erected for the introductions of stars when Violet Mersereau, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appeared.

The Bluebird booth was one of the most interesting exhibits in the exposition. The Bluebird Photoplays had donated the entire space to the work of the Navy League, and the sailors who were in charge demonstrated to the public the mechanism of the rapid fire guns and small calibre rifles which were on exhibition. The sailor boys did some fine work in getting recruits. During the week the Universal Butterfly Booth was wrecked several times by the mob of people who endeavored to get a "close-up" of how movie stars made up. This booth was a miniature dressing-room in a studio, and six pretty girls exemplified the art of making up. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran appeared every day, and each took one of the pretty girls and showed the public how easy it was to make her homely. Yesterday the Union Station was packed almost to suffocation by movie fans who awaited the arrival of Mae Murray and Bob Leonard. Rosemary Theby received quite an ovation, too. At the New York Central lines it was necessary to have a special police escort at the exposition for the Bluebird stars. To-day is Bluebird Universal-Butterfly day, and there is no doubt that it will prove to be the most popular day of the week. So far, Bluebird and Butterfly have received more newspaper space than the combined companies who have presented stars to date. The convention is an absolute success for Bluebird and Universal. Full reports and photos next mail.

Roy Stewart in "The Double Standard"

The men in the case. The judge and his wife. The girls in the case.

WE have all read of the Roman father who was called upon to condemn his own son in the interests of true justice. This classic situation has been reproduced in the Butterfly picture, "The Double Standard," written by no less a personage than Brand Whitlock, the famous U. S. Minister to Belgium, and adapted for the screen by E. J. Clawson. The production was in the accomplished hands of Phillips Smalley. Roy Stewart has the role of the modern prototype of the Roman father, a judge who has just been elected to office by the combined efforts of his wife, who has worked for him socially, and her brothers, the editor of one of the papers, and the bishop. On his first day on the bench, he is confronted by two girls, brought to court on a charge of disorderly conduct, having been arrested in a notorious resort. Two men were with them at the time, but they were released according to custom. The judge electrifies the court by ordering the men to be brought to share the fate of the girls. Then one of them turns out to be his own nephew, the son of the editor who has done more than any one else to elect him to office. Not even this is able to influence the judge in his decision.

John Fairbrother's wife and her two brothers have worked unceasingly for his election as city judge. One brother is an editor, and in this capacity he has gone the limit in supporting the reform platform for which John Fairbrother stood. The other brother, Bishop Ferguson, had in his sphere worked relentlessly for the political advancement of his sister's husband, and now they all sat in the judge elect's parlor and proceeded, as relatives always have, to give him advice.

The bishop stayed behind, and to him John declared that he would expend every ounce of energy in his body to close up the cafes, cabarets and dives which lay in the path of thousands of young girls in that city.

"Why are you so set on the subject?" asked the bishop, rather apprehensively. And John Fairbrother told him the story of his long-lost sister. He had supposed her dead, but his mother, in a death-bed confession, had admitted to him that she was still living—living in shame, an inmate of Johnson's Cafe, the worst plague spot in the city. His efforts to save her were too late. She died a victim of the distorted social system. The bishop, deeply impressed, promised his aid, but with mental reservations.

The scene switches to the courtroom.

"——and I ask for conviction on that ground," the district attorney quoted.

"But what were the girls doing more than the men?" asked Judge Fairbrother. It was his first day on the bench, and this was his first case. He had undertaken his duties with a thorough belief in the single standard of judging men and women, and he intended to stand by that platform, come what might.

The case didn't look like a serious one, and he asked the question rather idly as he studied the two girls before him. They were admittedly of the underworld. One was brazen and defiant, the other frightened and piteously appealing. They had been caught with male companions in a police round-up of Johnson's Cafe, the very one in which the judge's sister had expended her life. As usual, the men's names were taken, but the women were brought to court.

The detective who had arrested them had no answer to the judge's question. But he admitted that he knew who the men were, and could produce them. Then came the sensation. One of the men was Charlie Ferguson, the editor's son, and the nephew of the judge. Charlie's one ambition in life was to exceed all the speed limits, and this ambition was not confined to motors. For an instant the judge thought of the consequences of what he was about to do. He thought of his wife, he thought of the bishop, Charlie's uncle, and last, of the editor, Charlie's father. But it was only for an instant, before he pronounced the word "guilty." But immediately he suspended sentence, pending their good behavior. Then for a judge he did a most unusual thing. Thinking that one of the girls was not hopelessly bad, he went with them to their apartment. The blackmailers missed a wonderful chance in not observing him write out a check for the outrageous amount which the flint-faced landlady said the girls owed. But his visit was not in vain. He persuaded the little country mouse to return to her home, and for the more experienced girl he secured an office job. Then he looked up the agent of the apartment-house, and to his amazement found that it was owned by the estate in which his wife and brother-in-law were the heirs. Even Fairbrother had never realized that the root of evil had grown so close to his own home, and though in the years his determination often faltered, the memory of his mother's sorrow served always to drive him on.

"They let the men go and put us in here."

"Do you mean to say you charge sixty dollars for a room?"

LATCHSTRING ALWAYS OUT AT ACTRESS' CANYON HOME.

SOMETHING always is transpiring at the home of Ruth Stonehouse, Universal featured actress, who lives in Laurel Canyon, a suburb of Hollywood, and not very far from the film capital. In private life Miss Stonehouse is Mrs. Joe Roach, her husband being a well-known newspaperman and photoplaywright, and Ruth and Joe are pals in every sense of the word. She criticizes his writings and he discusses with her the various roles she is to enact before the camera.

However, it is not always work at the Laurel Canyon home, because the actress has a host of friends and they drive to the place at all hours, knowing that the latchstring is out and that all are welcome. Miss Stonehouse is one of the most hospitable girls of the film world, and her guests are sure of an invitation to remain for dinner or luncheon and often the night is spentt in this quiet retreat and a delightful breakfast is ready in the morning. Her latest feature is entitled "Follow the Girl."

Charlie approves of the maid.

MISS PHILLIPS LOVES TO COOK.

IF there is a cookery book which Dorothy Phillips has not seen, the little Bluebird star of "The Rescue" would like to know which she has missed. At her home in Hollywood, Miss Phillips, who in private life is the wife of the actor director, Allen Holubar, has a large collection of works on the art of the cuisine. Her cooking library contains works in French, German and Italian, as well as English, and she puzzles out choice recipes with the aid of dictionaries.

UNIVERSAL VISITORS SEE REALISTIC FIGHT.

A GOOD-NATURED rivalry exists between Director Fred A. Kelsey, at Universal City, and his featured actor, Harry Carey, and it was agreed that a test of strength should be made a part of the Kelsey production, "Six-Shooter Justice." The particular scene—a combat in a barroom between the two—happened to be staged directly in front of the big visitors' balcony at Universal City, and the director himself played the role of a badman. The fight was so realistic that great bursts of applause came from the visitors who had surrounded the set and occupied all the available space on the balcony. Carey declares he was the winner and Kelsey makes a similar response to the inquiry. However, so far as the picture was concerned, Carey merely had his head cut, and Kelsey was killed, but he came to life in time to direct the balance of the scene.

The Judge finds antagonism at home.

Clothed and in his right mind.

"Take them to be cleaned, and hurry!"

TWO-REEL Comedy. Written by Daisy O'Connor. Scenario by Ryder Cunningham and production by Carter De Haven. The awful predicament of a man deprived of the most important article of attire.

CAST.

Van Kirby	Carter De Haven
Vera	Flora Parker De Haven
Mrs. Leadbeater	Eva Lewis
Vance	Dana Ong

"WHERE ARE MY TROUSERS?" is the terrible question which Van Kirby kept shouting all night in the hospital, where he had been sent suffering from a delirium caused by having lost this important article of attire. The Victor two-reeler was written by Daisy O'Connor, put into scenario form by Ryder Cunningham, and produced by Carter de Haven, with himself and his pretty little wife in the leads.

Van Kirby and his pretty wife Vera are happily married until mother-in-law appears, then trouble commences. She objects to the tardiness of Van, telling Vera that she has no spunk.

Van finds a hair on his suit and orders Vance, his valet, to get out another suit. When he arrives at the table he is met by a scolding, weeping wife and the contempt of a mother-in-law. Van informs his mother-in-law that it is a good thing for the home that she is leaving that day. Van leaves for business.

Vera and her mother leave for the country, but before going, the former orders Vance to take all her husband's clothes to Cohan, the tailor, to be pressed and sent on to the country by evening.

Vera, unknown to her mother, sends a wire to Van telling him that she has all his clothes in the country, that she is sorry, and that he is to come to her that evening. Van wires that he will arrive on the six o'clock train.

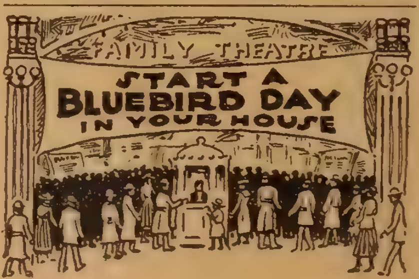
He arrives at the depot, slips on a banana peel that has just been thrown away by a negro, falls in a splash and, turning to abuse the negro, sees the train disappearing with his suitcase. Not wishing to appear at the hotel in such a condition, he takes the negro back to his office, disrobes, and sends his pants to Cohan's to be cleaned and pressed at once. The boy, knowing the rest of the clothes have been sent to the country, sends them also.

Van waits in the office, expecting the pants to appear any minute. He calls on the phone, but can get no one. He finds an old raincoat in the office and very late that night he starts for his city home.

Vera meets the train and is disappointed. Late that night she decides to go to the city, thinking Van has gone home. She arrives at the house and disappointed at not finding Van there, she goes to bed.

Van starts for the house. He is chased by boys who pelt him. He arrives at the house and attempts to enter. He is arrested by Collins as a burglar and placed in the cell with an Irishman. The following morning, almost delirious from cold, he is sent to the hospital, and found raving about his trousers. At last the doctor phones to the surprised Vera.

In the meantime, Mrs. Leadbeater, finding that her daughter has disappeared, hurries back to the city. She arrives at the home just as Vera is about to rush to Van, and accompanies her daughter. Van is all spruced up in new clothes, but looking very pale. Vera promises to stay.



Universal Releases Russian Revolution Film

IN releasing the first authentic pictures of the Russian revolution to reach this side of the world, Universal has succeeded in putting over another news "scoop" almost equal to its enterprise in securing the first pictures of General Pershing's arrival in France. The scenes show the movements of the people of Moscow and Petrograd during the exciting days just prior to the outbreak of the revolution, and also depict the actual happenings that will undoubtedly go down in history as part of the most momentous social upheaval since the French cast off the Yoke of the Bourbons. Royalists are shown on the way to the famous prison of Peter and Paul, while former political exiles are pictured in the joy of their newly discovered liberty. One of the most striking scenes is devoted to the crowds gathered about the smouldering runs of the Ministry of Justice, which was burned with all of the archives of the former secret police.

Jews are shown parading the streets of Moscow, for the first time in the history of Russia, hand-in-hand with their Christian brothers of the revolution. Conflicts between a few loyal remnants of the old regime and volunteer student police who took over the protection of life and property give a dramatic interest to some of the other street scenes. But the biggest thrill of all is furnished by the pictures of thousands and tens of thousands of free citizens of the new republic, hurrying into the Red Square of Moscow to celebrate their victory on the spot once given over to the hideous tortures inflicted upon their ancestors by Ivan the Terrible.

Universal will release these pictures as a special news feature in one and two-reel lengths, the longer prints being arranged for use in the big cities with large Russian-American populations.

A new speed record was established at the Fort Lee laboratory in cutting, printing and titling these pictures, 78 prints being completed for distribution within twenty-four hours.

CROSS JOINS THE COLORS.

L. M. CROSS has been added to the honor roll. Until recently, and for a year past, Mr. Cross has been head booker in the Laemmle Film Serice at Minneapolis, and has earned the praise and confidence of Julius Burnheim of that exchange. Mr. Burnheim informs us that Mr. Cross left last Tuesday for Vancouver, where he will join the Canadian force. He expects to be in active service within sixty days. Mr. Cross already has two brothers fighting in the British army.

HATS OFF TO GRONAU!

THE Montreal office of the Canadian Universal Film Co., took advantage of a magnificent opportunity on July 6th to boost Universal sky high. The Holman Theatre in that city gave a special screen to the returned soldiers and sailors of "General Pershing's Arrival in France," the other special animated. As the boys left the theatre, Mr. Gronau, manager of the Montreal office, was on hand and took a moving picture of the parade and a few stills showing them lined up in front of the house. As soon as this wonderful film arrived in Montreal, Mr. Gronau, with an eye to the tremendous value of the picture and with a view to cementing the already close friendship of Canada and the United States, issued a hurry up call to the returned soldiers in Montreal, as well as the sailors. Petty officers and officers of the British and Italian men-of-war now at Montreal came forth to attend the special showing of this picture. Although the notice was short, the Holman Theatre was jammed to the doors, and the film was screened amid a din of cheers. Mr. Gronau picked out a show which interested the fighters from start to finish. The reel selected to entertain them was short and full of kick. Later on in the afternoon the Royal Highlanders of Canada accepted Mr. Rotsky's invitation to see the film.

Franey

"Bill" Franey can do the funniest falls of any comedian on the screen. He has ample opportunity in the one-reel Joker "O—My, the Tent Mover," where they save his life. It's a scream.

Henry

Truly her face is her fortune. As a facial contortionist Gale has no equal. Take a look at "The Vamp of the Camp," a one-reel Joker, and you'll want to book it for your patrons.

Morante

Playing with "Bill" is Milburne Morante, a perfect foil, with a method all his own that never fails to get the big haw-haws.

FIVE beautiful women are represented in the cast of the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Rescue" which stars Dorothy Phillips and was written by Hugh Kahler in Young's Magazine, adapted for the screen and produced by Ida May Park. William Stowell and Lon Chaney take care of the masculine roles in the picture, which, with its beautiful interiors and exteriors, its wonderful lighting, and its lovely women, is a feast for the eyes. But there is more in the play than the pleasure of looking at beautiful things, for the story is unusually interesting, being the duel between two women for the possession of the affections of one man. As a revelation of the methods in feminine warfare, it is a lesson in strategy which is quite unique. Dorothy Phillips and Molly Malone take the opposite sides in this fight a l'outrance, and we do not know until the very end which one really wins.

Having secured a divorce from Kent Wetherall, Anne Wetherall returns to the stage and meets with her former successful popularity, which was interrupted when she married.

The last performance of the season is drawing to an end, and the kind-hearted Anne is dividing her beautiful flowers from her many admirers, with those in the troupe less fortunate. She even remembers the old doorkeeper, greatly to the amusement of Thomas Holland, her former husband's best friend, who has called to escort Anne to dinner, and becomes a silent witness of her generosity.

About to leave her dressing-room, Anne is startled to receive a telegram from her intimate friend, Nell Jerrold, urging her to join her in Creston immediately, owing to a matter of vital importance. Anne is greatly disturbed at returning to her home town, and questions Holland as to Kent's movements, but his knowledge concerning his friend is very vague.

On reaching his apartment, Holland finds an invitation from Kent, urging him to visit Creston and give his advice concerning the renovating of the Wetherall mansion, which he is reopening, and decides to join him.

When Anne finds herself and her faithful maid established in Nell's home, she learns that she is to rescue Betty, the pretty young daughter of the house, from Kent's apparently lover-like attentions. She is frightfully worried, but decides that she will remain and do her best to save Nell's daughter from marriage with the man who made her own marriage unhappy.

That evening, as Anne is making a simple toilet for dinner, feeling assured that Kent will not dare embarrass her or himself with a meeting, Betty enters and cordially greets her. The artless maid frankly inquires if Anne minds because she has usurped her place in Kent's affections. Anne decides that she will tell her the truth about the awful night she fled from Creston. Betty is defiant and declares no matter what Anne says, she believes him good, mentioning his particular virtue—abstaining from all alcoholic liquors. Anne goes on to tell her of the houseboat, where she found her husband mysteriously spending his time. At last, one day, she had peered into the windows of the boat. Here Betty impulsively cries out that Anne need not tell her any more, as she knows all, for Kent told her. Anne is shocked, but Betty coolly informs her it is old-fashioned to make a fuss about such things. Before Anne recovers from her amazement, Nell appears and informs her that Kent will be one of the dinner guests, so Anne heroically plans to save the charming Betty by bringing Ken to her own feet.

During the dinner, Kent has eyes only for Betty, but soon after, he, as well as Holland, is attracted by Anne's loveliness. However, every time Anne scores a point, Betty appears and Kent is brought to time. Finally, Anne asks Betty if she may borrow her horse, and is surprised to learn that the animal is her former pet, Blitzen, which Kent has since given his new lady love.

ant. Anne is impatiently waiting when Kent calls. Discovering that he still loves her, Anne listens, as Kent explains that after her departure he was about to end it all, when Betty found him and jerked the gun from his hand. Kent then anxiously inquires if Anne is going to marry Holland, and is greatly relieved to learn that she is not. Passionately urging Anne to give him another chance, Kent gets her to accompany him to the village, where he takes out another license. Anne, suddenly inspired, suggests a visit to the Justice of the Peace. Kent jumps at the idea. Their marriage is soon consummated, and Anne triumphantly feels that she has put Betty beyond his reach, while Kent earnestly swears that he is going to deserve this great happiness.

Leaving a letter with Nell for Kent, informing him that she has accomplished her mission, making it impossible for him to bring any other woman the sorrow he once caused her, Anne is speedily motoring to the Creston station, when a large touring car stops her way. To her dismay, she discovers it belongs to Kent. Another moment and Holland is coming toward her with the lady of the houseboat, introducing her to Anne as Mrs. Hendricks, the wife of the owner of the floating sanitarium. They congratulate Anne, and she wildly murmurs there is some mistake. As they motor back to the Jerrold home, Anne anxiously questions Mrs. Hendricks, learning that Kent was born with alcoholism in his blood, and had secretly been taking treatments for years. He feared the risk of letting her know of his weakness.

Anne eagerly rushes to Nell, and

We see the gorilla and the orang-outang. Then the chimpanzee of Africa, who seems to speak to us. He has a cage chum, a Malayan orang-outang. The orang has small ears, because he lives in trees and has few enemies. The saki of Brazil is an extremely rare monkey, clad like an Eskimo. The tiny Brazilian marmoset has a savage countenance. Some of the monkeys register expression as well as any screen favorite. We see a baby Peruvian crying for its mother. Then a Cacaque chewing tobacco, and an African baboon, a large and savage type. Only the Old World monkeys have cheek-pouches for storing food. A little pig-tailed monkey is seen packing them full.

A new invention is the Hyde ship-brake, which enables craft to stop in little more than their own length, and thus to avoid the tremendous loss of ships and cargoes through collisions.

Domestic Science is represented by a demonstration of how to make a fireless cooker.

The reel closes with a clay cartoon, "Faces U Face," by the sculptor, Willie Hopkins.

A STORY within a story is the Gold Seal three-reeler, "A Soldier of the Legion," which was produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, from a story by Maude Springer Nelson and E. J. Clawson. Every personage in the tale appears in two different roles, at first as the inhabitants of a cheap boarding-house, and later as the dramatis personae of an Algerian drama. The picture is filled with wonderful light effects, lavish sets and well-chosen exteriors, and Miss Baldwin hits the high-water mark with it as a production which is unusual from all standpoints.

McTavish, nicknamed "Squash," is one of the army of literary flivvers, and "Spike," his best friend, is also broke. They get an idea for a story, but the gas goes out. Celeste, the maid of all work, is induced to lend them a quarter for the meter, but she is so taken with Spike that she puts it in the wrong one, belonging to Jones, the plumber. Spike asks Jones to refund, but he will not. Celeste gives them another quarter, and in return they make her the heroine of an Algerian love story. Squash is the villain and Spike the hero, while the landlady is Celeste's mother, and Jones the Algerian orderly of the commandant. They call the tale "A Soldier of the Legion."

Lieutenant Delnay is aide to the commandant, a man of bad character. An Algerian chieftain is before him as prisoner, charged with disloyalty, and when the commandant sees his beautiful wife, he sentences the man unjustly to prison. The lieutenant does not approve, but can do nothing. He goes to see his lady love, the daughter of a French trader and a native woman. Then Celeste goes shopping in the bazaar with her mother, and is seen by Shorhall, the native orderly of the commandant. He draws the attention of his master to the beautiful girl, and the officer tells him to bring her that night.

Their plan is carried out. The girl's mother lies on the floor, tied so that she cannot move, when the little servant finds and releases her, and she rushes to the palace to save her daughter. Delnay has been with the commandant giving him his report, and now leaves. On the way out he sees Shorhall with a veiled female figure. She lets her veil fall, and he is horrified to recognize Celeste. She makes a gesture of entreaty. He strikes down the orderly with a weapon from the wall, and goes in to the commandant. The two men fight in the half-darkness, for the elder dashes out the light. Delnay kills his officer, snatches up Celeste, and goes out of the gate with her. They meet her mother coming to the palace, and all fly into the mountains on horseback.

Two days later, after the murder of the commandant has been discovered, we see the trio pursued by the native troops. Delnay has taken up his position in a cave at the top of a crag. It is impossible for the soldiers to get at him, and from his point of vantage he kills so many that they have little heart to continue the fight. At last he runs out of ammunition, and crawls out to the body of one of the men to get some, leaving Celeste's mother on guard. She exposes herself, and is shot. Then Delnay and Celeste go on alone. After days of traveling and great privations, they reach a travelled road and meet some tourists, who assist them. They take passage for America, and Delnay is glad to take the position of waiter in a restaurant. Celeste has withered, and dies just as he returns home.

"The Sign of The Cucumber"

L—KO KOMEDY in Two Reels. Directed by Dick Smith. Supervised by J. G. Blystone, with Bob McKenzie in a dual role and curses and crime galore.

DICK SMITH, supervised by J. G. Blystone, the director-general of the fortunes of the L-Ko, is responsible for the happenings in "The Sign of the Cucumber," in which Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, and Chester Ryckman are most heavily implicated. Here are the plans and specications:

Red Nose Pete arrives in town with his confederate, planning to rob the bank. He gets in and has an awful time trying to open the safe. Eva the daughter of the Justice of the Peace, is in love with Bob Hardboil the Sheriff. He has a cucumber birthmark on his arm. He receives a letter saying that Red Nose and his pal are on the way and sees in the enclosed photograph that the pal is his double. But he thinks that his birth mark will protect him.

Red Nose has an awful time getting into the safe and finds just four dollars when he succeeds. The village gossips discover the robbery and start a chase. The sheriff calls out a posse, and says that if he does not return they will know him by his birth mark. Red Nose and his pal overhear this, and they fasten a slice of cucumber on the pal's arm. They then lie in wait of the Sheriff and hold him up. They tie him to a tree and take his clothes. They have induced him to follow them by tying one of their shoes onto the hoof of a cow. They return to the town and are received with joy. The pal leads Red Nose in triumph, and they lock him up in the jail, of course, the pal intends to return and let him out later, when he has safely captured the ten thousand dollars reward. Eva receives the man who she thinks is her hero with great affection.

One of the sheriff's friends follows the footsteps of the cow, finds and unties him. They swear revenge. But when he appears in town they think that he is Red Nose, and he is put in jail. Red Nose begins to fear that his pal is not straight with him so he writes a note which he ties on the back of a rat and sends in to the Sheriff. It says that he can prove that the Sheriff is what he claims to be if he will help him to escape. They both commence to dig, and find they have changed cells. They enlist the aid of a negro who is in the jail, and with his head they succeed in butting down the wall.

In the meantime the false sheriff is being married to Eva. The real one comes in, and there is a fight. The false one discovers that he has lost his cucumber. Some take his part and some the real sheriff's. There is general shooting. At last the house blows up and the false sheriff with it, who leaves the money in a small iron box. The real lovers are united at last.

Here the story ends, but Spike declares that the public will not stand for a sad ending, and they decide to change it to the birth of a son and heir. Then Squash finds two nickels, and the two go out to celebrate. They order beer and are about to drink to the success of the soldier of the legion, when the bartender tells them that beer is ten cents each. Sadly they put down the glasses and depart. In the meantime, the landlady has discovered the slavey asleep before their door, and sent her in to clean their room. She finds the scattered pages of the masterpiece, and crams them into the stove, setting a match to her chance for fame as the picture fades.

PATON RECOVERS HEALTH.

WHEN Stuart Paton, the director of the Universal super-feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," left the East for Universal City he was almost a sick man. He tipped the scales at 127, and was in wretched physical condition. To-day, after nearly a year of California, he weighs 164, and is in perfect health. He completed twelve episodes of the serial, "The Voice on the Wire," and started right in on the next serial, "The Gray Ghost," without a moment's rest.

"A Wife on Trial"

Phyllis' first sight of her husband.

BUTTERFLY PICTURE from the novel by Margaret Widdemer, called "A Rose Garden Husband." Scenario by Leo Pierson and production by Ruth Ann Baldwin. The story of a girl who married for a rose garden and what came of it.

A ROSE GARDEN HUSBAND," the popular novel by Margaret Widdemer, was used as the basis of this Butterfly Picture, renamed "A Wife on Trial," and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, from a scenario by her husband, Leo Pierson, who also plays the leading role, with Mignon Anderson as the wife, won in a strange manner.

Probably no stranger wedding scene has ever been filmed than that which took place in the dead of night, between the paralyzed man and the lovely young girl. The first part of the picture seems a little sad. We are introduced to Allan as an athlete, full of the joy of living. A wonderfully staged motor accident deprives him of the power of walking, and turns him into a petulant invalid. His mother feels herself dying, and wishes to leave him to the care of some one who will devote herself to him as she has done. Old friends recommend Phyllis, and at last she is prevailed upon to take the job of "wife on trial."

For the later scenes of this picture, Director Baldwin obtained permission to use one of the most beautiful rose gardens in Southern California. On this account the film has been called "The picture of a million roses."

Phyllis Narcissa was the name given her by an old-fashioned mother, but in the library she is merely Miss Braithwaite. Just now she is having trouble, because a little dirty urchin has torn the pictures from the much - besmeared book, and the supervisor is chiding her for allowing such a thing. Phyllis says she will pay for it, but Horace de Guenther, an attorney and the pleasantest frequenter at Phyllis' desk, sees the trouble and tells the supervisor to run along and not excite herself. The woman knows of De Guenther's political influence and hurries away. The attorney hands Phyllis a note from his invalid wife, asking the girl to join them at dinner that evening. Phyllis is delighted, for she loathes the cheap boarding-house and the horrid meals. The De Guenthers are also delighted, for Phyllis, bubbling with laughter and joy, is like a tonic to them.

The terrible result of youth's impetuosity.

Allan Harrington, a college graduate and human dynamo, is still unspoiled by his fussy mother's great wealth. He sits up most nights studying, and has his days filled from early morning until late at night with different engagements, but much time is given up to his fiancee, Louise, who is just as impetuous and full of life as he. Allan has just received a medal for winning a 100-yard dash, and is very proud of himself. This day he and Louise start off in his racer, but upon coming to a closed road and being in a great hurry, Allan determines to go the short way and, knocking down the sign, races ahead at a terrific speed. They start toward a ravine, the bridge across which has only a few planks left, and drop down into the gully. For hours Allan is pinned beneath his car, while before his eyes lies his fiancee, a victim of youth's impetuosity—dead. Help comes to him at last, and he is carried away.

Two years later finds Phyllis in the Children's Department at the library, where some of the youngsters call her the "library teacher" and others "the pretty one that smiles." She is very happy, in a way, with them—they fill up her lonely life—but she despairs over her slow progress.

One day she receives an urgent message from Mrs. de Guenther, suggesting a new line of work. That night she learns from these two good people the sad story of Allan Harrington. His broken-hearted mother, who realizes that her death is near, wishes her son, now a helpless cripple, to have some one to care for him who will have more interest than a hired stranger. It means that Phyllis will have to marry Allan. She is shocked at first, but the next day, thinking over her sordid circumstances and little money, she consents. At least, she can have her dream—a rose garden—when she marries him.

In the middle of the night Phyllis is summoned to be married. Mrs. Harrington is dying and insists that she must witness the ceremony. It is all like a funeral rather than a marriage. Mrs. Harrington passes away that night. Phyllis sobs herself to sleep, but is later awakened by the valet of Allan, urging her to go to the boy, who is restless and despondent. She tells Allan a child's story, which pleases him and soothes him to sleep. Her struggle is strenuous—trying to keep cheerful in the dark, gloomy house, with nothing but suffering about her. She insists that the sunlight penetrate wherever possible, brings in animals and flowers, and forces herself to laugh and talk.

Several weeks have passed—there are no roses in the big house's gloomy garden, but Phyllis buys many from the corner shop. She tells the valet that the house is enough to kill a mummy, that they must move to the country. Allan doesn't suspect such a thing, but shortly afterward, in spite of his protests, he finds himself in a rose garden, attended by two negro servants and several dogs. He is dressed in man's clothes, and Phyllis experiences a strange feeling when she sees him so.

It is one of Allan's black days, and Phyllis tries in vain to cheer him. When he sees Phyllis playing with and fondling a dirty child, who has hurt himself, he bitterly tells her that she has been cheated of her birthright. Phyllis sees much of Allan's friend, a young doctor, who tells her that paralysis may become merely a bad habit. Allan can hardly bear to see them playing tennis together. At last he makes up his mind to the supreme sacrifice, and tells Phyllis that their marriage must be annulled.

That night a sneak thief comes into the house. Phyllis is sitting up late, mourning her unhappiness, and Allan also is dreaming in the dark. The man enters the room where Allan is sitting, and Phyllis, hearing her husband's cry, enters. She attacks the man to keep him from Allan. The thief nearly overpowers her, and she cries to her husband to save her. With a great effort he reaches her side just as his valet rushes in and tackles the man. With the reaction, they realize what has happened, and their love for each other.

"Save me, Allan!"

EMORY JOHNSON FOOLS AUTOMOBILE HIGHWAYMEN ON CALIFORNIA ROAD.

HELD up by automobile highwaymen—that was the unusual experience of Emory Johnson near the city of Bakersfield, California, one night this week.

Johnson, who is a valued member of the Universal force of actors, and who at present is playing an important part in the serial, "The Gray Ghost," which is being directed by Stuart Paton, was on his way to San Francisco in a fast automobile at the time with his mother. He had been informed by his director that the scenes upon which he was engaged would not require his presence for three days, so Johnson thought in the interim he would take his mother for a flying trip to San Francisco, their old home.

The marriage in the dead of night.

Several of his fellow Universalites advised Johnson to carry a revolver with him, especially as he was planning to make the journey without a stop, travelling throughout the night, so that he would reach the northern city the following day.

"Nothing doing," he replied, "never used one in my life and I don't intend to handle one of those killers now."

After leaving Bakersfield shortly after midnight, Johnson said he ran into a bad piece of road, and as it was pitch dark, scarcely anything could be seen. Suddenly he heard another automobile behind him and waited until it came up, intending to inquire if he was on the right road to Tulare, the next town. As the second machine came to a stop two men jumped out shouting together, "Hold up your hands!" Mrs. Johnson cried out in alarm, but her son paid no attention to the command . He speeded up the car and it shot forward and soon was going at the rate of forty-five miles an hour. The would-be bandits followed quickly and a merry chase took place, but the high-powered car left them behind, and after a quarter of an hour they abandoned the pursuit altogether.

Episode Five of "The Gray Ghost"

Marco comes to investigate.

Williams chloroforms Arabin.

Williams and some of his men.

PREPARATION for the robbery of the Fifth Avenue jeweler Arabin, is the theme of the fifth chapter of the big serial "The Gray Ghost." This installment is called "Plunder," and advances the story which was published originally under the title of "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, in the Saturday Evening Post, and is adapted for the screen and produced by Stuart Paton.

Marco has gone to headquarters to try to trace his employer, Wade Hildreth, who has disappeared. Jerry Tyron, the detective who has lost his job for believing that there is such a person as the Gray Ghost, determines to go to the hospital and interview the waiter Jacques, who was hurt in the fight at Bishop's. He finds that it will be some time before the man can speak, and does not know where to turn for a clue. Jerry says that every care is to be given to the man.

Arabin, the jeweler, returns from his trip and enters his private office, where his secretary Williams is waiting for him with the mail. The jeweler goes to the safe and opens it. Williams strikes him down, takes the necklace, and then props Arabin up in the chair with his back to the door, so that anyone looking will think that he is all right. Outside the store, in the meantime, two auto trucks have driven up, and the drivers are examining their engines, apparently for engine trouble.

Inside the store, there are several of the Ghost's men; they are buying and looking at goods, and some are strolling about looking at the cases. At exactly ten o'clock, the secretary Williams, sends the stenographer to deliver a letter in person. The office boy comes in with a card from a Detective Agency. Williams says that the men are to be taken to the vault, and shown everything. They are the Ghost's men in reality. The boy takes them to the vault. We see them compare watches with Williams in the private office. Then Williams tells the boy to bring all the store detectives to Mr. Arabin's office as he wants to see them all. They appear, and Williams holds them up with a gun, and backs them into the private office. They discover the body of Arabin in the chair, and try to telephone, but find the wires cut. The windows are heavily barred, and they are trapped.

Williams	Francis MacDonald
Jimmy Pelham of the Star,	Charles Dorian

With characteristic generalship, the Gray Ghost leaves the actual robbery of the store to his lieutenants. He personally is embarking in a launch for his yacht. On board are Hildreth and Morn Light. She is in a faint, and lies in the bow of the boat. Hildreth is impotent, and the Ghost triumphant. He says, as he looks at his watch, "Well, my boy, I think the two million dollar necklace will very soon belong to me."

STUNTS FOR "THE DOUBLE STANARD."

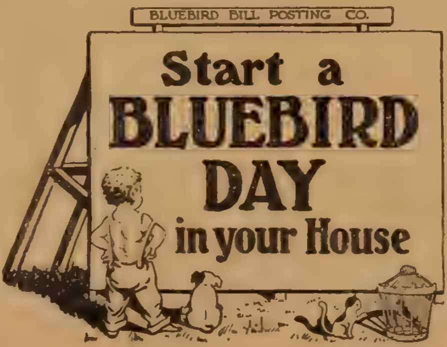
"THE DOUBLE STANDARD" voices the increasing demand that MEN as well as women should be judged by the same moral law. It is a drama that will have the whole-hearted support of every man and woman in your territory; of the clergy as well as the laity.

A striking idea for a float consists in having a girl, dressed in the classic garb of JUSTICE, seated on a throne. Her eyes are blinded, and in one hand she hold the evenly balanced scales, while the other rests on the straight sword.

Banners fastened to the side of the float should contain the name of your theatre, day and date of presentation and the following legend:

"THE DOUBLE STANDARD" IS A DEMAND FOR AN EVEN-HANDED JUSTICE. IT IS A PLAY THAT EVERY MEMBER OF YOUR HOUSEHOLD COULD SEE—AND SHOULD SEE. IT IS A PLAY THAT WILL SET THIS TOWN A-TALKING!"

If you stand in well with the editors of your local papers, and the live wire exhibitor makes it his business to be on friendly terms with the newspapermen, get them to start a discussion on the subject. Bear in mind that, as treated in this Butterfly feature, the subject will not offend the most delicate sensibilities and you should therefore emphasize this fact in getting together on the subject with your editors.



BLUEBIRD BILL POSTING CO.
Start a BLUEBIRD DAY in your House

The idea mentioned for the float can also be used to good advantage for a lobby display. If yours is a small lobby, have a good man paint a picture of JUSTICE on heavy cardboard. This done, cut the figure out and mount over the center of your lobby. To the extreme left you can place another cut-out figure, showing a woman with hair streaming over her face and with head and shoulders bowed. To the extreme right, show a man in a similar position.

If there are any influential women's organizations in your community, get them interested. Inasmuch as this is a subject in which women are intensely interested, and since this story takes sides with them, this should be easy of accomplishment.

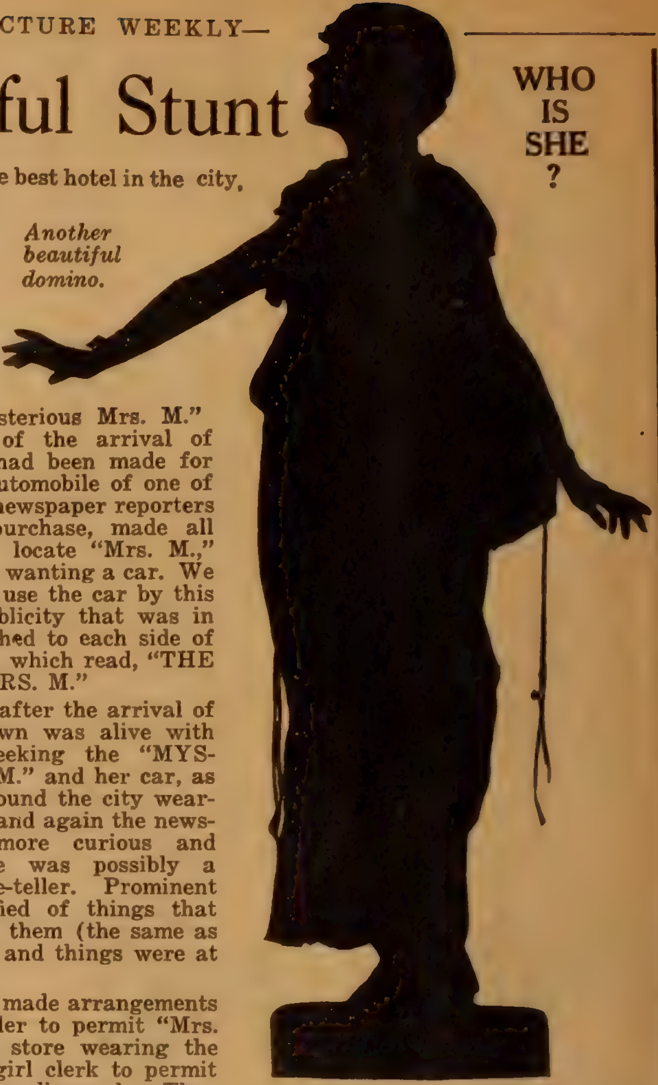
Thatcher's Wonderful Stunt

H J. THATCHER, manager of the Strand Theatre, Salina, Kansas, won the last Bluebird prize for effective advertising, and he won it in impressive fashion. The film he chose was "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," and his own account, written to George Bowles, manager of the Kansas City Bluebird office, is extremely interesting.

It was impossible for me to get a young lady here that was capable of carrying out my schemes, as it would have been an easy matter for the people of this little town to recognize her. So, in order to hide the identity who was to impersonate the "Mysterious Mrs. M.," it was necessary that I get a stranger.

With your assistance I procured a young lady from Kansas City. Following my instructions, she arrived here in Salina and going to the best hotel in the city, registered as "Mrs M"; having a little prestige with the local papers, I was successful in getting them to send their reporters to the hotel for information regarding this "Mysterious Mrs. M."

The Mysterious Mrs. M. from Kansas City.



Another beautiful domino.

The afternoon of the arrival of "Mrs. M." plans had been made for her to "buy" an automobile of one of the local dealers; newspaper reporters hearing of the purchase, made all efforts possible to locate "Mrs. M.," and her reason for wanting a car. We were permitted to use the car by this dealer for the publicity that was in it for him. Attached to each side of the car were signs which read, "THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M."

The second day after the arrival of "Mrs. M." the town was alive with curious people seeking the "MYSTERIOUS MRS. M." and her car, as she was riding around the city wearing a black mask, and again the newspapers became more curious and claimed that she was possibly a seeress or fortune-teller. Prominent people were notified of things that were to happen to them (the same as in the photoplay) and things were at a fever pitch.

The third day I made arrangements with a local jeweler to permit "Mrs. M." to enter his store wearing the mask and ask a girl clerk to permit her to look at some diamonds. Then asking to see some other articles of jewelery and while the clerk was busily engaged in finding just what "Mrs. M." demanded, "Mrs. M." bolted for the door, jumped into the waiting car, with its heavily masked driver and made good her escape, "stealing" a $150 diamond.

Next day the papers were notified that the jeweler would not prosecute "Mrs. M." as she had mailed him the price of the diamond. MORE PUBLICITY.

This being Thursday, and the picture the next day, we had to work quick. As we had a special feature at the theatre we knew that it would be packed. At the proper moment "Mrs. M." appeared, and masked, entered the theatre by force, demanding a seat when we had the "S-R-O" sign out, she was ushered to a seat in the front part of the theatre, which she promptly and LOUDLY refused, demanding a seat in the center of the theatre.

She also refused this seat and some of the people became impatient and there were cries of "throw her out." At last I demanded what she meant by wearing a mask in a theatre, and then in a loud voice I demanded, "Who are you?" and she replied. "I AM THE 'MYSTERIOUS MRS. M.'" I tore the mask from her face and at the same moment the operator flashed.

"THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M."
TOMORROW
IN FIVE ACTS
IT'S A BLUEBIRD

The house roared and applauded, and believe me, it was the greatest advertisement that ever was pulled off in this city regardless of all other lines of business.

And on the night of the picture regardless of the fact that we were having the worst storm of the season, people faced a wet falling snow to witness "THE MYSTERIOUS MRS. M." It was some stunt and I am certainly pleased with its results.

Claire Rochester.

Claire Rochester in "Indiana"

When the British Army crossed the channel and took its place on the line in France, it went to the tune of "Tipperary." The American troops are singing a song called "Indiana," which has a wonderful march swing, an inspiring air, and words which can be twisted to the use of any regiment.

The words and music were written by James H. Hanley, and it has been chosen for the "Song Hit in Photoplay" to be released next week. This "Song Hit in Photoplay," "Indiana," will have for its star Claire Rochester, famous vaudeville star, who is astonishing audiences with her freak voice and engaging personality. Miss Rochester not only has a pleasant soprano voice, which is all that any vaudeville singer could desire, but she has two other voices as well.

One of the endeavors of Harry Cohn, who is producing these "Song Hits in Photoplay," has been to show the way in which the song was originated. "Indiana" has a story which is simple enough. Hanley had been trying to sell it to publishers for some time, without any success. One day Claire Rochester walked into his office and before she opened the door she heard the strains of a harmonica playing a number which took her fancy at once. She came in noiselessly and sat behind the door until Hanley was through Then she jumped up in a hurry and told Hanley that if he did not find a publisher for it at once, she would publish it herself. She was that sure of its success. She has been singing it herself in vaudeville and it has been the riot of her career.

Every exhibitor will want to take advantage of this unique opportunity to present the song which the "Sammies" are singing in France to-day.

When it is produced in an entirely original manner, with clever story, fine photography and brilliant direction—it has WINNER stamped all over it. Here is an ideal money-getting picture that will interest every kid in the world, and that will equally fascinate every adult fan in the land. Violet and her small brother get a wishing bracelet from a gypsy. They quarrel and Violet wishes that the polar bear rug was alive. It comes to life and they run from the house, accompanied by Hank, their pet donkey—impersonated by Mr. Woodward (see illustration). They wander into the wood where they see a tiger, a lion, and where a huge bird covers them with leaves. They wish they were the "Babes in the Wood," and their wish comes true, and so for two reels their amazing adventures are shown to the delight of all who see them. It is a most unusual picture and one you can boost for its novelty and its great entertaining qualities. Children will think that their favorite story book has "come alive," and shouts of joy from them will greet the unfolding of the picture—and this, by the way, is one of the most welcome sounds that an exhibitor can hear. Adults will be entertained by Mr. Woodward's extraordinary impersonation of the various animals, and by little Miss McMillan's remarkable portrayal of childhood. She is ably assisted by a real boy and looks the same age. Their charming play will please every one.

"IN THE LAND OF LIGHT AND GLOOM."

Powers Dorsey Educational Split Reel.

India is the land of light and gloom, On the one side we see the luxury of the Rajahs, and on the other the grinding poverty of the people. All classes are very religious, and adhere strictly to caste and never intermarry. We see the Maharajah leaving his palace, he is the descendant of a line which has ruled the same land for twenty-two centuries. The Nizam of Hyderbad owns more elephants than all the circuses in America, and they are always hungry. They are used for processions, parades, tiger hunting, clearing the jungle and building purposes. We see the original "Gunga Dhin" watering the elephants. Kipling has immortalized him, and this is a perfect specimen of the type of watercarrier. The elephants love their bath. In the background we see a tomb. Whenever we see one in India we know that it denotes the grave of a Mohamedan as the Hindus always cremate their dead.

These manifestations are caused by the two counterfeiters who have taken possession of the cellar of the lodge for their illegal operations. After a series of experiences that scare the colored valet nearly white, Edith and a girl friend arrive, Edith having made up her mind to make up the quarrel. The counterfeiters lock her in a room, but she is rescued by Eddie, and he sends for a minister and a policeman, the former for a little ceremony that he and Edith agree upon, and the latter for the crooks who are now captured and bound.

Gentlemen:

Just a word or two in reference to your BLUEBIRD Photoplays and what they have done for us. Our house was strictly a 5 cents admission. WE DECIDED TO MAKE THURSDAY, OUR DULL DAY, A BLUEBIRD DAY AND ADMISSION 10 CENTS, WHICH WAS A GREAT SUCCESS. Increased our receipts over two hundred percent. So Thursday is our BLUEBIRD DAY and has been for the last ten months. We showed "Treason" last Thursday and could not accommodate our patrons and expect to repeat this picture later. "We Are French" and "Love's Larriet" were great. If we could get more BLUEBIRDS we would make two BLUEBIRD DAYS.

The Girl and The Garter
AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

"Take the pestilential thing away!"

Franklyn Farnum in "The Clean-Up"

THE Purity League and the League of Personal Rights were tearing Weston to pieces between them, when Stuart Adams, the advance agent of the Broadway show, "The Girl and the Garter" hit the town. That is the beginning of the story of this Bluebird Photoplay, written by Waldemar Young, and produced by Wm. Worthington, with Franklyn Farnum as the advance agent, and Brownie Vernon as his Weston sweetheart. An amusing story, delightfully presented, runs like this, and makes charming entertainment for the dog days, or any other days, for that matter.

While waiting for a train, Stuart Adams, advance agent for "The Girl and the Garter," gets a telegram from his manager, telling him to "start something," as business has been very bad. Aboard the train he reads a letter from Hazel Richards, of his old home town—Weston. She tells him that her father is going to make every effort to prevent his show from playing there. Sitting across the aisle from him on the train is Vera Vincent. They strike up an acquaintance and are chatting, when two strange men—Byers and Linden—pass down the aisle and halfpause, shooting a flash of recognition at Vera.

In the old home town of Weston, Hazel Richards is waiting for Stuart. When she sees him get off the train with Vera and help her into a hotel bus, she draws back into a doorway. The other two men also get off and drive to the hotel in the bus. Hazel goes home in her roadster and complains to her mother of a severe headache. Stuart tries to reach her by phone from the hotel, but her Aunt Helen answers the phone and says that she is not in. Later her mother learns of this and tells Hazel, who immediately gets into her roadster and drives down-town, looking for Stuart.

In the meantime, he has overheard one of the two strange men address Vera by the name of "Maizie," and he is puzzled. He figures that the three of them are crooks. In connection with the exploitation of his show, he calls on the city editor of the afternoon newspaper and gets him to get an interview with old man Richards, Hazel's father, on the fact that he will attempt to stop it from playing in Weston. Richards, by his own statement, went to see the show the last time he was in New York "just to see how shocking it was." The interview is published and pleases every one. Hazel arrives at the bank while the reporter is there, and drives him back to the office. She and Stuart meet in front of the office, and

The crooks are arrested.

Stuart impulsively kisses her. Members of the Reform League, of which her father is the head, see this and hurry to him with the news. Stuart and Hazel go for a drive. Richards invites Wilbur McBean, a clerk in his bank, out to dinner that evening. Stuart and Hazel drive to the park and are so engrossed in their enjoyment of the afternoon that they pay no attention to the time. The result is all kinds of trouble when Hazel gets home.

There is to be a parade of the Purity League on Thursday morning, so Stuart arranges a parade of the Personal Liberty Party. That same day his box-office sale opens. Richards is serene in the conviction that, even if he cannot stop the show, he has convinced the people that it is not fit for them to see. But a line waits all night to buy tickets. There is to be a mass meeting of the Purity League on Thursday night. Stuart challenges Richards to a debate on the local issues at that meeting.

Meantime, the crooks have been busy. They have sent Vera to Richards with a fake letter of introduction, the idea being for her to get the lay-out of the bank. She does her work well. Just before the meeting, however, she stops Stuart in the lobby of the hotel and asks for his help. He goes with her to the bank. He and she enter with a key that she has. On the floor in the moonlight, is the bound and gagged body of the night watchman. She leads Stuart to the president's office. He dimly discerns the forms of policemen along the wall. A few moments later, Linder and Byers enter through the front door, which has been left open by Vera. They see the body on the floor, and are satisfied that she, their confederate, has done all her work well. They enter the president's office. She switches on the lights. They are placed under arrest. One of them, slipping away, is bowled over by Stuart and captured. Richards crawls out from under the desk and thanks Stuart. Vera discloses her identity. She is a secret agent of the New York police, out to get the two slickest crooks in the country "with the goods on."

"You take me in instead."

Richards takes Stuart to the mass meeting in his limousine. It is an armed truce. At the stage door, Stuart receives a telegram from his manager, telling him the show is closed. Stuart is hard hit. Called upon to address the meeting, however, he has a great idea. He tells the crowd that what is wrong with the town is the constant fighting and bickering. He says that it needs some one to make a great sacrifice.

"I myself will make that sacrifice," he declares. "I will voluntarily cancel the engagement of my show in this town."

Richards, not to be outdone in a spirit of good-will and sacrifice, insists that the show play there. Stuart, however, is firm and wins his point. He makes his great sacrifice.

Hazel and Stuart had planned to elope that night after the meeting. Aunt Helen, however, finds Hazel packing a grip in her room, and locks the door.

Richards, following the meeting, insists upon Stuart's going home with him. Stuart, thinking of his engagement to meet Hazel at the station, tries to get out of it. Strong men lift him to their shoulders in their enthusiasm for his great sacrifice and carry him to Richards's car, putting him in it. And, of course, at Richards' home, he finds Hazel.

NEW INVENTION TO PREVENT SCREEN GLARE.

INVENTORS of all sorts of things pertaining to motion pictures find their way to Universal City to demonstrate their ideas. One which quite impressed the technical staff of the picture capital was a new screen which is said to hold all light, yet prevent glare. The screen will also show a much finer tone of photography than the ordinary ones, and its inventor, C. G. Benson, of Sacramento, also claims that it will prevent distortion of pictures from any angle.

SCENES FROM THE BUTTERFLY PICTURE JACK MULHALL IN "THE MIDNIGHT MAN"

HARRY CAREY in "THE SOUL HERDER"

Mary Ann calls her new daddy.

Cheyenne leaps on Pete.

The parson's burial.

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.)

THE Moving Picture World, which usually ignores pictures under five reels in length, devoted a special review to "The Soul Herder," the three-reel Bison, written by George Hively and produced by Jack Ford, with Harry Carey as his star. Says the World:

"An excellent picture in every way. . . . Harry Carey rides down declivities with skill that puts to shame certain parts of Italian cavalry riding stunts. This is an excellent picture for children of all ages. . . . After Harry enters the pulpit, a delicious humor enters the picture. . . . It would certainly convert those who refuse to admit that Western movies can have a strong moral tone."

Cheyenne Harry was a terror of Saturday night, but Sunday morning in jail found him quite tame. The sheriff came to let him out, and Cheyenne sheepishly asked what he had done this time. The sheriff explained that he had tried to shoot up the town, and that he had emptied his guns in consequence. He returns them, now, to Cheyenne unloaded, and tells him that they can spare him. Cheyenne rides out into the desert vaguely, and presently sees a prairie schooner, with a man and a child getting breakfast, beside it. In the distance, his keen eyes spy some vagrant Indians, attracted to the lonely outfit in the hope of picking up something. Harry has no wish to meet them with unloaded weapons, and crouches behind his horse in the brush.

The man with the child is the new parson of Buckhorn, on his way to one of the worst plague spots in the country. He attempts to parley with the Indians, having told the child to hide. They shoot him. From his hiding place, Harry looks on impotently. When the Indians ride away, he approaches, and tries to comfort the frightened child. She sobs for her father. Harry buries the body, and Mary Ann tells him that if he is to be her new daddy he will have to wear his clerical waistcoat. To please her, Cheyenne puts in on. They set out for Buckhorn together.

BISON Three-Reel Western Drama, starring Harry Carey. Written by George Hively and produced by Jack Ford. A powerful story wonderfully told of how a whole town was made to hit the trail.

Jane Brown is the organist, a fair flower in a rank field. She is eagerly awaiting the parson, her brother-in-law. When Harry arrives, she impulsively kisses him, to his intense embarrassment. He enters the house, seeing no way out of the predicament. A few days later, trouble begins when Harry meets Topeka Jack, the boss of the town, and his henchman, Bill Young. Bill tells Cheyenne that they are satisfied with the deck as it is, and don't want a new deal. In a few minutes the two men are fighting. Jane comes running up. She is horrified to see a parson so engaged, and it dawns upon her that he cannot be what he pretends to be. When the fight is over, and he has thoroughly defeated Bill, she turns on him and denounces him as an imposter. He leaves her house, but not the town.

Little Mary Ann falls ill from the effects of her long trip, and in her delirium she constantly calls for her "new daddy." The doctor searches out Cheyenne and tells him that it will go ill with the child if he does not return. When Jane sees his wonderful gentleness with the little girl, she realizes that he cannot be a bad man. She tells him so, and asks him to stay. He says that if she thinks so, he may be able to do something with the rest of the town.

"Chuck" Rafferty, an old range mate of Cheyenne's, arrives in town, and is much amused at Harry's new job. He is a good sort and offers to help him. Every Sunday for three weeks the two hold a lonely service in the church. The fourth Sunday, Cheyenne resorts to new tactics. He enters the saloon with drawn guns and forces the entire company into the church. He says that they have missed an hour of preaching three Sundays, so to-day they are to have a four-hour sermon. When some of them slumber, he wakes them with some very accurate shooting. He also takes up a collection at the point of a gun, saying:

"The Lord loves a cheerful giver, boys, and it's time some of you attracted his attention."

Topeka Jack and Bill Young are desperate. Topeka says:

"When a fellow like that goes nutty over a regular girl, it's hard to know how good he'll get."

Grown-up Kids Who De

Ruth Stonehouse.

RUTH GOES FISHING.

RUTH STONEHOUSE is never so happy as when she is playing a "kid part." She wrote, directed and acted the lead in her series of Mary Ann Kelly stories, just to give herself the satisfaction of experiencing the feelings of a little girl again. She understands the scruples of Peter Pan who refuses to grow up. In the picture she is dressed as the immortal Huck Finn, and there was a reason for it. She was asked to do so, that the picture might be used for the cover of a coming "Song Hit in Photoplay," which the publishers were getting out. Ruth was selected as a splendid exponent of Mark Twain's most human character. She is on the cover of this issue of the Weekly in the same rig.

Ruth has had some experience, too, in playing boys' roles in the movies. But her most successful one was a burlesque boy in the Victor comedy entitled "Daredevil Dan." In it she played the role of a little girl who wanted to be a grown-up detective, and for that reason she put on her father's clothes, and sure enough (this could only have happened in the movies), she discovered a conspiracy and had the whole bunch arrested. Old Sleuth, go get the air.

RUTH AS A TWELVE-YEAR-OLD.

RUTH CLIFFORD is another "grown up" who can impersonate a twelve-year-old without much difficulty. She is doing it in the picture, which was taken from her feature, "A Kentucky Cinderella," in which she was starred with Rupert Julian under his direction. It is Ruth, you know, who is such a believer in physical training for actresses that she is taking lessons in athletics from no less a person than Eddie Polo, now enlivening "The Gray Ghost" with his prowess.

Of course, it is not so very long since Ruth was twelve, and the fact that she can remember so well what she did then, and how she did it, is not proof of an extraordinary memory. When she came to Universal City to play in moving pictures, before Bluebird claimed her, she tried unsuccessfully to masquerade under the disguise of twenty-one. Ruth is a good actress, and she might have gotten away with it, but when they said "Sign on the dotted line" to her, her conscience smote her at the last moment, and she confessed with blushes to the deception. She was not quite nineteen then, and that is less than a year ago.

ABOUT DONNA DREW.

DONNA DREW is really quite a bit older than she looks in this picture. She is playing the lead in the coming Butterfly Picture, "The Lair of the Wolf," and this is a scene from the first reel. Donna managed to make herself very conspicuous in the other Butterfly "The Flame of Youth" with Jack Mulhall. She did so well with this, which was her first role of any importance, that she was selected for the lead in "The Lair of the Wolf," a story of impenetrable mystery, which she helps to unravel.

Donna is her real name, but Drew isn't. She was born to the name of "Moon," but all decided, herself included, that her patronymic did not fit her at all. They hunted through the family genealogy to find a cognomen which would suit, and at last hit upon Drew, which was adopted with enthusiasm. Donna declared that she is going to do her very best to live up to the name which is part of the tradition of theatrical America.

The Camera's Truthfulness

EDITH ROBERTS, STAR DETECTIVE.

EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran, the comedians of the Nestor Universal Company, are willing to bet that as a sleuth their leading lady, Edith Roberts, out-Sherlocks the great Holmes himself. And this is the reason of their recommendation. She did not have to dress in this costume to do it, either. That was for another purpose. Cute boy, eh?

They were all working on a Nestor called "The Bright Lights," one unusually warm afternoon, and Eddie had to bribe the cafe proprietor, played by an extra man, to lend him a waiter's garb. He had some stage money in one pocket, and his real roll in the other, and in mistake he gave the man the wrong roll. The extra man pocketed the bills and left the stage, his work finished, for parts unknown. In a few minutes, a desperate, wild-eyed comedian was rushing up and down the set, crying:

"Seen anything of a big extra man with a roll of real money in his stage clothes?"

The afternoon had been so warm that the two comedians had planned to skip to the beach as soon as their work was over, and their trip depended on the recovery of the money. Moran aided the search, and the two frantically interrogated every one they met. Seeking consolation, they recited their tale of woe to Edith Roberts, their little leading lady, describing the extra man in terms more forcible than elegant.

"Wait here till I come back," said Edith cryptically and dashed away.

Presently she returned, waving the bills triumphantly aloft.

"Where did you find them, life-saver?" demanded the boys.

"Why," she replied, "you went everywhere but the right place. The extra man did not know it was real money, and of course, he forgot all about it. I found it over in the wardrobe building in the pocket of his costume."

Edith and her mother were then promptly voted in on the beach party.

Edith Roberts.

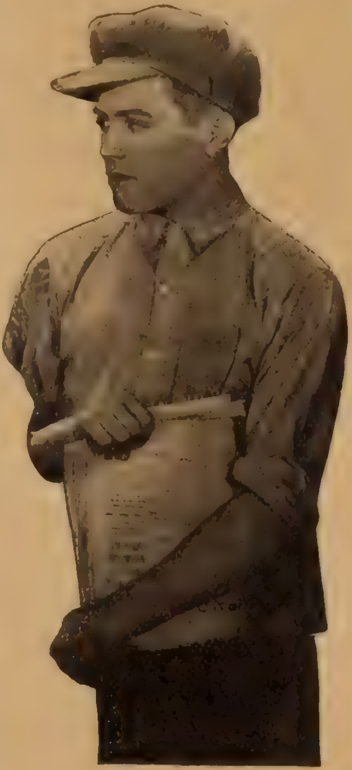
THE LITTLEST GROWN-UP IN PICTURES.

Violet McMillan.

VIOLET McMILLAN is one of the most successful impersonators of children who plays for the screen. One reason for this is that Violet stopped growing while she was still a child's size and that she has the smallest "adult" foot in the world outside of the Chinese Republic (or is it Empire this week?). She is the champion "in and outer" of the films, dividing her time between vaudeville and the screen. Just now she is at Universal City making five reelers, under the direction of Eugene Moore. On another page in this issue will be found the story of the Victor, "Like Babes in the Wood," in which Violet plays the child as only she can play it.

The cut is taken from a five-reel picture called by the working title of "Nancy's Baby," which was written by Judge Willis Brown, the famous educator, and promoter of "Boy's Cities." Violet is a little girl who impersonates a newsboy in order to earn enough to keep her baby sister from the "Children's Home."

All last year Violet was a headliner on the Orpheum Circuit, the elite stamping grounds of the two-a-day. She billed herself as The Universal Girl and in her act showed bits of the films she acted in last year when she was at Universal City. She is working now under a director new to Universal City, Eugene Moore, and her cameraman is George W. Lawrence, who shot "The Nature Man."



Antrim Short.

ANTRIM IS GROWN-UP.

ANTRIM SHORT used to be classed among the child actors, but he is really almost grown up now, as his work in the recent Bluebird, "A Jewel in Pawn," opposite Ella Hall, proved. In this he began as a paper boy, and ended as the married hero! That was certainly going some for Antrim. He is so big now that he has difficulty in convincing the directors that he is a boy at all, and he certainly makes a very manly young man. As a kid he made his biggest hit in a single reel Lois Weber picture called "There's No Place Like Home," and another Lois Weber picture, "The Flirt," a five-reel Bluebird.

"There's No Place Like Home" is a classic. Some time the Universal will issue a catalogue of wonderful pictures of this kind, and this one will be near the top of the list.

KID PICTURES A

(No. 185. Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.)

WE'VE mixed an unusually large number of "kid" pictures in with our other releases this summer because, in the first place, light stuff is the best entertainment for the hot days and nights and, in the second place, the people always like pictures in which the cuteness and prettiness of children are shown to the best possible advantage.

You've noticed how easy it is to bring a soft smile of love to the faces of your patrons whenever children or even domestic animals are flashed on the screen. It doesn't matter what causes the soft smile, but the fact remains that it pleases the people and draws them back again to your theatre.

One of the best examples of this sort of entertainment is found in many scenes showing children in the cinemasterpiece, "Parentage," which Hobart Henley directed for the Universal and which we sold to Mr. Seng.

That's a corking good picture to show during the summer months, or any other months for that matter. But it is especially the kind you ought to book in summer when you must use every possible inducement to keep the people coming in paying numbers to your theatre.

Exhibitors who have shown 'Parentage" have found that the people talk about the kid scenes more than anything else in the picture—in fact more than they have talked about any pictures they have seen for months.

This helps to prove that the Universal policy of releasing an extra large number of kid and domestic animal pictures for the summer months is the best possible way to help the exhibitor.

We've gone through the picture mill for a good many years. We can remember the time when we thought it inadvisable to release light stuff during the summer because we figured that we had to give the people a constant succession of thrills in order to arouse their interest during the hot spells. We've turned right about face on this, and the present policy is by far the better one.

GOOD SUMMER DIET

Whether you've ever given it any thought or not, the fact remains that the Universal exhibitor has a decided advantage over all others in that he always has a bigger variety to select from than his competitor has. If we confined ourselves to kid pictures it would be bad business. The same thing would be true if we confined ourselves to thrillers. So we strike a happy medium by serving just the proper dose of each kind each week.

The Universal not only offers the best balanced variety of weekly releases in the world, but it pays more attention to the exacting needs of the exhibitor every week of the year than any concern in the business.

Call at the nearest Universal exchange and take a look at some of the current releases, not only the kid pictures but the others. If you don't find exactly the summer program you want in the Universal's variety, then it simply doesn't exist anywhere.

Don't forget that the more you give the people what they want when they want it the more you will help in the nation-wide movement to "keep the movies moving" this summer—and the more money you will jam down into your jeans.

Treed by Wild Pigs

THE filming of the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Show Down," most of which was accomplished in Santa Cruz Island and in Palm Canyon, was enlivened for the company by several wild pig stunts, in which sport the entire party became proficient. Jean Hersholt, one of the players, brought back several pairs of tusks, six inches in length, as a proof of his prowess with the spear and the gun; while most of the actors of the company had at least one pair to their credit.

The small wild pig can be hunted with spears, but the large animals are too ferocious for that slight weapon, and the men went after them with guns. Several of the biggest charged directly at the actors, among whom were Hersholt, George Hernandez, Arthur Hoyt, George Cheseboro and Edward Cecil, and they had to do some lively sidestepping to get out of the way. Mr. Hersholt and Miss Myrtle Gonzalez, who play leads in the picture, accompanied one of the hunting parties, one day, simply to watch the sport. They became separated from the others, and suddenly a big hog broke out of the undergrowth directly in front of them. They had neither gun nor spear, and lost no time in taking to the tall timber. Hersholt jumped for one tree, and Miss Gonzalez for the other. The wild hog selected the tree in which the actor was perched, and made himself comfortable there, apparently for a long stay. Occasionally he would glance up from one tree to the other, in a fashion which made the two players decidedly uncomfortable. It was not until two hours later that the director and the others traced the missing members of the company; and when they did appear, the hog charged the whole party. A well-placed shot, however, took all the fight out of him; when weighed, he tipped the beam at 300 pounds.

SEVEN THOUSAND DOLLARS WORTH OF PEARLS

SEVEN thousand dollars worth of carefully selected pearls play an important part in the Butterfly Picture, "The Midnight Man," starring Jack Mulhall, and directed by Elmer Clifton. The pearls were borrowed by Clifton from the firm of Ivan Berry and Co., leading jewelers of Pasadena, California, and he did not have an easy minute until they were returned to their owners.

Many of the scenes of the picture were taken at Pasadena, and the company invaded the Maryland Hotel in force, to film incidents in the story. Hundreds of tourists were witnesses of the progress of the play, finding the show too fascinating to leave. The players worked surrounded with an enthusiastic audience all the time. Both Clifton and his young star, Jack Mulhall, are sticklers for realism, and they declared that the use of ordinary imitation pearls would spoil the picture, as they always show on the screen by their irregularity and lack of lustre that they are not the real thing and destroy the intensity of the plot in this way. In this case, they are particularly important, for the whole theme centres upon the theft of the pearls. So Clifton set out on a borrowing tour, and succeeded in persuading Berry and Co. to lend him a string valued at seven thousand dollars, on the condition that several special police should be on hand to guard them all the time they were away from the store's safe deposit vault.

"I heaved a sigh of relief," said Clifton, "when I saw the pearls back in the hands of their owners. It is too much to have seven thousand dollars' worth of beads in one's care besides the responsibility of a five-reel picture."

Ruth Stonehouse
in
"FOLLOW THE GIRL"

BUTTERFLY Picture. Written by Fred Myton and produced by Louis W. Chaudet. The tale of how a little Swedish immigrant found her heart's desire in the land of the free.

THE longing in the heart of a little Swedish girl for the freedom and opportunity of the New World; her departure from her cottage home, and her subsequent adventures in the land of her adoption form the theme of this Butterfly Picture, "Follow the Girl," written by Fred Myton, and produced by Louis Chaudet, with Ruth Stonehouse as his star. There are lots of exciting things in the picture. Cattle thieves, Mexicans, foreign spies with incriminating documents and Secret Service men after the spies, are some of them. The ranch scenes, which are truly remarkable, were taken on the largest single holding in the whole State of California. This is the famous O'Neill ranch, owned by Jerome O'Neill, the noted cattle baron of the Pacific Coast. The ranch is thirty-five miles square, and supplies pasture land for more than fifty thousand head of cattle. It is the only one of the original Mexican grants to remain intact, and the ranch house was built in 1728, and is still in a good state of preservation.

"She doesn't have to go with you!"

The long friendship of the owner with Henry McRae, production manager at Universal City, and Roy Stewart, the leading man, is responsible for the permission to use the ranch, which Mr. O'Neill has often refused to other companies. Stewart has spent part of his summers at the ranch ever since he was a boy. Mr. O'Neill furnished accommodation for several days to the whole Butterfly Company, composed of fifty people, and placed the entire property and his whole staff at their disposal. Here is the story which was filmed there.

Hilda Swanson, an orphan, bound out to a life on a Swedish farm. but ever dreaming of that mystical wonderful land of opportunities, America, spends much of her time studying from an English-Swedish grammar. A traveling agent for a Swedish-American colonization company comes to the farmhouse, and Hilda leaves.

In a foreign country, a woman is sent to America with some important papers, her future depending upon their safe delivery. She embarks on the same steamer as Hilda, and soon receives a wireless that the Secret Service is aware of her mission and awaits her arrival.

Hilda has become acquainted with a young Swede named Olaf, and it is while the two young people are dancing on the steerage deck that Donna, the secret agent, notices them. That night when all are sleeping, Donna goes to Hilda's bunk and, ripping a part of the hem of the girl's skirt, places the papers in it and quickly resews the hem. She then sends a wireless to Felix Martinez, importer of wines and international plots, telling him to watch out for a Swedish girl with a Belgian hare in a cage.

The steamer lands in New York harbor and Martinez is at the dock waiting for Hilda, whom he follows even when she boards a train with the others under the direction of the agent of the colonization company. At a small station on the desert, Hilda and Olaf get off the train to get some grass for her rabbit. The rabbit cage is broken, and the rabbit runs away, Hilda and Olaf after it. Martinez comes from the station just in time to catch the train. Hilda and Olaf look up from their chase to see the train gone.

Meantime, Larry O'Keefe, a cattle owner, and his mother are having much trouble with their Chinese cook, Hong Foo, who constantly complains because of having to wash dishes. Larry starts out to hunt for a dishwasher, and on his way he comes upon Hilda and Olaf on the desert. Olaf can't speak English, so Hilda attempts to explain to Larry how they came to be left. He takes them back to the ranch. Hilda thinks him the most wonderful man in the world, while Olaf works in the yard and is the butt of all the cowboys' jokes and pranks.

Martinez becomes aware of the disappearance of Hilda when the conductor discovers that the two passengers have been left behind. Martinez immediately returns to the station, but is informed that nothing has been seen of the boy and girl. Some days later Larry arrives at the station to inform the agent of Hilda's and Olaf's whereabouts. Martinez is sent for, and accompanies Larry to the ranch. Hilda refuses to leave the ranch and Larry refuses to allow Martinez to force her to go. Larry has come to realize that Hilda is a woman instead of a child, and she seems to have arrived at the same conclusion, for one night she rips the hem of her skirt to make it longer and discovers the hidden papers. She gives them to Larry who throws them carelessly into a drawer.

Martinez makes arrangements with some Mexican cattle thieves to kidnap Hilda.

When they get Hilda to the hut, they are informed that she left the papers at the ranch-house, and Martinez determines to raid the house. Hilda escapes and rides away on one of the men's horses.

Larry and the cowboys start out to search for her. They meet Hilda, who tells of the trouble. Taking Hilda in his arms, he tells her that he will make her an American citizen.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS PRESENTS COLORS to the 7th CALIFORNIA

Bluebird star places emblem in Colonel Hutchins' hands.

WHEN the boys of the Seventh Regiment of Infantry, National Guard of California, march to battle "somewhere in France," they will carry with them a new silk flag—the gift of the motion picture people of Los Angeles. On the Fourth of July this beautiful emblem was presented to Colonel Charles F. Hutchins, commander of the regiment, by Miss Dorothy Phillips, Bluebird star, in the presence of the officers of the regiment and a large number of producers, actors and actresses, the ceremony taking place at Edendale, near Hollywood. Miss Phillips was working on her latest Bluebird release, "Triumph" at the time, but her director, Joseph De Grasse, was perfectly willing to let her go for such a patriotic purpose.

In making the presentation, Miss Phillips expressed the hope that the new flag would serve to cheer and encourage the boys of the regiment wherever they might happen to be, and she bade Colonel Hutchins and the members of his regiment Godspeed on their journey to the battle fronts of Europe.

"Be assured, men of the Seventh Regiment," said Miss Phillips, her voice trembling with emotion, "that the women of California will pray night and morning for your safety while away from our Golden State."

Colonel Hutchins, in accepting the battle flag, said the Seventh Regiment greatly appreciated the honor conferred upon it by the donors to whom it was deeply grateful and for whom and the entire nation it would do its utmost in the present conflict.

The new regimental flag is mounted on a fine staff embellished with a silver eagle.

Lyons and Moran Make Convention Hum

Popular Nestor stars, who are to work now only in two-reelers, make fun for Chicago.

TWO of the big attractions at the exhibition held in connection with the Exhibitors Convention at the Coliseum in Chicago were the Nestor co-stars, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. It had been decided by the powers that be, that Lyons and Moran should appear in two-reel Nestors instead of one-reel pictures, and for that purpose a number of two-reel stories had been collected for them for their use. They have proven so popular in single reelers that the demand of exhibitors has all been for two-reel pictures with which they could do more extensive advertising than on one-reelers. In order to make them as fast as they wanted, alternate directors were chosen—Harry Edwards and Burton George. They will work alternately with both stars in future under the supervision of Roy Clements.

The first of these two-reel pictures is entitled "On the Owl," and was taken from a vaudeville sketch of Cressy and Dayne, and was written by Will Cressy, the well-known vaudeville star. Having completed this picture, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran demanded a vacation. It was vactaion time, and they had not had one for a year, and they needed a little relaxation. They put the matter up to Henry McRae, and that wise old boy didn't take two minutes to decide.

"Sure you boys deserve a vacation," he said, "and I am going to give it to you. Have you thought of any place that you want to go particularly?"

Neither of them had.

"Well, I'll pick out a place for you then. You can take the train to-morrow afternoon for Chicago, and you can fool around there for a week, and see everybody that's anybody in the film business, have a corking good vacation, and come back here ready to pitch in with these

Unusual Sports of Little Stars

By Peter Pepper

Little Zoe Rae, star of the Zoe Rae Feature, "The Golden Heart," on a new motor-cycle, belonging to George Marshall. She has learned to drive this as well as her car.

Buster Emmons.

MOST of the little stars at Universal City have diversion outside of their regular work, although it must be said that picture work for little people such as these is not hard or irksome. However, the four little stars pictured on this page, and the two on the preceding page, have very decided tastes in the matter of recreation.

Little Zoe Rae, for instance, who is here shown on her motor-cycle, is a speed maniac. She wasn't contented until her mother bought her a car. Mother bought it with little Zoe's salary, too. Zoe found all the other stars at Universal City driving their own motor cars, and just as soon as she possibly could, she solved the intricacies of motor driving, and was a nine-days' wonder at Universal City, seating at the driving wheel of her own coupe. But Zoe tired of this when she saw George Marshall buzzing around on his motor-cycle, and it seemed as though he were going twice as fast as she in her car, and be it known that Zoe is a regular demon for speed. One day when she refused to be satisfied with the moderate pace which safety demanded, her father told her that she must be careful, and not want to go any faster, or she would be pinched by the first cop they met. This made a deep impression, and later, when daddy himself had taken the wheel and put on a bit of speed, Zoe said:

"Drive slower, daddy, or we'll be pinched, and then we'll be all black and blue!"

So now little Zoe has learned to ride a motor-cycle, but it doesn't belong to her. It is George Marshall's, and every individual around the place is scared to death whenever Zoe mounts this contraption, for fear it will run away with her.

Zoe Rae's ambition is boundless, and whenever she hears of any other child actor doing anything, or grown-up, too, for that matter, she immediately starts out to do it herself. She begged and besought Lena Baskette to teach her to dance, until now she is very proficient in this art as well. When the patriotic fervor seized the country, and everybody was endeavoring to perform some patriotic service, what do you think little Zoe did? She started to raise Boston Baked Beans for the soldiers, and although she is in California, she insisted that they should be Boston Baked Beans. Apparently she expects them to spring fully baked out of the pod.

Another star, although a grown-up one, who enjoys motoring, and principally practises it on odd-sized vehicles, is Ella Hall. She is shown on the opposite page with a dinky little car, the merits of which she is

Episode 7 of "THE GRAY GHOST"

Three Scenes from Chapter Seven, "Caught in the Web."

"CAUGHT IN THE WEB" is the suggestive title of this chapter of the big serial "The Gray Ghost." Hildreth and Morn Light are already in the power of The Ghost, and now Marco, the secretary, played as you well know, by Eddie Polo, is trapped in the same sort of fashion. Stuart Paton is adapting the story from the Saturday Evening Post success "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche, and making a success of it.

Hildreth makes an effort to escape from the mysterious house, but is overpowered by several men. When alone, Hildreth and Jack Olmstead become friendly. Jack tells of his trouble and shows the newspaper clipping stating that he is suspected of his father's murder.

In the basement of the mysterious house, Williams and the other crooks are looking at the loot when the "Gray Ghost" enters. They are forced to tell him that they have missed the necklace. They accuse Williams, but the Ghost believes him.

Meantime, Jerry and his detectives question the boy at Arabin's, whose head is all bandaged up. The phone rings and the doctor of the hospital summons Jerry to come quick; Jacques has spoken at last. Jerry rushes away and is followed by two crooks who have been waiting for him. At the hospital, one of the crooks wait, while the other runs away to a phone booth to tell the "Gray Ghost" that Jerry Tryon has just rushed to the hospital, that something must be wrong. The "Gray Ghost" is angry and quickly orders the crook not to lose sight of Jerry, for if he learns anything important, he must go. Marco decides to go to the hospital to see Jacques.

"CAUGHT IN THE WEB" is the title of the seventh installment of the big serial adapted and filmed by Stuart Paton from the Saturday Evening Post success, "Loot," by Arthur Somers Roche.

The doctor has taken notes of what Jacques has said and Marco reads, "Morn Light—Ted Daly—at Morn Light's apartment—save them." When Marco leaves the hospital, two crooks spring upon him and after a great fight get the note from him. Marco continues to walk down the street.

In his own apartment, the "Gray Ghost" is looking at the picture of Morn Light, murmuring to himself that he would kill her if he didn't love her, when a crook arrives with the note. The "Gray Ghost" is anxious and gives some orders sharply.

When Jerry, Marco and the two detectives enter Morn Light's apartment, by means of a skeleton key, they begin to search around. Two crooks sneak into the apartment and soon when Marco looks about, the "Gray Ghost" steps from behind a curtain and asks if there is anything he can do for them. Marco looks at him and at the same time jumps toward the switch; he switches off the lights; the door opens and the figures of two crooks as well as those of the detectives are silhouetted. Many shots are fired.

"THE SOUL HERDER."

Bill says: "In that case we'd better get rid of the girl."

So they plan to carry her off, with the aid of some Mexicans. They break into the house, and easily overpower her, but little Mary Ann runs to Harry and wakes him. He sets out in pursuit. After riding hard all night, he catches up with the bandits. Jane is riding with one of them when Harry begins to shoot. She manages to catch the bough of a tree, and swings off the saddle as Harry shoots the rider. Harry picks her up and rides back with her; but Topeka Jack is killed.

Cheyenne and Chuck arrange for the funeral. They take the money from Topeka's gambling establishment and Harry gives it to the dance-hall girls to take them back to their people, or at least to a more respectable means of life. Topeka's place is closed for good and all, and Cheyenne succeeds in persuading Jane that, with the gang broken up, Buckhorn will not be such a bad place for her to live in after all.

Spectacular Stunts from "The Gray Ghost"

Eddie Polo leaps to freedom while the camera grinds serenely on.

THE man in the rear seat of the speeding touring car racked his brain for a way to escape from his captors, who were taking him he knew not where. The home of Arabin, the jeweler, was to be robbed—that much he had gathered from the snatches of conversation that had drifted back to him from the crooks in the front seat—and he was powerless to prevent the robbery. If he could only leap from the machine—he gazed at the scenery going past at a forty-mile clip. The driver turned, divined his intention and speeded up the car another notch. A leap at that pace would be fatal.

The car shot out across a bridge. That was the undoing of the crooks. Their captive made his calculations at a glance, leaped from the machine, cleared the railing of the bridge and dived into the water below, to the chagrin of the crooks, who had been confident that his escape was impossible. He swam ashore, evading the revolver fire of the crooks by keeping under the bridge. A farm horse, grazing in a near-by field, was pressed into service. Without saddle or bridle, with only the halter strap to guide the old Dobbin, the man rode into the big city.

They reached the heart of the city—the big plow horse and his drenched and disheveled rider. They plunged into the congestion of vehicles and pedestrians without slackening their pace. The warning shouts of the rider rose above the din of the busy street. Men, women and children leaped to safety before the galloping steed, their screams mingled with the grind of brakes as automobiles and trolley cars came to an abrupt stop. Traffic policemen essayed to halt the reckless rider, but he flew by with the terse explanation: "Police headquarters." Breathlessly he reported the impending robbery to the officers, and accompanied by the star detective and a squad of men from the Central Office, hurried to Arabin's residence.

Paton supports his leading players.

This is the "punch" which Director Stuart Paton, assisted by Eddie Polo as the jumper, is putting into one of the later chapters of the serial, "The Gray Ghost," which he is filming, having made the adaptation himself from the novel by Arthur Somers Roche, which was called "Loot" when it was published in the Saturday Evening Post. There have been a lot of sensational stunts in this picture, but Paton says they are nothing to those which are coming. Stories of the real robbery of a jewelry store in Los Angeles, which excited the customers, the passersby in the streets, and the police have appeared already in the Weekly. It has been said that it was curious that the daring attempt in broad daylight did not result in accident of some sort, for the police on duty outside in the street had not been forewarned of the filming of the scene, which was kept as secret as possible. The explanation is that the resourceful Paton had staged another distraction outside the store for their benefit, and this is how he did it.

He donned the garb of a truck driver and drove down the street to the corner nearest the jewelry store. Previously he had secreted four cameras on different corners overlooking the cross-roads, knowing that if the fact became known that he was merely making a picture, the rage of the traffic cops would know no bounds. Stopping his truck right in front of the crossing officer, Paton stalled his engine and fussed around it, pretending that it would not start. All the other machines, and a long line of trolley cars were compelled to halt as the truck completely blocked the crossing. The officer began to grow angry, and Paton jumped off the truck and told him in language more forceful than elegant that if he thought he could run a motor truck better, to go to it. As he was arguing, Beverly Griffith, one of the assistant directors at Universal City, walked into the scene and started an argument, soon shooting a fist to Paton's jaw. A merry scrap ensued, a crowd gathered, and Paton was arrested and taken off to the police station, where he provided bail, happy in the knowledge that he had obtained exactly the scene he wanted. Scraps are in order in every serial, and this one is no exception. Mention has already been made here of the big fight which Eddie Polo puts up in Episode four. He will have many others. But other members of the cast are fighters as well. In one of the scenes, Morn Light, played by Miss Priscilla Dean, actually has a scrap with the leading man, one Wade Hildreth, played by Emory Johnson. The cut shows how they looked after it, and, by the way, this is the only instance in which a director ever acted as support to his leading man and leading woman.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 81.

IN the Universal Animated Weekly No. 81 one of the most interesting pictures is that of a new machine gun, which can be attached and fired from any automobile, truck, carriage, wheel-barrow or autopede. The gun is a special Colt Automatic machine gun designed by Robert Charles Morris, and a demonstration was held for Animated Weekly Cameraman Bill Ganz last week at Parkhill, N. J., which is on the Palisades. In order to demonstrate thoroughly and completely, Ganz took pictures from a moving automobile in front of a Ford armed with this automatic and from another car closely following it. Then he thought it would be a good idea to take a picture of the gun firing directly at the camera—real bullets, too. So he got up on the shed which is shown in our illustration and had the gun trained on an object immediately below, while fearless Bill turned the crank. Now it is possible for any spectator of the Animated Weekly to know exactly how a soldier feels when a machine gun is firing 400 bullets per minute directly at him.

It is Mr. Morris' idea to have at least 3,000 automatics of this type made for home defense, and he is advocating it before Congress. They may be easily attached to any kind of vehicle. The recoil of the gun is very slight. It can be operated by one man and can be used as an anti-air craft gun and for coast patrol as well as for ordinary military uses. They are effective against airplanes at an altitude of a mile, and carry 10,000 rounds of ammunition.

Little Zoe Rae.

A VERY TINY BUTTERFLY.

WHEN the Butterfly Picture "Man and Beast" was released, all the professional critics commented upon the delightful performance of one of the most unself-conscious actors who had ever appeared on the screen. This was the little boy, brought up in the African jungle, who was stolen by the Ourang outang, (the almost human Joe Martin), and rescued by Charlie, the Universal elephant. No one knows his name, to this day, but he made an impression which will not be affaced for some time. The kiddie appeared with a leopard and a lion, in addition to Joe and Charlie, and showed not the slightest sign of fear of any of them. Besides his courage, he went through his quite complicated part with a serious intensity which charmed the spectators. Self-consciousness is the bane of the screen actor, and this baby was free from the slightest trace of it. Making such an impression he's sure to be used again.

ZOE AND HER SPORT COAT.

ZOE RAE has earned the title of "Universal Baby." She already has the distinction of having been starred in a Butterfly Picture, "The Circus of Life," which was directed by Rupert Julian, and she is working in the leading role of another, at the present moment. Elsie Jane Wilson, who in private life is the wife of Mr. Julian, is directing this picture, having assisted her husband in many of the films which he has produced. The new one is called by the working title of "Hidden Treasure" or "The Cruise of the Jolly Roger," and such well-known players as Gretchen Lederer, Lillian Peacock, Frank Brownlee and Charles West are supporting the baby star.

Zoe sent in this protograph of herself as a "fashion picture," telling the home office that it showed her new "sport coats." It is the first "sporty" garment that the six-year-old has ever owned, and she is immensely proud of it. She never contemplates the possibility of doing anything in the world but play for the camera. She started at the age of twelve months, and all her memories are associated with motion picture studios. She would hardly be happy anywhere else, and simply adores to act, and the bigger and more emotional the role, the happier she is.

Her latest accomplishment is learning to ride a motor-cycle. She has owned an automobile for some time, and has learned to drive it with such success that she thinks she ought to be able to master all means of locomotion.

"I'm going to learn to drive and ride everything there is in the whole world," is her modest announcement, "because you never know when you may need it in the film business."

Gordon Griffith.

GEORGIA'S VARIED EXPERIENCE.

GEORGIA FRENCH at the right here, is one of the standbys in Universal pictures. She has spent most of her brief life at Universal City, and has worked for nearly every director on the lot.

Georgia has played quite a range of parts for such a very young screen actress. She has been a cupid and a fairy very often, for nature gave her a perfect child's figure, of which artists have spoken in high praise. She has played the pretty daughter of rich parents, and the ragged little guttersnipe of poor one. Georgia is a little American, and her great delight is to be cast in a patriotic picture.

James McCandless.

A BOY BLUEBIRD.

JAMES McCANDLESS is the name of the boy who has played in two Ella Hall Bluebirds. He was the Earl's son in "Polly Redhead" and he will be seen in her next Bluebird release, which is called "The Charmer." In this he plays the part of a neglected boy, whose affairs are satisfactorily arranged through the good auspices of the missionary's daughter, who nearly upsets the prim New England town.

In the cut, James is seen grasping a fairy hand. This is not a scene from "The Voice On the Wire" put in by mistake. The hand is really that of Ella Hall, but she was eliminated from the picture because this was to be a page of "real kids," and Ella is really grown up, you know.

Authority differs as to whether James is of noble birth or not. There is a James S. McCandless, a noble of the Mystic Shrine who hails from Honolulu and who hails every year. He is a great friend of Henry McRae and when he was here last month he had a flattering reception.

ABOUT LENA BASKETTE.

MORE than a year ago the announcement was made that the longest Universal contract ever drawn had been signed between the film company and a little girl called "Lena Baskette." Lena is not very old, but she can already lay claim to the two titles, "actress" and "dancer." It was her dancing which attracted the attention of the Universal officials. She received the nickname of "Pavlowa, Junior."

Lena has appeared in a great number of Universal pictures. She played what was practically a stellar role in "The Carrivan," that remarkable study of Old Egypt, in which Claire McDowell has the leading adult role. Lena made up wonderfully effectively as an Egyptian, for there is something exotic in her appearance, which allows her to impersonate such rôles remarkably well. A late release in which she appeared was the Gold Seal "The Black Mantilla," a story of Mexico, staged by Ruth Ann Baldwin, in which a dancing contest played a part in the action. Lena was to take her turn with the adult dancers, and it was pretty to watch the impatience with which she waited for it.

At the present time she is appearing in a series of two-reel pictures, which are made by Marshall Stedman. These stories have all been chosen with a special view to using her talents as a dancer. In one of them, called "Amelita's Friend," the title role is played by Joe Martin, the almost human orang - outang, who is Lena's great favorite.

Elizabeth Janes.

Lena Baskette.

THE BIMINI SEAL.

WHEN the three-reel Bison, "The Soul Herder" is shown an extraordinary picture with Harrey Carey as its star, audiences will be particularly interested in the work of the little girl, "Mary Ann," who adopts "Cheyenne Harry" as her new daddy, and by forcing him to wear the clerical vest of her own father, murdered by the Indians, succeeds in getting him to clean up the whole town of Buckhorn. Mary Ann is played by Elizabeth Janes, one of the "regulars" at Universal City.

Elizabeth is known as "The Bimini Seal" in California, which title she earned by performing the stunt of diving from a high railing into the ocean with her hands and feet tied .She did this for the camera to show that there was no deception about it. Jack Conolly of Universal City, is congratulating her on her feat.

Put your Theatre Right up front

If you never had a rainy day in your section or a dull day in your house REPEAT BOOKINGS would still be the most logical way of booking BLUEBIRD Photoplays, because it is only through REPEAT BOOKINGS that you can get all of the profits—all of the prestige—the cash-in-your-pocket savings that the sliding scale of charges give you.

REPEAT BOOKINGS is on the same principle that the speaking stage books a play —a several days' run, so that all the people who want to see the story can do so at their convenience—it doesn't make any difference to you what plays you run—or how long they run in your house—so long as you make a clean-up. You haven't any pet theories or style of pictures, have you? It's what the people want that hits you strong, isn't it? Then take our advice, based on what hundreds of showmen are doing: Play these three BLUEBIRDS on the REPEAT IDEA.

TYRONE POWER and LOIS WEBER in "The Eye of God"

An unusual drama of gripping power and big scenes of intense action. Written and produced by Lois Weber, producer of "Where Are My Children?" "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," "Even As You and I," and many other great film successes.

HARRY D. CAREY in "The Three Godfathers"

Most remarkable outdoors picture ever produced. From the Saturday Evening Post story by Peter B. Kyne. A living expression of human life that leads through every human emotion.

MARY MACLAREN in "Shoes"

Produced by the genius, Lois Weber, producer of "The Dumb Girl of Portici," "The Hand That Rocks the Cradle," etc. A BLUEBIRD masterpiece—a chapter from the life of a girl who sold herself for a pair of shoes. A powerful story; a wonderful production.

CANADIAN NOTES.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The Imperial Theatre was donated by the Keiths' interest to the Red Cross Society on July 12th, when an entertainment was held for the French wounded. The local Red Cross Society had the assistance of Manager Golding of the Imperial. "The Bugler of Algiers," Bluebird Feature, was the picture chosen, with scenes of French life in the navy, and travel pictures.

TORONTO, ONT.—Manager Roland Roberts of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, probably one of the most beautiful and modern theatres in the Dominion, has signed a twelve-months' contract with the Universal Film Co., for the Animated Weekly. The Regent Theatre showed the recent Universal Film "With Pershing in France," and it so pleased his patrons that he continued using this service.

The operators' request for an increase in wages has been satisfactorily settled.

The Operators' Union, Local 173, recently held a meeting to elect new officers. Mr. Dentelbeck is now the President, Mr. Corvert, Business Agent and Organizer, while Mr. Duneen of the Strand Theatre, Toronto, has become Vice-President, and Mr. C. A. McMahon has released the Business Agency and retains the Financial Secretary office.

Mrs. Fred Paterson, a well-known Vancouver lady, has been appointed to fill the position on the staff of the Moving Picture Censors of British Columbia.

Mr. A. E. Wall, the censor of Nova Scotia, is taking up the matter of bad film and is going to eliminate if possible the practise of exhibitors using machines which continually damage film. He has threatened to cancel the machine license on any machine which is reported to be out of order and continually damaging film. He has also placed restriction on the exchanges that if they continue to send films which are in bad condition into the territory that he will cancel their license also, he will also cancel the license of any operator who continues to destroy film. In this way he hopes to protect the film exchanges as well as the exhibitors in the matter of giving the public the best projection that is possible and help to eliminate as far as possible the wholesale damage which has been done to film by bad machines and poor operators, and also, of course, straighten the matter out as far as the exchanges are concerned in the careless handling of film and not seeing that it is properly revised. This should prove a distinct advantage.

CANADIAN NOTES.

HAMILTON, Ont.—Hamilton will likely have another theatre in the near future. MacKay Bros. are figuring on a theatre to be built on Lock Street.

LONDON, Ont.—The Grand Opera House, London, Ont., has just recently been re-decorated and re-fitted for motion pictures. A special feature will be L-Ko films.

The one-cent war tax which has been placed on the theatres in Nova Scotia seems to be working out quite satisfactorily. Few complain now that it has got into working order.

CAST.

Violet	Violet McMillan
Billie	Gordon Griffith
Hank	Fred Woodward
Fortune-Teller	Jack Nelson
The Lion The Tiger The Man Bird	Fred Woodward

"A STORY book come alive," is the way the children describe the Victor two-reel comedy - drama, which was written and adapted for the screen by Karl Coolidge, and produced by George Cochrane, with Violet McMillan starred, and Fred Woodward, the greatest animal impersonator in the world in her support. "Like Babes in the Wood" will delight spectators of all ages.

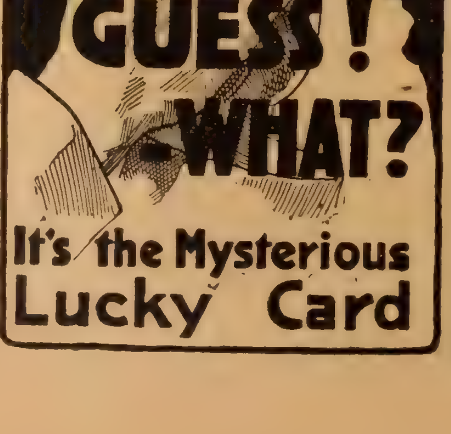
Violet and Billie are seated on a polar bear skin by the fire-place, tired out from playing so hard. Out in the yard Hank, the mule, is also lonesome and weary. A fortune-teller comes to the door, and they tell the old woman they are alone. She gives them a ring, which she says is a wishing ring; that every wish of the owner's will come true. The little girl pays the fortune-teller the few pennies she has in her bank.

Seeing Hank in the yard, Violet wishes that he had a bag of oats, and immediately she sees a nose-sack of oats appear. They wish for a story book; it appears and they look at the pictures of the "Babes in the Wood." A spark flies from the fire and burns Billie's hand, and because he petulantly pounds the polar bear skin, Violet, to scare him, wishes that the bear would come to life. It does, and begins to chase them. They rush out to Hank and the three start to run. Violet looks back and exclaims:

"I wish it was a lion, I hate bears," and the bear quickly changes into a lion. The children are more frightened than ever and run until they come into some dense woods. Violet becomes very tired and wishes that the lion would go away. No sooner said, than the beast is not to be seen.

The children think of the story book and wish that they were the real Babes in the Wood. Their clothes change into rags and they become bare-footed. But suddenly they see a big tiger creeping upon them and, terrified, they begin to run in the opposite direction. The tiger continues to follow them, and finally Violet wishes that the birds would cover them up the way they did the Babes in the Wood, so that the tiger could not find them. A crow starts to fulfill the wish, and Hank and the two children are soon all covered up except their faces. The tiger comes along and the crow drops a huge leaf upon his nose, causing him to start to fight with the leaf, for he thinks it is some one attacking him.

Violet and Billie, lying close together on the polar bear skin, are awakened from their deep sleep by the braying of Hank, who has stuck his head through the window. They jump up, rub their eyes and Violet looks at her finger for the ring, but there is none there. They realize that it was all a dream.



PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

"A WIFE ON TRIAL," the Butterfly production featuring Mignon Anderson, tells the story of a girl who marries a man at his dying mother's request, and solely because it is desired to give him the companionship of some one who would take a greater interest in him than would an ordinary trained nurse.

This naturally gives you many human interest angles that will arouse the attention of possible patrons. Your advertising matter should call the attention of the readers to the unique arrangement—that of a charming, vivacious girl marrying a hopelessly crippled young man for the double purpose of giving him more than a mere trained nurse's attention, and because the marriage enables her to gratify the one great desire of her life—that of owning a rose garden out in the country.

Mr. Kashin, of Montreal, owner of one of the best theatres in that Canadian city, finds novel lobby displays powerful box office aids. If you want to see what a good lobby display will do for you, try the following idea:

Have an artist paint a huge hand clutching a pair of balancing scales. One side of the scales is to hold an invalid seated in a wheel chair. In his lap is a bag of gold.

The other side of the scale should contain a girl possessing youth and beauty, and the general idea should bring to the mind of observers the question as to whether it is worth while to sell the latter for money and the misery a possibly unhappy marriage to a hopeless invalid would bring.

The copy on this banner should read:

WOULD YOU TRADE YOUR YOUTH AND FREEDOM FOR WEALTH — AND UNHAPPINESS?
SEE "A WIFE ON TRIAL"
TO-DAY!

This banner should be hung over the entrance of your theatre.

Stunts for "Follow the Girl"

"FOLLOW THE GIRL," the Butterfly production featuring Ruth Stonehouse, is the story of the adventure which befell a little Swedish girl and her big, clumsy and stupid self-appointed guardian upon their arrival in this country. A novel way of attracting attention to your presentation of this feature consists of the following:

Hire a tall, spindle-shanked individual and have him dress up in the Swedish national costume. This man should lug an emigrant's pack and clumsily trudge along the streets. He is to come to a halt every once in a while and, pulling out a card, look it over carefully and then examine the numbers on the houses about him. As often as he comes to a street corner, your man should carefully scan the street names on top of the sign posts.

Naturally, if this is done properly, individuals will come to his assistance and inquire as to whether they can be of assistance. As often as this happens, your man should give them the card he has been studying. The card is to contain the following copy:

I AM TRYING TO "FOLLOW THE GIRL" WHO IS APPEARING AT THE (name of theatre here) (day and date)
THIS CARD AND (regular admission price here) WILL ADMIT YOU.

In spite of the hoax, the average victim of this stunt will laugh over the ease with which he was fooled—and will probably tell his friends about it. A variation of this idea consists in getting a pretty girl to take the part of the emgirant. A clever actress should be able to put the idea over in great shape.

NO VACATION IN EIGHT YEARS—AND GLAD.

WHAT would you do if you hadn't had a vacation in all your life? Would you mope, prepare to take one or just simply forget all about it?

Violet Mersereau, star of the Bluebird, "The Little Terror," does neither. She exults in the fact. She even denies it. For, she says, films are her only vocation and vacation and she'd rather be doing a picture than sailing the seas in any sort of craft or taking a joy-gag in any type of flivver.

"My mother worries about it, and so does my sister Claire," says the vivacious Vi, shaking her blonde curls. "But I don't. I glory in the fact. Pictures are the best vacation I know of and I've enjoyed them so that I would not miss their fun for a dozen out-of-town resorts."

And this is the way Vi spends her Sundays: "Church, 10 to 12; dinner, 1 to 2; automobiling, 3 to 6; company, 8 to 11, and—early to bed and early to rise."

"I don't even go to dances," she says. "But I make up for that by the dances of all sorts that I attend and do in my work."

Dora Rodrigues enters Chicago with a modern representation of "The Spirit of '76" and conquors the Convention.

PATRIOTISM IS UNIVERSAL NOTE AT THE CONVENTION

DORA RODRIGUES, the Universal recruiting girl, who already has almost 1,200 names on her list, and who is hot after the two thousand mark, made a triumphant appearance in Chicago on the opening day of the convention. Dora is walking across the country in an endeavor to recruit 40,000 men for the United States Army and Navy. So far she has met with wonderful success, and when the call come to her to go to Chicago, she was in Cincinnati in the midst of one of the most successful recruiting drives of her experience. She hated to leave, but the call of duty started her on the forced march (via Pullman) to Chicago just for a day.

She aroused tremendous enthusiasm in the Coliseum, and presided at the Butterfly booth for a few hours, where she received assurances from the recruiting officers of the Army and Navy in Chicago that her assistance would be greatly appreciated. In the short time which she could spare in Chicago, Dora made all her plans for a wonderful drive there later, when she plans to return to Chicago in the regular course of her march to the Coast.

As it was, the recruiting officers arranged a parade for her at the head of which marched a representation of the famous painting, "The Spirit of '76," and when she departed (also via Pullman) to Cincinnati to continue her interrupted drive there, the recruiting officers of both the Army and Navy in Chicago were unanimous in their pressing invitation to her to come back as soon as possible.

Cincinnati is Dora's "home town," so to speak. She has lived there for the few years that she has been in this country and that is where she goes when she finishes one of her numerous trips about the country.

RESCUED.

CAUGHT in a strong undertow and carried out into the ocean beyond their depth, Marcia Moore and Molly Malone, who play ingenue leads in Universal photoplays, narrowly escaped drowning one Sunday recently at Long Beach, California.

The girls, neither of whom could swim, were being carried to sea when they managed to seize one of the lifeboats after a desperate struggle and held themselves on the surface until life-guards came to their rescue.

They were able to proceed to their homes after being given first-aid at the life-saving station. Miss Malone is supporting Harry Carey in a coming Butterfly Picture, directed by Jack Ford.

"Bill' Franey apparently gets his real pleasure in falling on his ear and doing back flops that would break any other man's neck in "Out Again, In Again." He is number 13 in prison—escapes and gets a job in a museum. He is pardoned and the officers try to find him. Do they ever come up with him? Read the answer in the film. It's hilarious.

MERTA STERLING is "The Little Fat Rascal," and perhaps that is enough said. Phil Dunham as "Simpleton," without a mustache this time, and Lucille Hutton as the lovely Melba Sundae are the other chief participants in this two-reel L-Ko, directed by Vin Moore, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone, the Director General. It starts on a farm, goes on to a boarding school, and ends in a riot—so you see it is up to the L-Ko tradition.

Phil is a corn-fed country boy, and Mert is pleasingly plump and mischievous. She rakes the meadows sweet with hay, and manages to rake Phil at the same time. Pop Snodgrass, her father, does not like Phil. He chases him up the windmill, and Phil gets caught in the fans, and whirls around at a great rate. Pop thinks he has gotten rid of him for good. However, a change in the wind throws him into Mert's room, and then Pop is mad.

Tinhorn Ted is in jail paying the penalty of his crimes. However, he steals a saw from a passing workman, and escapes. He hides in a mail bag, and is delivered with the rest of the bags at Pop's place. Pop receives a letter introducing a famous artist, who is recommended to him by a friend.

"He wants to paint a pig," says the letter, "so I sent him to you."

Pop is delighted and says the artist shall be Mert's husband. Ted, having climbed out of the mail bag and found the letter, determines to impersonate the artist. He meets the real one, beans him and takes his outfit, locking the senseless artist in the hen-house, where the hens promptly peck him back to life. Ted is then presented to Mert as the artist, and she plays and sings for him, to his great agony. They are spooning under a tree, when Phil puts a hen coop over Ted's head. Pop rescues him and spanks Mert. Phil and Mert then determine to elope. Phil is taking Mert out of her window down a ladder, when Pop catches him and he

KIDDING With the L-KOS

Merta Sterling.

IF any one thinks that the L-KOS cannot kid, take a look at "Blackboard and Blackmail," an extremely recent and interesting L-KO two-reel komedy. In it Phil Dunham and Merta Sterling play kid roles as shown in our illustration on this page. Lucille Hutton happens to be the schoolteacher in this particular instance, but many times and often she has been one of the kids herself, and one of the first releases in which she ever appeared was extremely brightened by Lucille in the costume shown at the right-hand side of this page. Leave it to Lucille to brighten up her corner.

Merta Sterling's juvenile experience is in inverse ratio to her stage experience. When she came to L-KO several months ago as the heavy woman, the directors were content to make her act and look as heavy as possible. A month or so ago, however, the L-KO released a picture entitled "Her Daring, Tearing Ways." Her current release is entitled "The Little Fat Rascal," and her role is well exemplified by the illustration on this page and on the opposite page.

Phil Dunham, another of L-KO's most dependable stars, has also achieved juvenile fame quite recently. The center illustration on this page shows Phil as a student. From that he branches out into a little girl in "The Fat Little Rascal."

Long Acre Will Market Centuries

A NEW brand of comedies has made its appearance in the field, and promises to jump to the very top at once. Century Comedies were formed to feature the inimitable comedy star, formerly with the L-KO, Alice Howell, by all manner of means the funniest woman on the stage to-day. The comedies in which she appears have been made under the personal direction of J. G. Blystone, whose reputation as a comedy director has soared wonderfully in the last two years.

Century Comedies will be released in the United States by the Long Acre Distributing Company, Mecca Building, New York City, and this company has issued invitations to a trade showing of three Alice Howell Century comedies. This trade showing will be held at the Broadway Theatre on Friday, July 27th, at 10:30 A. M., and the three comedies to be shown are "Balloonitics," "Automaniacs" and "Neptune's Naughty Daughter." All of these are in two reels. There is a series of Alice Howell subjects being made now all of which will be up to the standard set by these three.

The Long Acre Distributing Company intends to establish distributing offices over the whole United States and Canada, and these offices will be announced during the month of August.

It is planned to release the first of the Century Comedies on or about September 1st, and due announcement of this definite release date will be made later. For the present the first office opened by the Long Acre Distributing Company is in New York City in the Mecca Building, 48th Street and Broadway, and it is for the benefit of this distributing office that the trade showing is held in the Broadway Theatre.

The One Best Bet of the Week

Any one can own an automobile, but it takes a regular guy to own and love a horse. This isn't an epigram; it's a diagram—of this powerful and dramatic Harry Carey Feature, "Cheyenne's Pal." "Cheyenne" is Harry and "Pal" is Pete, the gray horse that has carried his master through many a movie escapade. Your audiences will enjoy this thrilling tale of a bad man's love for his horse. There are some great punches and a climax that goes over big.

THE WORLD'S FINEST.

Mr. Chas. F. Miller,
Bluebird Photoplays,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Mr. Miller—To-day I am playing my fifty-second Bluebird. They are fine. You have earned for yourself the slogan "The World's Finest Screen Productions." It is only necessary to mention that a play is a Bluebird, to mean that it is a good play. Many of my patrons have told me, "The Bluebird plays are all good. I like them." And they have proven what they say by coming out to see them, in such numbers that at times my theatre is not large enough to accommodate them.

Among the more recent releases that have been particularly liked are: "We are French," which I think is one of the best plays I have ever played; Lynn Reynold's productions, the best of which "God's Crucible" holds my house record for attendance; and the Smalley's productions, especially "Saving the Family Name."

Your policy of "The Play's the Thing" is, to my mind, the very best.

Hoping that I will be able to break more records with them, I am

Respectfully yours,

MARY FULLER IN "The Untamed"

TWO-REEL Mary Fuller Feature, with William J. Welsh.

"Well, who let you in?"

"I'll tell you something," said Clem. "This is her whiskey still."

CAST.

Casga	Mary Fuller
Clem Wytall	William Welsh
Howard Pike	Johnnie Walker
Rose	Helen Slosson

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.)

CAPT. PEACOCKE wrote the story of "The Untamed," the two-reel Mary Fuller Feature, which was adapted for the screen by Catherine Carr, and produced by Lucius Henderson. Mary is supported by William Welsh, one of the pioneer "villains," of the screen in the vital and intense story of a moonshiner's daughter, who makes an unexpected debut in society, loses her heart, and takes refuge again in her mountains. The ending, after that, is the entirely satisfactory one.

Casga is a moonshiner's daughter, and could see nothing wrong in making whiskey in your own still. Clem Wytall, the owner of the dance-hall in town, had not realized that she is grown up, until he sees her when he comes to get a supply of the illicit liquor for his place. Casga, as wild as a hawk, repulses him with violence. The revenue officers attack the moonshiners, and her father is shot. She continues to run the still herself. One day, Clem invites her to come to the dance-hall, and brings her a pretty frock to wear. She is delighted and determines to go.

Howard Pike is a revenue officer, who is visiting the dance hall. He sees Casga, and admires her wild beauty. Clem introduces her to the men, but she is very shy. Finally, when he tries to kiss her, she runs home.

Howard Pike is investigating in the mountains, and is joined by his fiancee and her father. Casga sees them in the distance and is jealous of the pretty well-dressed girl. Later their auto frightens her horse and she is thrown and hurt. Rose is fascinated by the wild charm of the mountain girl, and takes her home with her. In confidence Rose tells Casga that her father wants her to marry Howard, but that she loves some one else.

Casga is introduced to Rose's friends at a dance, but she does not acquit herself very well. She tries to dance and loses her slippers. The people laugh at her, and Pike says:

"I can't understand Rose's bringing a wild thing like you here."

Casga is terribly hurt. She runs away to her room, and determines to go home. She puts on her tattered frock, and leaves the pretty clothes Rose has given her. She writes a note saying that she cannot stay. Clem has been slinking around the house watching for her. He follows her to her cabin, and she shoots him in the hand. He determines on a coward's revenge. Meeting Pike, he informs him that there is an illicit still in the place, and shows him where it is. In going to investigate, Pike is struck by a rattlesnake. Casga hears his cry for help. She shoots the snake, and helps Howard to her cabin, where she takes care of him, giving him the prohibited whiskey to save his life. She has no idea that he is a revenue officer.

Clem comes in while Pike is there. He tells him that Casga is the owner of the still that he is looking for. Casga drives him away from the cabin, and getting Pike on a horse, she takes him to the nearest doctor. In the meantime, Rose has eloped with the man she loves, and telephoned to ask her father's forgiveness. Casga tenderly nurses Howard back to health, and the first thing that they do when he is well, is to break up the still and pour away the whiskey.

BLUEBIRD IDEAS For Violet Mersereau in "The Little Terror"

AS the title implies, the leading role in this photoplay is a real "little terror." The heroine is a child of the circus, brought up on "the lot." She goes to live with a wealthy grandfather, who would make a society lady of her, but she cannot forsafe her hoydenish ways for those of the demure debutante.

Capitalize on the circus ballyhoo. If you can secure circus stuff, do so. If not, get a Shetland pony or a small donkey. Have a little girl about fourteen or fifteen years old ride the donkey. Have her dressed as a circus rider. Following her have several small boys dressed as clowns. On each side of the donkey have banners reading:

Society is just a Circus for Me!
That's why they call me
"THE LITTLE TERROR"
See me at the (name) Theatre
(Day and date)

Have the clowns pass out cards or throwaways reading as follows:

It's a circus to see
"THE LITTLE TERROR"
try to be a sedate society debutante!
Watch the fun at the (name) Theatre
(Day and date)

Decorate your lobby after the fashion of the "big top." Dress your ushers in circus garb—clown suits will do—and "The Little Terror" will get the money!

Send the following letter to every name on your list. If you have no list get in touch at once with the publicity department of your Bluebird Exchange—they will be glad to assist you.

Copy for Letter:

My Dear Friend:—

A wealthy grandfather tried to make a society bud of a young girl whose life had been spent in a circus.

But instead of changing the girl's inherent sweetness to artificial mannerisms, the love in her heart awakened the old man to thoughts of better things and made him really human.

The hoyendish child was misunderstood at first, and they called her "The Little Terror." But how she won her granddaddy over is beautiful to see. Violet Mersereau in the title role is cast absolutely true to type in this Bluebird Photoplay of love's endearing young charms. Her characterization of the little circus waif is real—there is nothing affected, no effort in portrayal—her work is spontaneous—bubbling in its brightness.

To recommend this Bluebird is a pleasure—it's so human. I want you to see it and enjoy it as I have. (Day and date) is the day—do not forget it!

runs off down the street balancing Mert on the top of the ladder. Pop overtakes them, and decides to send Mert to school.

Ted has an accomplice, Melba Sundae, and he plans with her to meet at the school and kidnap Mert, the heiress. Melba arrives at the school the same time as Mert. The girls are all in overalls, and Melba puts on a wonderful silk pair. Phil arrives, too, he has followed Mert. The snobbish girls are horrid to Mert, but surround Phil. The mistress throws him out, so he disguises as a little girl and returns. Mert says he is her twin. The girls go to bed, and Melba stays up waiting for Ted. The mistress takes Phil to her room to comb his hair, and his wig comes off. He runs. Mert is kidnapped by Melba and Ted, and Phil sees this and follows them to the city. Mert is taken to a cafe below the street level, and Phil slides through a manhole and gets in, too. Ted introduces Mert as the new dancer, and Phil comes to rescue her. There is a fight, and Mert is carried off in an auto. Phil takes a bicycle from a cop and gives chase. At last they are both caught in the safety catchers of the street-car.

"Righto," said both boys.

"Oh, yes," said Mac. "You might as well take a cameraman along and let him shoot you up against some of the locations. That won't be any trouble, will it?"

"No-o-o-o, I suppose not," said Eddie.

"But we are awfully tired of being shot," said Lee.

"That's all right. It won't hurt you at all, and I've got a corking little story that will just fit in with the picture. Palmer just handed it to me, and all it needs is a little twist to make it right. You tell Harry McGuire to pack his grip and his camera and we will call the picture 'There and Back.'"

And that's all the vacation that Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are going to have. It was the most strenuous time of their young lives. M. G. Jonas had taken care to let all of the exchanges along the line of the Northwestern Railway know that Lyons and Moran were coming through, and at each station there were mobs ready to shake them by the hand. When they got to Chicago, Joe Brandt took them in hand, and by the time he let them go to bed at night, they didn't have gumption enough to take off their clothes. Hand-shaking, showing the sweet aspiring young movie aspirants how to make up, side-stepping the too fervent advances of elderly females, meeting exhibitors, and telling everybody all about Universal City, is a pretty strenuous job, particularly for a vacation. Then occasionally they had to go and help Universal Dora when she had a hard-headed recruit on the hook and wasn't able to land him.

Betty Schade in "A Wife's Suspicion"

Tense situations, thrills, brilliant acting by an all-star cast in support of beautiful Betty Schade, are followed by a climax that is a huge surprise and a dramatic punch right up to the end. A notorious crook plans to rob the residence of the wealthy chief of detectives, and Betty's husband is drawn into the plot. Suspicious of his companions and of his intentions, she returns as governess in the chief's family, and is present when her husband comes with another woman to the reception. With the plans so laid, the plot swiftly develops, and the audiences which see it will be fascinated with the surprise climax and the powerful dramatic story. Book and boost.

"There and Back" is certain to make a big hit, and every exhibitor should start right in to advertise it immediately. When it becomes known that Lee and Eddie have been invited to attend the convention, there is a wonderful farewell demonstration from their fellow workers at the studio. Henry McRae, Roy Clements, Ruth Stonehouse, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Joe Girard, Franklyn Farnum, Edith Roberts, and a number of others, give them presents and tokens of esteem, when suddenly a telegram comes, saying that they cannot go to the convention after all. Right away all the actors demand their presents back, and Eddie and Lee go to their dressing-rooms disgusted. They fall asleep and dream that they go to the convention after all. Then comes a series of scenes showing the reception that they expected to receive, and the reception which they actually would have received had they gone out there, the contrast being marked by the widest possible divergence.

Included in the picture are scenes from Denver, Salt Lake City, and all of the cities on the Northwestern which were passed during the daytime, scenes in Chicago in front of the Herald, the News, the Tribune, and bother Chicago papers, in front of and inside the Coliseum in Madison Avenue, in the Loop, where they stopped traffic and were almost arrested, and in the great Northwest Depot.

UNUSUAL SPORTS OF LITTLE STARS.

discussing with Lincoln Stedman. They are appearing together in Miss Hall's next Bluebird picture, "The Charmer." It is the first big picture in which the son and heir of the Stedman family (Marshall Stedman is his father) has ever participated. Incidentally, there is no attempt to conceal the fact that young Stedman's most popular sport is an indoor one—eating. In "The Crippled Hand," Miss Hall was again a little girl, and had to drive a very saucy little cycle car, which she did to the queen's taste with the help of Buster Emmons.

Lena Baskette, the noted child actress and dancer, has a most unusual sport for a girl, and one so young. She is an expert fisherman, and she is shown here with one of her prize catches. The fish are small-mouthed black bass, and were taken in Lake Matthieson, where she went angling with her mother. On the same day a rival fisherman at this famous fishing ground was the biggest Chief-of-Police in the U. S. A.—John L. Butler. Claude Barker, on whose property the lake is located, is authority for the statement that little Lena with her wobbler bait, a six-ounce rod, and nine strand line, is one of the most adept fishermen who ever cast a fly in his well-known lake. He also says that she put it all over John L. Butler in the time they both were fishing.

Buster Emmons, who is one of the best-known child actors in America, having appeared in Griffith productions first, and making his biggest reputation in the Bison, is addicted to horseback riding without a saddle. His principal pleasure is in riding horses which are hard to handle, and that is the way he came by his nickname of Buster. His real name is Marion Paul Emmons, and his mother is also a well-known motion picture character actress. On the water, too, and in it as well, Buster is very much at home. He handles a canoe like a veteran.

Frankie Lee on the other hand, who has played in a number of Victor, Laemmle, Gold Seal and Powers productions, finds his greatest enjoyment in playing with dolls and making mud poes. He hasn't a combative or argumentative hair in his head.

"GOD'S LAW"

No matter how jaded the patron may feel—no matter how blase he may be, the gripping intensity of "GOD'S LAW" will get "under his skin" and pull him forward in his seat—holding him in enthralled silence—forgetful of time or place.

It's Forceful Appeal Had a Powerful Effect on the Pennsylvania State Legislature

When the question of repealing capital punishment came before the Pennsylvania State Legislature the opponents to capital punishment were very much in the minority, but, AFTER "GOD'S LAW" WAS SHOWN THE VOTE WAS WITHIN A FRACTION OF BEING A TIE.

"No, you can't have a dance. They are all taken." The haughty beauty moves away, and Eddie decides to become a woman hater because he is not popular. He goes to the country, and all the girls fall for him so that he has a hard time avoiding them. Lee is the son of the owner of the drugstore, is the only young man in town, and resents Eddie's arrival. Eddie goes fishing, to be by himself, but the girls find him out. He sticks his fishing-rod in the mud, and Lee finds it. He starts to fish, and the constable arrests him as it is forbidden. He is fined, and this does not make him love Eddie any more. Lee and the girls are out motoring, and Edith sees Eddie and climbs out of the back of the car to go to him. She complains of a sprained ankle. Eddie is very solicitous, until it begins to rain, and then she forgets all about it, and they both run and take refuge under the awning of the drugstore. They become so interested in each other that they do not notice when the vindictive Lee pulls up the awning and lets them get soaked.

Eddie enjoys Lee's embarrassment of engine and of females.

"There's take that," said Lee. "They told me you were a love slacker, but I think you are a cradle snatcher, I do."

VISITED HOME OFFICE.

AMONG the exchange men who have paid visits recently to the home office are Barney Rosenthal, of St. Louis, who stayed three days and absorbed all of the pep that hot little old New York could give him, and John McAleer, of Pittsburgh. Mac did not stay so long. He had a chance to meet almost all of the boys, and most of them met him for the first time. William Oldknow, who owns the South, and V. R. Carrick, who exercises a restraining influence on Philadelphia, have also been in the office of the editor and promised to send him a lot of letter and pictures of enthusiastic exhibitors. Now we will just see if they're going to be as good as their word.

PERSHING PICTURES IN CANADA

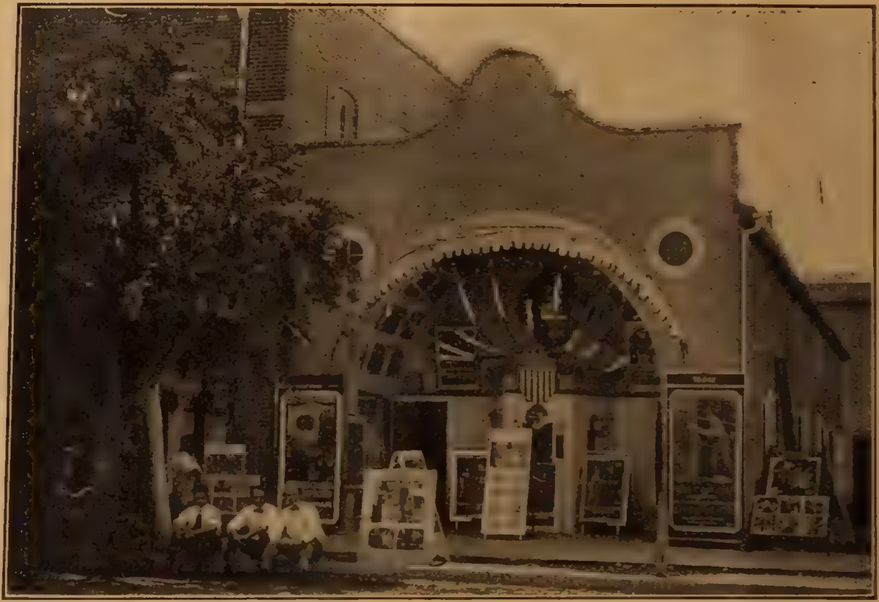
THE special Animated Weekly feature which gave United States its first view of General Pershing's arrival in France and that of his troops, has made a wonderful hit. The pictures were shown in England, coincidentaly with their showing here in this country. They have just made their appearance in Canada, and are being used by all of the large theatres and billed in the same way that features are billed.

In Toronto for instance, the Regent Theatre gives it the "Special Added Attraction Position" on its bill. Shea's Hippodrome advertises it even above its five-reel feature. These two houses have profitted immensely by it, as it was the advertising which they did on the Pershing special which got them both the audiences and the enthusiasm.

"LAZY WOMEN."

E. J. Schmidt, manager for "Idle Wives" for Ohio, Kentucky and Indiana, says he played the Majestic Theatre, Ashtabula, recently to big business—and for one reason.

There are a lot of foreigners in that city and they didn't know what the title meant. So Schmidt got an interpreter to explain. One party still shouted: "You don't know what that means? Why, it simply means 'Lazy Women.'"



J. P. Kaufmann and his New Braunfels, Texas, "Palace of Pictures."

UNIVERSAL SERVICE BUILT THIS THEATRE.

IN the year 1909, J. P. Kaufmann started a little moving picture show in New Braunfels, Texas. It was a show and that was all it was. This was no theatre in the proper sense of the word. They used instead an open top and canvas walls to keep the kids from seeing the show without paying the well-known nickel. When it located there wasn't even a show, but Mr. Kaufmann made the success of his theatre through the pictures he used. After looking over the market he selected Universal as the best all-around service, and has never used any other since. Universal pictures and Universal features have come and gone in New Braunfels, Mr. Kaufmann's show prospered and prospered and in a little less than two years, business had increased and sufficient money had come in to warrant putting up a permanent building. It was built in 1911, and has been extremely successful ever since with Universal features. The theatre rejoices in the high sounding title "Kaufmann's Palace of Pictures."

Mr. Kaufmann himself may be seen in the illustration on this page, the centre of the trio sitting on the curb in front of the Palace. On the day this was taken Mr. Kaufmann was using a Butterfly Picture, Herbert Rawlinson in "Like Wildfire," and the L-Ko Komedy, "Chicken Chased and Henpecked."

Contrary to the custom in most small towns, Kaufmann's Palace of Pictures opens at noon daily and plays a continuous program.

Launcelot Briggs	William Franey
Paprika	Lillian Peacock
Saharah Sarah	Za Su Pitts
Skootch	Eddie Baker
Sheik	Milburn Moranti

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.)

"Ship ahoy! Ship ahoy!" The cry of distress came weakly to a gaily caparisoned caravan.

Launcelot Briggs, the voice in the sand, is an old-clothes dealer. He is lost in the desert and found by a caravan, with which the beautiful daughter of the Sheik is traveling. The Sheik dooms him to a life of drudgery unless he can make him laugh. Skootch knocks him down repeatedly and this makes the old man laugh, and he gives him his daughter Saharah Sarah. But Skootch loves Sarah, so he is worse off than before. He has fallen in love with Paprika, the younger daughter of the Sheik. He writes her a note, asking her to elope, and puts in some reflections against the Sheik. Paprika takes it to her father for translation. Fortunately he can't read it, either, so Launcelot breathes freely again. He translates it into a flattering message for the Sheik. Plans for the wedding with the awful Sarah are in progress, and Launcelot weighs the pros and cons. If he marries Skootch will kill him, if he does not, the Sheik will. At last he hides in a tent and has the brilliant idea of running away inside of it. He pulls up the pole and the last they see of him, the tent is careering madly away over the desert, the natives thinking it a manifestation from their gods.

"Allah be praised," said the sorely perturbed Sheik. "He is gone."

"SEEING CEYLON WITH HY MAYER."

Powers One-Reel Travelaugh.

The climate of Solombo, in Ceylon, is very hot, and the costumes of the natives suit it. Lace makers use the same patterns that their ancestors had. We see a Buddhist procession with its dancers in their strange headdresses. Hy Mayer then suggests in a cartoon, that this more picturesque headgear should be adopted on Broadway. The foliage of Ceylon is wonderful and the variety of trees immense. We see the elephants' bathroom, and then Hy Mayer suggests the use of an elephant as a shower bath. Native dancing to the sound of the tom-tom is the suggestion for other cartoons.

Little Butterfly is the vamp of the camp, and her fickle heart is attracted by a stranger, who is about to commit suicide after losing his only dollar. She makes the proprietor give him a job as general cleaner of the place. She tries her best to win the stranger, but her charms have absolutely no effect upon him. Her professional pride is hurt and she makes a bet with the proprietor that she can win the man in three days. However, she only loses her own heart, while he remains plunged in grief. At last she persuades him to tell her the cause of his sadness, and he says that the old homestead is to be sold, because he has not money enough to pay the mortgage. He promises to marry her if she will get the money. Little Butterfly tries to vamp the money out of the men, but fails. Then she robs the gambling game, and is backing out of the hall with her loot, covering the men with a gun, when the sheriff arrives, and she learns that her trusted stranger is Slick Stevens, wanted in a dozen places as a worker of a confidence game. However, he has already flown.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE

Issue No. 31.

Rose breeding is the subject of the first part of the Screen Magazine, Issue No. 30. The second subject is a demonstration of a new motor for an airplane, which is so constructed that the propellers perform the double function of driving the machine at top speed and at the same time cooling the motor.

Screen oddities are represented by the tricks of some bears, which have been trained to be pets.

"Going to sea in an armory" is the next study, and shows the preliminary training of sailors on land, before they ever see a battleship. These pictures were taken in the armory of the Second Battalion of Naval Militia at Brooklyn, New York.

Physical culture for women is more important than ever now that women have to take the place of men. Fine exercises are illustrated by experts for the Screen Magazine.

The last subject is a "miracle in mud" by the Screen Magazine's sculptor, Willie Hopkins, called "The Darwin Theory Upset."

IT looks like a good day to get the batch off, doesn't it, Harry?"

"Sure thing," said Cheyenne. "What about my pay?"

The British army officer who had been buying up horses for shipment to the war cast a cunning look at Harry before he said:

"Oh, that's all right. But what about turning your own horse Cactus there, in with the bunch? That will make about a thousand coming to you."

"Well, I should say not," said Harry. "Cactus is my pal. Do you think I would part with him? Come across with my dough."

Jim Corey had sized Cheyenne Harry up right in the two months that he had been using him to round up horses, and now he determined to wait patiently for the moment when he could get Harry's horse in his own clutches.

"I need that horse for my own use. He isn't going for cannon fodder."

"That doesn't make any difference," said Harry. "This horse is my pal, and I am going to keep him."

As soon as Harry got his pay, however, the usual proceeding began. He looked up the nearest grog shop and dancehall, and found a pretty dancehall girl, and blew in the entire amount in one sitting. Flora Belle was used to this kind of a proposition, and as soon as Harry got down to small change her solicitude ceased, and she commenced to look around for another easy mark. This put the befuddled Harry on his mettle.

"I know where I can get $350 right away," he said.

Flora Belle was very skeptical.

"You just wait here."

Flora Belle didn't wait at all. She went right over to another table and left Harry flat. In his maudlin condition Harry wandered out of the dancehall, found the horse buyer, offered Cactus, and received the $350 blood money. In spite of the growing feeling that he had played Judas to Cactus, he went back to the dancehall, and made good his assertion to Flora Belle.

When he finally woke up from his drunken slumbers, his pockets again empty, and the bouncer gently but firmly urging him toward the door, Harry's thoughts again reverted to Cactus Pete, his pal, the horse which had taken him through thick and thin for the last five years, and his latent tenderness for the beast, and his Western cunning, began to work. Approaching Jim Corey, the officer, he said:

"Well, Jim, now you've got my horse, you might as well take me. I haven't a job, and if you'll give me one as handler on the transport, I'll work my way back on some other frighter."

"All right," said Jim carelessly, "go ahead."

At twelve o'clock that night, just before the watch was changed, there was a cry from the after deck—"Stop thief!"—closely followed by a rifle shot, and a tremendous splash in the water below. Harry had loosened his charger Cactus from the guard rope which enclosed the horses, and with him had jumped into the ocean and was now swimming toward the shore. A detail of soldiers lined up at the rail awaiting the order to fire, but Jim never gave it.

"Never mind, boys," he said. "Any guy that thinks as much of his horse as that fellow, is entitled to keep him."

BLUEBIRD Builds Realistic Old-Fashioned Printing Plant

WHAT has become of the ink-smeared, hand type, paper-strewn, ramshackle old country newspaper office of former days?

The director vainly sought the answer to this question during the staging of "Mr. Opp," a screen adaptation of Alice Hegan Rice's well-known book in which Arthur Hoyt is starred on the Bluebird program.

The story called for an old-fashioned printing office of the dilapidated sort, and the director and a corps of assistants endeavored to locate one of that kind in the small towns around Los Angeles. Several promising "leads" were investigated, but evidently all of the old-time printing plants have been modernized, for it was impossible to find one that had the proper antique appearance. Even an advertisement offering to purchase one outright, going or dead, brought no result.

At last, after delaying work on the production several days, the search was given up and they decided to build a newspaper office of their own. An old-fashioned flat-bed press was located in a storeroom in Los Angeles, a dusty, squeaky affair, which was taken down and brought to the Bluebird studios on motor trucks. Type cases, composing stones and a job press followed, the entire machinery and equipment weighing more than four tons; an expert pressman set up the plant on one of the stages.

In character, the office of the "Opp Eagle," as depicted on the screen, is not unlike thousands of small-town print shops which flourished fifteen or twenty years ago. And to look at it you would swear that it had been used the years gone by to circulate the weekly gossip of a town like Miss Rice conceived in "Mr. Opp."

"Mr. Opp" was one of the famous novels of that famous authoress who gave to the novel "The Romance of Billy-Goat Hill," which was also made into a clever photoplay by Lynn Reynolds who produced "Mr. Opp." The picture follows the novel faithfully except in one particular, and that was not the fault of the producer. The ending is now "movieized."

DONNA DREW featured in "THE LAIR OF THE WOLF"

A NEW star has recently burst upon the film horizon and created considerable comment for her remarkable talent as a screen actress. As a general thing, new-comers in filmdom do not make an instantaneous hit, but there are some few who are fortunate enough to take the public by storm at their first appearance. Whether this is mere fatality, or "The Lair of the Wolf" attributable to the adaptability of the performer is a moot question. Be the philosophy of the matter what it may, Donna Drew has certainly made a striking beginning. The little dark-haired girl, still in her teens, recently played the character of Naidee in the Butterfly film, "The Flame of Youth." Elmer Clifton was the director who produced Miss Drew's first Universal picture.

Mr. Clifton liked her work so much, and praised her so highly, that Swickard demanded her for his next picture, "The Lair of the Wolf," and while she is the star of this picture, she has a real unique and singular role. Weaving in and out of the plot in a mysterious manner, which the beholder always expects will lead to unusual complications, Donna appears finally as the star witness in the mystery trial which saves young Bennett from the gallows.

Little Miss Drew, who by mutual consent changed her name from Donna Moon to Donna Drew, has a petite figure of very graceful carriage, large blue eyes and beautiful features. Her type is of the peculiar quality dear to the heart of all cameramen, which photographs exquisitely. It is a singular fact that many performers, who have remarkably good stage presence, utterly fail as screen performers, due to the fact that they do not photograph well. There is a certain charm of personality about Miss Drew that is markedly distinctive and attractive. Her acting is of the natural

THE SHOW DOWN
BLUE-BIRD

(Copyright 1917, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.)

By WALDEMAR YOUNG

A WONDERFULLY artistic Bluebird production by Lynn Reynolds, showing the effect of pure nature on human nature.

CAST.

Lydia Benson	Myrtle Gonzalez
John Benson	George Hernandez
Oliver North	Arthur Hoyt
Robert Curtis	George Chesebro
Langdon Crane	Edward Cecil
Parkes	Jean Hersholt

THE personal attributes of John Benson, Oliver North, Langdon Crane and Robert Curtis were noticeable to all their friends and acquaintances. Benson was a rich, hard-headed business man, who drove shrewd bargains and demanded his full share in every transaction. Oliver North was known as a kindly philanthropist, unselfish and charitable. Crane was the author of the "best seller"—a book that reflected the author's personal experiences in wild adventure and deeds of daring. Robert Curtis was a young society "blood," to whom the world had grown stale and uninteresting.

Lydia Benson was a plain and sensible girl, with wealth at her command, but no desire to idle her time away at society's behest. She knew full well the measure she placed on Crane's mock heroism; on North's self-advertising charities; on Curtis' idleness and wasting—but best of all she knew that her father was, deep in his heart, the soul of gentleness masked behind a gruff and falsely brusque exterior. She was glad when her father proposed a business trip to the Orient and asked her to go along.

There was special interest in the Far East—Mongolian nations were showing surface indications of unrest that meant much to American commerce; and it was appealing to Robert Curtis in the thought of breaking the monotony of his ill-considered ease. Langdon Crane announced that he was going to the Orient to gather "local color" for a successor to "Back to the Primitive," his greatly successful novel. Philanthropist North declared that the heathen needed his attention—and so all these different types of humanity took passage, by merest chance, on the same steamship.

German submarines had not been reported in the Pacific, hence it was a double shock and utter surprise when a torpedo worked havoc with the steamship, and another stroke of fate that brought the Bensons, North, Crane, Curtis and a couple of sailors together in the same life-boat. Eventually cast up on a verdant island in mid-Pacific, the true natures of the various characters came open and unequivocally to the surface.

North, the philanthropist, developed a streak of selfishness that required force to thwart else the others might have perished. The hero-author proved a craven coward. Benson showed his dominant spirit by taking command of the situation and to Robert Curtis the adventure roused a sense of usefulness that he had never felt, and life was to him a glamour of interest and enjoyment. Lydia Benson made a study of Curtis, and his newer and better self won her admiration.

Lydia, nerves shaken by the shipwreck, has to be carried up the beach.

The castaways lived on tropical fruits and shellfish, built a camp and shelters, and then drew lots to decide who should explore the island. While Lydia held the "straws" that should decide, Crane and North trembled with fear; gruff old Benson grabbed his straw with fearless resolution—and Curtis, having drawn, broke his own straw in half to make sure it would be the shortest. The die being cast, Curtis started to explore—but Lydia followed him, attracted by something more than admiration.

They travelled day and night until they came upon a village across the island, snuggling in a cove, that proved to be the German submarine base. They pushed on and found a lonely wireless station, manned by one of Uncle Sam's brave nephews. The first news of the submarine raid was flashed to Honolulu; cruisers of the United States Navy hastened to the island, destroyed the German base, and rescued the marooned Americans. Safe once more on home soil, Lydia and Robert Curtis were married.

They discover the Submarine Station and plan the attack.

BEAUTIFUL SETTINGS.

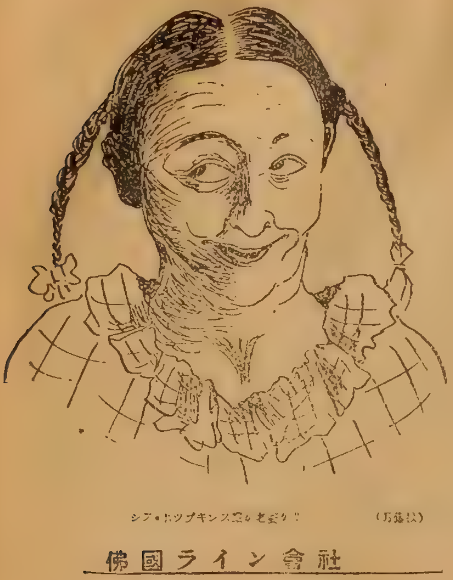
"THE SHOW-DOWN" was created for Bluebird Photoplays by Lynn F. Reynolds, who has given the screen in this popular series some of the most beautiful productions ever shown in photoplays. It was Mr. Reynolds who directed "God's Crucible," photographed in Arizona's Grand Canyon"; "The Greater Law," a wondrously beautiful romance of Alaska, pictured among the Sierras in midwinter, and numerous other specimens of "nature studies" on the screen. To photograph the scenes in "The Show-Down" Mr. Reynolds took his company to Palm Canyon, Cal., and to Santa Cruz Island, in Santa Barbara channel, off the coast of California, and there secured some delightful pictures of tropical nature in all its rare attractiveness. The story framed in these beautiful settings will provide gripping entertainment, wherein the varying natures of many men are transformed in the melting pot of privation.

Right—"Well, what do you know about that!"

Below—John Benson, the successful business man, takes command and maintains discipline.

RARE COMBINATION.

WHEN it came to a showdown on a verdant island in mid-Pacific, a boatload of wave-tossed refugees from submarine atrocities found out the true nature of men who had previously sailed through life under false colors. The philanthropist was found to be utterly selfish; the arrogant millionaire was disclosed as a kind-hearted and self-sacrificing soul; the gay society youth became a manly and heroic fighter in defense of the weak, and the girl who had found existence a bore now took a keen interest in life and surrendered to Dan Cupid's onslaught. Bluebird photoplays have carried many interesting themes, but "The Show-Down" will be found to possess a combination of novelty, excitement and love interest that is sure to satisfy the most exacting "fan." Myrtle Gonzalez and George Hernandez will be stars of the occasion in a "nature study" directed by Lynn F. Reynolds among the palms and tropical verdure of the mid-Pacific islands. Mr. Reynolds has specialized in pictures photographed out of doors, some of his previous successes being "God's Crucible," taken in Arizona's Grand Canyon; "The Greater Law," etc.



IT may surprise many readers of the Moving Picture Weekly to know what tremendous interest is taken in Universal, Bluebird, L-Ko, Century, and other American films in Japan. The establishment of a Universal branch office in Tokio may have something to do with the tremendous amount of publicity which is to be observed in the Japanese moving picture and general magazines. The cut at the top of this page is of Gale Henry, and was taken from a Japanese magazine. The cut at the bottom is a letter received by Agnes Vernon of the Bluebird from an admirer in far-away Japan.

FAR EAST ADMIRES AMERICAN PLAYERS

FOR several months the Moving Picture Weekly had a Japanese correspondent. Whether the burden of supplying news to the Weekly was too great, or whether some accident has befallen him, we know not. This letter, however, is interesting enough to be published in its entirety, and will pay reading. It is addressed to the Universal Company, and contains the offer of a scenario for production.

Tokyo, 5th, June, 1917.

Universal Film Supply Co,

Allow me to typewrite:

Dear Sirs—I am a Japanese, and crazy about movies, especially I like very much Bluebird or Red Feather photo-play. How these pictures gave me good impression.

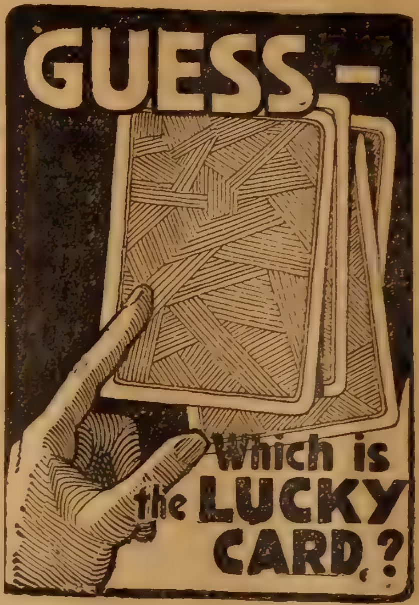
I am now attending to a secondery school. I always looking forward to the Saturday's night when I am in the habit of going movies where they show the Bluebird or Red Feather's artistic production. The newest picture in Japan was "A Romance of Billy Goat Hill"—a Red Feather. When I got home I could not forget the picture. And I wished to write something, I did not know what it was.

Late that night I started to write a sad village romance. It was the "Elisa's White Dove." I sent to you. Now I dare to offer my poor production. I heard the words as follows:—"American movie Co. can not make a tragedy which makes the audience weep." But it is a great mistake. I cannot understand the meaning of the heart of a man who says such things. I weped when I saw "Saving the Family Name." I cried when "A Romance of Billy Goat Hill" was showed. It is sure that the great Universal Film Company is most skillful to make tragedy in the world.

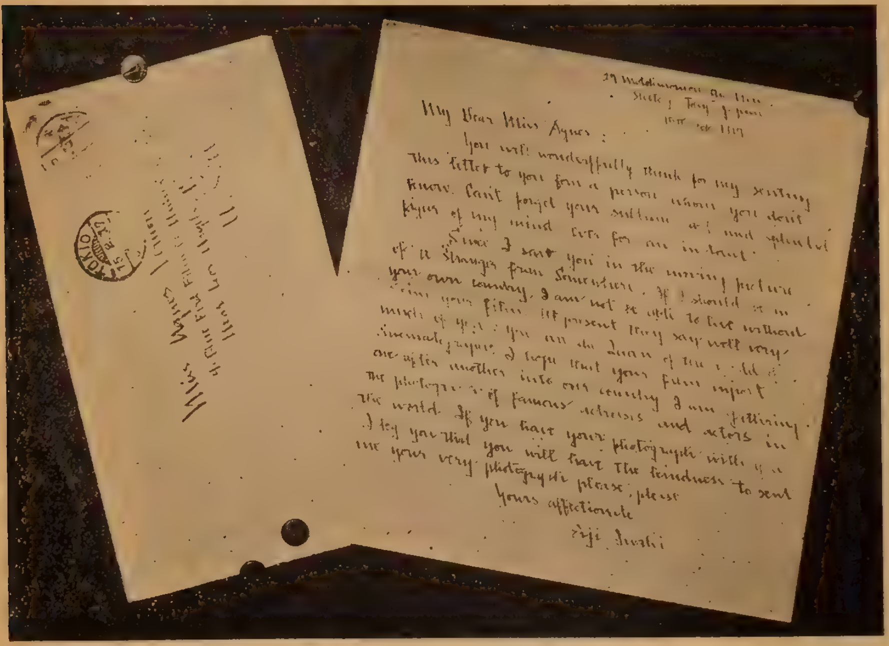
Of course, it is superfluous to say, it is your will that you adapt my novel or not. If fortunately you adapt my story please let me know. The names of players who play my story, and if it is not adapted also please let me hear at earliest date.

If you find any faults with my novel, please supply them by your dramatic knowledge. I hope very much that the day will come when the story I wrote is showed as the Universal Photo-play.

Yours very truly,
YASUHARA UCHIDA,
13 Ichigaya Kawadacho,
Ushigome-ku, Tokyo, Japan.



GUESS—
Which is the LUCKY CARD?



My Dear Miss Agnes:

Yours affectionate

Remarkable letter received by Agnes Vernon from far Japan.

UNIVERSAL Director Ruth Ann Baldwin, one of the few women picture producers, has just returned to Universal City from ten days spent at the big trees near Santa Cruz. In private life, Miss Baldwin is Mrs. Leo Pierson, for she was married last fall. At that time she was busy with the production of a picture, while her husband, who is a well-known leading man of the screen, was playing the lead in "The Birth of Patriotism," a Universal special feature. So the honeymoon had to be postponed, but Mr. and Mrs. Pierson declare that they enjoyed it even more on that account, when it did come.

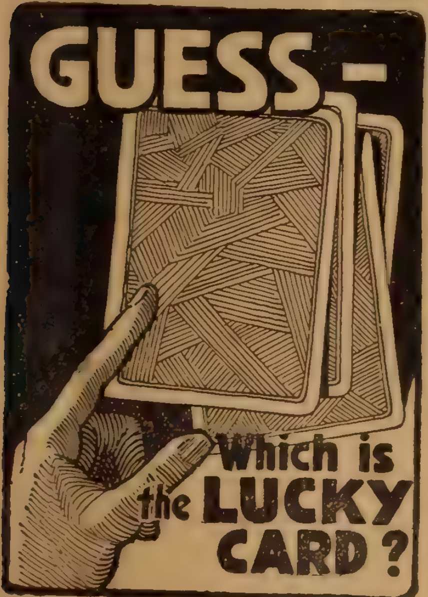
Polo Wears Ring From Mons Shell

ONE morning recently Eddie Polo, the well-known athlete and Universal actor and one of the stars of "The Gray Ghost," received a letter from Albert Witts of Portsmouth, England, praising him for his work in the patriotic serial, "Liberty." In this letter Witts told of having been wounded three times at the front and losing four brothers in the titanic struggle.

The same afternoon another letter dated exactly one month later was received from Ethel Webster of Liverpoor, a sister of the soldier, conveying the sad news that her brother had been killed at the battle of Mons. The letter brought a ring to Polo made from a piece of the German shell which had wounded him during the fighting. The letters follow.

"113 Sultan Rd.,
"Portsmouth, Eng.

"Eddie Polo—Dear sir, I am glad indeed to write and let you know how I and my comrades admire your work on the screen. I have seen the first three episodes of the film 'Liberty.' It is the first time I have seen your work on the screen, but I hope it won't be the last, as I and my comrades think you are the best actor in all the Liberty company. We don't get much time to go and see any films over in this land.



GUESS—
Which is the LUCKY CARD?

"My regiment is the Rifle Brigade and I have been out to the front three times and wounded each time—twice in the last battle. By the time you receive this letter I shall be gone to fight again, so if you write me and don't get any answer don't think I am neglecting you. I don't know if you have any brothers, but if you have give my luck to them.

"Sincere regards,
"ALBERT WITTS."

"Liverpool, England.

"Dear Mr. Polo—No doubt you will be surprised to hear that my last brother was killed in Mons. Now I have lost five brothers and father and mother. I am all alone. My husband was killed in the early part of the war. He was only a young man—21 years of age. My brother Albert was always talking about you—how wonderful you were and how glad he would be to receive a letter from a hero like you.

"He made the ring that is enclosed in a special envelope and he told me before he left it was for you. He made it while he was in the hospital from a piece of the German monster shell that wounded him in the battle of Mons.

"I hope you will accept it as a token of thankfulness for your photo of yourself which I am keeping in remembrance of you. Will you please drop me a line, as it will cheer me up knowing that I have some one in far-away America—that wonderful country—that thinks of me.

"With my fondest thoughts,
"Yours sincerely,
"ETHEL WEBSTER."

MISS BALDWIN'S NEXT.

RUTH ANN BALDWIN of the Universal directoral forces has begun work upon a new five-reel Western feature, which is being produced upon a more elaborate scale than any play she has yet handled. This is a dramatization of Wallace Cook's novel, "The Old West Per Contract," which appeared recently in the Argosy Magazine. Miss Baldwin is the author of the scenario.

Donna Drew, who aroused much comment recently by her pleasing work in "The Flame of Youth," will have the leading part, opposite Leo Pierson. Jean Hersholt will appear in the heavy role. Other important characters in the production will be played by Joseph Girard and George Pearce.

A number of large sets have been especially constructed for this feature, the most picturesque of which typify a pioneer mining settlement of the days of '49. Miss Baldwin and her company are now engaged in filming exteriors for the drama in the vicinity of San Diego.

SUNLIGHT OF TRUTH

Cartoon which appeared in the Chicago American as a protest against Movie Censorships as carried on in Chicago.

PRAISES LAEMMLE'S PLEA.

(From the Charleston Gazette, Charleston, W. Va.)

The suggestion that during the summer months "the movies should be kept moving" seems to be a wise one, for, in the last analysis they are the joy of the masses. The fear that the war might cause some to close their places of amusement, should be discouraged, for every sort of amusement that will tend to banish the thoughts of death and injury should be stimulated. We have only to remember that England has learned this fact, and the very inexpensive nature of this kind of amusement has caused the British government to classify picture shows as necessities rather than luxuries. Of course, conditions in England are different from those in this country, but relatively speaking the same conditions will soon exist here. We have no selfish motive in urging this, but one born of the belief that until actually forced to do so by more serious events than now experienced there should be no curtailment of any industry, and if movies cause one to even forget they have more than fulfilled their mission, and a state of mind purchased for a dime is happiness bought at the minimum expense.

Powers' Comic Cartoon (Split Reel)

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

"Boo-hoo, they won't let me join the army," Henry repined.

"It'll be the farmers' life for me," he decided.

But, the life of the farmer did not altogether agree with a hero who was disappointed when he did not get real eats or a real drink of cider, as he had been told was served on a farm. He chased a cow, some fifty miles or so, forgot what he didn't ever know about milking, met a widow and a child, but, when it came to "raising" things, the only thing that he did raise was—what Sherman called war.

On the streets of Tlemcen, in the country, where great wastes have been allowed to run wild, the Negrier Falls and nature's wonders in Algeria, the garb of the desert and its trimmings, the caravan, the walls of Mansoura, erected by Abou Yakoub and still showing marvellous preservation, the Mansoura Ruins, Mausoura Tower, the cemetery, ancient olive groves and the high roads, together with the habitation of Troglodytes, are among the most interesting of the effective views of Powers' Educational "Algeria, Old and New." Close ups of Negrier Falls and of the ancient olive groves, showing the trees, carefully trimmed, all the outer ones trained to form a cup, thus admitting light and air to the fruit and facilitating the gathering of the crop, are included in the offering.

HARRY CAREY'S MOTHER VISITS HIS RANCH.

GREAT preparations are taking place at "Careyville," as Harry Carey, Universal's Western actor, whose picture "The Soul Herder," is just released, calls his ranch at Newhall, California. Paperhangers and painters have possession of the house, while gardeners are hard at work outside. And all this because the player is expecting his mother, widow of the late Judge Henry D. Carey of New York, to visit him for the first time.

"It is two years since I have seen her," he said to his director, Jack Ford, "but I remember that she simply can't enjoy herself if things are out of order. I don't know how she will like the country, anyway, after New York, but I have to live out here because I have so many horses and dogs.

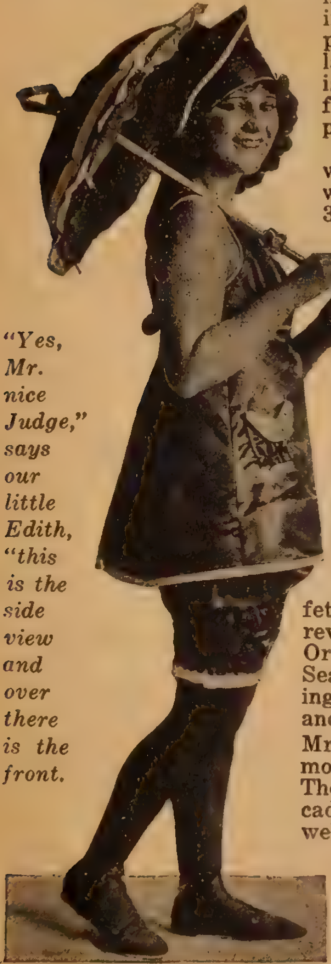
The bathers' lineup before the judges in Seal Beach Bathing Surf Contest. Edith Roberts, the winner, is third on next page from the left of the same page are June Bush, Nell Christie

Edith Roberts and the L-Ko Be

A FEW weeks ago Priscilla Dean won a bathing-suit prize at Venice before a large and admiring gallery. The prize was given for the most unusual and beautiful bathing-suit. Now it is little Edith Roberts, who is just starting her career as a separate and individual star in five-reel pictures, who has won the latest bathing-suit prize. It is the second within a month for the Universal, which is a pretty high average.



"Yes, Mr. nice Judge," says our little Edith, "this is the side view and over there is the front.

The contest in question was held at Seal Beach, and was widely advertised. Over 30,000 people watched with admiring interest while the perturbed judges endeavored to select the most beautiful ensemble among sixty Venuses who entered in the contest. Most of them were photoplay stars from the various moving picture studios which surround Seal Beach. The final up-shot of the matter was that the judges were forced to give three first prizes and six second prizes.

As the procession of feminine beauty in gaudy and fetching costumes passed in review before Mayor John C. Ord over the two miles of Sealway from Aniheim Landing to Seal Beach, the Mayor and Mrs. Bert St. John, and Mr. D. W. Callahan, evinced more and more perturbation. The job of Paris to this cavalcade was no sinecure, and well they know it. The jury retired for consultation and mutual support after the parade, and sent out as a verdict the following names as prize winners: First prize—Edith Roberts of the Universal, Eva Novak of the L-Ko, and Mildred Lee, also a photoplayer. Second prizes—Margaret Gibson, Hazel D'Arche, of the Bristol Cafe, Babe Henderson of the L-Ko Kompany, Dorothy Foster, and Mary Mack. Third prizes—Margaret Huxley, Peggy Owens, Gladys Varden and Nell Christy, both of the L-Ko, and to seven other local aspirants. Then they disappeared in the crowd, their duty nobly done, to escape from the recrimination of the forty or so beauties who received no prize.

Miss Roberts' costume for the occasion was an attractive and distinctively individual one of red satin trimmed with white, a very becoming hat also of red and white, and a saucy parasol which harmonized in every way with the rest of the costume. Miss Roberts' progress along the line of parade was signalized by the unrestrained plaudits of the multitude, and it would not have been possible for any judge to overlook the popular victory which she scored. Little Edith was kept busy for the entire two miles bowing acknowledgements to the admiring throng, as she passed in her own little motor car driven by her mother.

On page 35 will be found a number of L-Ko beauties who participated, posed in the manner of the well-known seals who gave their name to Seal Beach. They are Gladys Varden, who won third prize, June Rush, Caroline Wright, Eva Novak, winner of a second prize, Nell Christy and Babe Henderson. In the strip across the top of these two pages are two other L-Ko players who entered the contest. The photograph, taken by Werner, with forty or more of the entrants, is one of the most unusual ever made, and gives a comprehensive view of bathing fashion as it is practised on the Pacific Coast. Very few of these suits were in any way damaged by salt water on the day of the contest. This is the first contest of this kind that Edith Roberts ever entered, and her success was so pronounced that it fairly took her breath away. It was a delightful way to announce a new Universal star.

Betty Schade who did not enter.

Betty Schade, whose photograph appears on this page, did not enter the contest. The photograph we show of her was taken under far different circumstances. Betty, you know, is now a married lady, and Mr. Betty Schade does not approve of his wife's entering competitive contests of this kind. Betty's suit was made to swim in, and not for parade. Miss Schade's picture is included here because she is the cover adornment for this week's Moving Picture Weekly, and also appears as the featured player in an important three-reel Gold Seal release entitled, "A Wife's Suspicion." This feature was written by Willard Mack, the well-known Broadway actor, author and playwright, and furnishes a delightful opportunity for the play of emotion for which Miss Schade is noted. In it she plays the role of a trusting young wife who discovers to her intense alarm that she has married what she takes to be a leader of a band of crooks. Rather than live with such a man, although she loves him deeply, she returns to the family in which she was formerly employed as a governess, and it is in this house that the final denouement of "A Wife's Suspicion" takes place. Here she discovers that her husband is not a crook at all, but a skillful detective whose success required that he keep his profession secret even from his wife.

Priscilla Dean, who won the prize at the Venice contest, is shown also in her regular bathing costume. No photoplay artist or beach beauty would ever think of entering the water in the elegant contraption in which she won the bathing-suit contest, but this one, made of red and white striped satin is corking for every day wear.

"I'll be right back, dear."

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

HELLO, there, old scout, what's in the wind now?"

The speaker was known in the social world as Jack Bradford, a broker, although he apparently had very little to do, and was able to devote the greater portion of his time to his wife and his little country place; in the underworld he was known as a crook, and hard as nails, a leader of crooks, and one who went after big game only. At the moment he was standing at the back door of his bungalow showing his young bride of three months the progress that the garden was making. Mrs. Bradford seemed surprised and astonished that two such disreputable-looking men should know her husband. Without introducing them, Jack pushed her into the house, and said that he would be in in a moment.

"Well, Jack," said one of the men, "are you on for a big haul? Tom and Lila Clancy are back from England, and the police kept such a close eye on them over there that they didn't have a chance to turn a finger. They are dead broke, and want to turn something quick."

"All right," said Jack. "Come to my house to-morrow night at eight o'clock. Here is the key. I'll come in later. Just make yourselves at home."

Around the front corner Hugh Leghorn, an old-style, but perfectly honest, detective, had watched the two crooks in their meeting with Bradford. Without much ado he hot-footed it back to headquarters and reported to Von Berhoff that there was a big game afoot, and that Jack Bradford was the leader of the gang. He didn't notice the expression of amusement in Von Berhoff's face as he replied:

"All right. Keep an eye on him."

He did, however, keep the gang in tow, until he tracked them a week later to Von Berhoff's own house. He had seen, too, that Jack Bradford had had a misunderstanding with his wife, owing to the fact that she had surprised a meeting in her house. Her husband being unable to give an explanation, she left him and returned to the Von Berhoffs, for whom she had formerly worked as governess.

On the night in question the Von Berhoffs were having a reception, and Von Berhoff was not at all surprised to find Bradford, Tom and Lila Clancy and several of the other gentry whose faces were somewhat strange to society among the guests. Right away Lila got sick, and when Mrs. Von Berhoff took her up to her room, the clever crook asked her if she would keep a necklace which she was afraid of losing, in the wall safe. In this way Lila got the combination of the safe. But before her husband could climb through the window, Jack's wife interrupted him, and Mrs. Von Berhoff held him up with a revolver.

After the fight was all over, and Jack himself had held up Clancy and the other thugs, flat-footed Hugh, the slow but honest detective, came triumphantly into the room, and with his revolver turned on Jack, shouted:

"At last I have you in my power. Throw up your hands."

Von Berhoff burst out laughing.

"Why, Hugh, what do you mean? This is one of our cleverest Secret Service operators. He has trapped this whole gang. Why hold him up?

Poor old Hugh was the most crestfallen of men, and Mary, in her tumultuous relief in finding that her husband was a detective instead of the crook she supposed him to be, sank weakly into his arms.

Mary's suspicions seemed justified.

"The Double Floor," Eighth Gray Ghost Episode

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

CURRENT chapter of "The Gray Ghost" serial, produced by Stuart Paton and adapted by him from the Arthur Somers Roche novel in the Saturday Evening Post.

CAST.

Hildreth	Emory Johnson
Morn Light	Priscilla Dean
The Gray Ghost	Harry Carter
Marco, Hildreth's Secretary	Eddie Polo
Morn Light's Maid	Gypsy Hart
Williams	Francis McDonald
The Gray Ghost's Valet	Frank Tokanaga

WHEN the smoke had cleared away, Marco and the two detectives who had so guilelessly invaded Morn Light's apartment, were covered with ten guns.

"I surrender," said one of the detectives. "Who are you?"

"Line up against the wall there."

The detectives were speedily relieved of their shooting irons, and placidly sat down to await developments. The crooks, however, took Marco immediately and put him on the back seat of a car, and with a crook on either side, put on all steam for the House of Mystery.

Williams, in the apartment, forces one of the detectives to talk to Jerry Tryon over the phone, telling Jerry to come at once, as they have landed The Gray Ghost.

Meanwhile, at the House of Mystery, a man fights with the keeper, and the latter is thrown down a trap. Then the man breaks in the door of the room where Morn Light is held. Morn Light and the two men are struggling when Hildreth, hearing the girl's screams and the confusion, bursts in the door of the room which adjoins that of Morn Light, with a fire-iron and starts fighting with the man. Olmstead, being bound, succeeds in freeing himself, after the floor just misses killing him, and adds his force with that of Hildreth against the man. But thinking he sees the ghost of The Gray Ghost, Olmstead collapses. Just after overcoming the man, Hildreth answers the phone, receiving the message that "everything is fixed for Hildreth." As Hildreth and Morn Light start to leave the Mysterious House, two bloodhounds dash toward them.

A new maid has come to Arabin's house, who is in league with The Gray Ghost. The butler is also a tool of the crooks, and although Arabin is suspicious of both of them, he has no proof of their guilt.

Jerry Tryon and his men arrive at the House of Mystery and, finding the doors locked, break in. In the room, Williams and the others, hearing the noise at the door, switch out the lights, and when Jerry enters the room, he finds only the three detectives whom he begins to upbraid. They ransack the apartment, but find nothing. A detective is left to watch the place, and Jerry and the others leave.

While Hildreth's secretary, Marco, is being taken over a bridge by the crooks in the touring car, he overhears a bit of conversation which is important.

"The boss should be at Arabin's in about half an hour," said one of the crooks.

"Sure, twenty minutes I give him, and he'll be on time, too."

Watching his opportunity, he called the crooks' attention to something at the side of the road, and while they were thus busy, he jumped out of the car into the water thirty feet below. In spite of their revolver shots he reaches the bank, catches a horse grazing in the field, and rides furiously away, pursued by the baffled crooks. On his panting charger, Marco rides into the city to warn Jerry that The Gray Ghost is at Arabin's.

In the meantime the boss makes his call upon the jeweler, sending his card in by the butler and the treacherous maid. Arabin declines to see him, but The Gray Ghost walks in, and in the most affable manner greets the jeweler.

"Mr. Arabin, I am The Gray Ghost. In looting your store the other day there were one or two little things that we missed. One of them was the pearl necklace. I believe it is worth about two million dollars, is it not? I refer to the one you made for Mr. Carlow of London. If it is all the same to you, I will trouble you for that now."

Arabin, although his suspicions had been vague, had prepared against eventualities. Backing over to a secretary, he opened the drawer, and pulling out a revolver, fired pointblank at The Gray Ghost.

TWO INTERESTING SCENES FROM THE ANIMATED WEEKLY

IN Animated Weekly No. 82 there are a number of scenes of more than usual interest. Uncle Sam loosened up on censorship long enough to permit the Animated Weekly cameraman to take a few scenes in the training camp which he has established not far from New York City. The scene at the top of this page represents one of the supply houses to be used for the army plant, where forty thousand men at a time will be prepared for service in France. It is situated at Yaphank, L. I., less than forty miles from New York City. It requires an army of seven thousand men to prepare this location for active use, and the scenes from the Animated show work on the barracks, giant tractors preparing roads and leveling the parade ground, top-surfacing the roads, and the enjoyment that the laboring force take in a made-to-order shower bath after their day's work is done.

The other scene represented here shows Secretary McAdoo giving Serbian Minister Michailovich the last check of the three million dollar loan which Uncle Sam promised the stout-hearted little fighting nation which has lost all but a small corner of its beloved Serbia. From left to right the men in the picture are M. Michailovich, Secretary McAdoo, Assistant Secretary Crosby, and United States Counselor Frank Polk. Next week's Animated will also contain a number of very unusual scenes, notably one of Raemaekers a Dutch artist upon whose head the Kaiser has put a price.

ANOTHER FOR ALICE HOWELL.

DIRECTOR-GENERAL J. G. BLYSTONE—who has the ability to supervise the work of the other directors of the L-Ko in addition to directing a company of his own—has started another picture featuring Alice Howell under the Century Comedy Banner. This story has to do with a blacksmith who has Alice forever in his clutches. There is a thrill promised in this picture that will far surpass anything yet accomplished by Director Blystone. The situations leading up to this thrill are very humorous and original, and are bound to please the laugh-seeking public. The picture will be two reels, and has not been named. It will be released by the Longacre Distributing Company.

L-KO NOTES.

"A RURAL CÆSAR" is the working title of a picture now being constructed by Director Phil Dunham. This comedian's sudden desire to direct came to the notice of the L-Ko production office, and an opportunity was given him. He has as his principal comedian, Bill Bevins, and as his leading lady, Lucille Hutton.

VIN MOORE has purchased a new car and can be seen any evening after six, riding through the residential districts of Los Angeles in search of ideas that will enhance the laugh value of Merta Sterling, his fat and jovial lady comedienne, whom he is at present featuring in a two-reel comedy, the working title of which is, "Railroad Ties That Bind."

WALT STEVENS is a new addition to the L-Ko staff of featured comedians. He is being directed by Noel Smith, who really deserves a lot of the credit for Mr. Stevens' success, having practically discovered Walt for pictures. The working title of Walt's present picture is "A Western Romance."

Dja ever see Bill Franey teach school? Some teacher, believe me. He makes two mistakes. He makes love to the town bully's best girl, and the reason for his disappearance "Behind the Map," the play is titled, has to do with a little black bottle Bill makes too frequent use of. When the map falls down Bill is sure in bad. This is a scream, and the laughs come every foot.

Now Priscilla Dean Breaks Her Arm

"No, no, Mr. Paton. She can't work with that arm," says Mr. McRae. "Let her take a little rest." Priscilla looks the rest.

JUST after the Universal Publicity Department had finished writing a story about the tremendous struggle in which Priscilla Dean had taken part with Emory Johnson, lavishing all of the sympathy possible upon it (see last week's Weekly for details), comes a wire stating that she had broken her arm in two places, and will be unable to appear before the camera for nearly a month.

It is unusual for a director of motion pictures to support his own leading players, but this is what Stuart Paton had to do the other day, after a scene for the Universal serial, "The Gray Ghost," which he is producing from the Saturday Evening Post success by Arthur Somers Roche. The director had staged a scrap between Priscilla Dean, the young beauty who plays Morn Light, the heroine, and Emory Johnson, who plays Wade Hildreth, the hero. Heroes and heroines do not usually indulge in fights in photoplays, but this serial is extraordinary from every point of view.

The heroine is ejected from his room by the hero, and when Johnson went through a rehearsal of the scene he was surprised to find how easily Miss Dean shook herself free.

"Here," said Paton, "there will have to be more punch in that. Try it again."

This time the muscular leading man put forth all his strength, but he found it impossible to move the leading lady, who clung to the door frame like a leech.

"Why, your'e as strong as a wrestler!" exclaimed Johnson. "I'll have to treat you like a man."

There was a real fight which lasted several minutes before the director called "Cut!"

"Best battle between a man and a woman I ever filmed," he said; "that was fine. Move over to the next set."

After fifteen minutes to regain their breath, Paton started rehearsing a scene in which Miss Dean and Emory Johnson, imprisoned in a de-deserted and mysterious house, seek an avenue of escape. As they search about, suddenly they drop through a trap-door into a small dungeon beneath, built entirely of steel. Paton didn't think it necessary to rehearse the fall, as it was getting late. The height was only eight feet, and no accident was anticipated. The stunt had been carefully planned and mathmatically measured in such a way that the players were expected to alight safely on their feet, but as the trap was sprung they lost their balance, and Miss Dean struck heavily on her left side with her arm doubled up under her body. Johnson had no bones broken, but was badly bruised in the fall.

When the two players were rushed to the Universal emergency hospital, however, it was discovered that Miss Dean's arm was fractured in two places between the wrist and the elbow. The fracture was dressed by the hospital surgeon, and Miss Dean was taken to her home in Mr. Paton's car. But it will be fully a month before she can appear before the camera. Production work, however, will not be held up, as Paton is quite a ways ahead now, and he can work on sets which do not require Miss Dean's presence, until she is able to appear. The story is being slightly re-written, too, to enable her to appear in a few later scenes with a bandaged arm.

order, and is so quiet yet forceful that she cannot fail to make an unqualified success of her recently chosen profession. As her stage name was derived from that of a family ancestor, there is a possibility that she may be a relative of the celebrated Drew family in the theatrical profession. At any rate, Miss Donna has proven herself a remarkably able screen actress, and her talent is bound to expand.

As Neal looks off stage.

The True Story

IN the very heart of picturesque old Staten Island on a great big rambling farm, thirty odd years ago, there came into the world a wriggling pink and white bundle which proud and prophetic parents immediately daubed Neal Hart III.

There wasn't anything about this particular bundle that differentiated it from its fellows that, by the thousands and the tens of thousands, wriggled themselves into greater New York and Monroe, La., day after day and second after second until—Buffalo Bill's show came to town and camped out on Staten Island.

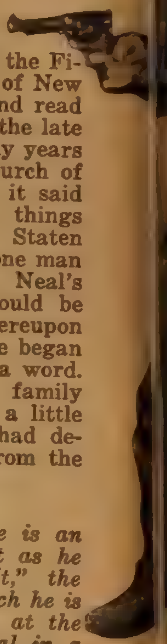
Then the difference in the no longer wriggling bundle became apparent.

Grandfather Patrick took it to see Buffalo Bill lasso buffaloes and break bronchoes—or whatever Wild West shows are press-agented to do. And immediately there sprang, full grown, into the soul of Neal Hart III., an ambition—to become one of the world's best saddle sitters. And he is.

It was some show—that Buffalo Bill affair. The population of Staten Island and the horse riding, horse training, horse loving Hart family were there, en masse. But, Neal III., sat apart, silent, grave, preoccupied. Through his mind there was trickling a plan. The next day it fermented. Great signs, printed in a child's unmistakeable chirography, decorated barns, doors and fences. On the big rambling old Hart house, its falling sides a stone's throw now from the famous chicken dinners of Mrs. Dobler, and a half stone's throw from the offices where, for fifteen years, Neal's father served Richmond county as clerk, there went up a huge sign. It shouted that any kid who brought a goat into Neal Hart's back yard the next afternoon would be admitted free to the best Wild West show on earth and that any kid who didn't kick in with a goat would have to flash a copper for admission. The show was a howling success. On a gray goat sat Neal Hart and lassoed every kid that the kids who got in scot free brought.

"Squaring It," Neal Hart's big, clean, powerful three-reel Western drama (which Universal officials pronounce one of the very best they have viewed in weeks), is the latest bulletin from the star who was brought up in the saddle. But that is leaping fences ahead of our narrative in very much the same fashion as did those famous jumpers of the horse-loving Hart family a few years ago, before picturesque old Staten Island was cut up into lots for artistic homes of prosperous scenario writers and Broadway playwrights, and ended the picturesque fox hunts.

The ivy covered old Staten Island Institute (the late William Winter brought from Westminister Abbey the original sprig of that ivy) set Neal Hart as a boy straight in the rudiments grammer, the alpha and omega of the gy nasium, and developed a bent as a natu leader. There was no study that, in an credibly short time, he did not master th oughly and well. There was no sport in wh he did not excel.



Here, until he was fifteen years old he remained, in fact until his father, Cornelius A. Hart, now auditor of the Finance Department of the City of New York, came home one night and read a certain letter. It was from the late Rev. Dr. R. W. Wood, for many years pastor of the Presbyterian church of Stapleton, Staten Island, and it said that the Spaniards might do things and that every family on Staten Island ought to send at least one man down there to keep them quiet. Neal's father announced that he would be the man from that family, whereupon Neal's handsome sister Maudie began to cry. Neal III. didn't say a word. But the next morning the family found on the breakfast table a little note from him. It said he had decided to be the "one" man from the Hart family.

IN the center of this page is an illustration of Neal Hart as he appears in "Squaring It," the three-reel Bison drama in which he is at his best. The illustration at the right of the page shows Neal in a happy mood in "Double Suspicion," a Bison two-reeler relea time ago. The U. S. Cruiser Panthea steamed him out to sea and he was gone a year, seeing no actual fighting, but proving himself, in every way, a worthy representative of the Harts. Discharged, he worked as a cowboy on a horse ranch in the Sioux Reservation in South Dakota, and drove a freighting outfit between Fort Pierre and the Black Hills. Wyoming called him her own star cowboy until 1904 when he entered Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Penn., and became star halfback and a few other things on the 'Varsity football team.

Meanwhile, back home, the Harts were doing things in their own big way. Season after season they were earning trophies in leading their world famous horses to victory in Madison Square Garden and on Staten Island. Six horses, owned by the Harts, notably, Sir Roderick, Tycoon, Amherst, Fox Catcher, Richmond and Vulcan, in four successive Madison Square shows, took highest honors. Over on Staten Island at this very minute, in one of the big show places of the island, there are probably collected more silver cups, won for real horse flesh achievements, than in any one home in America. This is the house where Charles Hart, an uncle of Neal Hart, now lives and where Neal's sisters were born before their father sold it to his brother.

To this place Neal Hart returned for the hunts, County fairs and Madison Square shows, winning new laurels each season. Graduating with honors from Bucknell, he became foreman of the Four Bar Ranch, Willow, Wyoming, remaining until 1908 and serving part of that time as a geologist of the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C. In 1908 he joined the 101 Wild West show as a bucking horse rider and remained three seasons. After that he returned to Wyoming and became successively City Marshall of Manville, Deputy Sheriff and Brand Inspector, secretary and range manager of a big cat-

"Mr. Halley, you may as well get busy and mop up this floor," says Mrs. Halley to her hesitating spouse.

"All right, dearie," husband Halley meekly makes response.

Of the Halley family, Mrs. Halley comprises about nine-tenths. Her henpecked husband comprises the other tenth. In Husky Hector, pampered son of the Justice of the Peace, Mrs. Halley sees her ideal man. She slips off to keep a clandestine appointment with him. Hubby discovers it and, in pleading with his wifie not to leave him, is thrown into the lake. His wife thinks he has been drowned and sorrows for him, while Hubby, crawling out of the lake, meets a friend who has wanted him to go on a hunting trip. He had no chance to get away before. So Hubby grabs this one.

Mrs. Halley, believing herself a widow, has no scruples about accepting the attentions of several suitors. One, a rival of Hector's, is the Mayor of the town. Bad blood develops between the rivals with the Justice taking the part of his son, Hector. Hubby's insurance money is paid to the lonesome widow and Hector at once offers his hand and heart, which Mrs. Halley accepts.

In the mountains, whither they have gone, Hubby and his friend find themselves deserted by their burro, after losing all their money. Perforce, they must walk back to town and they start. Much changed in both mind and body, Hubby arrives at home.

Like Enoch Arden of old, he looks in the window. There is his wife—his widow, as she thinks, dressed in bridal finery, and there at her feet kneels Hector, his hated rival. Shall he leave them alone? Shall he be a modern Enoch Arden? Ah, no! Revenge! Revenge! The footsteps of the parson approaching interrupt Mr. Halley's vengeful thoughts and quicken his resolve. Slipping in the back way he enters the sitting-room, and slips in back of the life-sized portrait of himself, which is the principal adornment of the fond widow's parlor. Taking out his jacknife, he deftly cuts out the face of the portrait and inserts his own as the bridal party lines up in front of the portrait. Sympathetically the widow's eyes turn to the portrait of her late husband. Instead of meeting the usual meek and submissive look of Halley, her eyes find the same features, but twisted into an expression of fiendish hatred. Of course, the wedding busts up in a hurry, and poor Mrs. Halley makes the best of her husband's return. But hubby is strangely changed in temperament. Instead of being one-tenth of the family combination he is nine-tenths, and orders Mrs. Holley back into the kitchen.

of

tle ranch. Later he inspected horses for one of the foreign governments.

But—not on these statistical stages in the career of Neal Hart, motion picture star, does his family dwell when, at the close of a hot day, you are seated on the porch of the big yellow house of Uncle Charlie, one of the most famous horsemen in the country. And if you meet a Staten Islander on the street and ask for Neal Hart, you'll get something like this: "Nealy? Well, I just guess yes—he's the salt of the earth, Nealy Hart is—a regular prince, that boy!"

Only his family doesn't put it just like that. Rather, very reluctantly, its members relate those big little things which make you know instantly that Neal Hart is all there.

Much has been written about the college bred cowboy of pictures and undoubtedly, before many moons, much more will find its way into public print, for Neal Hart possesses every characteristic of the screen star welcomed by men, women and children in every part of the universe —a man who went into pictures for pure love of horses and the open and whose work, in every detail, reflects this love. But, however much there may be written or said, nothing can be more sincere or substantial than the regard in which he and his family are held by their associates. To quote J. Worrel, Editor of the Staten Islander, "He is in every way the distinguished son of a distinguished family."

Tales of his popularity—of his prowess as an athlete may be gleaned on all sides. One story is told of his saving six men at sea, in a storm. While working for his uncle, James A. Hart, West Pointer, and head of a construction company with offices at 256 Broadway, in building a road, between Thurman and Warrensburg, N. Y., there comes to light the story of a gang who would not move and who moreover never could be made to move—unless their leader so willed. But—he did, after a few rounds with Neal.

Baby Neal.

As a cowboy in Wyoming.

Almost impossible it is to write of the Harts and not of horses, so inalienably is their history connected with famous hunters, jumpers, racers, meets, and events in which Neal Hart so brilliantly scored. Their entire conversation is of the days when men wore red coats and high hats and allowed their hearts to trip to the bay of the hounds. They are justly proud, though very modest in their praises of the horsemanship of Neal Hart. They share his ambition, to learn the picture-acting business from its every angle. "I want to do this," he writes, "to learn every bit of its every stage. I love the happy Universal family, gathered in Universal City—the busy days just cramed-jammed with hard work."

"I was rather afraid he wouldn't earn his salary," said Father Neal as he mentally approved son Neal's "Swede Hearts," as presented at a local house recently. "But," he reflected, "Nealy sure does, and—doesn't he register enjoyment in the doing?"

And one was again confronted by the question: "What other vocation gives back as much as the movies?"

Neal Hart first attracted attention after joining the Universal through his work in a photoplay of such a character as almost to establish a new kind of moving picture. This photoplay was entitled "Love's Lariat," and

IN "THE MIDNIGHT MAN"

Bob coming into the dark room sees the Eel at work on his burglar-proof safe.

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.)

"THAT'S all, thank you, Warren. Good-night, I'm working a while longer," said Bob.

"Good-night, sir," answered the foreman.

Bob Moore worked night after night in the laboratory of his father's factory trying to invent a safe which could not be opened. And for this reason he objects to having his father consolidate with John Hardin, who also makes safes. Bob says any one can open Hardin's safe; Hardin is furious. He tells Bob if he can open the safe in his library, he can have anything he has. Hardin urges his daughter, Irene, not to have anything further to do with young Moore, and Irene, an obedient child, continues to call for Bob at the factory, and Bob continues to call at the Hardin home, where he stays until he is put out.

One night when Hardin returns home he finds "The Eel," or John Rehan, who has the most sensitive fingers that ever twirled a safe knob, ransacking the safe which Bob has been telling himself cannot be opened. Bob catches "The Eel," but promises to let him go if he will tell him how he opened the safe. "The Eel," however, makes his getaway when Bob stoops to look in the safe.

Bob is determined to find the man again for he realizes that he knows more about safes than he or his father, and with the help of a detective and his stool-pigeon, he finds "The Eel" at Molly Murta's apartment. "The Eel" has promised Molly to go straight. She loves him and is only too glad when Bob offers "The Eel" a job in the factory. For two weeks the two men work on the safes and all of "The Eel's" pals are told by Molly that "The Eel" is out of town.

Meanwhile, Hardin buys a wonderful necklace for Irene's birthday gift. The purchase is witnessed by a henchman of "The Eel." Irene wears the necklace to the factory, where both Bob and his helper see it. "The Eel" is tempted, but refrains. However, later, when the henchman tells him of the jewelry, "The Eel" determines to get the necklace. He is just beginning to open the safe, when Bob climbs through the window. He had told Irene's father he can open his safe. The "Eel" watches Bob awkwardly tamper with the safe. Finally it is opened and, hanging the necklace on the knob, the safe closed, Bob, gloating on his joke, disappears through the window. "The Eel" takes the necklace away with him. When Bob phones Irene to look on the knob of

The cafe is a wreck as the police and the thieves battle. But Bob is able to drag the Eel to safety.

"Just one moment, there, Mr. Hardin," cried Bob. "I've solved the whole mystery."

the safe for proof that he opened it, he soon receives word that the necklace his disappeared. He rushes to the Hardin home, where Irene's father tells him to hasten to return the necklace, as he is going to summon the police. Bob, knowing that there is only one other man who could have opened the safe, immediately starts for the cafe where "The Eel" and his bunch hang out. "The Eel" hurries to Molly to have her hide the necklace.

Bob has just arrived at the cafe, where he finds "The Eel," and has demanded the necklace, when the police raid the place and, after a grand fight and scramble, Bob pulls "The Eel" out with him and they escape to Molly's flat. When the police knock at the door, Bob has already obtained the necklace and tells the officers that he came to see Mr. Rehan about some work. The police leave after apologizing and "The Eel" consents to go back to work.

Moore by this time has reached the Hardin home, where John Hardin rages and two detectives arrive and look about for clues. Bob enters through the window and hands the necklace to Irene. Hardin is astonished and stammeringly tells the detectives that it was all just a little joke. They leave in disgust and Bob tells Hardin, that having opened the safe, he will now take the best he, Hardin, has. He puts his arms about Irene; Hardin is speechless; Moore laughs uproarously.

"Now go ahead with your consolidation," says Bob complacently to the two fathers.

SAFE - CRACKING WINS THE GIRL.

SINCE the days of knighthood young men in love with fair maidens have been asked to perform doughty deeds in order to win the hands of the damsels. The young man in the Butterfly Picture, "The Midnight Man," is confronted with one of the strangest tasks which any lover was ever asked to perform, in order to call himself an accepted suitor. This is nothing less that to prove himself a first-class cracksman! He is the inventor of a burglar-proof safe, and the girl is the daughter of a rival manufacturer. When the young fellow jeers at father's lock, the old man says that if he can open it he can have anything that he—the old man—owns. The boy's thoughts instantly fly to the daughter, whom he devotedly loves, and he starts practising safe-cracking right away. How he wins the girl and nearly loses her again is delightfully told in the Butterfly Picture, "The Midnight Man." Jack Mulhall is the modern knight, and Ann Kroman is the girl.

The Eel, after two weeks of honest work, is sorely tempted by the sight of a $10,000 pearl necklace belonging to Bob's fiancee.

"I am already gone," says Doehound, rushing from the house.

Mrs. Doehound manages and runs her hotel in her own peculiar way with Mr. Doehound as a flirtatious helper. He is exceedingly henpecked.

Here is the Fashion Parade.

On the 65th floor a scientist is working and when an explosion occurs he telephones the proprietress. Mistaking his call for ice-water, she sends a belligerent bell-hop up to Room 5,000 with orders "to walk." Meanwhile, hubby is flirting with a fair female. She is put out by Mrs. Doehound, only to return with the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Potash. Potash sells costly gowns to fair women and Mrs. Potash is his mother. Potash explains to Doehound that he wishes to stage a Fashion Show in his hotel and asks Doehound to summon for it, as models, the handsomest females in town. Doehound, in his element, takes up the burden of his tasks. The day of the show dawns auspiciously. A buyer and his watchful wife are present in the audience gathered in the hotel for the show, also the fierce-fire-eating brother of the pretty young woman who was put out of the place by Mrs. Doehound and who, with exquisite fidelity to detail, has reported the occurrence to her brother, who has previously killed five or six men for just such omissions. Doehound grows jealous of the buyer, who has the first peek at the models, and attempts to impersonate him. The hell-hop and the hotel proprietress see through the disguise and things begin to happen when the buyer's wife is tipped off.

"I AM going to move out of this apartment at once. I cannot stand 'his' noise," says Jane Brown to her landlord.

"Take this as my notice. I'm quitting. I cannot stand 'her' noise," Martin Stone tells the same landlord.

Jane and Martin are new tenants in the same apartment house. She occupies the first floor, and he lives on the floor above. Jane is a sculptress, and Martin is a musician.

One day they meet for the first time in the hallway and he gallantly gathers up several oranges that she has dropped. He is favorably impressed with her appearance, while she seems equally pleased with her new acquaintance. But they are both temperamental and become antagonized through their respective arts.

Martin shows annoyance at the hammering that emanates from the apartment below, where Jane is instructing a class of six girls in the gentle art of punching brass, and Jane is by no means overjoyed in being compelled to listen to the vigorous piano playing that emanates from the apartment directly over hers, especially when she seeks repose at night.

"I—I—think it's going to rain."

A STORY of single discord and double tranquility, produced by Matt Moore and released as a Victor Two-Reel Comedy.

Landlord	Frank Lyon

Their habits differ radically. She retires early—he plays the piano into the small hours of the night, often accompanied by fellow artists who play the violin and other instruments.

One night, despite Jane's repeated rapping, Martin and his musical crowd combine to make the night hideous to her. She, therefore, grasps her chisel and hammers with all her might and main, to which the noisemakers upstairs respond with the nerve-racking strains of the Anvil chorus.

But Jane gets revenge the next morning by having her class do a little brass punching stunt that makes Martin jump out of bed as if exploded by a submarine. Martin retaliates by pounding the piano with such vigor that he jars the ceiling in Jane's apartment and causes bits of plaster to fall on her pupils.

Jane sends for the landlord and gives notice that she is moving. Martin, equally temperamental, also notifies the landlord that he will seek new quarters at the end of the month.

In the meantime, they approach a nervous state demanding medical attention. Their respective doctors advise them to sleep in the open air, and hence unknown to each other, they rig up beds on their verandas.

One night a rain and wind storm springs up and blows their bedclothing to the lawn below. They hurry downstairs after their blankets. Jane beats Martin to the street, grabs up all the bed-clothing in sight, and rushes back to the house.

As Martin stands shivering in his wet pajamas by the radiator in his apartment, he hears screams from the apartment below. A burglar has entered Jane's rooms.

Martin rushes down and struggles with the burglar. Jane telephones to the police. The burglar is overcome.

The police arrive to find the intruder tied to a chair, Jane in her night dress and Martin in his pajamas. When the police captain asks Jane her name she is too embarrassed to reply.

Martin saves the day by informing the officers that the burglar has entered the apartment of Mr. and Mrs. Stone.

They decide to stay—together in only one apartment—married.

"Yes, we'll take the apartment together."

CANADIAN NOTES.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Mr. G. A. Margetts, manager St. John Branch for Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., was in Halifax a short time ago and found business a little better than it has been for several years at this season. He succeeded in booking the Animated Special, "The Russian Revolution," in the Orpheus Theatre, Halifax, for August 1st and 2d. The Animated Weekly is also booked in the Orpheus Theatre regularly, commencing with the new issue early in August. It has also been booked at the Imperial Theatre, St. John.

The Opera House in Wolfville, Nova Scotia, now under the management of A. J. Mason, has inaugurated a business getter that is worthy of consideration by other exhibitors. Mr. Mason has had his theatre taken over by the young ladies club, members of whom act as ticket takers and ushers. The young ladies are paid salaries, and these salaries are used for patriotic purposes. The society of young ladies is known as "The Give Services Girls' Club." The scheme, as played by Mr. Mason, manager of this theatre, has a twofold benefit, namely, it helps out the patriotic funds and at the same time stirs up local enthusiasm among the home folks and certainly should make a splendid business puller.

TORONTO, Ont.— Manager Roland Roberts of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, has signed a twelve months contract with the Universal Film Co. for the Animated Weekly. Manager Roberts is of the opinion that this weekly is the most up-to-date film of its kind in America to-day, and he was converted to the enterprise of the Universal by the wonderful Pershing Film which he showed at the Regent which brought him such splendid results.

UNIVERSAL SCREEN MAGAZINE. No. 32.

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

Harvesting scallops, millions of which are taken each day from their beds along the Long Island shore, is one of the interesting topics in Universal Screen Magazine No. 32. Another is a new device for preventing bridge accidents. This method is exemplified when a bridge across the Chicago River opens to permit passage of a large ship, a giant boom safeguards the occupants of a rampant street-car and of automobiles, and prevents their dashing into the waters below. Woman's military activity in support of the soldier in the trenches, and the method of preparing pickles for the market, and their inspection by the Health Department, together with the series of "Heroes in Mud" by Willie Hopkins, complete an unusually interesting reel.

STAGE HAS NO LURE FOR DAINTY SCREEN COMEDIENNE

"Nothing shall lure me back to the stage—I'm too well satisfied with motion-picture work."

So asserted pretty Edith Roberts, who plays ingenue leads at Universal City with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in Nestor comedies.

The remark was occasioned by a telegram from her former vaudeville partner in the East, who, at the beginning of the next theatrical season, will be associated with the staging of one of New York's big musical revues.

"We have our own bungalow in Hollywood, mother and I," she added, "with a big lawn, plenty of flowers, and onions big enough to eat in our vegetable garden. I'm sure I could never find anybody I could enjoy working with more than Mr. Lyons and Mr. Moran, and Mr. Clements, my director, is so kind and patient with me, and everybody is so good to me that my work at Universal City is one continual frolic. Go back to New York and the stage? No, indeed!"

THE above cut represents an amusing scene in the Nestor Comedy "The Rushin' Dancers," in which Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts are featured. The scanty attire and back-to-nature postures of the dancers are merely a subterfuge on the part of the men———, to bring back their women from the worship of a dapper dancing teacher.

NATURE UP-SIDE DOWN.

MAN'S nature turned right-side out, and the truth revealed; that's the condition displayed in "The Show-Down," a Bluebird photoplay announced for early release, with Myrtle Gonzalez, playing the role of a society girl who found new purposes in life, and George Hernandez revealing the true inwardness of a gruff old millionaire who had always seemed to be happy only in the chase for dollars When a party of tourists were cast away upon an island in mid-Pacific and were forced to "root hog, or die," the true natures that were revealed worked some astonishing disclosures. Lynn F. Reynolds directed this charming Bluebird; photographed it in Palm Canyon, California, and on Santa Cruz Island, in the Pacific Ocean, translating to the screen the beauties of verdant nature in attractive vistas.

Carter is the "Five-Foot Ruler" and he rules a South American country as prime minister, having been given the post by his prospective father-in-law, the president. Carter's father owns mines in the little republic, and gets in bad with the natives. He comes for protection to the president, who refers him to the prime minister—his own disinherited son. There is all kinds of comedy punch thruout and the ending is a scream. Every one will like this hugely.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

NEVER before has the Red Cross taken so firm and so tremendous a hold upon the public as has been the case since the commencement of the war. Every man, woman and child seems willing and eager to help this great and good organization.

Why not link your theatre up with the Red Cross, using those hours that mean nothing to you at the present time? For instance, the title of the Butterfly feature, "THE MIDNIGHT MAN," suggests an idea. It's this:

Get together with your local Red Cross organization and suggest the holding of a special MIDNIGHT MATINEE performance of "THE MIDNIGHT MAN," the total proceeds of which will be turned over to the Red Cross.

Bluebird Ideas

FIVE people crossing the Pacific, find the ordinary channels of their smooth careers altered when a U-boat sends their steamer to the bottom. At the same time, bear in mind the fact that while this Bluebird production has the war as a background, there is nothing of blood and thunder in it. It's a story that every man, WOMAN and CHILD can see and ENJOY.

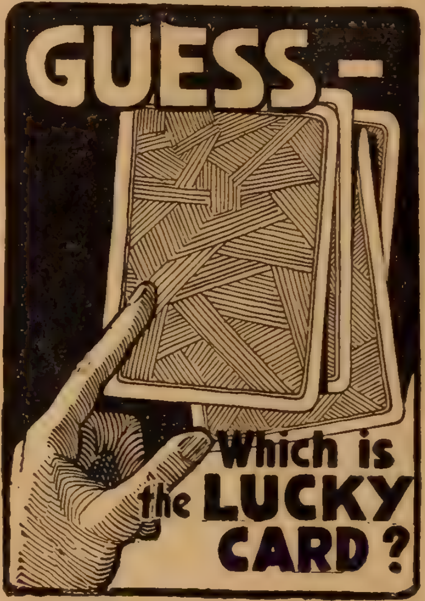
A decidedly novel stunt to attract the attention of the public consists in building a raft over the body of a Ford. In the center of the raft, erect a mast, to which attach a piece of torn canvas. The latter is to serve as a square sail.

Have a woman lying flat on the raft, and a man standing against the mast as though scanning the horizon for help. Scatter a water cask, tin biscuit can and a couple of life preservers about. On the surface of the sail, rudely letter this legend: "IF YOU WANT TO SEE WHAT CAUSED THIS, SEE "THE SHOW-DOWN" AT THE (name of theatre) ON (day and date).

If interest in U-boats is keen in your community, and you think it safe to do so without bringing unpleasant thoughts into the minds of the people likely to be affected by the war, work in the U-boat interest in whatever newspaper advertising and publicity you do. At the same time, bear in mind that exhibitors are finding that ballyhoos and press dope full of blood and tales of horror, drive the public away rather than attract it.

Now, while this may not bring you immediate financial returns, it WILL bring you considerable free advertising of the finest sort and, in addition, will win for your theatre the good will of the best people in town.

If there is an organization that handles safes in your community, get it to co-operate with you on the following float idea:



GUESS –
Which is the LUCKY CARD?

Since "THE SHOW-DOWN" is a patriotic subject, get the patriotic organizations such as the National Guard outfits, the regular army men, naval recruiting parties, Red Cross bodies, etc., to work with you. Naval men in particular should be glad to help you, since the Navy plays a highly important part in the development of the story.

Still another novel stunt that can be worked is to have two or three men wearing life preservers stroll through the streets bearing the legend: SEE "THE SHOW-DOWN" AT THE (name of theatre) ON (day and date). These men can also hand out circulars advertising this Bluebird production.

MR. EXHIBITOR—Your Bluebird Exchange will be glad to do everything in its power to help you make your theatre a success. If there is anything you want to know about circulars, heralds, form letters, newspaper advertising, mailing lists, stunts, etc., ask the exchange manager to put his publicity man on the job.

"THE MIDNIGHT MAN" is a burglar who is a marvel at opening safes. Have the safe organization loan you one of their trucks and safes. Naturally, the truck must be of the open-side variety. After loading the safe on the truck, borrow a dummy figure of a man and set it in a crouching figure as though it was attempting to open the receptacle. Around the sides of the truck fasten the following banner:

THE (name of safe here) IS ONE SAFE THAT
"THE MIDNIGHT MAN"
CANNOT OPEN. SEE HIM AT THE

ON (day and date here)

FOR THE "SHOW DOWN"

Here's a letter that will bring business. Have it multigraphed and mail to all names on your mailing list.

DEAR FRIEND—There were four men on an island. There was also a girl, the daughter of the leader of the little party. A U-boat that strayed into the Pacific Ocean—where it was least expected—had sunk the ship on which they were traveling.

One of the men was a famous writer of blood and thunder tales, the "I-feed-on-raw-meat-and-love-wild-nature" kind. Another was a man whose heart was supposed to be full of love and charity for all mankind. A third was the money king, who was popularly supposed to dine on at least three poor people at every meal. The fourth was a young life-weary chap to whom death was merely a glorious adventure.

Put four men on an island and leave them to shift for themselves, and a most amazing change in their natures is likely to occur. The wonderful Bluebird feature, "THE SHOW-DOWN," shows what happened in this instance. Lynn Reynolds, the man responsible for some of the most notable Bluebird productions, directed this story. It's SO good that I'll gladly refund the mony to every man, woman or child who doesn't say it afforded them the best entertainment they've had in many a day.

A fine program of shorter subjects and music in addition to this feature. Better come!

STORY OF NEAL HART

Harry Carey, another of the Universal's widely known Western stars, played the lead in it. It was released by the Bluebird Company. Neal Hart, who had been "running with the ruck" as it were, as a member of the Universal cowboy troupe, played the foreman of the ranch, and as such, the leader of a troupe of cowboys who came to an Eastern city with all of the ingenuous curiosity, caution, impetuosity and simple mindedness of the plainsmen. The comedy which was extracted from this picture, and to which Neal Hart contributed so largely put comedy Westerns on the map, and set a standard at which many companies have been aiming, but so far none has reached. "Love's Lariat" is still pre-eminent in its field, and is one of the most popular films for rebooking that the Bluebird ever issued.

But in addition to setting a standard, "Love's Lariat" did another thing. It brought Neal Hart into such prominence that in less than a year he has become a full-fledged star, and it will not be long before the billboards in Staten Island will be shrieking out "Neal Hart, eminent Western actor, in the five-reel photoplay 'The Bumblebee.'" This pointed title was devised by Harvey Gates and George Marshall, who wrote the story which Mr. Marshall is directing at the present time.

A leading woman new to the company was engaged especially for this picture—Miss Vivian Rich, who has been very prominent for the last few years in Western subjects, and of course he has the Universal cowboys with him. Every one at the Universal is rooting hard for Neal's success in this, his first big effort, and the folks back on Staten Island will not be the only ones who will be pleased if "The Bumblebee" makes a bigger reputation than "Love's Lariat."

Which is the LUCKY CARD?

MULHALL RESCUES BABIES.

An early scene in "The Midnight Man," the Butterfly Picture starring Jack Mulhall, shows the young star and his leading lady, Ann Kroman, at a swimming pool, where they do some high diving for the camera. Jack is a fine swimmer, and the other day, while making scenes for a forthcoming release, he saved two little girls from the angry breakers, at one of the Los Angeles beach resorts. The children were being used in a photoplay, and their mothers were on hand to take care of them, for neither was four years old. The mother, however, became intensely interested in the camera, and the two babies strayed away and were caught by the surf which was running high that day. Jack Mulhall was the only one who saw them in distress, and he plunged in and pulled them out before they had time to be much more than seriously frightened. He made nothing of his feat, when congratulated by the crowd, but the mothers thanked him with tears of gratitude.

How the Second Bluebird Prize Was Won

EAGLES WING

Star Palace Theatre, Patchogue, L. I.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS" DAY is an event that will be long remembered by the citizens of Patchogue, L. I. And since it won for him the second prize offered in connection with the last Bluebird Advertising Contest, Earle Holmes, manager of the Star-Palace Theatre, is not likely to forget it in a hurry.

As a matter of fact, there were two "Eagle's Wings" days, because after Manager Holmes had arranged for one day's presentation of this Bluebird Extraordinary, he discovered that it would easily require an extra day's showing to satisfy all the people who wanted to see it.

What won the second prize for Holmes was the manner in which he induced the local Red Cross organization to work with him. Knowing that the Red Cross officials were in great need of funds, the enterprising manager of the Star-Palace offered to give the organization a percentage of the profits, provided its members co-operated with him.

Eagerly taking advantage of this opportunity, the Red Cross officials arranged through Holmes with the publishers of the Patchogue "Argus," the local newspaper, to get out a special edition of the publication. It was the understanding that all the profits as the result of this venture were to go to the Red Cross. Holmes was to act as editor-in-chief and advertising manager.

The result was a tremendous advertisement for "The Eagle's Wings" and the Star-Palace. Not only was Holmes' theatre and his presentation of the Bluebird Extraordinary given front page stories, running a column deep, but the editorial columns also boosted the production and impressed upon the people of the community the fact that it was their duty to see the patriotic production.

Patchogue boys serving in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, and who were home on furloughs, gladly contributed their services and assisted Manager Holmes in imbuing his theatre with a military atmosphere.

Through the courtesy of the principal of the East Patchogue school, the pupils of that educational institution were let out for the day to give them the opportunity to see the production. Many of the children were out-of-towners, and to make sure of their attendance, Holmes brought them to the Star-Palace in automobile trucks.

Additional publicity was given the Patchogue exhibitor and his theatre in the issue of the Argus that came off the press a day or two after the presentation. Commenting upon the success which attended the event, the Argus story warmly praised Holmes for the manner in which he managed the special patriotic edition of the paper. The story concluded as follows:

"Earle L. Holmes of the Star-Palace publicity department had full charge of the special edition of the Argus and he certainly "made good," producing a twelve-page newspaper containing many advertisements, interesting local and general news stories of especial interest at just this time.

One-Reel Joker — Released Week of August 20.

"Mrs. Madam Manager"

Gale Henry beats her own fast record in this one-reel Joker, "Mrs. Madam Manager." She runs a theatre; bosses her hubby, who leads the orchestra, sells tickets and collects them at the door; is stage and bill poster and usher and scrub woman. What she does when hubby falls for a chorus girl makes good fun.

L-KO COMEDY

"Street Cars & Carbunkles"

Those L-KO comedians must get a lot of fun out of life, judging from the laughs they put over on the screen. If you want a roaring two-reel comedy, book "Street Cars and Carbunkles," featuring Eva Novak, Chas. Ryckman and Eddie Barry, directed by Dick Smith, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone. The rivalry between a horse car line and a jitney bus driver furnishes some of the funniest stuff you ever saw and some typical L-KO stunts add punches that are bully entertainment.

"We Are French"

Production by RUPERT JULIAN

No matter how cold-blooded or matter-of-fact your audience may be, they simply cannot witness this stirring play without emotion. It is wonderful in its gripping power—marvelous in its perfect action and great setting.

"We Are French" is a screen version of the novel by the same name, written by Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. It is a BLUEBIRD production and created a remarkable furore under the name of "The Bugler of Algiers."

Gentlemen—We played capacity business on the first day of "A Jewel In Pawn," showing to 2,900 people, and on the second day we had to stop selling tickets at 7:45. Business being so good, we rebooked it for a return engagement.

This pleased all people of different creeds and nationalities and we feel sure that if the Bluebirds continue to produce features of this quality, they will reign supreme in the film world of to-day.

Gentlemen—"A Jewel In Pawn," the Bluebird feature, with Ella Hall in the title role was presented in my theatre to a fair sized audience, and all were well pleased with the production.

It is a well constructed story, not overdrawn and played by a splendid cast. Photography and details are good as in all the Bluebirds I have played. "If it's a Bluebird it's got to be good," and "A Jewel In Pawn" ranks among the best of them.

Gentlemen—I wish to comment on the quality of the Bluebird production, "A Jewel In Pawn." I can say that this picture is very well up to the Bluebird standard of production in every way, and I consider Miss Hall's work together with that of Walter Belasco as exceptionally good.

I trust that all Bluebird productions are up to the same high standard as "A Jewel In Pawn."

Gentlemen:—

I consider "A Jewel In Pawn" well acted and well produced. The comments of our patrons, which we take considerable trouble in getting, were generally very favorable, and it was well received by our audience. We take this means to assure you, however, that our patrons enjoy Bluebird production, as they are well acted, clean, wholesome and first-class in every particular.

Gentlemen—"A Jewel In Pawn" is the best thing I have ever seen in Bluebirds, and shows a side of Jewish characteristics that should be more frequently placed before screen patrons. It was a tender, curiously humorous, human side of the Jewish character that certainly left a lesson implanted in the minds of every one that saw the picture—one that will not be easily forgotten.

Yours respectfully,

Prisoner No. 13	Wm. Franey
Professor Quince	Harry Mann
Camille De Auverne	Eileen Roberts
Warden	Milburn Moranti

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

"I can restore life to the dead if I can get a current of electricity strong enough," promises the Professor to the Warden.

"All right, let's take your mummy from the museum and run over to my electric chair. It's idle to-day and has lots of juice," returns the Warden.

It was Friday, the thirteenth, in "Happy Day's Prison," and Prisoner No. 13 was elected to be the guest of honor at his own execution. But he was superstitious and while he had a breath of life left in his body, he determined to escape. This he did and to avoid detection forced the porter of Prof. Quince's museum to change clothes with him. He is forced to take the porter's job because a policeman near precludes his chance of getting away.

The many specimens in the museum cause the luckless prisoner to wish he was out of it, but fate seems against him and he stays on. The Prof.'s fair daughter, Mamie, attracts him hugely, but he has little time for her on account of his efforts to keep the disrobed porter, "sub rosa," as it were.

The Warden of the Prison drops in and joins the Professor's argument about the mummy.

While they are discussing the matter, the prisoner, having effectively disposed of the troublesome porter, comes back into the museum, discovering the Warden's presence. He tries to make his escape, but escape is cut off and in desperation he hides in the mummy case, which, forthwith, is carried away by the Warden and the Professor to the prison.

The mummy participates in the liquid refreshments.

When No. 13 feels himself set down he makes immediate plans to beat it, but is dumbfounded to discover himself back in the chamber from which he had so recently escaped. Realizing that fate is agin' him, he decides to do the job himself and sitting in the electric chair, starts to adjust the harness preliminary to his demise. The near-sighted Professor believes he is witnessing a miracle. Bill escapes, is pursued and finally caught when the Warden hands him a pardon. No. 13 is overjoyed, but it is short-lived, for Camille arrives and has him again arrested for picking her purse and back to jail he goes.

Roy Clements is directing the Universal-Nestors in a comedy called "His Welcome Home," the story of which was written by Henry McRae. Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts have the leads.

Prof. Wiggle N. Squirm	Harry Nolan

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Mfg. Co.)

"DON your wig, corset and dress," commands the gang to Bill Sellers, one of their number.

"Right-o," says Bill, squeezing his sides, "I'm the original Mlle. De Phoney."

Prof. Wiggle N. Squirm has opened a dancing school for "women only" in Cactus Flat, and the men begin to realize that it is not only taking all their money to pay for the lessons, but that their wives are neglecting their husbands and homes, spending their time in practicing the alluring steps that they have learned. The men get together and decide to go down to the town hall and break up the class, but when they get there they lose their nerve and retire to the town pump to discuss the situation. They hit upon the idea of making up one of their number to imitate a lady dancing teacher and start a fake dancing school of their own to make the women of the village jealous.

They go to the hotel and the proprietor remembers that he has a trunk that a theatrical troupe has left for a board bill. The trunk is opened and a lot of costumes are found. Bill Sellers is picked out to put on wig, corsets, dress and imitate the female dancing teacher. The others don various costumes for their dancing lessons and all repair to a secluded spot, later taking pains to let the women know of the new "class." The women get together and plan to break up the "class" and run the "female teacher" out of town. Two of them ring the fire bell, calling the men to the fire hall, and the others capture Bill, who is now made up as Mlle. De Phoney. Just as he is in danger of being horsewhipped and tarred and feathered, the men return and rescue him and Prof. Wiggle N. Squirm is run out of town, leaving the inhabitants once more at peace with each other.

BUTTERFLY Picture

"STRAIGHT SHOOTING"

What You Need to Know About "The Lair of the Wolf"

TEARS EASY FOR GRETCHEN.

TEARS are easy for Gretchen Lederer, one of the featured players of the Butterfly Picture, "The Lair of the Wolf." And in this picture she has to cry a great deal. She plays the part of a widow with an only son, who marries in haste an old admirer, to repent at leisure, for he turns out to be a brute.

The many directors at Universal City were greatly interested in the performance and make-up of the actress in this production. Her grief was so realistic, and the tears streamed down her face so abundantly, that it was hard to believe that in real life she is a most contented and happy person. She is not "temperamental" in the stage acceptance of the meaning of the word, but she has a wonderful faculty of concentration, and throws herself whole-heartedly into the role she is playing. Recently she has been doing quite cheerful things, but the change has not affected her work.

She is enabled to change easily and lightly from one type to another by reason of her thorough stage training. She was educated in the Conservatory of the city of Collogne on the Rhine where she was born. Miss Lederer set her affections upon a grand opera career. She toured the United States until she had the great misfortune to lose her voice. She was so young that the constant singing was too much for her. She would have turned her attention to the speaking stage, but the language was a barrier. However, there are no such obstacles in the movies, and at last she was persuaded to try them.

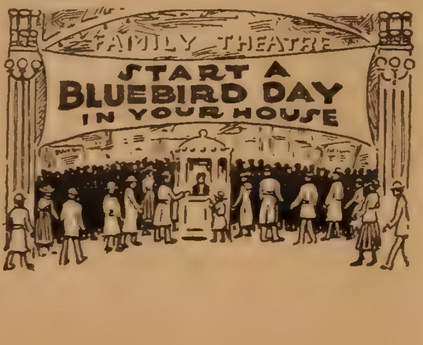
Only recently Miss Lederer received her final papers as a citizen, and there is no more loyal American at present. She took out her first papers as soon as possible, and when her second ones were finally granted, she carried them about with her, showing them proudly to every one she met.

Charles Hill Mailes.

STRONG ACTING CAST IN "THE LAIR OF THE WOLF."

"THE LAIR OF THE WOLF" has a cast which includes many of the best-known actors on the screen to-day, most of them very familiar to Butterfly audiences. Notice this list:

Donna Drew, the newest star in the Bluebird firmament, who has also played in "The Flame of Youth"; Gretchen Lederer, prominent in several Butterfly pictures; Joseph Girard, one of the stars of "The Double Standard"; Val Paul, a well-known leading man, and an excellent villain as well; Charles Hill Mailes, one of the most accomplished character actors in the world; Chester Bennett, Peggy Custer, Hazel Page and Evelyn Brent. Charles Hill Mailes, as frequently happens in the case of a character actor, has a rather small but very important role in the drama. By the expedient of cutting out the action in which he appears most prominently until his confession at the trial, intense suspense is interjected in "The Lair of the Wolf," and so great is Mr. Mailes' acting ability, that no one in the audience will suspect that his was the hand which dealt the fatal blow. His make-up as a gardner in this picture is a work of art, as are all of his characterizations.



Gretchen Lederer.

DONNA DREW CHOOSES HER NEW NAME.

THERE is a new name in the list of leading ladies of the screen. It appeared in the cast of the Butterfly Picture, "The Flame of Youth," with Jack Mulhall, and it appears again in the Butterfly, "The Lair of the Wolf," along with the well-known names, Gretchen Lederer and Joseph Girard. This new screen luminary is Donna Drew, the latest addition to the Butterfly forces. When the first print of her first picture came in from Universal City she was called "Donna Moon." But "Moon" was a name which did not suit the little, dark-haired slip of a girl who was playing the role of a nymph of an island in the Pacific Ocean. Donna herself was the first to agree that a change was advisable. A one-syllable name she decided would go best with her pretty Christian name of Donna. She looked over her whole family history, hunting for some ancestor's cognomen which she could borrow for the screen. At last she came upon the name of Drew, and promptly decided upon it. There is no better name in the history of the American stage, and it goes most beautifully with Donna.

NEAL HART GETS SPECIAL PRIVILEGES AT BIG RODEO

NEAL HART, who impersonates the true Western type of citizen in Universal photoplays, and who is playing now in "Squaring It," recently received a telegram from the secretary of the Frontier Days' Celebration—an annual event held at Cheyenne, Wyoming, extending to Neal and his company a hearty invitation to attend the meet and according him full privileges to make motion pictures of the affair, or to use it in any way he might see fit as a part of a photoplay.

The Frontier Days' Celebration is the biggest event of the kind in the country, and its chief feature is a rodeo in which cowboys from all parts of the West match their skill at riding, roping, branding and other truly Western accomplishments.

Neal is popular in Wyoming, having won numerous honors at the frontier meet in the past as well as having been a range foreman and at one time a deputy sheriff of Converse County. His many friends, according to the telegram, would welcome him and his company and take delight in seeing him in action before the camera.

Aviator Leslie Irwin, Bluebird Player, thrills throng of beach visitors.

BLUEBIRD PLAYER THRILLS THRONG OF BEACH VISITORS

THE throng of a hundred thousand people who spent last Sunday at Long Beach, a popular seaside resort near Los Angeles, were treated to an unexpected thrill, which proved the most sensational feature of the day's events—a parachute jump from a fast and powerful airplane.

The feat was performed by Leslie Irwin, dare-devil Bluebird actor, as a part of a new feature production being produced by Director Elmer Clifton, called "Ski-High." A parachute of special construction—one that never before had had a practical tryout—was used.

Bluebird cameramen were stationed at intervals along the shore to catch the descent of the glider. The pilot of the plane, Earl Daugherty, with Irwin beside him in the machine, rose from a nearby aviation field, spiraled to an altitude of 2,500 feet, and sailed out over the ocean.

As the machine reached a point opposite the cameras Director Clifton fired a gun as a signal for the drop and Irwin dived from the plane. The new parachute failed to open at first and Irwin plunged rapidly downward. As the throng watched breathlessly it seemed that he certainly would be killed by the impact with the water.

After falling fully a thousand feet the wings of the glider caught the air and the fall was checked. The thousands of spectators broke into tumultuous applause. Irwin made a perfect descent and landed in the ocean a quarter of a mile off shore where he was picked up quickly by a fast boat chartered by Director Clifton for the purpose.

Mr. D. Webster Opp	Arthur Hoyt
Willard Hinton	George Chesebro
Jimmy Fallows	George Hernandez
John Mathews	Jack Curtis
Guinevere Gusty	Neva Gerber
Miss Kippy	Elise Maison
Mrs. Gusty	Anne Lockhart

DANIEL WEBSTER OPP, egotistical, vain and with only a smattering of education, is the epitome of cheerfulness and optimism. He has ventured into many careers and has made a failure of all of them, until he becomes a traveling salesman for a St. Louis shoe firm. Just when promises are golden, Opp receives word that his stepfather has died, and he must go at once to his old home to settle the estate.

He is met at the hotel in Cove Junction by his brother Ben, who demands that a settlement be made on the basis of D. Webster taking the homestead, while Ben shall have the few dollars in cash that complete the estate. In this arrangement Ben plans to send Kippy Opp to an institution for the feebleminded. As a result of the ravages of fever, Kippy, at the age of twenty-four, has only the mind of a child.

D. Webster Opp decides to sacrifice himself to the care of his sister. He gives Ben the money and settles down in the old homestead to start life anew. In his many ventures he has been, at one time, a printer. As Cove Junction boasts no newspaper, Mr. Opp establishes "The Opp Eagle" and begins at once to boom the town. His optimistic editorials are read by a wealthy promoter who goes to Cove Junction to investigate the possibilities of getting coal from the ground in that vicinity.

Mr. Opp's plans for a "Greater Cove Junction" enthuses the populace, and he is chosen as the community head in forwarding schemes to make the town famous and prosperous. John Mathews, the promoter, addresses an assembly of the townsfolk, promising to co-operate with them in developing the coal lands if the citizens will invest with him in the Turtle Creek Development Cold, which he undertakes to form. Mr. Opp's enthusiasm leads the citizens to invest, and Cove Junction begins to boom.

With Guinevere Gusty, the village belle, Mr. Opp has fallen in love, proposes marriage, and is accepted. This happens before Willard Hinton, because of threatened blindness, is compelled to abandon his position as private secretary to John Mathews. Hinton decides to remain in Cove Junction, and goes to board at the home of the Widow Gusty. This move ends Mr. Opp's matrimonial aspirations, for Guinevere falls in love with Hinton and Mr. Opp, wise in his generation, releases the girl from her engagement.

Mr. Opp, among other things, is disappointed in love.

John Mathews returns to Cove Junction and at a meeting of the stockholders declares that the coal lands have been found to be unproductive of profit, but offers a plan to sell out to a rival corporation. All the stockholders, except Mr. Opp, agree to sell. Mr. Opp declares the whole transaction to be dishonorable, preconceived by Mathews to trick the rival company into buying a worthless proposition. He, however, is voted down and the sale is consummated.

Then and there Cove Junction's boom begins to wane. Hinton, having married Guinevere, makes a proposal to buy "The Opp Eagle" and retain Mr. Opp as an employee. Seeing his last hopes vanishing, Mr. Opp sells out on the day the townsfolk have set for a banquet to do honor to the man who has done so much to advance the prosperity of Cove Junction. Mr. Opp finds himself the hero of an occasion that brings to his heart the manna of adulation and praise for which he is so hungry. He is then and there nominated for the office of Mayor and the story ends with Mr. Opp happy in the homage of his fellow citizens with a life of devotion for the brain-sick Kippy his irrevocable portion.

"Yes, you can have '"The Bugle'" said Mr. Opp.

At the moment of Mr. Opp's triumph came an interruption.

CACTUS SICK.

CACTUS PETE, Harry Carey's well-known and highly educated horse, has almost made himself sick recently on sugar. Carey has been training him to fall down dead when a revolver is fired at him, when he does it he gets sugar.

Kippy was Opp's greatest care.

MARCIA MOORE DOES HER BIT.

MANY of the actors and actresses at Universal City are contributing in some way to the Red Cross, or to some other organization for the benefit of the boys in khaki. Several of the screen stars are working early in the morning and late at night in their gardens, many of the girls are taking First Aid courses, while almost all of them invested in Liberty Bonds. Little Marcia Moore, one of the ingenues at the picture city, was disconsolate because she could not think of any thing to do, either for the country at large or for the boys in khaki.

She brooded over it for a long time, and finally hit upon the idea of persuading her friends and acquaintances at the picture city to contribute to a "tobacco fund" for the soldiers. Many of the actors have listened to her plea, and promised for every cigarette that they smoke to give the price of one to her for the boys in khaki. Some of them have sworn off altogether, and having calculated what that saves them, have turned the money over to the fund. Some have reduced their consumption of cigarettes by half. There are very few who have resisted the pleading of the little actress, who begs so prettily for "smokes" for the boys going to the trenches.

THIRTEEN was the forbidding number given Vester Pegg, one of the cowpunchers of Harry Carey's Western company, when he appeared to register for the selective draft, at the station at Universal City. Pegg hesitated a moment when he saw this number, but finally took it. "After all, I guess numbers haven't anything to do with your chances at the front," he said.

Gale Henry and Wm. Franey Together Again

Wm. Franey—Straight.

"'UNITED we stand, divided we stagger'—that is to say, when we appear together in comedies we do much better than when we play in separate companies. But, we are together again, for which we are thankful.''

It was Miss Gale Henry who was speaking and this Universal comedienne was referring to William Franey and their work opposite each other in the comedies they have made during the past three years.

"My sentiments exactly," said Franey with one of his characteristic gestures of approval, adding, "my best work has been with Miss Henry, and I know I have not done nearly so well since we were placed in separate companies some months ago."

Miss Henry and Franey were Director Allen Curtis' principal comedians for a long period. Then they both worked under W. W. Beaudine. But a short time ago the Joker Comedy Company was split to form two separate companies of fun-makers, Miss Henry playing the lead in one and the inimitable Franey as chief comedian in the other.

During the past few weeks, however, exhibitors have been writing and wiring to President Carl Laemmle, asking that Miss Henry and Franey join forces again, the public getting so much pleasure out of their work together. President Laemmle therefore telegraphed this week to Henry McRae, Manager of Production at Universal City, to re-organize the comedy companies so as to enable the demand of the exhibitors to be met. McRae acted promptly and Gale and Bill will start in a few days on Joker comedies together.

When Franey and Miss Henry were working separately Franey had Beaudine as a director, and Gale Henry had Curtis. Now the directors will alternate with the combined company.

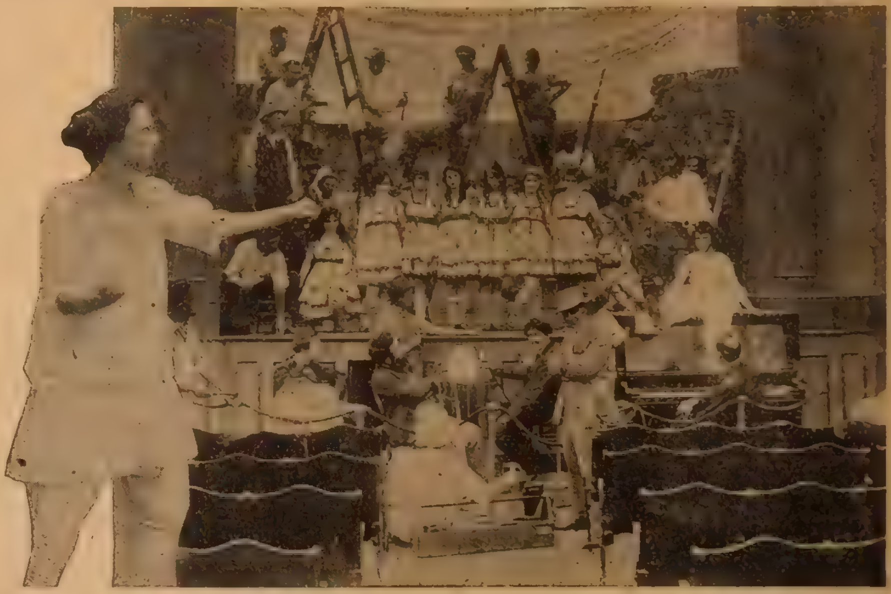
Gale Henry—Made up.

WHERE THE GRIPS WERE.

THE office of Henry McRae, production manager at Universal City, was stormed one day this week with frantic telephone calls from most of the directors working on the big stages, who complained of a shortage of stage-hands, who usually are present to handle furniture, scenery and general "props." They are usually well distributed among the stages.

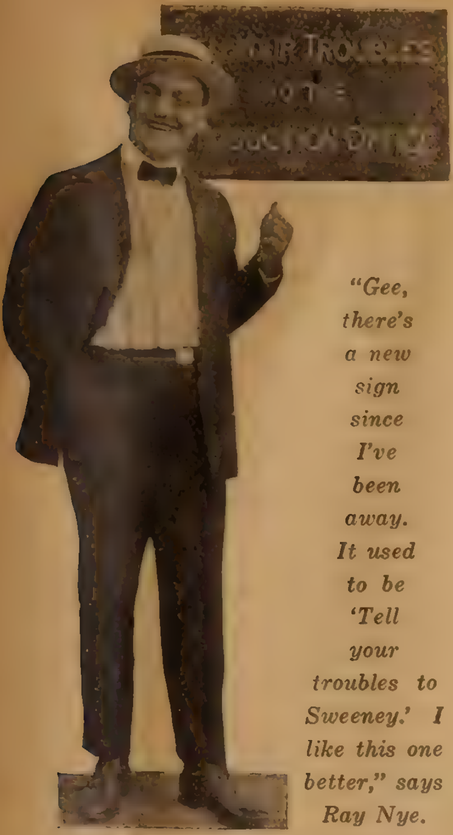
McRae sent out a couple of his trusty lieutenants to investigate the situation. They returned a short while later with the report that the missing "grips" had been located. A small army of them were making themselves useful around the stage where Allen Curtis and his comedy company were producing "Mrs. Madam Manager" in which Gale Henry is featured. A flock of winsome and shapely chorus girls in ballet costumes were innocently responsible for the abundance of stage-hands on the set.

Twenty-two "grips,'' by actual count, surrounded the stage where the beauties were working, driving nails in things that didn't need nailing, moving furniture all over the place and finally bringing it back to its original position and otherwise rendering "unvaluable" assistance to Director Curtis and falling over each other.



This is the answer to the heading.

They're Back Too



"Gee, there's a new sign since I've been away. It used to be 'Tell your troubles to Sweeney.' I like this one better," says Ray Nye.

"LIBERTY," the Universal serial which is still running almost as strongly as when it was being shown first run, made the screen reputations of a number of people besides Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo. For one thing, it created a wide circle of admirers for G. Raymond Nye, strong-faced villain of the piece. After "Liberty" he left the Universal for companies unknown, but has now returned.

BROWNIE AND HERB TOGETHER AGAIN.

"HELLO, there, Agnes," said Rawlinson as he passed a very attractive hazel-eyed blonde.

"Oh, that's not my name now. You know, since we played together they have changed my name to Brownie. Don't you like it?"

"Any name goes all right with you, Brownie, and I am mighty glad that we are back working together. Aren't you?"

Then, hand in hand, they walked into the production office, where Director Elmer Clifton waited to start the first scenes of "Sky-High," written by Waldemar Young and Frank T. Dazey. In the cast appears for the first time in pictures young Henry Schumann-Heink, son of the prima-donna, who spends a great deal of her time at Universal City when she is in California.

Brownie Vernon and Herbert Rawlinson are working together again.

Two years ago Herbert Rawlinson and Brownie Vernon, or Agnes, as she was then called, were the most popular stars on the Universal list.

Franey and Moranti welcome Max Asher back to Joker.

MAX IS BACK.

"LOOK here," said Franey, "I have had my fingers crossed all this time. I knew you'd come back, and here you are." Franey and Moranti were formerly supernumeraries in the company in which Max Asher and Gale Henry were the stars. Franey, by the hard work and natural ability, was enabled to take the place that Asher left when he completed the Lady Baffles and Detective Duck series, and packed up his duds and went away. So now when Asher is back he meets Franey as a star on equal footing. But it's all the same to these comedians. Each is mighty glad to work again with the other.

Franey is now co-star with Gale Henry, and Max Asher returns to work in Victor Comedies, the first of which will be "Scandal Everywhere," and will be released on the last day in August. It's a Friday. Fine time to begin a series. Beautiful Gladys Tennyson supports Asher in his new venture, and they are directed by Craig Hutchinson, formerly with the L-Ko Komedy Kompany.

POOR little heart. You just come and live with me. There will be only us two in all the world, and you can have everything I've got. I promised your mother that I would take care of you, and I will."

Embittered against the world by the death of his wife and his own child, Harry Fenstein had devoted his entire energy to the making of money. He ran a pawnshop. It was an honest one, but any one that beat old Fenstein out of a nickel could justly brag of his feat. The only bright spot in his life was Mary, the little daughter of the widow Forarty, who lived in a small house next to his pawn shop and clothing establishment. When Mary's mother died suddenly Fenstein had promised to take care of her child, and when a wealthy lawyer and his wife sent by the Children's Aid Society had offered to adopt her, he very zealously concealed little Mary in his shop and denied knowing anything about the girl.

The lawyer is anxious to adopt the little girl whom he saw at the funeral, and he and his wife take Fenstein's denial very much to heart. For the time being they go away, but tell Fenstein that they will come back.

Mary helps Fenstein tend the shop, and while she is alone in it one day a crook seeking shelter dashes in and hides under the counter. Mary starts to give an alarm, but the crook silences her and finally in pity she shields him from the cop who comes into the store. After all danger is over Mary goes up to the crook and says, "It's all safe now. Don't you want to buy a new suit of clothes? Yours looks pretty old." The seriousness of the situation being broken, John Gleeton laughs from relief, and for two dollars buys himself a new suit of clothes.

True to their word, the lawyer and his wife return.

"Have you seen anything of the little girl who used to live next door?"

"No, I never saw her," said Fenstein, but at that moment little Mary comes out from the rear room. The lawyer and his wife have letters of adoption, and his one ray of sunshine goes out of his life. But little Mary cannot forget her old home, though every effort is made for her happiness. One day she jumps into the back of a wagon and when she comes to Fenstein's store she jumps out, and the old man nearly passes away for very joy.

A day it lasted. Then came Mary's new parents, and though it was like giving up his life blood, Fenstein realized that the education and home that they could provide would be so much superior to his that, with sorrow in his heart, but a smile on his lips, he says good-bye to little Mary.

Three Letters to Carl Laemmle

Praise Straight-From-The-Shoulder Talks

Upholding His Hands

Mr. Carl Laemmle,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City:

Dear Mr. Laemmle—Your very cordial letter of the 4th inst. received. The reason I wrote as I did was because I feel that you need encouragement in the good work that you are doing through your "Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks," trying to impress upon the exhibitor that he is hurting his own business by imposing on his patrons.

The moving picture theatre is receiving more money to-day for admission than ever before. This is almost true without exception owing to the increased cost of everything necessary for his entertainment he is justly entitled to it, but at the same time it does not give him license to believe that his patrons are willing to pay this increased price and then sit for hours looking at pictures that have absolutely no merit.

I would much rather see my theatre, if I operated one, closed several nights each week, and know that every picture shown was meritorious, rather than keep it open and run so-called features that discouraged attendance when the good ones are shown. To-day we sort of gamble, as it were, on every photoplay house we go into, and we are just as apt to come out of it dissatisfied and rather disgusted as we are to be real enthusiastic about the entertainment.

For that reason I honestly believe the high-grade program would be far better when used part of the time, than to attempt to force patrons to look at features that are lacking in proper setting and duplications of stories shown a number of times already.

Am deeply interested in the success of the business, but must confess have grown quite weary at times. Your "Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks" are of great interest to me, and I believe you need the support of every one connected to help make it as interesting and attractive and elevating as is possible.

You may use my letter if you wish, trusting that it may be of some small service in increasing interest in the above subject, which I consider one of the most important things of to-day. Cordially and sincerely,

E. R. ANDERSON,
Minusa Fine Products Co.
St. Louis, Mo.

From a Small Town

Mr. Carl Laemmle, President,
Universal Film Co.,
New York City:

Dear Sir—At this time I think that a letter from an exhibitor in a small town would be apropos in regard to the so-called feature program. I have been a constant reader of your "Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talks," and a regular customer of the Universal for about two years, but have used features to a great extent much to my sorrow. I find that too many features kill not only the business for them, but also hurt the regular service inasmuch as I must get extra admission for my features, and in a town as small as Marion (2,500) there is a certain clientele who are good customers but feel that when they have paid an extra price for a show that they must lay off for several nights to make up for it.

I am at this time, therefore, running a straight Universal program with the exception of the serial "Patria" and one or two of the big pictures such as "Ramona" and "Civilization," and find that my bank account is growing considerably.

With my best wishes for the Universal and with sincere regret at the loss of Mr. Cropper from the Kansas City office, I am,

Very truly yours,
HARRY K. ROGERS,
Mgr. Auditorium Theatre.
Marion, Kansas.

Best Horse Sense

Mr. Carl Laemmle, President,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City:

Dear Sir—Just read your "Straight-from-the-Shoulder Talk" in the last issue of the Weekly. It isn't very often I become overenthused over reading stuff in trade papers, but your analysis on the "Jackass Law" is positively the best plain-spoken horse sense thing I have read in years. I feel as though my arm were only long enough to take a great big shake on it, one of the calibre that makes you feel as though you meant it. If our Pa. Brothers still fear to whisper or think (which was evidently not provided for in the law), then surely they can at least feel way down in the bottom of their hearts that you are right, and be proud of you to have spoken the truth.

Yours truly,
OSCAR KORN,
Mgr. The Grand.
Bay City, Texas.

Universal Director Ruth Ann Baldwin is holding a guessing contest over the title of her picture, "The Woman with the Parakeets." No one on the Universal lot seems to be quite sure what Parakeets are, and Director Baldwin is not telling. The story was written for her by Mrs. E. Magnus Ingleton.

Luncheon Starts Pershing Letter of Cheer

Tastefully arranged luncheon at Hotel Astor tendered to the newspapermen by Bluebird Company to start letter of cheer on way to General Pershing.

AS the final culmination of the six weeks' patriotic movement to secure a million names to a letter of cheer to General Pershing, Arthur Leslie, whose hard work has made the letter in its completeness possible, acted as toastmaster at a luncheon in the Hotel Astor. The purpose of the luncheon was to speed the letter of cheer, and to notify the world at large and trade papers in particular of the fact that the letter was completed, the testimonial made by Tiffany consecrated in proper style, and that the project had the sanction of the United States War Department through the presence of Major Booth and Captain Carleton of the staff of Major General Bell, commander of the department of the East.

Between forty and fifty representatives of the trade press, producing companies, New York dailies and semi-official bodies met, discussed the excellent hot weather luncheon, had their pictures taken as shown above, signed the letter of cheer, listened to interesting personal reminiscences of Pershing from Major Booth, and drank a toast to the safe passage of the letter through the troubled waters of the Atlantic to safety in General Pershing's hands.

Mr. Petterjohn, the attorney for the Exhibitors League of Indiana, was one of the speakers, while telegrams from a number of senators and congressmen were read. Bluebird signs decorated the luncheon room, and with a background of American flags, formed a fitting scene for a patriotic and heart-felt expression from a million people.

When the American Expeditionary Forces went to Europe, it was obviously impossible to give them a send-off. If they had, it is quite likely that they would have met more submarines than actually barred their progress. It was for this reason that Bluebird felt impelled to send the American troops the letter of cheer, and it is for the same reason that over a million Americans, including governors of all the States, senators, congressmen, and people prominent in all walks of life, have signed it.

The workmanship of the album, which was designed by Tiffany's to contain the letter, is exquisite. The book is bound in a soft green morocco, its pages are of heavy vellum beautifully embossed, and it rests in a handsome case of dark-gray silk.

LENA BASKETTE SCORES IN DANCING ROLES FOR U.

MORE than a year ago the announcement was made that the longest Universal contract ever drawn had been signed between the film company and a little girl called Lena Baskette. Lena is not very old, but she can already lay claim to the two titles "actress" and "dancer." It was her dancing which attracted the attention of the Universal officials. She was forthwith given the appropriate pseudonym, "Pavlowa, Junior."

Lena has appeared in a great number of Universal pictures. She played what was practically a stellar role in "The Caravan" that remarkable study of Old Egypt, in which Claire McDowell was the leading adult role. Lena made up wonderfully effectively as an Egyptian, for there is something exotic in her appearance, which allows her to impersonate such roles remarkably well. A late release in which she appeared was the Gold Seal, "The Black Mantilla," a story of Mexico, staged by Ruth Ann Baldwin, in which a dancing contest played a part in the action. Lena was to take her turn with the adult dancers, and it was pretty to watch the impatience with which she waited for it.

At the present time she is appearing in a series of two-reel pictures, which are made by Marshall Stedman. These stories have all been chosen with a special view to using her talents as a dancer. In one of them, called "Amelita's Friend," the title role is played by Joe Martin, the almost human orang-outang, who is Lena's great favorite.

An Unexpected Punch in "The Charmer."

VERY frequently the unexpected puts a "punch" into a photoplay that was never intended by the director to be there and very frequently these accidental "flashes" are the hit of the production. An instance in point happened when Jack Conway was directing Ella Hall in the Bluebird Photoplay, "The Charmer." Miss Hall used a trained monkey as the pet of the little orphan she interprets in the screen story. The monkey was "rehearsed" in his part for a scene in which the "monk" was in mischief.

Covered with flour and dough from his rummagings in the kitchen, the monkey was supposed to be discovered at his pranks by the little orphan. He was trained to jump down from a table, thence onto a chair and in one leap disappear through an open window, passing over a sink containing a panful of dishes the little girl had been reluctant to wash. Cameras were set to catch the monkey in his kitchen gymnastics, and another machine was placed in the yard, outside of the window, the two machine being charged with photographing the little chimp on his completed voyage from mischief to the open air.

When the moment came to begin actual operations the monkey made the leap from "take-off," but instead of jumping to the chair he made a wild leap into the pan of dishes, and then proceeded through the open window. Entirely uninvited a cat ambled onto the scene in the dooryard and when the monkey joyously vaulted through the window he landed squarely on the cat. The camera out-of-door was grinding away and photographed a scene of unexpected and unrehearsed animation.

Making dual leaps six feet in the air, cat and monkey "mixed it up" in rough-and-tumble scrimmage for half a moment—and then the monkey tore for the tall timber. The fight when developed in the film, proved to be one of the most spontaneous "hits" imaginable. The incident could never have been pre-arranged, for animal training and camera-work could never be so deliberately blended. It's a real fight, for the brief lapse of time necessary for the cat to consume in making the monkey quit his fur-pulling and skeedaddle.

"STRAIGHT SHOOTING" A Whale of a Western Drama

WITHOUT the shadow of a doubt, Harry Carey in "Straight Shooting" is the most exciting Butterfly picture yet produced. To those who enjoy Westerns it will make a particular appeal, for there never was a Western yet which had anything on "Straight Shooting." It will also be well for those who do not profess to enjoy Westerns to stay away from this picture, or they certainly will be converted to this type of photoplay, which just at present is having a wonderful revival in popular esteem.

Jack Ford produced "Straight Shooting" from a story by George Hively, and he did it with a wonderful amount of zest and abandon. The riding in this picture is perfectly marvelous, and the locations selected are wonderfully adapted to show it off to the best advantage. There are more thrills per foot, more daring feats of riding, falling from galloping horses, leaps and stunts, than any picture of equal length which it has been our pleasure to see. And with it all there is wonderful comedy relief and a beautiful love story which is so delicately interwoven as to produce a picture of wonderfully balanced material, and will leave one with having been satisfied in every sense.

Beautiful little Molly Malone supports Harry Carey, and her bewitching beauty was never exhibited with more telling effect than in the role of the little settler girl who Paulreveres the neighborhood to forestall the raid of the cattlemen.

THREE - REEL Western Drama. Produced by George Marshall.

Neal	Neal Hart
John Moore	Fred Church
His Wife	Janet Eastman
Joe Ramon	Joe Rickson
Sheriff	Bud Osborne

NEAL himself read the circular which had just been put up by the sheriff.

"Well, I'd like the five thousand all right," he soliloquized, "but I don't see how I am going to arrest myself, so here goes for a drink."

But several men in the Red Dog saloon knew the outlaw's face almost as well as he did himself, and while the drink was going down one man ran for the sheriff, while the other ran to the back door to prevent the outlaw's escape that way. But Neal's profession had taught him super-caution. He saw the sheriff even before he was seen by the sheriff, and instinctively felt the man at the rear door. When the latter put his head through, Neal's gat got him like a bolt of lightning, and in the confusion Neal made his getaway with the sheriff's posse in hot pursuit. Neal's horse was tired, and he just escaped the posse by plunging over a cliff and waiting till it went by, but he had been seriously wounded.

Staggering along the underbrush he finally came to a cabin. Mary Moore, who occupied this little homestead with her husband, took him in, and although she suspected that he was an outlaw, she ministered to his wounds tenderly, and Neal was convinced that she was an angel.

The couple were in very sad straits owing to the exhaustion of their resources, and their larder had been replenished by Joe Ramon, a prepossessing gambler who had conceived a guilty admiration for Mary. Neither noticed at the time the malicious smile with which Ramon received their effusive thanks. But this same Joe Ramon concocted as diabolical a scheme as ever a man devised to win a woman. In the first place, he had promised to give John Moore a job, and told him to meet him at the saloon the next day.

While John was away, Joe came to the cabin, and Mary's painful attempts to conceal Neal's presence convinced him that the outlaw was in the back room. Neal realized that his position there would endanger the Moores, and after Joe went away he made a break for the open, but was overtaken by Joe, and was promised his liberty if he would rob a stage coach the following day of twenty thousand dollars in gold. The alternative was the exposure of his being shielded by the Moores. Joe then sent John Moore to the rendezvous agreed upon with Neal after the coach shall have been robbed. Joe thought thereby to get rid of both men, and Mrs. Moore would then inevitably fall into his hands. And the plan would have worked, except for the honesty of the outlaw.

When the posse, which had been warned beforehand of the robbery, overtook Neal and John, both of whom were extremely surprised to see each other, Neal, whose brain acted like a flash, turned to John.

"You make a break over there in that direction, and I'll get out the best I can. Here goes the money."

And he threw it in the brush beside the road, and rode directly in the opposite direction from which the attack was expected. His furious riding and a clever manoeuver outdistanced the posse, and Neal had a free road to Cactus Center, where he demanded to know where Ramon was.

"Oh, he went up to the Moore cabin half an hour ago," said one of the men in the saloon.

Another furious ride, and Neal dashed open the door just in time to see Mary desperately struggling in the arms of the victorious gambler. Without a moment's hesitation Neal sent the worthless gambler's black heart hurtling into eternity. But the posse was right on his heels.

"Quick," he said to John Moore, who had just stepped into the cabin. "You hold me up and turn me over to the police. It's the only way."

And with a smile on his face, and tears in the eyes of John and Mary Moore, Neal surrendered himself to the sheriff. He had squared it.

"Put chewing gum over the blackboard, Bill—now for a real fire of spit balls, ready—aim, fire!

Thus whisper the pupils.

Easily the woman teacher at Hokum Center could not handle her unruly pupils. When the Mayor of the town is attracted by the commotion he fires her on the spot and sends at once to the city for a man teacher.

Imitating the new teacher.

Bill, the new teacher, arrives and receives a warm reception by the pupils. His arm becomes so tired spanking them that next day he opens school with a new fangled spanking machine installed. This does the business and the pupils decide that the new teacher had best be let alone.

May, the belle of the village, is very fond of Jed, who considers himself too big to go to school. However, when he learns that the new teacher is paying particular court to his May, he decides to go. Bill at first thinks that Jed is a little fellow, because he is slumped away down in the seat, but is amazed to discover Jed's size. He realizes that if Jed continues to be a pupil his reign as master of the school will soon come to an end. For just such an emergency he has provided a bottle of "Courage," which he keeps behind the map, and of this he imbibes at frequent intervals. much to the mystification of all. The Mayor pays the school a visit to see how his new "man" teacher is getting along and finds everything fine.

Bill decides that he is now brave enough to thrash the unruly Jed. He makes an attempt, but fails and seeks safety in flight.

Forty Drafted From Universal City

Scene at Universal City when draft numbers were read.

MORE than forty men of Universal City will answer "Here!" when the government makes its first call on the manhood of the country.

There is a marked amount of enthusiasm on the part of the boys of the film capital who are "out in front" on the draft list—not one voiced a complaint when he learned that his number had been drawn from Uncle Sam's starred and striped hat.

Among the leading actors who come within the scope of the first call are William Franey and Milton Sims, Joker comedians; Francis MacDonald, who plays a prominent part in "The Gray Ghost" serial, and Lloyd Whitlock and J. Webster Dill of Ruth Stonehouse's feature company.

Two of the directing staff probably will be called soon—George Marshall, who has been staging the Neal Hart features, and Mancelia De Grasse, assistant to Joseph De Grasse, who is producing "The Maverick" with Franklyn Farnum as the star actor.

Cameramen Jack Mackenzie of Director De Grasse's company; J. Kull, who has been shooting the Max Asher comedies, and E. R. Meeker, who has assisted in the photographing of Jacques Jaccard's new serial, were among those whose numbers were selected early in the drawing.

Robert A. Dillon, of the scenario staff and Harold Hoadley, of the Publicity Department, are listed among the first names in their respective districts, as are Fred Datig and Leslie Irwin of the employment office, C. F. Keister and John Shea of the Accounting Department and H. L. Mohr and Grant Whytock of the cutting room.

Employees from the laboratory, carpenter shop and mills, property room and general stage hands swell Universal City's first contribution to America's fighting forces to more than two-score men.

"We'll stage a party at Riley's to-night," promises Beau Brummel.

"We're on," agree the boys.

Things look promising for the evening.

Beau Brummel at college, with great wealth at his command, always manages to have his parties of the best.

Frank Bartlett from the same town is supposedly one of the "goody" boys. But, under the skin, he is as naughty as the rest of them. One day while out for a ride he meets Argo, a beautiful South American girl, who rebelling against the restraint placed upon her by the faculty, decides that she will go for a walk.

"Won't you come for a ride in the boat?" asks Frank, and the invitation is accepted with some misgiving.

He takes her to a private room in a cafe and there tries to make love to her; her screams reach the ear of Brummel, who is entertaining a party, and he goes to her rescue, followed by his crowd. As a result of it all, Beau Brummel is reported to his wealthy and stern parent, who informs him that he does not care to hear more of him until he has made a man of himself. Argo is sent home.

Beau Brummel ships as a stowaway on a South American bound ship, but is discovered by the crew and suffers many indignities. At last he lands in the same city in which Argo and her people live and happens to rescue her and her father when they are being attacked by one of the uprising mobs. She recognizes him as her former rescuer and tells her father about him; Beau Brummel is installed as prime minister.

His father, meantime, knows nothing of this and with a party of friends is making a tour of South America; great is his surprise when he meets his son in the high position and the two fathers becoming acquainted, becoming fast friends, while son and daughter follow in the way of youth—and romance.

EXCITING Butterfly Picture. Produced by Charles Swickard.

"MR. CATHCART, let me introduce my son, Jim."

"Charmed, I am sure."

Cathcart's manners are perfect, thinks Margaret Dennis, a widow, as she enters his office with her son Jim to secure a position from the latter.

Cathcart does possess charming, polished manners and a fascinating personality, but they hide a sensual and brutal nature that delights in torture. He is feared and loathed by all his employes, among whom is Raymond Taylor, a young man whose family has been ruined in a financial deal with Cathcart. His mother died of a broken heart and his father, Old Man Taylor, is now a drunkard, depending entirely upon the eighteen-year-old sister, Steve. Both Raymond and the old man vow to get revenge on Cathcart. Jim quickly senses Cathcart's attitude toward his mother and learns from Raymond Cathcart's reputation. And when Margaret later announces to her son that she is going to marry Cathcart, Jim seems to lose his mind and begins to fight with the older man. Raymond separates them and warns Jim that Cathcart is his own game. Jim makes his mother choose between him and Cathcart and tells her he never wants to see her again. Cathcart, having desired Margaret years before, now finds that he can get her by no other means than marriage and is willing to wed her to get his way. They go to a country estate called "The Pines," but by the villagers, "The House of Gloom." Here Margaret discovers that her husband is a beast whose caress is an insult and whose subtle cruelties are sharper than the lash of a whip. She is left mistress of the uncanny house which Cathcart visits only when he pleases.

On the witness-stand.

The garden of "The Pines" is cared for by Robert Shepherd, a man who has never been unkind to a living thing and who worships his young daughter, Bess. Near them live the Taylors. Steve and Bess are good friends. Old Man Taylor pals with The Man With the Crutch, a short, thin, sinister, lame man, who also craves vengeance on Cathcart because of the latter's treatment of a sister. He and Taylor plan revenge together and finally the cripple offers to pay Taylor for committing the murder.

Meanwhile, Steve, full of romance and a longing for adventure, has been reading books of adventure and is determined to see the world. She does washing once in awhile and now has ten dollars. With the book, "How I Became a Stowaway," she sets out, dressed in boy's clothes, leaving a note to say that she has gone out to see the world, but will return some day to assist in cleaning up Cathcart.

Raymond comes to visit his people and also to see Milly, Margaret's maid, and his sweetheart. Margaret commissions him to take an important message to Jim and he and Jim are later seen talking together by Cathcart. Jim wires his mother that he will come to her, that she need not fear Cathcart another day, for he, Jim, has a good position now. Cathcart demands that Raymond tell what he and Jim were talking about and when the young fellow refuses to obey, Cathcart discharges him and Raymond shouts his denouncement at Cathcart and threatens to get even with him. Cathcart immediately leaves for "The Pines" with a presentiment of unforseen danger haunting him.

Margaret, having borne Cathcart's brutality long enough, now arms herself with a small revolver. He arrives at "The Pines," but she locks her door against him; he threatens her and sends Shepherd to the village for a locksmith, but Shepherd goes only a short distance, for he meets a man who proffers to give the message to the locksmith. Shepherd returns to the lodge.

Jim arrives in the village, asks directions of the station agent and stops to eat at a tavern where he again asks the way to "The Pines" and where the landlord is frightened by the fierce expression on his face. He finally sees his mother, having entered the house through the French windows, and promises to take her away the next day. He leaves, being seen by Milly and Taylor, and getting caught in a rain storm soon afterward, seeks shelter in a deserted hut, where Steve is now trying to sleep. He thinks Steve a boy and the following morning they become friends. It was a quarter after ten the night before when the two heard the village clock chime.

Raymond finds the note by Steve and, thinking Cathcart responsible, goes to the village tavern to find his father and there tells the landlord that Steve has gone away and that Cathcart has discharged him; he is now on his way to "get" him.

That night Cathcart is killed, the coroner asserting, by some heavy object, and at about 10:15 o'clock. Milly testifies to seeing Jim lurking about "The Pines," to the message sent him by Margaret and to the wire received from Jim. She tries to avert suspicion from Raymond, the station agent, the landlord at the tavern and Shepherd, all admit that they saw Jim. Jim has been taken prisoner and the evidence tightens more closely about him each day. Margaret hires one of the best lawyers available, and he soons learns that Jim's only chance is in finding Steve, who can furnish the only conclusive evidence in his favor, for she knows he was a mile away from the house at 10:15 o'clock.

But Steve has reached the coast and has succeeded in hiding on a small boat, which is now at sea. Accidentally she reads the advertisement for herself, which says that a man's life depends on her. She makes herself known on the boat, but the wireless is out of order and the boat does not land for two weeks. When it does land, she tells her story and starts back to the village in company with two government officials.

Meanwhile, Margaret can bear the suffering of her son no longer and says she killed Cathcart, but Jim urges the court not to believe her. Then the landlord who heard Raymond's threat to "get" Cathcart, testifies and suspicion is cast at Raymond. Robert Shepherd now stands and confesses that he killed Cathcart, because, returning to the lodge the night he was sent for the locksmith, he found Cathcart there struggling with Bess. Cathcart's brutality to her aroused for the first time in his life an overpowering passion of hate which could be wiped out only by killing. Steve, arriving in the court, has, however, cleared him before Shepherd's confession is given. Shepherd is later acquitted on the plea of temporary derangement.

Some time has passed. An odd wedding takes place in the deserted hut where Jim and Steve first met. The only witnesses of the ceremony are Raymond and Milly. There just has to be a touch of romance attached to everything concerned with Steve, and it is her idea that she and Jim are married in this hut.

Old Man Taylor, because of the shock to his weak mentality, caused by the murder of Cathcart, dies and Raymond mourns his father as much as if he had been one of the best.

The simple wedding which ends forever "Steve's" dream of adventure.

Dora Rodrigues Returns for Army Shoes

HOW are you, Mr. Pepper?"

"For goodness' sakes, I thought you were almost to California by this time. And where did you get these clothes? I have never seen you in anything except the regulation army khaki uniform."

"Well, you know I have to be a girl some of the time, or I would forget how," said Dora Rodrigues, for it was she. "And the reason I am here is that I want to get some new shoes—army shoes, you know. I have worn mine out and have worn out part of my feet, too. They will have to be made specially for me, because there are none of Uncle Sam's soldiers with No. 3 feet. But I don't want to stop working, and I do want to do all that I can for Uncle Sam. I have to have shoes; only one shoemaker can make them. He is in New York."

"Well, what have you in mind to do now, and do you expect to travel the same way as heretofore?"

"I am going right back to take up the work again. I would appreciate a lift sometimes—the towns out West are much further apart."

"You might take a few samples of the conservation jelly that we saw in the Animated Weekly the other night, and show the women along the way how to assist Mr. Hoover in his food propaganda."

"No," said Dora, thoughtfully. "I don't think Mr. Hoover needs nearly as much help as Mr. Baker. He is a very clever man and he has the country started already toward the object he had announced. I have noticed that particularly in my travels. He won't have any difficulty in his propaganda. I will start with Springfield, Ohio, and travel from there to Marion, Lima, Toledo, Detroit, and so on, until I reach Universal City, California.

"By the way," added Dora, as she fished in an intensely feminine little handbag for her powder preparatory for going, "I have collected a whole lot of souvenirs along the way. This bag, for instance, was presented to me in Chicago by the Big Three Trunk Company, and I got this watch from the manager of the Cameraphone Theatre in Pittsburgh, and more candy than I could ever have carried away with me. In Cincinnati Captain Kissinger, a Spanish War veteran, took me out to the barracks where the soldiers are being drilled now, and gave me his color bar pin, which I understand only veterans of the Spanish War are permitted to wear. It is a badge of foreign service. He pinned it on my coat himself, and I have never taken it off until I took the uniform off. Then there was a lovely old grand army man in Youngstown, Pa., who gave me his grand army badge, made out of a piece of a Bunker Hill cannon. Would you like to see it?" And again she fished into the bag, but this time she was not so successful. "My, but I miss the pockets in that uniform so much, I can hardly wait until I wear it again.

"You know I had a very odd experience in Turtle Creek. That certainly is a bad place in Pennsylvania. Three men in a machine stopped me on the way to Wilkinsburg, Pa., which is the next little town, and they asked me a whole lot of questions, most of them rather impertinent. I wasn't doing anything to disturb the peace, and I resented their questioning. They wanted to take me in the car, but I wouldn't let them, and I finally called a policeman. Then they drove off. When I got into the town the constable stopped me and told me that I was wanted over in Indiana, and it finally developed that a girl had been kidnapped over there, and the last time she was seen she was dressed as a boy scout in uniform. I certainly felt very much flattered to be mistaken for this kidnapped young person, and the policeman felt very cheap when I told him who I was."

LYONS AND MORAN TO APPEAR IN LONGER NESTOR COMEDIES.

EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran, stars of Universal Nestor comedies, shortly will appear in two-reel pictures. "The boys," as they are called at Universal City, have proved so popular in one-reelers and the clamor of the movie fans to present them in longer subjects has been so great that it was decided recently to produce the Lyons-Moran comedies in 2,000-feet lengths.

Alternate directors, Roy Clements and Burton George, will produce the longer Nestors, one of them being engaged in actually staging a comedy while the other is giving his personal supervision to the trimming of his latest picture and doing the preliminary work on his next.

The first of the new Lyons-Moran series entitled "On the Owl," is being made by Director Clements. Much of the action occurs in a Pullman car and some situations are evolved that will tickle the risibilities—whatever those are—of the grouchiest theatregoer.

CANADIAN NOTES.

By RAYMOND S. PECK.

WINDSOR, Ont.—The Favorite Theatre, under the management of Clyde Curry, Windsor, is undergoing some extensive renovations, and when completed will be one of the most up-to-date theatres in Western Ontario. Mr. Curry is an enterprising young exhibitor and is giving his patrons their money's worth in splendid high-class bills.

TORONTO, Ont.—In spite of the excessive hot weather week of July 23d, the Regent Theatre, Toronto, played to exceedingly good business. The theatre showed the Universal Animated Weekly in which appeared the parade of the 48th Highlanders in New York on their recent recruiting exhibition, and this timely film again made a decided hit at this Toronto house.

On July 28th, Saturday, Kitchener Day was held at Camp Borden. The day was chuck full of fun for the soldiers in camp, and prizes for the different games, races, etc., were presented by Miss Logan, being donated by the Kitchener Theatre of the Camp. This theatre runs full Universal service and is very well pleased with the program he has been receiving.

The Bluebird feature, "The Greater Law," was booked second run to the Photodrome Theatre, Toronto, for the entire week of July 23d. This theatre is almost opposite Shea's Hippodrome, which had first run on this picture. Mr. Pomeroy, the manager, arranged a unique lobby display, which caused a lot of discussion, and which has been the means of drawing good box office receipts, especially for this time of year. The lobby display shows, in a glass case, the inside of a cottage in Alaska, and the outer part of the lobby is dressed as if it were in Alaska, showing ice and snow which makes the theatre look cool and inviting.

MONTREAL, Que.—Mr. Jack Hooley, manager of the Sheridan Square Theatre, Pittsburg, was a recent visitor in Montreal. Mr. Hooley was recently manager of the Francis Theatre, Montreal.

Mr. Bouget, owner of the National Biograph, Notre Dame Street W., Montreal, has made extensive improvement in his theatre. He is installing an organ, and has placed an order with Perkins Electric Co. for two simplex machines and a double 50 Hertner transverter.

"PROPS, DROPS and FLOPS"

There's a fascination about stage life, and the L-Ko comedians have shown the humorous side in the laughable absurdity, "Props, Drops and Flops," featuring pretty Gladys Varden, funny Walter Stephens, Bert Roach and Walter Griffith. Walter is the property man, and when a traveling troupe comes to town there is plenty doing. He pinch hits for the actors, makes love to Gladys, is pinned to the wall by the knife thrower, and when the place takes fire—oh, boy! Book this for your comedy night.

(Copyright 1917, L-Ko Komedy Co.)

TWO-REEL L-Ko Komedy. Featuring Bob McKenzie, Eva Novak, and Eddie Barry, in which the troubles of a rural street car company are thoroughly detailed. Directed by Dick Smith, under the supervision of J. G. Blystone.

CAST.

Conductor	Eddie Barry
Motorman	Bob McKenzie
His Daughter	Eva Novak
Driver of the Busted Bus	Charles Ryckman
President	Bert Roche

“THIS is a fine come off. The people warn me—me, the president of the railway, that they are about to seek the services of a no-count jitney driver and his busted bus. Can you beat that insolence?”

Nobody answered the query straight from the narrow presidential offices of the burg's big man, decorated with a scant picture of his street car, drawn by its two skinny mules, manned by a conductor and a motorman, equally skinny and snug. But, out in the manger, where the mules partook of their rations when business was good, the conductor, Eddie Barry, spake forth his mind to his motorman, Bob McKenzie, who promptly rolled over again in the hay, then as promptly jumped up, consulted his watch and linked arms with his fellow in street car crime.

The day was on. The mules were put to the car. The president of the railway sallied forth a capitalistic figure.

But, in the streets, he was met by the populace.

“Service or—the jitney driver for us,” they threatened.

“Gentlemen and ladies all bear with me, here comes your service,” temporized the president.

Meanwhile “It's like Sherman's description to be poor,” soliloquized one, Dick Smith, as he examined the empty gas tank at the back of his jitney.

The car horses, as one, stopped shortly thereafter, within a foot of the jitney, and the passengers signalled, were about to enter when the discovery of the empty gas tank was made.

Smith was at sea. He got to the office of the gas tank owner of the big place, but there threats and cajolries proved useless. Brute force, however, saw him the triumphant owner of much gas.

From then on life became one series of stunts whereby the passengers of the flourishing city were pulled, by threats, breakdowns and promises, from the jitney with its belligerent driver to the street car, manned by its two pirates who counted up every night to nobody's satisfaction but their own. The president, after these rituals, usually went down on his rheumatic knees and thanked the couple for bringing the car back.

Harry, the father of Eddie, was the sort of invalid who eats all of the time and complains all of the time that he doesn't. He had gout, a perpetual grouch and a few other things. To boot it, he lived across the way from Bob, whose beautiful daughter Eva, dutifully prepared his luncheons each day and brought them to the mule car. Life for Bob was getting to be too tame, so, at about the time that Eva discovered her affection for Dick, of jitney fame, he goes on a grand bat with Harry, the invalid who forgets all about bad feet and tempers to enjoy the spree. Then business begins to come the way of the jitney driver, not, however, until he has led his competitors a sensational chase, with Eva as the motorman of the car and a dummy as the man the two instruments of destruction manage to kill. The pursuit finally sees the wrecked jitney over the side of a bluff, the mule car an equal wreck of debris at its side.

All Agree That Bluebird Day is The Day

NEVER A COMPLAINT.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.,
New York City, N. Y.:

Gentlemen — In regard to your "Bluebird" program, beg to state that I have been using it since it was wrapped in swaddling clothes, and can truthfully say that I have never had a complaint of a bad picture produced by your company, and I attribute a great deal of my success to the splendid pictures which you have produced and which I have had the profit of showing.

Your organization at Oklahoma City, that is, Mr. Sam Benjamin, who is manager of your office, in my opinion, is a great asset to your wonderful organization, for the simple reason that Mr. Benjamin is an untiring worker and is always ready to put himself out to accommodate his exhibitors. He is loyal to his "Bluebirds" and his word is as good as his bond. Many exchangemen, in my opinion, make a grievous mistake by throwing a good account up for some mushroom exhibitor on account of their offering a little more money, not realizing that this fly-by-night exhibitor cannot last long in the business. But this is not the case with Mr. Benjamin. When he opened up my account he had a great many other exhibitors come to him and try to undermine me and get the Bluebird pictures, saying that it was impossible for me to last on account of not being in the right location and off the main drag, but his faith in me was unshaken, and he would not listen to them.

As I have said before, I have used the Bluebirds for fifteen months, and believe them as good, if not better, than any program produced to-day; and I say this without any favoritism whatever, but simply because it is a business proposition with me to use the program that is most consistent in my success.

The One Best Bet of the Week

J. Warren Kerrigan Feature

J. Warren Kerrigan.

All the mystery suggested by the title underlies the plot of "Hands in the Dark." Warren loves Edith, whose father is a miser. When our handsome hero goes to him to ask the hand of the fair Edith he surprises the old man gloating over his treasure. Enraged, the miser throws a book, and in doing so breaks a charm from the lover's chain. That night the old man is strangled and his safe looted. On the floor is the tell-tale charm. What happens after Warren's trial for the crime is a premier punch, and the whole picture will hold your audiences spellbound. Strong stuff that will get the business.

PUTTING IT OVER

A DEPARTMENT OF ADVERTISING SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF ALL EXHIBITORS

"THE LAIR OF THE WOLF," the new Butterfly feature, offers an excellent opportunity for teaser advertising.

Hire a man to paint the imprint of the sole of a shoe along the sidewalk for the radius of about a block or two on either side of your theatre. At regular intervals along the imprints, the following words are to be painted: "Follow—the—footprints—to—'The Lair of the Wolf.'" The footprints should cease about twenty yards on either side of your theatre, until the day on which the Butterfly production is presented. Then they are to lead right into your house.

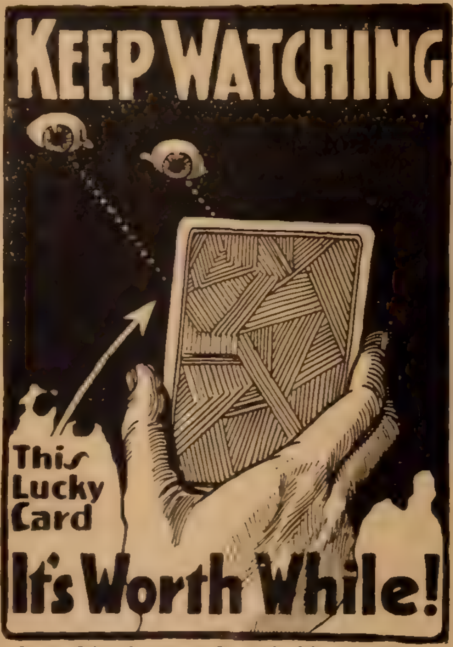
A variation of this idea, one that would attract considerable attention to your poster advertising, would be to have the footprints and the legend commence about 200 feet away from your billboards and then lead right up to them. If you do much billboard advertising, this stunt will enable your boards to get more attention than would otherwise be the case.

If you are battling against considerable competition, the following idea would help you get the crowd a-coming to your theatre and impress the folks with your desire to please.

Hire a Ford bus, and along the sides fasten banners containing the legend "Free ride to 'The Lair of the Wolf,' wonderful Butterfly Feature at the (name of your theatre)." Put a gong on the bus and then have the chauffeur slowly drive all through the neighborhood. The bus could also be made to do good work in the territory which you have regarded as being just a little too far away from your theatre.

Joseph Girard, the star who scored so pronounced a success in "The Voice on the Wire," and Gretchen Lederer, one of the most beautiful stars in filmdom, are featured in this production. Mention these players prominently in your advertising and get the benefit of their popularity.

Bluebird Ideas for "Mr. Opp"



IN "Mr. Opp," Alice Hegan Rice, author of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," wrote one of her most popular stories. In screening it, Bluebird has made full use of the wonderful material it contains. Therefore the exhibitor who advertises it properly is sure to get the double benefit of the publicity value of the Bluebird reputation and Mrs. Rice's name.

Your newspaper ads, providing you use more than a mere day-and-date announcement, should dwell upon the fact that "Mr. Opp" is the story of a successful failure—that is an inspiration to those people for whom luck has never broken properly, and a source of genuine entertainment and amusement for folks in general.

The fact that the story is so popular in book form will help you. Call on the local book dealers and urge them to arrange window displays of the book. It would be worth your while to present the book merchants with one-sheet posters and photographs, for window display, since these would call the public's attention to the fact that you are showing the production at your theatre.

Also get in touch with the local librarians. You could easily arrange to have them put up a little card in the reading-room telling that "Mr. Opp" is to be shown at your theatre. For that matter, you can clinch this by inviting the library attaches to attend the showing as your guests. This would assure you of future co-operation.

Get hold of a short, slim man and dress him in neat, but shabby, clothes. Instruct him to strut through the streets in a self-important manner. Have him stop every person he meets and hand out a business card, reading as follows:

"MR. OPP"
Journalist, Real Estate Promoter,
Insurance, Ladies' Shoes
Can be seen at the (name) Theatre on (day and date).

Mr. Exhibitor—The letter below, multigraphed and mailed to the people in your community, will help you create interest in this Bluebird production. You can also use it on ordinary circulars, or, if newspaper space is cheap in your community, in your newspaper ads. Your Bluebird exchange will be glad to give you the fullest co-operation in putting "Mr. Opp" over.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, Inc.

Dear Friend — Some men spend their lives in the valley, and some are born and die on the heights. It was Mr. Opp's fate to climb from the valley to his own little mountain top of prosperity, only to have to climb down on the other side.

This is how the principal character in the wonderful Bluebird Photoplay, "Mr. Opp" is introduced, and the moment his face appears on the screen, you'll say to yourself, "Why, I know Mr. Opp."

Every one of us knows him. Many of us have him right in our families. He's good-natured, cheery, optimistic, with a heart of pure gold. There's only one thing wrong with Mr. Opp, and that's his luck.

You've seen it at work. No matter what he attempts, proves a failure. Things simply insist in turning out wrong. Try as he will, misfortune and blunders follow in his wake.

In "Mr. Opp," which is to be shown at this theatre on (day and date here) Bluebird has screened a story of plain folks like you and me. It's human—and therefore supremely interesting. In addition to recognizing Opp himself, you're going to know Jimmy Fallows, the Widow Gusty, her daughter Guinevere, and poor little Kippy.

See this picture and live with the characters in the story. Your heart will beat with sympathy for Opp, your eyes will dim because of Kippy and your whole being will feel the thrill of delight that the unexpectedly happy ending causes.

Come and bring the folks with you.

Sincerely (Manager).

LOOKIN

Ruth Stonehouse in "The Winning Pair."

AMONG the pictures for next week the Gold Seal three-reel drama starring Ruth Stonehouse is of most importance. This three-reel feature was formerly alluded to as "The Boots of Beatrice," and it is now to be called, "The Winning Pair." It is the first production that Louis Chaudet made after leaving the comedy division in which he had charge of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. As might be expected, it contains a very strong comedy vein, but at the same time there is an interesting and dramatic story with a complication worthy of a director of heavy drama.

The story opens with a lot of double exposures of Ruth Stonehouse's ankles, designed to show the scores and scores of boots which she wore. For this purpose the tripod of the camera was shortened as much as possible, as may be seen in the double page of "How They Direct," in the center of this book. There were also a number of signs and symbols of the shoemakers' trade, like the big shoe in this episode, and the goblets made into the shape of slippers and shoes in which the wedding toast which appears in the final scene was sipped to the happy pair.

The L-Ko komedy for this week is a two-reel theatrical scream entitled "Props, Drops and Flops," while a J. Warren Kerrigan feature, called "Hands in the Dark" furnishes a thrill on Thursday. "Jungle Treachery" first two-reel Bison length in some time.

Some Universals Which Look

SELDOM has a set of pictures so uniformly excellent been released by the Universal as that which will adorn the week of September 3d, the first week of the Fall season. The Universal has made no pretense of cutting down its quality during the summer months. On the other hand, its pictures for this period have been particularly adapted for the hot weather, and a majority of comedies has been the net result.

With the first week in September, however, the Universal will open its Fall season, and will do so in impressive style. The Gold Seal drama for that week is considered by many the best Gold Seal picture ever released. It is entitled "The Empty Gun," and features Lon Chaney, Sam De Grasse, and Claire McDowell. Sam DeGrasse is new to the Universal fold, but he is a well-known photoplayer, and is as well-known on the legitimate stage as his brother, Joseph De Grasse, who directed this three-reel picture. It is the first three-reeler he has made in over two years, and he was only enabled to do it through having a week of liberty from his five-reel company.

There will be a Lena Baskette feature, the graceful child actress-dancer making her first appearance as a star-featurette attraction. The feature in which she appears is entitled "A Dream of Egypt," and was directed by Marshall Stedman. It was written to give little Miss Baskette an opportunity to perform the dances for which she is justly famous, and those who saw her in previous dances which Lois Weber directed will instantly be impressed with the growing artistry of this beautiful child dancer.

"Why They Left Home"

One-Reel Joker

Week of Aug. 27.

Bill Franey

Bill Franey is ambitious. He wants to be an actor, and especially he wants to follow a certain actress. What happens to Bill when he gets on the stage is enough, and "Why They Left Home" is one of the funniest one-reelers you ever saw. You never make a mistake booking Joker Comedies.

AHEAD

BLUEBIRD'S "A STORMY KNIGHT."

NEVER did knight of old, for the sake of his lady fair, brave more dangerous encounters than did John Winton in his attempts to rescue from perils that beset her the lovely girl who mysteriously came into his life one stormy night—and refused thereafter to leave him undisturbed. From peril to peril he pursued her, always releasing her from the menace of her immediate danger, but never being able to quite come even with her in the mystery-chase that led through exciting episodes galore. Finally determined to have an end to matters, Winton applied his ingenuity, forced the issue and check-mated his elusive quarry. Then the truth came about and the mystery was explained—the girl wanted to be sure that the man who became her husband carried no "yellow streak." There is much of novelty in the presentation of the Bluebird Photoplay, "A Stormy Knight," with Franklyn Farnum and Brownie Vernon as the stars. The outline of its plot gives but a mild idea of its surprising details, and the cloud of mystery that shrouds the various exciting operations lends an item of suspense that makes for the best of entertainment.

Don't miss "A Stormy Night." It is a typical Franklyn Farnum picture.

Franklyn Farnum in the powerful Mercer racer in which most of "A Stormy Knight," his next Bluebird, was filmed. Fully a third of this feature was taken with the car as the chief prop.

Good Two Weeks in Advance

Another unusual picture is the Bison two-reel comedy drama entitled "The Lure of the Circus," with Fred Church and Eileen Sedgwick. This picture contains almost all of the Universal animals which could be crowded into it, including Joe Martin, Charlie, the elephant, all of the lions, tigers, camels, leopards and panthers. The story is a serious straightforward drama, but the action of the animals is introduced as comedy relief, and is an extremely successful experiment. It was made under the direction of Henry McRae.

The comedies for the week include a Nestor entitled "Looking 'Em Over," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Edith Roberts, an extremely funny William Franey Joker entitled "Officer, Call a Cop," the second Max Asher Victor comedy entitled "The Curse of a Flirting Heart," and Gale Henry in the Joker comedy entitled "A Gale of Verse." There are the usual Screen Magazine, Universal Current Events, and Universal Animated Weekly, and an L-Ko two-reel comedy, the title of which is "Backward Sons and Forward Daughters."

Fred Church in "The Lure of the Circus." Bison two-reel Comedy Drama.

THIS PICTURE WAS FILMED IN A REAL STORM.

A TERRIFIC thunderstorm plays an important part in the development of the mystery story, "The Lair of the Wolf," a Butterfly picture. In order to make these scenes impressive, they were filmed in the midst of one of the severest storms which was ever experienced on the Pacific Coast. The intrepid cameraman stood in the road and made pictures of the lightning flashes, not flinching even when a tree very near him was struck. The actors who took part in this part of the picture were soaked to the skin, but of course, as it was to add "realism" they were perfectly willing to go through with it.

"Eddie" LYONS is a "peacable party," but to see him in this Nestor laff, you'd think he was a plain, noisy souse. He and Lee in go to Eddie's house to sleep after a "night out." Lee dons a woman's nightie and cap, and the pair are discovered by Eddie's mother-in-law. Scandalous!

"Lee" was never funnier, and when you book this you can boost these favorites good and strong.

NINTH Two-Reel episode of the Saturday Evening Post serial story by Harry Somers Roche, adapted for the screen and produced by Stuart Paton.

Hildreth	Emory Johnson
Morn Light	Priscilla Dean
"Gray Ghost"	Harry Carter
Jean Marco	Eddie Polo
The Maid	Gypsy Hart
Jerry Tryon	Lew Short
Arabin	Howard Crampton
Fred Olmstead	J. Morris Foster

AS the ninth chapter of "The Gray Ghost" opens, Arabin, the jeweler, pulls the trigger of the revolver, but The Gray Ghost only smiles.

"That's a dangerous weapon, Mr. Arabin," said he, "when loaded."

The butler in the hall snickered and winked at the maid as Arabin furiously pulled the trigger. Then he pulled the bullets which should have been in the revolver out of his pocket. An instant later the Gray Ghost's gang was in the house searching every nook and cranny for the two million dollar Carlow necklace.

In the meantime Jean Marco, Hildreth's secretary, who had escaped so spectacularly from the automobile, arrived on the borrowed horse at headquarters. There he informed Jerry Tryon that the Gray Ghost was at Arabin's house, and to take all of his men and rush there as fast as possible if he wanted to save the necklace. In an instant ten able-bodied plain clothes men had bundled into an automobile, and were sixty-miling it for Arabin's country home.

But when Tryon finally knocked at the door the Gray Ghost had discovered the necklace and was about to depart. For an instant consternation reigned within. Then the fertile brain of the master crook devised a plan.

"Ten guns are covering you, Mr. Arabin, and if you forget for one instant that I am your physician, and am attending you for a bad cold, you will never need another doctor. All you will require is a hearse."

Then they let Tryon in, and it was not until the Gray Ghost started to take his departure that Arabin got an opportunity to tip Tryon off that his pretended doctor was the Gray Ghost.

"Halt there," said Tryon, quick as a flash, but the Gray Ghost halted not. "Bang, Bang." Two shots rang out, both from Tryon's gun. One got the Gray Ghost fair in the chest, the other barely missed the butler who, by his action, betrayed his allegiance.

A furious struggle ensued between the crooks and the detectives who surrounded the house.

"Well, they didn't get the right necklace, anyway," said Arabin, with some satisfaction. "This one is an imitation, and is worth $100."

Meanwhile in the house on the island of mystery Fred Olmstead suddenly saw an apparition of the Gray Ghost pointing directly at him. The shock was so great that he fell senseless to the floor, and no effort of Hildreth and Morn Light, who were with him, could arouse the terror stricken spirit. Suddenly the telephone rings. "Everything is fixed in the steel chamber for Hildreth," is the cryptic message which comes over the wire. Hildreth turns white.

Suddenly the double floor starts to go down again, and thinking to find a way out, Hildreth and Morn Light get on and go down to the second floor, where they wander about in the passages below until the ghostly apparition of their common enemy is suddenly seen at the end of the passageway. They make a quick turn, and as they step into a room the floor goes down from under them, and they drop into a steel-walled room.

Thus we leave them with Jean Marco rowing toward the island, and Jerry Tryon writing his report.

LET REPEAT BOOKINGS PULL YOU OUT OF A FINANCIAL HOLE

REPEAT BOOKINGS is a business method for every business showman. Are you a business showman? Then answer for yourself if this isn't the most logical way to run your theatre: Book a powerful box-office attraction and run it for three days—pay for the attraction on a sliding scale of charges—get the benefit of word-of-mouth advertising which your patrons will give the play while it is shown in your house.

In a nutshell this is the plan of REPEAT BOOKINGS. This is the good business method we urge you to adopt for your theatre. Can't you see the good business policy of this method? Then start REPEAT BOOKINGS with these three:

Harry D. Carey in "Love's Lariat"

a romantic drama of the East and West, novel in plot and direction.

Rupert Julian and Louise Lovely in "Bettina Loved a Soldier" the most beautiful love story ever told.

Mary MacLaren and Phillips Smalley in "Saving the Family Name" a drama of family pride and a chorus girl. Produced by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

"Take your medicine, dearie."

"Sure Mike I will, darling."

Smack! smack! smack!

Such was life in Gamble's Hospital where Eddie was convalescing.

Do you wonder that when Lee visits him he is overcome with the treatment that Eddie is receiving, and the beauty of the nurses? Or that he wants to stay?

Even Lee took pleasure in helping with the operation.

"Hey, you miser," said Lee, "move over." Eddie indignantly refuses.

Then he tries to change places with Eddie. Eddie is willing, for he is dead anxious to see the baseball game that afternoon. The plan is spoiled when the two are seen about to change raiment and Lee is thrown out of the place, while Eddie is put back to bed. After several attempts on the part of Eddie to get out and Lee to get in, Lee finally does get in, and the change is made.

Meanwhile, a new nurse and an outside doctor came on duty. The nurse is ugly, and gets her instructions mixed as well, mistaking Lee for a patient that is to have a leg cut off. Eddie is seen buying a ticket for the ball game by Edith, the pretty head nurse, who is out for an airing, and she and Gamble, who also happens along, give chase.

They capture Eddie and take him back to the hospital just in time to prevent the operation that is about to take place, thus saving Lee's leg and getting Eddie back to bed without his seeing the game that caused most of the trouble.

The mobilized farm, run by Colonel Pepper, exploits all of the animals in training, their patriotic efforts largely rewarded in the end.

How Universa

WHAT LIBERTY DID ON A SECOND BOOKING.

MR. J. H. CROWLEY, manager of the Universal Film & Supply Company of Fort Smith, sends in a report of a booking in Midlank, Ark., which is an enthusiastic endorsement for the serial "Liberty."

M. B. Turner, who operates the Turner Theatre in Midland, and the Turner Theatre in Greenwood, booked the Liberty serial to run in both houses, starting in Midland about five weeks ago. (This letter was written on July 24.) James Lee also operates a theatre in Midland, a town of about 400 population only, and built around a mining camp. Since Mr. Turner did very little business on "Liberty" through lack of advertising, Mr. Lee decided that he would take advantage of the mouth-to-mouth advertising which had been given the picture by those who had seen it, and were still talking about it all over the town. He therefore started the first episode four weeks later than Mr. Turner for a return engagement, and states that he is doing four times the business of the first showing in the Turner Theatre.

This certainly speaks well not only for the serial, but for the manner in which it was advertised by a man who had faith in it, and the nerve to go out and do some real advertising.

Mr. Crowley is sending a letter stating the circumstances of this case to all of his accounts.

BOOK NEAL HART.

Consolidated Film & Supply Co.,
Dallas, Texas:

Gentlemen—We wish to ask one question as follows: What's the use of paying big prices for advertised stars when you can take Neal Hart and clean up in competition with pictures of like character? A hint to the wise should be sufficient. Book Neal Hart and get the money that the other fellow pays to advertise his supposed star. You would think that a circus was in town or that a baseball game was being played when this picture went on our screen.

Trusting that you will have many more as good as Hart, and with best wishes for your success, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
J. A. LEMKE,
Mgr. Crystal Theatre.

MADE HIM SWITCH.

On March 14th Mr. W. T. Yoder, of the Universal Film & Supply Company of Oklahoma City, called on an exhibitor at Walters, Okla., J. A. Wallam, Broadway Theatre. He found that Mr. Wallam had contracted for a Pathe production, and had arranged for his local weekly, The Cotton County Democrat, to run the story in connection with its showing. The first episode of this story had already been printed when the Universal salesman arrived in town. It is a great tribute both to his selling personality and the qualities of the serial, "Liberty," that the Broadway Theatre cancelled the Pathe booking and substituted "Liberty" therefor.

By quick work on the telephone, the Exchange co-operated with the local newspaper editor, and secured plates from the Western Newspaper Union of this city, for the first chapter of "Liberty," so that the weekly was scarcely delayed in its issue.

PLEASED WITH SERVICE.

D. G. Walkley, Esq.,
Calgary, Alta.:

My Dear Sir—Just wanted to say that I am very much pleased with the service you have given me this far, and if it continues such, or even better, I am sure it will be very much appreciated and will no doubt lead to bigger business in the future.

Again thanking you,

Yours very truly,

Exhibitors Keep Putting It Over

LIKED "THE PURPLE MASK."

Editor Moving Picture Weekly,
New York City:

Dear Sir—No doubt you will wonder why I write this letter, but I do feel that it is the duty of admirers and exhibitors to write you. The admirers of course should write their praises, while exhibitors should state how they progress with the Big Universal Program.

I, as an admirer of your program and also Miss Grace Cunard, write to tell you how delighted I am with "The Purple Mask" serial. I am as far as the ninth episode. What Miss Cunard says is right. The more you see the better one likes it. I am proud to say that Miss Cunard and I have corresponded for some years now, and no one living could give me more good advice than Miss Cunard. She is very unconventional in every way, and to my great surprise is unlike many girls. She is not selfish in admiration. Dress doesn't make her proud, in fact, those who know her can never speak otherwise than that she is an adorable lady.

"The Purple Mask" serial is certainly good, and though I promised myself to keep "Lent," I had to break my promise because of the serial. The temptation was tremendous and I succumbed to it. But I feel happy and proud of My Grace, and I don't think any one could scold me for the same. I remain,

Yours sincerely,

"MRS. MADAM MANAGER."

By ALLEN CURTIS.

A Joker Comedy, Featuring Gale Henry. Produced by Allen Curtis.

CAST.

Mrs. Madam Manager	Gale Henry
Her Husband	Milton Sims
Tessie	Lillian Peacock
Manager	Charles Haeffli

(Copyright 1917, Universal Film Manufacturing Co.)

"Sure, I'll clean the opry house. Sure, I'll print the tickets, sell them, and take them at the door. Course, I'll pull up the curtain. Delighted, I am sure, to get the props, and to "make up" the actors to——"

"I'll just fix you, too," said Mrs. Madam Manager.

Pruneville had real cause to be proud of its opera house. Its manageress, doesn't she do everything in it from taking tickets to filling in on the stage in an emergency? But when the Imperial Burlesquers came to town, one of its members, Tessie, attracts the husband whom the manageress loves dearly. She is determined that she shall not lose the man she has to work so hard to hold. At the rehearsal, which the company manager calls, a lot of difficulties are encountered, but the doughty manageress is on the job and things are straightened out for the evening performance.

That night finds her a very busy woman—selling and taking tickets and acting as usher. Curtain time finds her behind the scenes to lend a hand while her husband leads the orchestra—not, however, without a lot of "spiritual" assistance. All goes well until the end of the first act when the husband, becoming very thirsty, borrows some money from one of the audience and sneaks off to the family entrance next door. En route, he encounters Tessie, who is not averse to a little refreshment.

When it comes time for the second act to open, there is neither an orchestra leader or dance specialist. The manageress perforce must take the dancer's place—which she does—tolerantly overlooking the absence of her husband.

But, when the said husband sneaks back to his place in the pit with powder marks of a pair of woman's arms about his neck—and—at the same time Tessie hurries to her place on the stage and the wife sees the powder on her arms—it is too much for her and a fight starts in which everybody becomes mixed. Finally triumphant, she turns her attentions to her battered husband and taking him fondly in her arms assures him that she knows she stopped Tessie just in time to keep from losing him. And, of course, with the bunk so easy, why spill the beans?

DOROTHY PHILLIPS

Bluebird Star

The clever work of Dorothy Phillips—her sparkling personality and the wonderful vitality that she throws into her part as "Queen of the Barbary Coast" places in the class of the "best pullers" of the year. It has never played to less than capacity wherever shown. It has proven to be a stronger attraction than any other play featuring any other actress that might be running at the same time as "Hell Morgan's Girl"

Hell Morgan's Girl
